Ann Christy, who played opposite Jack Duffy in his new picture, also will be seen as Jimmie Adams' leading lady in his new picture, as yet untitled. Heralded as he first "real Christie girl" to appear in Christy productions, Miss Christy, who is a diminutive beauty, is one of the few un-bobbed leading ladies playing in comedies, and the only one at the Christie Studio. She was "discovered" by Bobby Vernon while appearing in one of his pictures early this season, but has been playing in pictures for nearly two years as an extra and in minor roles.

Bobby Vernon will soon be at work on the final comedy on his present schedule, which calls for eight productions. Bobby only a short time ago finished "Jail Birdies," a travesty on college life and speed law violators.

"Dumb Belles," the new starring vehicle for Billy Dooley, boasts of one of the largest companies of girls ever employed in a two-reel comedy production. Ruth Perrine, who won the Film Fun contest, is one of the outstanding beauties of the picture. In addition to Miss Perrine, Gail Lloyd, Evelyn Egan, Ann Christy, Peggy Hyde, Joy Lynn and Doris Dumas play roles in this picture. Jack Duffy and Bill Irving appear as supporting comedians to the goofy gob.

Duffy in Golf Garb

Duffy will appear in a production which has golf weddings and golf widows as plot fundamentals. Several days were spent by the company on the golf course where the $10,000 Los Angeles Open Tournament was held recently, and although the cast had golf sticks in hand from morning until night, no golf was played other than that which figures in the picture. In addition to these scenes on the golf links, half a dozen sets were arranged in the Christie Studios for the wedding and other sequences.

Beaudine is directing the new Jimmie Adams Comedy, which is the fifth of the season in this series. The story takes place in a small town with a village blacksmith shop, hotel and general store and rural types to fit in this sort of surroundings.

Advance screen tests indicate that Ann Christy, in the leading feminine role, will make an excellent foil for Adams in the style of fast and snappy comedy for which he is so well known. An excellent cast, headed by William Irving and Bill Blaisdell, will support Adams.

National Tie-ups?

A Feature of Big Educational Campaign

At left is shown the front of a four page folder which is part of the national campaign on Big Boy in which Educational has tied up for the boosting of patronage on these comedies with harmonica contests and other novel ideas.

SEVERAL big exploitation tie-ups, which are being supplied to exhibitors practically free or at actual cost, have been perfected and are being carried out by the advertising and publicity department of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. One of the outstanding national tie-ups is the Juvenile Comedies-Harmonica Playing contest which has just been further augmented by the addition of a special "Big Boy" trailer and "Big Boy" harmonicas for giveaway purposes. This tie-up with Hohner, Inc., provides a wonderful prize list for exhibitors, draws youthful patronage to the theatres and increases interest many times in the Juvenile Comedies and the entire theatre program, according to the statements of exhibitors themselves.

In addition to this, Educational is offering another splendid exploitation idea with the juvenile series in tie-up with the Kelmet Corporation of New York City. By means of this, a tie-up with a local store handling Kelmet toys is possible, a large "Big Boy" White truck is offered as a prize, filled with marbles, and patrons are invited to guess the number in the toys. A special cut-out and other material are furnished to put over such a contest, while additional "Big Boy" toys are supplied exhibitors at low cost.

In addition to the Felix the Cat dolls, available at special prices to Educational exhibitors showing the Felix the Cat cartoon comedies, Educational also has made arrangements to supply flashy Felix the Cat buttons at minimum expense to exhibitors. These buttons, which have been used profitably by several exhibitors in the east, show a large drawing of Felix in black with the lettering "Meet Felix at the Theatre."

Romance Productions Represented

For the Romance Productions in Technicolor, an arrangement with the Prang Company has made available a list of prizes consisting of water color sets, crayon sets, drawing paper, weaving papers, water color brushes, art books and many other artist supplies free of cost. A selected assortment of prizes from this list is used in coloring contests in which students are invited to color an outline drawing of the painting on which the production is based. The contest includes a tie-up with an art store or local library for display purposes.

For contests conducted in conjunction with Billy Dooley Comedies, the Ted Toy-lers, Inc., agreed to furnish toys free to be given as prizes on any sort of a publicity tie-up between an exhibitor and a dealer. This tie-up was brought to the attention of toy dealers by The Ted Toy-lers, Inc., in a special advertisement in toy trade papers, while Educational, of course, emphasized the ease with which the tie-up might be perfected exhibitors. The Ted Toy-lers company manufactures several sailor toys which bear a comedian of this series, and it is these toys which are used as prizes.

One of the suggested contests calls for an outline drawing of Billy Dooley, with the features a blank. Contestants are invited to fill these in and win one of the prizes. The contest material includes electros, available to exhibitors, for having printed the outline drawing and additional material for a window display in a toy store or an exhibit in the theatre lobby.

'Circus Capers' Completed Is Poodles Hanneford's Latest Educational

"Poodles" Hanneford, premier bareback rider and circus funster with an international reputation, has completed his first Educational-Mermaid Comedy, "Circus Capers," which will be released in several weeks. This is the initial comedy Hanneford has made on his new contract with Educational, although he made an unusually popular Tuxedo series for Educational about two years ago.

Hanneford comes from a family of circus performers and horseback riders. For years he was a comedy figure at the New York Hippodrome, and for a number of seasons he was featured in circuses. Hanneford is expected in New York shortly to appear in "The Circus Princess," a stage production which is to have its premier in Manhattan soon.

"Poodles" is now at work on the second picture on his present contract. It probably will be titled "Plumb Dumb." Norman Taurog is the director, and it is said that the comedy is filled with action, situations and original gags for which Taurog is justly noted. An unusually strong supporting cast is working with the circus star.

Educational Finds in Anita Garvin a Real Comedy Vamp

Anita Garvin, who has been taking important feminine roles in Educational-Tuxedo Comedies, has been described by comedy producers as an ideal comedy vamp type. She is five feet six inches tall, and has a willowy figure that attracted the eye of Flo Ziegfeld, who is known for his Follies productions.

Miss Garvin weighs about 125 pounds and hers is a dark type of beauty. She has green eyes and lustrous black hair, both suitable for semi-comic vampire roles.

Miss Garvin danced her way into "Sally," noted Broadway musical comedy, and remained in the production while it was playing in New York City. Previous to that she had appeared in Ziegfeld's Follies.

She played the comedy vamp roles in "The Humdinger," "Close Shaves," and "Wedding Yells," all Tuxedo Comedies featuring Johnny Arthur.

Universal City

Where Film History Was Made

UNIQUE among the big lots in Southern California, Universal City, founded by Carl Laemmle, has a most interesting history, a history that dates far back of the invention of the motion picture.

The original cinema settlers, at first only seeking to escape the static of the colder home studios, were content to set up in any old shack in the suburbs of Los Angeles, enduring the temporary discomforts with the cheering thought that they would be "home" soon. Later comers, seeking more permanent homes, were drawn out toward Hollywood.

Carl Laemmle set up his first studio at Sunset Boulevard and Gower street, but increasing prosperity and the need for more room made a larger space seem desirable, and the situation was met in a thoroughly Laemmle fashion. We went further out than the others had done, over the hills beyond Hollywood to where he could obtain a 600-acre expanse of hill and dale in Cahuenga Canyon at the entrance to San Fernando valley.

Here, in 1846 the then Lieutenant Colonel John C. Freemont met the superior forces of General Pico, sweeping in their triumphal march to dispute the possession of the territory with the American forces. Freemont, materially outnumbered, caused his troops to fell trees and to shape them into the form of cannon. The ruse was successful. The spies of Pico reported that the Americans were vastly stronger, and Pico surrendered to Freemont and his little band, ceding California to the United States in the Treaty of Cahuenga in January 1847.

Today an infinity of props have taken the place of the wooden cannon of Freemont, whose eyes probably would pop from his head could he revisit the scene of his famous stand and see the Paris Cathedral of Notre Dame standing check by jowl against the Casino at Monte Carlo and both surrounded by other strange half-structures in every style of architecture and a five-acre chicken ranch.

But he would still find the hut in which the treaty was concluded and he still could discern the rude trenches in which he mounted his wooden guns, for they are certainly jealously guarded by the Universal officials.

But the land itself is not the only historical object in Universal City, for one of the properties is the state coach of the Emperor Franz Joseph, of Austria, which was used in the production of The Merry-Go-Round. In the same shed is the first stage coach used to carry passengers from San Diego over the almost impassable trails that led to Sacramento—and gold—in 1849. "Gumbo" Jack Savage drove his six horses over the rough ground with such care that he was able to use the same animals for the return trip. He made three round trips, carrying a full load to the gold fields and coming back empty. These three trips netted him enough money to retire and open Jack's Saloon on Aliso street, Los Angeles.

Perhaps the most historic relic is one that was the indirect result of the filming of "The Flaming Frontier." One of the Sioux to take part in the re-creation of the Custer Massacre was the grandson of Chief Gall. It was Gall who led the attack while Sitting Bull stayed home and "made medicine." Young Gall presented to the studio officials his most treasured relic in appreciation of his gratitude at their treatment, and somewhere in the safes of Universal City there reposes the arrow head which brought death to "Chief Yellow Hair," as the Indians had named the Federal leader.

There are many other historical relics treasured by Universal, but Universal City is not a museum, but rather the place of business of one of the most active film companies on the coast, an establishment valued at $6,000,000, which is considerable of an advance over the old Imp one-room stage at Columbus Avenue and 101st street.

The acreage covers a diversity of ground, for there are mountains and prairies, streams and deserts, with the seashore not far away. With 600 acres, there is no need to tear down an exterior set to make room for a new one, so the structures are left standing. In the "back lot" a little way up the hill, stands the wonderful setting built by Von Stroheim for "Foolish Wives," showing the Casino at Monte Carlo, and nearby is the Notre Dame used in "The Hunchback." The reproduction of the Bowery used for the presentation of Owen Kildare's story, the Vienna streets used in "The Merry-Go-Round," and a hundred others are all standing at various spots in the canyon. Other producers often rent these sets instead of going to the terrific expense of building their own. If you can't find it at Universal City, you might as well go ahead and build.

In the studio enclosure proper are five huge dark stages, with such accessories as usually are found in the modern studio, the canvas room, the mill, metal workers and all the other trades. Here they are even more necessary, since the studio is more remote from Los Angeles, and fabrication saves truckage. Like all studios Universal City has its own electric light plant, sufficient for all its needs, but unlike the others it has its privately-owned water system and its own Fire and Police Departments, both well organized and fully maintained. In addition it maintains its own well stocked Zoo of more than 300 trained animals, and a large stable with everything from blooded stock to weather beaten cow ponies. The chicken ranch, already alluded to, is not a part of the production equipment, though it frequently contributes animals to the pictures.

Recently an anniversary dinner was held in Los Angeles in honor of Mr. Laemmle's birthday, and an effort was made to assemble all those who owed their start or advancement to the Little Giant of the Films. Not all

The Romance Of A Great Business

BACK in 1913 Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil De Mille and Samuel Goldwyn framed up the Lasky Corporation at a table in a New York cafe. They pooled their funds in the formation of a film company in emulation of Adolph Zukor, who had apparently put over his Famous Players idea.

For a time Lasky remained in New York, while the others headed for Flagstaff, Arizona, where it was planned to begin work. But Flagstaff was unpromising at close range, and the travelers kept on until they reached Los Angeles. Here they looked about for a location and finally found one in the then undeveloped village of Hollywood; an old barn which had been left standing when the old ranch trails became village streets. Vine and Selma were the names attached to these dusty roads. The adventurers settled themselves happily in the old shack and started production, presently being joined by the third member of the corporation.

Adolph Zukor, meanwhile, was working in New York, for his Famous Players idea suggested a location in that city. This was long before long-distance commuting became first a passion and then a fad. When the Famous Players-Lasky Company was formed, the bulk of the production was transferred to the coast, and in the course of 13 years the original barn had been increased to three enclosed light stages, one open stage, one dark stage and a smaller stage one used for experimental and research work. The lot had been stretched to include two city blocks, or about nine acres, and in addition to the stages there was the usual collection of other structures.

Built as needed, without particular planning, or indeed without particular thought of the eventual expansion, the yard was poorly arranged and badly crowded. Some of the pressure had been removed by the establishment of "the ranch" further out, where temporary exteriors could be erected and larger scenes made than was possible in the heart of Hollywood. But the bulk of production was at the main studio and matters were rapidly reaching the point where the crowding plus poor arrangement was becoming too expensive. Lack of facilities was running up production costs.

It was a happy day on the Paramount lot when it was announced that the modern United Studios had been acquired, with an area of 26 acres. Here more recent building had resulted in a studio along the most approved lines, but even the United was not quite large enough. The four steel stages were removed from the old lot, to be added to the new location, and along with them went the old barn, cradle of the company. Like a poor relation at a fashionable wedding, it stands in the centre of the new location, at once an eyesore and a shrine, a shabby, unlovely thing in the midst of a conglomeration of architecture that represents pretty nearly everything except a Chinese pagoda and the Eskimo igloo. Every auxiliary building was cast in a different style of architecture with an eye to exterior availability as well as housing problems, and many of them are built around a garden that garden shots may be made with the widest choice of architectural background.

Eleven stages are provided, all of them being of the "dark" type, and there are a number of exterior sets at different points on the lot. The buildings are not yet all finished, for a dressing room building is being constructed that will supply ten stars with dressing room suites and 100 rooms for players who do not require such ample space. The extras dress in the wardrobe building where rooms on the third floor will accommodate 1200 persons. The second floor is taken up by the women's wardrobe, and the men's wardrobe room and casting and purchasing departments occupy the ground floor. This building is 92 by 188 feet, while the dressing room building is 253 by 32 feet. Another new structure, the executive office building, is 404 by 276 feet.

The laboratory will remain on the old Vine street location, for this is too modern to be abandoned. Here the film is developed and the negative cut in one of the best equipped structures of its kind in the industry.

The present stage equipment is three times that of the old lot, and can accommodate 15 to 20 companies working at the same time.

Auxiliary buildings are the plumbing, blacksmith, electrical construction, machine, and other shops, with a garage 270 feet long, and a hospital and a schoolhouse with five class rooms are included.

All of these are under the supervision of the Art and Technical Director, Ed. Smith, who is not staggered by the largest orders. For Old Ironsides the order ran all the way from hand props to the Constitution herself. The old clipper ship Llewellyn J. Morse was purchased and made over into an exact reproduction of the famous battleship, most of the measurements tallying to within an inch or two, and rerigged to conform to ancient usage. Other ships had to be provided, and all had to be armed with cannon that could shoot. These were contrived by Frank Madigan, master of properties.

And on top of this masterpiece of property making came the still unreleased Paramount specials, "Wings" and "The Rough Riders," both of which were made in the vicinity of San Antonio, Texas, where Roosevelt's training camp had been established, and where the collaboration of the aviation service could be had for "Wings."

The technical staff moved a large section of its force into Texas and took Madigan and his stars along, for the old camp, had to be restored to its 1898 aspect, and it was, even to the background of an Exposition being held at that time.

At the same time it was necessary to build most of the properties for "Wings," since armament has changed materially since the World War and gun mounts, mechanisms and styles in aeroplanes have changed materially since 1916-1918. A French village had to be constructed and the 24 houses were promptly blown to pieces. A German troop train was constructed, only to suffer the same annihilation, and in between Madigan turned out the two-inch Teddy bear that was supposed to be Richard Arlen's mascot.

"Casey at the Bat" called for the interior of the Casino Theatre, New York, as it looked a generation ago. The old upstairs house was very different from the one built after the fire, with the floor lowered to the ground level. It had to be entirely built for just a few scenes.

The Art Department presides over the usual staff of architects, decorators, furnishers, research workers and mechanics. Portable lighting, brought close to perfection, has done away with the building of many elaborate special sets, but the Technical department is still a high pressure organization with "Rush" marked across the face of each order.

Jesse L. Lasky, who has charge of production, believes in the original script, written directly for the screen by those who have been trained in the technique of the camera. Many of his writers have come up from the cutting room; most valuable of technical schools, and all of the staff have had practical training. Luther Reed, who graduated from the scenario room to the puttees, goes his chief one better when he declares that in time the post of director will be merely the preliminary to the work of authorship.

Ben Hecht is an excellent example of the value of preliminary study. He spent weeks around the studio, merely looking on. Then he went to his typewriter and turned out "Underworld," a story so nearly technically perfect that it could be screened almost as written.

That's the trouble with outside writers, as Mr. Lasky sees it. They consider only the story. They do not realize the need for writing something that can be translated directly

Glorifying The Bathing Beauty

BACK in the days when Biograph players used to have their names taken from them when they entered the employ of the company, there were two comedians who, before they went to Biograph, were known as Mack Sennett and Fred Mace. Of course with their names securely locked up in a big safe, it was not possible to convey this interesting fact to the world, but the world, or that part of it that was interested in pictures liked their work.

Then Kessel and Bauman decided to go into the picture business, and eventually they landed in Los Angeles with three brands, Kay-Bee, Broncho and Keystone. Keystone was to be the comedy unit, and Mack Sennett was to be the head. Mace was made a director.

And presently the world woke up to the fact that Keystone comedies were screams, and particularly the Keystone Cops, (that were more than once threatened with some local police abolition because they made such light of the law). It was seriously contended that the cops led children to defy if not despise authority. In those days the chief Cop was a chap by the name of Wallace Beery, and a little later the ranks were swelled by a vaudeville importation by the name of Chaplin,

Charlie Chaplin, to be exact. As a cop Chaplin was no funnier than the rest, but he was merely being trained to the camera and presently he blossomed out as a star comedian with the same make-up he wears today.

And things began to happen to comedies. Up to that time comedies had been either faintly funny or plain foolish. Sennett began to put thought back of the seemingly senseless ideas. Amazing trick effects were devised, the company was built up with Mack Swain, Chester Conklin and others, and more action was crowded into a single one reel comedy than would have sufficed the average producer for a month.

In 1914 D. W. Griffith and Thomas H. Ince formed the Triangle, and Sennett was invited to bring his comedies over to the new combination.

The move seemed to be a good one until the news leaked out that Sennett was working on a comedy that would run more than five reels. That seemed incredible, but it was admitted to be true. It finally came out in 6,500 feet with Marie Dressler as the star and Mabel Normand and Chaplin in her support. "Support" proved to be the correct word, for these more experienced players stole the play, and on later revivals Chaplin was named as the star. "Tillie's Punctured Romance" was the world's first feature length comedy and it made a young fortune for its producers and benefited the exhibitors even more.

The trick comedy was growing a bit stale by 1916 and in casting about for something new Sennett hit upon the idea of his Bathing Beauties. Gloria Swanson was one of the original beauties, but only one of the most astonishing beauty chorus ever gathered together.

In the same year Sennett made "Mickey." He had been making it for quite some time, for that matter, for three directors had worked on the script with Mabel Normand for about two years. But "Mickey" finally went to release and it was a greater knockout than "Tillie." It was packed to the last inch with about every sure fire thrill that ever had been invented, it moved with the speed of the Empire State Express and it was alternately funny and thrilling.

"Mickey" became an epidemic. It was the first picture to be used for the now common trade hooks ups and there were "Mickey" hats,

Out Where Fox Begins

COMPETING of William Fox's million-dollar reconstruction, expansion and improvement program at Fox Films studios in Hollywood and the rapid development of the 150-acre location studio at Fox Hills has proved one of the wonders of the motion picture industry during the past year and provides an authentic index not only of Hollywood's progress, but of the film business in general. Further, there is no better index to the growth and business development of Hollywood than the history of Fox Films Studios during the past ten years.

When Mr. Fox, in 1917, purchased the property on the west side of Western avenue, at Sunset Boulevard, it was an orange and lemon grove which W. C. Frye, a Hollywood pioneer, had planted in 1888. Thomas Dixon, author of "The Klansman," which D. W. Griffith used as the story for "The Birth of a Nation," had purchased a portion of the Frye estate, together with a residence which was used as a studio during Dixon's production of "The Fall of a Nation." Across Western avenue was an alfalfa field which Mr. Fox added to his holdings, giving his studio in Hollywood a site of thirteen and a half acres. Six years ago this was found to be inadequate to the rapidly increasing demand for Fox Films dramas and 150 acres were purchased at Fox Hills with the expectation that this will prove sufficient for the studios' ultimate needs.

Today the Hollywood orange and lemon grove and alfalfa patch are memories among a few of the older memories of the Fox Films family of 3,000, who are continuously employed in the executive offices and on the eight stages, three of them among the largest in the world, and the Hollywood studio now is just what Mr. Fox ordered a year ago—the most practical and efficient motion picture plant in the world with special emphasis on comfortable working conditions for all employees.

Development work at Fox Hills is far from complete, but the beautiful natural location is rapidly taking shape in accordance with Mr. Fox's intention that it shall be the most practical and picturesque spot in filmland. Some idea of the magnitude of the plans for Fox Hills can be visioned from the expenditure on the street scene for "Sunrise," a production now in the making under the direction of F. W. Murnau, Germany's premier screen drama creator.

This street set for "Sunrise" is a mile long and was completed at a cost of approximately $200,000. Six and seven-story story buildings line both sides of the street, while down the middle of the broad plaza is a street car line and at one end an elevated railway structure. Real trolley cars are operated on the tracks. About this huge set, which is the largest ever constructed for a motion picture, are bits of scenery from every corner of the world from the jungles of the tropics to the steppes of Siberia.

While the improvement program, as originally planned, called for an expenditure of only $500,000, it was found necessary to elaborate on it as work progressed and one development called for another until the total cost of new work will be more than $1,000,000. And in carrying out Mr. Fox's purpose, Mr. Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president of the company, has availed himself of the best technical ability obtainable, the greater part of it found within the Fox organization. Chief among his advisors have been General Superintendent S. M. Wurtzel, Technical Director William Darling and Electrical Superintendent Hoffner, all men of the widest experience and observation in their lines.

Three huge stages, for which there is always an increasing demand, were among the first of the buildings erected in accordance with the development plans for the Hollywood plant. To make room for these, seven smaller stages and two acres of outdoor sets were wrecked. The new stages are of permanent construction and among their new features is the Hoffner system of lighting, heating and ventilation, which has been proved to eliminate Kleig eyes, a malady which has been a menace to every studio stage employe for years.

When the new stages, each 150 by 350 feet, were completed at the Sunset and Western plant, Mr. Sheehan announced that, in addition to many open stages at Fox Hills, the corporation now possessed eight of the finest enclosed stages in the world.

Some idea of the size of these stages may be gained from the fact that a baseball game, with full teams, can be staged on each of them without in any way interfering with the electrical workers and other studio employees.

Oculists had discovered that Kleig eyes were caused, not by the strain of working under high-power lights alone, but by a combination of strain and carbon dust. The strain weakens the eye, so that the dust gives it the final touch and produces the disorders. Microscopic examination and chemical analysis proved that this dust was largely calcium from burning carbon.

Hoffner designed a system of overhead lighting, using steel cranes for all lifting and conveying, and thus suspended many of the lights as high as possible. They were operated from runways built into the high ceilings and were operated by remote control. Then he devised a stage heating system that would carry all dust upward, and a ventilating system that would carry it out through huge ventilators built in the topmost eaves.

The air is under thermostatic control. It is delivered at "floor-level" and, as it rises, it gives the air in the stage a "vacuum cleaning." Rigid tests show that this system not only prevents suffering from Kleig eyes, but saves thousands of dollars for the producers. Neither actors nor directors now have to absent themselves from their studio duties because of sore eyes.

Commodious wardrobes, managed by Kathleen Kay, an internationally known modiste, were built at a cost of $75,000. Gowns from London, Paris, Vienna and other fashion centers were imported for Fox stars. Fitters and designers are employed to make exclusive frocks and elaborate costumes for those who appear in Fox Films. Near the wardrobe is a new hospital of four wards, with a surgeon on continuous duty.

Other improvements, all carried out under a comprehensive plan, which included Spanish walls and Moorish gates, went forward rapidly. These include a theatre on the company's west lot, where a full program of Fox pictures is shown to directors, stars, technical experts and many other employees every Tuesday night. Besides, there were four new projection rooms equipped with modern machines, for the use of the studio's directors and executives. Administration buildings and additional quarters for many writers have been completed.

The Schenck Headquarters Of United Artists

 ORIGINALLY known as the Pickford-Fairbanks Studios, and as such the shrine of the photoplay fans, the lot with a post office address of 2700 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, has now become the production headquarters of the United Artists, under the general direction of Joseph M. Schenck.

Obtained by Douglas Fairbanks for the production of such stupendous spectacles as "The Three Musketeers" and "Robin Hood," it has within its confines the space necessary to the erection of the gigantic sets used in these and later presentations, and affords room for half a dozen of the usual super-feature productions, but this is augmented by the addition of another huge lot in the Culver City section, obtained by John W. Considine, Jr., and Roland West.

This tract is at the junction of Jefferson Boulevard and Overland Avenue, close to the Culver City Speedway, and is a part of the historic Picot Ranch. Nominally this is the location of Feature Productions, Inc., the largest of the production organizations controlled by Mr. Schenck, but actually, owing to the close inter-relationship of the various components of United Artists, it is part of the general scheme.

The combined lots give United Artists one of the largest studio equipments in California, and this, of course, means the world.

In addition to these lots there is Buster Keaton's studio on Lillian Way, where the comedian will continue the production of his releases. This is a smaller place, but still an important one and adds to the acreage.

The nucleus of the Santa Monica Boulevard studio is still the huge stage upon which were built the sets for the Fairbanks and Pickford productions, which give ample dark stage space for a number of units. This has been and is being supplemented by the erection of an Administration Building for the Schenck organizations and the studio holding company, together with scores of dressing rooms, a power plant, the usual equipment of carpenter and metals working plants, the property rooms, gymnasium, film storage vaults, bungalows for the stars and the other necessary offices, while the old buildings, sufficient for the original uses, and being enlarged and improved. All streets are paved.

Today the studio stands as fully equipped as any on the coast, which means the utmost in convenience and efficiency.

The Culver City lot is largely used for the large exteriors and recently has been used for the Venetian settings in the coming Constance Talmadge comedy. The network of canals and the reproduction of famous palaces and squares did not materially tax the resources of the confines.

Joseph M. Schenck, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Mary Pickford, Douglas

Fairbanks, John W. Considine, Jr., Roland West, Fred Niblo, the Duncan sisters, Marshall Neilan, Sidney A. Franklin and Lewis Milestone are some of the famous producers who are or presently will be at work on the lot, not to mention Morris Gest, who will make his productions here for United Artists, and presumably D. W. Griffith.

To accommodate all these more than three and one-half million dollars are being expended for new buildings and equipment.

Two years ago it was thought that production had already been developed to the utmost, but the succeeding two years have been almost revolutionary in their gigantic strides.

One of the really big things now being done, the recent John Barrymore production, is characteristic of the new trend of production thought, that is being given development is illustrated by William Cameron Menzies, who says of "The Beloved Rogue":

"The Gothic period, a wild grotesque bizarre type of architecture. The roof lines, long sharp points, twisted stairways, fantastic sculpture and carving, cold harsh austere lines but strong dramatic and violent in form and pattern. A peculiar type of interesting beauty from its very harshness. Using the snow, we increase this wildness, and with the scape grace swashbuckler Villon as the central figure, Mr. Barrymore and myself adopted a feeling which has never before been attempted in pictures. The reality of the thing has never been lost sight of, but with the period and character as an excuse we have developed a subtle and psychological feeling of almost mad pattern in the background.

"This is attained by different point of view and set-up and a selection of more or less obscure objects and designs of the period. For instance the feeling in the square of Rouen, where Jeanne d'Arc has been burned is one of extreme austerity and coldness. Harsh frowning houses glare down into the square, crooked and angular streets run in and in the foreground a violent and distorted shape of timbers gives a frame for drama. The reverse of this might be cited. The kitchen of the Inn, which is devoted mostly to comedy, has a fat jolly looking oven in round, fat lines with a crazy network of chimneys. In fact the whole lot has a roundness and jollity of line.

"Again we have the Archaic and formal feeling of the period in some of the rooms in the palace, done with formal and balanced compositions, and still again the brightness and almost sweetness of the girl's room done with lighting and brighter decorations.

"Violence of action has been accented with extremity of set up and point of view and violence of angle in design.

"Production is of real size and magnificence. Some of the sets are the Town of Rouen, streets of Paris, the Hotel St. Pol with its tremendous throne rooms, etc. The Walls of Paris with its catapults and engines of war. The Chateau of Thibault perched perilously on a cliff top and a tremendous shot of the whole of Paris of the period with the Seine and the Isle. But with the size has been a more intellectual attempt at entertainment in the actual background than in most any of the big spectacles.

"Every set has been approached with an attempt at doing something that has never appeared before and will unquestionably receive a recognition as an artistic attempt (or success) at something different than any picture heretofore. Menzies has found this easy to do on account of Mr. Barrymore's and Mr. Crosland's intelligence on art and appreciation of same. Symbolism has been attempted more than heretofore."

Compressed into fewer words, the idea may be expressed by saying that stylization can materially contribute to the effect of the story provided that it is not offered as a substitute for story.

Much care is given to the cutting of the prints under the editorship of Hal Kern, who believes that the eventual tempo of the picture is as important as its production angles.

Some of his reactions are interesting and show what intelligent cutting can do. In one instance the first shot showed the main characters unacquainted with each other. The second sequence portrayed their meeting which resulted in the marital troubles which formed the real story.

Even with careful trimming the action dragged. The second incident was a clog. The first scenes were used, but a title now told of the honeymoon, and the action then moved directly into the story with a saving gain in progress.

In his early cuts he takes as much advice as he can get, believing that many minds can form a better average, but the final trimming he holds should be a more individual expression.

He likens the assembling to musical composition in which notes of varying duration contribute to the rhythm of the composition. In the same way he achieves a rhythmic movement through the use of longer or shorter scenes as the nature of the action and its speed may seem to indicate.

Nor is he unmindful of the value of the sub-title and points to one instance in which the second male lead was supposed to handle the comedy. He did not seem to get over very well. The judicious introduction of a

Warner Brothers' Studios

Out on Sunset Boulevard

THEY say that anything will grow in the wonderful climate of Southern California, and the Warner Brothers studio lot on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, is a splendid confirmation of that statement. The Warners took over the land in 1918, when their increasing prosperity made a change in locale necessary. The thirteen-acre plot was desirable in point of location, conformation and utility, but thirteen acres was a lot of land, and had an earthquake come along about then the one puny building would have rattled around the lot like a pea in a peck measure. "Doc" Salmon, recruited from the Warner sales department in San Francisco to be studio superintendent was also the property man, office boy, janitor and even on occasion the night watchman. The studio was a small two-stage affair, with electrical equipment barely sufficient to provide the necessary current. Today Salmon is overlord of more than 700 employees, and if he is around the studio nights, as he often is, it is only because the daylight hours are not long enough to permit him to crowd his multitude of details into the average working day.

And Frank Murphy, who had to stand over his dynamos with a whip when both stages were working, has charge of a plant about the size of that required for a city of 15,000 persons, in addition to a battery of portable generators that supply the lights for night work on location; when they are not being used for some important theatre opening. In the past year these lights have been loaned to twenty-five theatres. The value of the electrical equipment is upward of $750,000, and Murphy is still in charge.

Current is also supplied by this plant for the Warner broadcasting station KFVB, the tall aerials of which form one of the night and day landmarks of the film city.

The stages are lighted by the usual combination of Kleigs, Cooper-Hewitts, Lake tubes and various forms of carbon lights, and some idea of the equipment may be gained from the fact that last year the studio used more than 100,000 carbons. Lay them end to end for yourself if you wish.

The first stage was built in 1922 with dimensions 325 by 145 feet, which made it one of the largest stages in the world at that time.

Warner Brothers' great California studios; across top, bird's-eye view; a night scene emphasizing the radio towers; and three views of "once-upon-a-time" studios of the old days—accenting growth both in facilities and in successful production.

Today the original stage has three duplicates, each of about the same floor space.

The original thirteen acres have not been expanded, for expansion is not necessary, and ingenious planning has made the space ample, but when Warners bought out Vitagraph two years ago, they acquired a 23-acre plot, fully equipped by A. E. Smith, one of the oldest producers in the business. This lot is now used for overflow work.

R. Louis Geib started with Warners in 1918 as Technical Director, but he had no one to direct, since he had no permanent helpers in his department. He not only designed the sets, but he helped to build and erect them, painted them, dressed them, kept them clean, and finally tore them down. He was a thoroughly practical builder, for in addition to six years on the Fox lot as carpenter he was a building contractor on the side. He has no time for side issues today, for he is in command of a woodworking shop with equipment costing $15,000, a machine shop with $20,000 worth of equipment which not only builds for production but keeps the cameras and laboratory machinery in repair, and also has charge of other machine equipment, valued at about $15,000.

With the collaboration of Esdras Hartley, the art director, he has laid out the building plan of the lot, and takes pride in the contention that it is the cleanest and most compact studio lot on the coast.

They also designed and built the fireproof laboratory, which is a model of compactness and efficiency. It has not lost a day since its opening, either for repairs or lack of work.

As a sample of what they can do, it may be mentioned that recently there were in production in this 13-acre space seven features, "Bitter Apples," "The Gay Old Bird," "A Million Bid," "What Every Girl Should Know," "Hills of Kentucky," "Matinee Ladies," and "White Flannels," and still the units did not intrude on each other.

All properties and costumes are made on the lot. The property room occupies a part of the building erected in the exact centre of the property, originally occupied by the "old" stage, as distinguished from the "Number One" which came in 1922. This is a modern three-story building of 24,000 square feet of floor space containing the offices of the Studio Manager, Publicity, Technical and Art Departments, the office of the Studio

The De Mille Studios That Keep Apace With Genius

ALTHOUGH the De Mille studio dates back only two years and is one of the youngest of the organizations, it is now one of the largest. Even the old Thomas H. Ince studio was found to be inadequate for the needs of De Mille, and the accommodations were much enlarged. The merger with Al Christie added to the equipment the Metropolitan Studio, in Hollywood, and while these two units are about twelve miles apart they work together in the matter of production, though much of resources of the De Mille Studio have been devoted to the filming of the prodigious spectacle, "The King of Kings," which is expected to overshadow all of the De Mille giants of other years.

The two studios give a combined stage space of about a quarter million feet, and on the De Mille lot there is in course of construction one of the most ample stages on the coast with a floor space 200 by 600 feet, giving 120,000 square feet of working space, or nearly half the area of the present ten stages. The new studio will have a roof clearance varying from 40 to 90 feet.

In addition to this there are 42 acres of open location at Culver City and another 38 acres at Westwood, which give an even 80 acres of natural scenery suited to almost every type of modern picture. Nature has to be touched up, now and then when the action shifts to foreign lands, but out in California even nature seems to take to make-up as kindly as do the players.

On the De Mille lot more than five miles of paved streets connect the various stages, construction buildings and administrative offices, and like most studios there is a fully equipped fire and police department. A school-house for the junior members of the cast is maintained, and a standard fire alarm system has been installed.

The elaborate production of "The Volga Boatman" was the first to test the studio capacity, but 40 regular program releases also were made last season, and this year the program is even more ambitious.

William Sistrom is general manager of the combined studios.

On the Metropolitan lot the construction work is in charge of Harvey Leavitt, who receives the sketches from Charles Cadwallader, of the Art Department, and passes them on to his various heads of departments, who estimate the costs from their individual angles. Leavitt then checks the figures, to be certain that they come within the budget, and if all is well, each department is told to go ahead.

Leavitt does not believe in too close a supervision. He feels that his men should be permitted to do things in their own way, since experience has demonstrated that they know how to get results speedily and efficiently and without undue cost. He feels that the workmen are apt to regard too close a supervision as "bossing," and he gets far better results by acting as the general and not trying to be a private in the ranks, as well.

The completed material is erected on the stage and turned over to the paint foreman, who sizes up the job and puts his men to work. Meanwhile the property room has been assembling the necessary material, and this is rushed to the set as soon as the paint has dried, and the property crew is followed by the electricians who set their lights and make ready for the shooting.

At the Metropolitan the dressing rooms are all on the ground floor with 32 rooms for the players and two large rooms, each accommodating 150 for the extras. Economy of time is effected by placing the wardrobe above these rooms instead of in a building some distance apart. The costumes and those who are to wear them are under the same roof.

The property department at the Metropolitan is in charge of Ben Boone, while William House is Master of Properties in Culver City. Some idea of the latter's job may be gathered from the fact that 9,000 items were handled for "The King of Kings" alone.

Perhaps nowhere on the lots is more consideration given the scenario than by De Mille. The four supervisors are all veteran scenarists

"Our Gang"

And Its Home On The Hal Roach Lot

ALTHOUGH there is a wide variety of comedy production going on at the six-acre tract on Washington Boulevard, Culver City, to most persons who patronize the pictures, the Roach lot is primarily the home of "Our Gang."

As a matter of fact the Roach lot is only half the story, for there is a five acre addition on Preuss Road, where exteriors can be made and where housing room is found for the many trained animals used in the comedies. The overflow lot is only half a mile from the main studio, and the two lots are worked as one, a fleet of nearly 50 automobiles maintaining close connection as well as serving to transport the players to more distant locations.

Roach is one of the few producers still to do his own processing and the laboratory building forms an imposing addition to the shops and stages. All of the prints are made right on the lot instead of being sent to some outside laboratory.

One noticeable feature of the lot is the permanency of most of the building, for hollow tile has been used in place of frame or stucco where possible as being fireproof and more enduring. There are two stage buildings each capable of accommodating three or four companies without crowding and they are kept steadily busy. There are, in addition, the usual shops, electrical equipment and some exterior sets, though most of these are erected on the backlot.

The regular stock company includes Charlie Chase, Martha Sleeper, one of the 1927 Wampas Baby Stars; Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, James Finlayson, Viola Richards, Jess Devorska, Max Davidson, and others.

The stock company productions are supplemented by Roach's new idea of special productions with well known stars, and Agnes Ayres, Lionel Barrymore, Theda Bara, Mae Busch, Helene Chadwick, Mat Moore, Mabel Normand, Mitchell Lewis, Priscilla Dean, Herbert Rawlinson and several others have at times headed the cast of a single picture, with more experienced comedians helping them to get the laughs over. These name comedies are something new and many of them have worked out so well that the idea will be continued, but the bulk of the work will fall to the regular stock, most of whom are comedy favorites in their own right.

One feature of the lot is the costume department, for no comedy producer gives more care to the dressing of his players, and the bizzare designs of Will Lambert give a peculiar distinction to Roach's women stars. They are as well costumed as the players in the most important dramatic productions, for the producer believes that women like to see odd and attractive costumes in comedies as well as in the features, and he dresses his stars accordingly.

But the real stars are the eight youngsters in "Our Gang" and they are also the most profitable. It is one of the Roach theories that the self-continuing idea is the most remunerative. He believes in making one comedy create a demand for the next, which is the basic idea of his visiting star system. He believes that if the public likes a star in a dramatic picture, it will wish to see how they fare in comedy, and he combs Hollywood for his guest players.

It was in search of something on the same lines that led him to the gang. He believed that a production with all children would be a novelty. He was pretty certain that he could put over half a dozen of these in succession; perhaps twelve. But even a run of six comedies would make worth while the time and trouble spent in assembling just the right children. Next to dogs, there is nothing easier to get in Hollywood than children. Every owner of a mutt wants to put the dog alongside Rin-Tin-Tin and live happily on its earnings. And every mother is perfectly certain that if Georgie or Little Ella only got a chance the world would gasp in amazed delight. This is not a belief confined to Hollywood. It goes around the world.

Getting children was the easiest thing in the world. But getting children who could act naturally and without affectation, well, that was something else again. He wanted children who could get out and look and act like children and not child prodigies, and it took more hard work to assemble a bunch of eight youngsters than would be required to cast the heaviest drama.

But the right children were located. The first six comedies went over, as did the next six, and the other day "Love My Dog" was pre-released to Los Angeles at the State theatre and the sixtieth picture went over. These sixty pictures have all been made within the past five years.

A few of these earliest really Baby Stars have outgrown the company. The much freckled Mickey Daniels and Mary Kornman; the first leading lady, are playing out three year contracts in vaudeville. Perhaps after a time they will come back to the pictures, but right now they are headliners in vaudeville houses and the larger picture theatres. "Sunshine Sammy" one of the first to graduate, is sticking in vaudeville, after having played a three-year contract out, and Johnny Downs is jobbing in adult productions, with a vaudeville contract ready for his signature. The highly tinted "Farina" started so young that he still makes the grade, but his baby sister, Janie Hoskins, (Farina's name is Alan, by the way), has been put in to help along the local color. Joe Frank Cobb, the heavyweight, is good for a year or so yet, and Jackie Condon, the boy who combs his hair with an egg beater, also remains. Freckles are provided by Jay R. Smith, and "Scooter" Lowry, the toughest boy that ever left New York, is a recent favorite. The new leading lady is Jean Darling, who steps into stellar honors at the early age of four.

A new child is taken on every three months for training, but only about one out of every four makes good and is retained. They are taken on at the average age of four, and so-

Hal Roach's "Our Gang" have become known affectionately among the fans as well as in the studio as "Hal Roach's Rascals" each has the prospect of five or six years of lucrative work before the age limit is arrived at. By this process of addition there are always some favorites to hold the loyalty of the patrons while the newcomers acquire fame and friendliness.

At the completion of his five years' work, Robert McGowan, their director signed a new five year contract, but this will not become effective until he returns from a three months vacation. Production meanwhile will go on with Anthony Mack and Charley Oelze working on scrips left behind by McGowan. They have assisted him for several years and know his methods.

The real secret of the favor of Our Gang Comedies is twofold. The naturalness of action gives their work a peculiar charm, but in addition to this the children make a personal appeal. Thousands have known them by name and have watched them grow toward maturity. Each new picture presents them in a different aspect. If you are older than you care to remember, you will recall the first Katzenjammer Kids. They were the same a quarter century ago as they are now. A newer generation finds them interesting, but to the old timers they are just the same, and that sameness has become tiresome.

The gang never is quite the same. Perhaps Joe has lost a tooth in one picture, to regain its successor a couple of releases later on. Little Miss Darling is going to shed a whole set of teeth before she graduates and each one will be an event. The gang is always the same old bunch, yet they are ever new. They do not stale through sameness and there is always the injection of enough new blood to carry interest for the movie audiences.

And the gang never will grow up. Individuals may, but the gang itself will be an eternal Peter Pan, never growing old and helping others to retain somewhat of their youth.

Titles Ride Their Cycles

Fashions in titles for motion pictures have changed as rapidly as has woman's dress in the past twenty years. When subjects ran less than half a reel, and the chase was still a novelty, any words served as a title—from "Washday" to "A Day in the Country." "The," "A," "His," or "Her" sacrifices, sorrows, troubles or other sufferings came in for a big swing, with vengeance, revenges and victories sharing the screen. Then the films began to assume dignity with an increase in length, and there was a response in the titles which included "Cabiria," "Birth of a Nation," "The Miracle" (a wordless pantomime in films) which was shown at the Park Theatre in 1913. The swing was then to book and play titles but when some of these did not capitalize at the box office there was a swaying toward new titles for popular authors' material, followed by the advent of the "wisecracks" in titles, which still hold sway, though the war film has brought army and navy references into prominence in titles, with place and show positions allotted to the fire and police departments. Who shall say what will be the next title fashion?

Recruiting Has Been Heavy

In a picture made a little less than twenty years ago, a Confederate army of eight served to win a lustily fought battle: and it was no difficulty for the director to handle them by mere shouts; within the past ten years armies and mobs of hundreds were used, and director's assistants were drilled to supervise sections of the field of battle under the amplifying megaphone of the directing genius; but in a recent film thousands played parts in forts, and in battleships—and a complete radio broadcasting apparatus enabled the director to manipulate every factor by a soft-spoken command.

PATHE

*A Word That Has Come to Mean News,
Entertainment and Education to Millions—From
The Oldest Producing Company
In the Business*

PATHE EXCHANGE, originally the American branch of Pathe Freres, is the oldest continuously producing company in the business. The last of the other old-line producers went out when Vitagraph sold to Warner Brothers a couple of years ago. But Pathe has met the changed conditions, and it is no longer the active producing organization it was when its studios dotted Europe and production was made both at Jersey City and on the West Coast. It finds it more profitable to distribute the product of other concerns, and its own production activities are largely confined to Pathe-serials. Edison made the first serial, or more correctly series story, but Pathe was the first to develop the serial as it is known today, and "The Perils of Pauline," the first Pathe serial, has had a constant line of succession to the present day.

The old studio in Jersey City, sitting diagonally on its Congress Street lot that it might run due east and west, has long since been abandoned. There is no longer a Pathe Western studio, for it has been found more convenient to take space in the Fine Arts studio in Hollywood for the western section and shop around for its eastern company; for there are two organizations, one operating on each coast.

The serial is in a distinct class by itself, and possesses a technique differing from all other cinematic forms. It must run from 20 to 30 reels, and work up to a point of suspense at the end of each second reel that is sufficient to last over until the showing of the next chapter the following week.

In the early days the chief essential to a serial was a stunt actor, and any rough story structure that permitted plenty of stunts was regarded as a competent vehicle. Generally a mystery character was sole suspense feature, and production went ahead in haphazard fashion, the last reels often being in process of making while the early chapters were on the screens.

Today more intelligence and more story are demanded, and the Patheserials are worked out to the last detail before the initial shooting is started. It has been found that better results are thus obtained, and production costs are cut considerably if the directors know precisely what is to be done in advance of production.

This is important from another angle. Most pictures come onto a program, are either a success or failure, and vanish from that screen after a period ranging from a day to a week. The serial must bring them back for a ten week period, and the interest must be planned so that audience curiosity is kept alive to the final chapter. Generally speaking a serial gets over in its first three chapters or it never does, and in these early instalments care must be taken to so intrigue interest that it holds.

Naturally the slow, easy development has no place in the serial scheme. It may be recalled that in the early days of the Mutual a serial was made from a script by George Randolph and Lillian Chester. It was an effort to make story take the place of action.

The exhibitor reaction to the first chapters was so unfavorable that a hurried effort was made to inject strength. Extraneous scenes were cut into these early chapters and the serial was again offered exhibitors, but the physical action was not intimately related to the story progress, and again the audience would have none of it.

In spite of this sad fate, another producer undertook to make a polite serial with no less a star than Billie Burke. It was to be the serial de luxe. Naturally Miss Burke could not be expected to emulate Pearl White. The atmosphere of the drawing room was to prevail, and the serial was to lift the chapter play out of the morass of crude violence and blood-thirstiness. "Gloria" died; drowned in a sea of red ink, and the uplifters thereafter sedulously shunned the chapter play, deciding that the poor thing was too hopelessly depraved to be redeemed. This was some time after Aesop wrote his fable of the Fox and the grapes, proving that history repeats itself.

Serials continue because they are profitable alike to the producer and the exhibitor. The latter, particularly the small house manager, finds that the serial makes and holds business. The producer who can put serials over finds the one form of block booking that does not cause the exhibitor to write the trade papers and the Attorney General for needed help.

And so Patheserial still hold their own, partly because the basic idea is sound and partly because Pathe has constantly sought to improve the product, to broaden the appeal and to better the quality. And this little corner of the Fine Arts Studio represents the most consistently profitable company on the coast.

The West Coast unit is wholly self contained. It has its own technical staff, its own scenarist, its own executive heads and its stars. When stage space is required, it rents whatever is needed or takes what is available. It has no particular stage assigned, and since serials are largely made outdoors, the studio is more often a headquarters than a working space.

When a stage is required it is dressed by its own men with sets of its own building or hiring and lighted under the direction of its own electrician.

The production manager is Willard Reineck. He is also supervisor so far as supervision goes in the Pathe sector. But with Bill Reineck supervision means getting his gang together and urging them to do their damndest. He knows they will, but he's got to do some supervision or be hopelessly old fashioned, so he goes through the motions now and then, knowing that the crew he has gathered about him will do just that without special urge.

Supervision with Bill does not mean sitting on a sawhorse and watching the carpenter work. He tells the boss carpenter what he wants, knowing that it will be ready when needed. It is the same with the other departments.

His director is Spencer Bennet, (with only one "t", please), who is unique in that he has spent most of his cinematic life with the single firm and has done only a single line of direction. At the start he drifted into pictures because he was an all round athlete and useful in stunt work. The only work he has ever done for other than Pathe was stunt stuff for other serial makers, but most of his stunts were for Pathe Pictures.

He was not afraid of work, and passed from jobbing stuntster to utility man. He could run props onto a set and then turn around and play an important role in the same set.

First National Studios

SEVERAL things about the new First National studio at Burbank, a short distance from Los Angeles, are distinctively different, and by no means the least of these is the fact that it is one studio at which the permanent buildings are all of one type of architecture. In most instances the aim of the builder has been to give the greatest diversity to the exteriors to the end that each building may be used for backgrounds for the pictures. No one has quite gone to the extreme of putting up shacks with four different styles of architecture for the various sides of the same building, but it is likely to come as the studios grow more congested.

At Burbank all of the main buildings are in the Spanish style, finished in brown stucco with Moorish arches and facades and red tiled. The studios and shops are less ornate in design and are not tiled, but the color scheme remains.

The lot comprises about 75 acres of which 48 are now covered by buildings. The remainder of the lot is temporarily used for the building of exterior sets, but the excess of ground was provided for future expansion, and the general scheme of the built-up portions will be followed out. The entire idea was to obtain a plot that would provide for this ultimate expansion and the existing portions are erected partly with this end in view. The electrical plant, for example, can accommodate a battery of twelve generators in the floor space of 58 by 75 feet, though three are sufficient to supply the present needs. The rest provides for the utmost possible expansion.

All of this was carefully considered by John McCormick, General Manager of West Coast Production, and M. C. Levee, General Executive Manager. Other units can be added as required, all of the same general style and each addition will be merely another harmonious part of the original plan until the entire seventy-five acres are filled in.

In the occupied portion there are several miles of concrete streets between the various buildings, six main streets of fifty feet width, four smaller streets and numerous alleys, all paved. Numbered streets run in one direction and lettered streets in the other. The paving is heavy enough to sustain the heaviest trucks or even a battery of artillery, should artillery ever be needed in a picture.

The three large administration buildings face the street, these containing the business and executive departments. Four stages occupy the central portion of the grounds, with two more building and a seventh and eighth in prospect. All are uniformly 137 by 240 feet with a height of 36 feet in the clear inside. The floor area of each stage is 33,000 feet. The floors are built so solidly that trucks may be driven directly to any point on the stage, where the load may be deposited with the least amount of handling. One extra large door in each wall is provided with a ramp which makes it possible for the truck to enter the building.

These also give entrance to the "mules" or light gasoline or electric trucks which handle the properties and accessories. Each stage has its own electric mule for light work about the floor while a present fleet of six gasoline mules ply between the stages and the property room and shops.

Another radical departure from usage is the entire absence of floor plugs. The size makes it impracticable to use the customary connections and all light cables are dropped from the roof to where they are required. This keeps the floor free and facilitates track movement.

Overhead tracks carry the lighting equipment, the lights being handled by block and fall instead of rope and pulley, lightening the work of the flymen and making for speed and safety. Just under the roof are runways for the flymen.

No windows are provided in these stage houses. Instead the ventilation is supplied mechanically, the air being warmed or cooled as the season requires. The only wall openings are the doors.

On one side of the stages are three dressing room buildings each two stories in height. One contains twelve star suites of two rooms each on the ground floor and twenty-four single rooms above. The other two contain single rooms and general dressing rooms for the extras. Each building is 33 by 124 feet.

The property and wardrobe building is 120 feet square. It is equally divided between the properties and costumes, each getting one half of each floor. The costume department is subdivided into two sections for costumes for men and women with tailor and dressmaking shops, a steam presser, millinery room and a battery of electric sewing machines.

The three projection rooms are housed in a building 75 by 111 feet, each a miniature theatre, and contains in addition the portrait studio, the camera rooms and a barber and manicure shop.

Since the cutters require plenty of light, the cutting buildings are but 13 feet wide, so that each room has windows on two sides. One building 111 feet long contains five rooms. Two others, each 55 feet in length, contain three rooms each. On the opposite side of the stages is the paint room which houses all of the painters from the men who do the art titles to those who merely swab the floors.

On the south are the various shops including the carpenter shop wherein are built the wooden flats which are used for all interior sets. These are clamped instead of nailed together, and can be used repeatedly, being painted or papered as may be required.

The electric department receives high tension alternating current from the power company and converts it into direct current of lower voltage. About twenty billion candle power is available. All wiring between the station and the other buildings is underground and so arranged that it is not necessary to tear up the walks to run new or more cables. Conduits are already supplied for the new buildings yet to be erected when need shall come.

The Planning Department, a building 120 feet square, occupies a central location in the group of shops. Here the heads of the various shops have their offices, and the excess of space is given to the mechanical equipment storage room, the time keeper's office and the hospital. The Planning Department is the equivalent of the usual technical department, and all work is issued from this central office.

In addition to a garage 40 by 100 feet, there is a shed to house fifteen studio machines. Open air parking space is provided in another section of the grounds for the cars of the employees, and there is ample room for all, though this means several hundred cars. The cars are parked in individual spaces and are not merely run promiscuously into an open space. A studio restaurant, and a Spanish bungalow for Colleen Moore, with a greenhouse for the supply of flowers on sets and landscaping material and a theatre for stage sets complete the permanent structures.

About 800 employees are on the permanent payroll, of which about 750 are employed in the mechanical departments, but the average number of persons employed is closer to a thousand, varying with the daily needs and the productions being made. Practically every trade is represented, but nearly all of these carry their peculiar studio angles.

Unlike the majority of the studios, the art and technical departments are separate, though naturally closely related. The art department makes the designs for sets, and deals only with the creative side. Each unit has its own art director, who works under central authority. Free hand sketches are made of the sets and when approved they go to the drafting room where they are drawn correctly to scale and sent to the technical department, the freehand sketch going along to serve as a guide. A research department, another entity, supplies data on request. Jack Okey is head of the art department with men like Horace Jackson and Jack Schulze. Jackson was art director for "Ben Hur."

The unit director does not follow his work through the technical department, but again comes in contact with it when it is erected for use. Okey works on the theory that the sets can do much to make or destroy a picture. Realism sometimes will convey as much as the action. Contrast supplies another form of scenic emphasis, and sometimes stylistic sets will better enhance the effect, but always the set must do its work without obtrusion on the actors.

The technical head is known as the chief of the Planning Department. He receives all requests for the cooperation of his various sections. The property room, for example, does not manufacture its properties. It either buys or orders them. If it is something that can be made in the metal shops, the request is put through the Planning Department. The same holds true of things in wood, plaster or similar material. The property men do not have to be jacks-of-all-trades. It is their sole duty to handle the properties. Anything once made becomes the care of the property department, and this can supply the average de-

Dr. Cadman Says:

The Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D.D., pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and President of the Federated Council of Churches of Christ in America, in a statement to Moving Picture World on the Twentieth Anniversary of this publication, writes:

The amazing development of the moving picture during the thirty years of its brief existence, justifies the belief of those who hold that the industry is as yet in its infancy. With the coming of television and talking pictures, one's imagination runs riot as he contemplates the future.

The technician and the business organizer have far outrun the creative artist. It is easier to build a movie cathedral than it is to write a great story. And such stories cannot be had by calling together the Board of Directors, just as one cannot get a great hymn by appointing a committee.

Here is the weakness today, as thoughtful observers see the situation, and the leaders of the picture industry will do well to encourage writers of skill and character. High pressure methods without insight and a clearer understanding of the problem may defeat the end sought.

The moving picture will undoubtedly play a large part in the future of international relations. The producers of pictures are seeking a world market. The larger the number of people who see a picture the greater the commercial success. In the interest of good business, the picture producer will seek to please larger and larger audiences. If he is wise he will not offend the potential patrons of other lands. On the contrary, he will endeavor to discover and feature those qualities and characteristics which make for friendship and good will. Does it not follow then that international good will and profitable business are in this instance one and the same thing?

Moreover, the motion picture tells a very human story. No other medium of intercourse can portray so vividly and intimately the hopes and fears, the sorrows and joys of other peoples of the earth. This sympathetic portrayal should lessen international hatred and misunderstandings.

If the cinema art is in its infancy, commercially speaking, it has scarcely begun to make its contribution in the fields of scientific and religious education. There is much in religion which cannot be conveyed by the spoken word. The lights and shadows, the silence and haunting vistas of the screen may provide a way to tell anew to the multitudes the message of the Eternal.

Christie Studios Retain Old Gayety

Once Site Was a Hollywood Roadhouse

FIFTEEN years ago what is now the Christie studio was a roadhouse out in Hollywood. Perhaps that roadhouse in itself will convey the suggestion that the location was not exactly in the civic centre. It was not much of a roadhouse and when the Nestor company came out to establish the first permanent picture studio, back in 1911, the place was hired for headquarters. The old barroom became the carpenter shop and the bar itself was the first workbench, the barber shop was transformed into a laboratory and office and the stables were cleaned out and converted into dressing rooms, while in the garden, at the rear, was erected the stage, about forty feet square, of the primitive type of that day.

A stage then was a wooden platform. Two-by-four joists rose to the height of from twenty to forty feet to support the network of wires on which the muslin diffusers were stretched. If it rained, the props were rushed indoors. It was the largest studio in California because it was the only one, and it was managed for Nestor by Al Christie, who made the comedies himself and supervised the dramatic productions, though they did not call it supervision in those days.

Today Al Christie is still overlord, but in his own right and the plot has been stretched to include the entire block and the 160 square feet of stage space have been increased to 50,-

000. There are four stages now, but when they need a little room, production is moved to Westwood where there is a "back lot" of about 40 acres and an plentitude of natural sets.

Along the front of the home lot is a dressing room building with fifteen rooms on each floor. Back of this is the two story property and wardrobe room, with a yard for parking the various trick automobiles, such as the tonneau of a taxi with the front cut away. Mounted on a trailer, this is towed by a truck on which are placed the cameras. On the screen you seem to be sitting in the taxi with the occupants. Almost every form of automobile can be found here or at Westwood, cars with eccentric wheels, cars that run crabwise, old cars and new and everything in between. In one corner is the kennel of the property man's dog, who is mothering her adopted family of two guinea pigs and a white rat.

Tucked away in odd corners of the lot are a projection room building, five cutting rooms, a negative vault, with storage space for 12,000 reels, each in its individual can, another vault for camera equipment, including unexposed stock, a photograph department where two men turn out the thousands of photographs of Christie beauties that are in demand the world over, a paint shop and one or two smaller buildings, all dumped upon the lot in apparently haphazard fashion, but each really in the most convenient spot to its related buildings.

Of course the shops are important places, for practically everything is produced on the lot, with material purchased in carload lots. The wood working mill is provided with the most modern machinery, and in the machine shop any class of work can be undertaken, and in addition to building props the entire electrical equipment is kept in repair.

The old sunlight stage long ago gave place to the first of the dark stages and today the studios are equipped with Sunlight arcs, Cooper-Hewitts, scoops, overhead hoods, and twin arc broadsides. Miles of cable are installed and controlled from the huge switchboard and the generator for the direct current is housed in a special building conveniently placed in relation to the four stages houses.

Tucked away in a corner is a schoolroom where a teacher provided by the Board of Education, presides when children under school age are used in a production.

A complete fire fighting equipment is provided and this was put to the test last August, when the Century studios, across the street, were destroyed. The stations were manned and the brands falling on the roofs were quickly extinguished before they could do real damage.

Comedies today are not the efforts of individuals but a conspiracy. A dozen gag men

Educational Studios

The Home Of Laughter, Where Names Are Made

EDUCATIONAL STUDIOS, on Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, have frontage of 350 on the Boulevard and the entire lot covers six acres, all of which is devoted wholly to comedy production, and probably the largest studio where nothing but comedy is made. It is owned by Educational Studios, Inc., and houses the brands released by the company of the same name.

The companies working here are the Lloyd Hamilton, Lupino Lane, Mermaid, Tuxedo Juvenile and Cameo, and the output is about forty-four two reel and twenty-four one-reel comedies a season, representing a production outlay of more than one million dollars. The lot itself is valued at $600,000.

There are four stages with an aggregate of 40,000 square feet, together with the usual complement of dressing rooms, cutting rooms, directors offices and an unusual complement of fabricating plants.

That is the outstanding feature of Educational's lot. The visitor who is familiar with the equipment on the other production lots gasps at the size of the carpenter shop, the smithy and the property rooms. These are larger than most of the technical shops supplying companies making many times the footage. They seem all out of proportion.

But this overlong tail to the undersized dog is explained by General Manager E. H. Allen when he displays the product of the shops. Comedy calls for special equipment. A director does not put in an order for a set of drawing room furniture that can be moved from the property room over to the stage and back again. Perhaps the sofa must have a trempoline on which the comedian can jump up and down or use as a springboard. Perhaps the chairs must be provided with legs that will bend when sat upon by a fat comedian, or a table may be a breakaway that is split into fragments over someone's head. There must, of course, be the usual properties, as well, but the comedy prop is almost as essential as the comedy player. One order was for a complete kit of carpenter's tools made of sponge rubber, while another director was equally insistent in his demands for a mechanical lobster that would nip realistically and yet not bite.

Other recent properties are a sledge hammer that will swell up and recede, a mechanical horse that can kick, scratch its ear and sit down and a high hat that will grow both up and down and sideways, staircases that will collapse, rubber nails and knives, and plates that will break, bounce, bend, sit up, lie down, roll over and play dead.

One director wants a rubber football that will bounce over a house, another demands one of cast iron that will break through a roof while a third may want one of hollow plaster that will collapse at the first kick. It's all one to the property men. They are there to be obliging.

Of course rosin bottles and plaster plates are standbys, while no comedy is complete without a few vases and clocks to be thrown around. The old theatrical term of "perishable props" takes on a new significance on a comedy lot.

But these are just the little things, common to most pictures. It is when a new idea is hit upon that the workshops get busy. A director may want a fliver that can be stretched out to double its length, and he wants it the following day. There is no time to mess around with blue prints. And there is no time to argue that it cannot be done. It has to be done, so a mechanic takes a second hand car, cuts it up, puts in a sectional insert and the next day turns it over to the director. It would drive a garage mechanic crazy, but the shop man does it without so much as a pencil sketch. If he could not make an automobile that can walk on its hind legs, he would have been fired the first Saturday. Trick automobiles are always good for a laugh, and if he absolutely had to, the chances are that the mechanic could turn out a Ford that would not squeak.

But it is not alone automobiles. A director may want a set that can be revolved. He gets it. Another wants a trick window, a third demands a sofa that can crawl up the side of the wall. It's all the same to the staff. Some things are more difficult than others, but all things are possible. The mechanical staff used the same lexicon that youth is supposed to employ. There is no such word as fail.

And sometimes the simplest appearing trick is the most elaborate. It looks easy, but it would take a studio mechanic to put it over. Often the stage has to be laid with water or air pipes to get some effect. It must be done quickly, for no set can tie up a stage for long. The plumber who had to go back to the shop for his tools never had a job in a comedy studio. Everything is on the jump, for speed is essential and time is more valuable than money.

The property rooms at Educational are far more interesting than those of the dramatic producers, and the men are more highly trained. They must turn out their work in less time than most men would spend thinking about it.

Another difference between comedy and drama is in the greater difficulty in judging comedy effect. In production this is especially true. It's akin to getting one-half of a joke today and being told the remainder, perhaps the first half, day after tomorrow. Now you know the full joke, but the effect of continuity is lost. Today the comedian dives through a window. Tomorrow or next week he lands in a trough of cement, perhaps in a lily pond or on the back of an elephant. You do not see the complete action until it is shown on the screen, and even then you do not know.

Producing comedy is not a rollicking, romping sort of fun. It's the hardest kind of work and in a way the most uninteresting. Trained acrobats risk their necks in every foot of action. On the screen only the humor is apparent. In the studio only the hard work is seen.

And even after the takes are joined and edited and the title writers have filled in their choicest wise-cracks no one knows. Maybe it is funny. Perhaps it is not. Few around the studio, in view of past experiences, would hazard a guess. The trick that may have taken a day or two and that looks like a killer will fall dead while some accidental bit will get a yell of delight.

When the picture is apparently all ready, the work is but half done. The reels are taken to some theatre sufficiently far from Hollywood to ensure that there will be few if any picture people present. Things that will please the film contingent probably will not appeal to the general patron, and a Hollywood test would be inconclusive.

The two reel comedy may be three reels long or even a little more. The production staff, director, scenarist, cutters and others, go along with the film and scatter through the house. Two or three will carry scoring machines or counting clocks. It is their job to press the button once for each full sized laugh. Others have pads on which they note the scenes which get these laughs. Still others merely get the audience reaction as expressed by the regular patrons around them, none of

The Wide Open Spaces Where

Metro-Goldwyn Mayer

Make Pictures

MOTION Pictures have made Hollywood into a city, but the pictures created Culver City, now the site of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. The late Thomas H. Ince, looking around for the wide open spaces, found them on a 60-acre ranch just outside Los Angeles. He purchased the ranch and acquired an acreage that was the talk of the picture fans of that day. At the same time Harry Culver, a real estate agent, who had handled the deal, laid out a new "development," and Culver City grew with the Ince prosperity.

In 1915 only a decrepit old barn stood on the property, with two gum trees on one side and a pile of stable litter on the other to complete the composition. Ince put up three glass stages and one open air platform, of the sort that sufficed most companies in those days, with muslin diffusers to temper the light, but he did not tear down the barn.

Reginald Barker, who directed the first picture for Ince on the new lot, is now with M-G-M, at present directing "The Branding Iron" with Aileen Pringle and Lionel Barrymore.

"There was a horse corral where the executive offices now stand he reminisced, "with an old barn just back of it. The barn was standing when I made the first picture with H. B. Warner as the star. There was no "back lot" then. There were scattered foundations where Ince planned presently to build stages, but the space was all clear. There were accommodations for three companies working at the same time.

"The property room was a long wooden shed on the site now occupied by the publicity and scenario department, and Ince and Ray West were easily able to look after all the details."

Today twenty productions can be made simultaneously, and the back lot is covered with about 38 acres of exterior sets.

Two years later, in 1917, Ince rented the old Triangle and built an additional stage as well as erecting a number of streets on the far confines of the ranch. These were mostly Western locations. Today the back lot contains almost every conceivable sort of street, from modern New York to ancient Europe with stopovers all the way between Greenland and China. There is a railway station with actual trains and other trains with cars cut away to provide photographic facilities and a large theatre interior. The original floor area of the three stages was about 35,000 feet. Today it is approximately 800,000.

When Samuel Goldwyn took over the lot in 1918, he added eight stages and rented out his space. The Mae Murray-Tiffany productions were made here, as were many others.

Christy Cabane, then assistant to Maurice Tourneur, relates that Goldwyn brought with him an Eastern camera expert who was used to working with electric light. He at once ordered the glass of the stages painted black.

Goldwyn protested. They had come to California for the wonderful sunlight. Why should the sunlight be so rigidly excluded? For some time part sunlight was used, but the superior control of effects provided by the all-dark stage eventually won, and today interior work—which includes many supposed exteriors—is all done wholly by artificial light in a land where the photographic quality of the light is one of the widely advertised features. It's fine sunlight, but no one as yet has succeeded in providing switches to control the light source and the man-dominated mixture of vapor and carbon lamps gives a much superior quality of lighting.

To provide the current for all of this equipment there is required a power plant large enough for a medium sized city, the property shed has been exchanged for a four story building, and where once the ranch horses pawed the ground Louis B. Mayer and Irving G. Thalberg have their spacious offices, and the sandals of "Ben Hur," the tiny shoes of "Hester Prynne," the Chinese shoes of "Mr. Wu" worn by Lon Chaney and the footgear of every nation have trod the spaces that once echoed to the jingle of the cowboys' spurs. The leisurely manufacture of the two-reeler has given place to the feverish drive to produce super-features against time and dollars are spent where pennies once were amply sufficient. Meanwhile Culver City has kept step with the studio which is its heart.

The technical direction at Culver City is headed by Cedric Gibbons, who captains an immense staff. The technical director is no longer merely a master carpenter, building the sets and hanging the drapes. He must provide atmosphere as well as setting, and it must be authentic atmosphere. Three recent M-G-M productions suggest the tax put upon the technical staffs. "The Grey Hat" is laid in France, "The Red Mill" calls for Holland and "Flesh and the Devil" was German to the core, and yet all were made in Culver City with such fidelity that no national of France, Germany or Holland could find cause for quibble. And it is not just atmosphere.

And it is not just the big, outstanding points. All the intimate details must be known,

the sort of clothing worn, the styles for different periods, the table manners or lack of them, the airs and graces of each era, characteristic foods; all of these, and much more must be outlined by the art and technical staff, which must be able to tell whether Caesar wore his toga buttoned down the back or up the front and whether the ancient Greeks wore two-piece suits of armor or merely steel straight jackets.

All sets, drawn by the art department, are sent to the technical department where the sketches are realized in the practical blue prints prepared by architects, carpenters, masons and ironworkers. But before this is done, the technicians check up on the drawings and point out that in 1900 traffic towers had not yet been devised, that street numbers are not yet used in Long Valley, N. J., or that the Moorish arch is not used in the palace of an Indian Rajah.

Many of the sets have been drawn from photographs or sketches of foreign lands, but the technical department must be certain that the sketches are true to the period as well as the country. Where possible an assistant is told off who is familiar with the surroundings. Of course the Navy Department provided its own technical experts for "Tell It to the Marines," but Jackie Coogan's "The Bugle Call," Col. George Byra, U. S. A., is the technical assistant for that production. Similarly it was a German who stood over the filming of "Flesh and the Devil" and a Frenchman was the last word on "The Grey Hat" sets.

The work is laid out to the lumbermill, the furniture factory, machine shops and other establishments, for Culver City is largely self-contained.

In the property shop, presided over by Edwin B. Willis, Howard Wells and George Golden, there is assembled what is probably the largest collection of unrelated objects in the world. Recently, for example, two of the pictures in preparation were "Mr. Wu" and "Annie Laurie." One assistant was sent to San Francisco to raid Chinatown for such articles as were not already on the property list, while another was told off to purchase or borrow claymores, dirks and other arms of the proper period, from which the blacksmith and machine shops might fashion a supply of weapons for the clans.

With their heads filled with jades and Josses, plaids and pibrochs, someone in the Technical Department dropped a line to "Props" to remind him that Scottish cattle were not like the western steers. Scottish cattle are more like small buffalo than our own product.

None of the animal pet shops had any Scotch cattle on hand, but it was learned that the Prince of Wales had imported some for his Canadian ranch, and it was not long before some of these were added to the stock. They took a prize in a Stock Show as a side product.

And about this time Edmund Goulding, directing Pauline Starke in "Women Love Diamonds" wanted a boudoir stocked with every imaginable sort of perfume and cosmetic. Inside of an hour "Props" had rented a perfume shop and had transported the stock to the set. Several thousand dollars worth of actual perfumes strutted their brief minutes on the set and went back to the shelves. And while they were conducting the perfume transaction, the shop acquired eight trained French poodles, obtained a certain type of microscope, outfitted two ball teams for "Slide, Kelly, Slide," and put the finishing touch to a set of idols for the exacting "Mr. Wu."

Property men haunt the second-hand shops, marking down new stock and purchasing such material as promises to come in handy, and they are supposed to be able to locate anything not in stock at short notice through their familiarity with conditions.

And now and then they have to do a little wholesale borrowing, as when the Navy turned over to the studio the equipment used for "Tell It To the Marines." Supplies representing many thousands of dollars were loaned by the San Diego base to dress the sets made on location, and the equipment was turned back down to the last strap on a gun case.

Of course the heavy production on the M-G-M lot requires a lot of stories, and the script department lists some of the best scenarists in the business, for the play is the thing, and the play is a combination of the author, scenarist, supervisor, director and film editor, all working under the central supervision of Louis B. Mayer.

A recent important addition to the staff is June Mathis, who made the screen version of "The Four Horsemen," and who is now under permanent engagement to M-G-M. She is at present working on the script of Channing Pollock's "The Enemy," which is to serve as a star vehicle for Lillian Gish under the direction of Victor Seastrom.

Another newcomer is Jack Cunningham, the scenarist of "The Covered Wagon"; "The Three Musketeers" and other outstanding plays. He has just completed the script of "Captain Salvation" which is to be directed by John S. Robertson.

Last year Frances Marion made free lance scenarios of "The Scarlet Letter" and "The Red Mill." Now she is on the staff and working on "The Callahans and the Murphys" by Kathleen Norris. It is to be staged by George Hill.

Gladys Unger, a well known playwright, and Winifred Eaton Reeve, author of more than a score of popular novels are two others who have turned to the new medium.

Dorothy Farnum, who did the scripts of "The Temptress" and "Bardleys, the Magnificent" on last year's schedule, is now working on Annie Laurie for Lillian Gish, having completed "The Bugle Call" for Jackie Coogan.

Jack Black is working on a prison story, largely colored by his own experience, for Black is staging a comeback after several prison terms.

A. P. Younger, who produced one of last season's money makers in "Brown of Harvard" is working on "Twelve Miles Out" for John Gilbert, having finished "Tillie the Toiler" for Marion Davies, and "Slide, Kelly, Slide."

Byron Morgan has just completed "Red, White and Blue" and Lorna Moon, who did "Upstage" for Norma Shearer is working on "Mr. Wu" and "Anna Karenina."

Waldemar Young, who wrote "The Unholy

Three," "The Blackbird," and "The Road to Mandalay" for Lon Chaney has been putting the finishing touches to "The Unknown" which will give Chaney his next chance. Others are Elliott Clawson, Agnes Christine Johnston, Douglas Ferber, and S. Al. Lewin, Ray Dowl and Edward T. Lowe.

Peter B. Kyne is writing scripts for Tim McCoy and King Vidor, who writes most of his own stories, has just completed one for Eleanor Boardman.

Louis B. Mayer, who has charge of production for M-G-M is a firm believer in cooperative effort, and seeks to form combinations of producer, director and star in which each of the trio will supplement the efforts of the others and bring to the combination those qualities less developed in the others. The rapid advance in Metro production results seems fully to justify this policy, and some notable combinations have been formed, one of the best being composed of Irving G. Thalberg, as producer with King Vidor as director and John Gilbert as star. Gilbert may be assigned to other directors, Vidor may wave his megaphone at other stars, but even the public is beginning to realize that the Thalberg-Vidor-Gilbert combination means a better than usual picture. From long association the three have come to act with one cooperative mind which makes for extreme smoothness and effect.

Another good combination is Harry Rapi, Hobart Henley and Norma Shearer, while the combination of Tod Browning and Lon Chaney, with Thalberg as supervisor is practically certain to result in box office records. Look at "The Unholy Three," "The Road to Mandalay," and "The Blackbird."

Col. Tim McCoy, directed by W. S. Van Dyke and supervised by B. P. Hyman is another happy combination rapidly growing in favor while Hunt Stromberg has supervised some of the best adventure stories. Witness his "The Barrier" with George Hill as director and watch for "Captain Salvation" with John S. Robertson as director and Lars Hansen as the star. Harry Rapi and Edmund Goulding is another twin-mind combination.

That is the secret of Mr. Mayer's production policy—twin minds. He knows that a supervisor and director whose ideas are diametrically opposed cannot combine into the production of an harmonious result any more than a team of draft horses can pull a load if they are headed in opposite directions. He aims to pair harmonious minds, provide them with a suitable script and acceptable stars, and let them do their best.

If all men thought alike there would be but a single monotonous type of play. Since many men have many minds, Mr. Mayer seeks to discover those who best can work in harmony. No director can do good work who is thoroughly out of sympathy with his supervisor, and reduced to a single word the Mayor system is merely harmony.

It has taken about three years to assemble the directors who form the M-G-M staff, and included, in addition to those already mentioned are Clarence Brown, John M. Stahl, Rex Ingraham, Victor Seastrom, Reginald Barker and William Beaudine.

Seastrom has been so long with us that he classes as an American director. More recent arrivals include Benjamin Christianson, of Denmark; Ernst Lubitsch, Dimitri Buchowetzki, Vitcheclav Tourjancky, and Marcel de Sano; the latter coming from Rumania.

Others who are handling Metro productions this year are Hobart Henley, Robert Z. Leonard, Harry Millarde, John P. McCarthy, William Nigh, Edward Sedgwick, Sam Wood and Christy Cabanne.

Naturally with production on so large a scale, the Casting Director is a man of great importance, for if a casting director fails to have a complete cast on the set at the time appointed, the delay fairly eats up money and many such delays would be ruinous.

Cliff Robertson is Casting Director on the Metro lot and the famous New York police inspector who was known as "the man with the camera eye" has nothing on Robertson. Indeed the director adds to the camera eye a card index brain. He knows more telephone addresses than a traveling salesman, more faces than the most expert detective and more facts than a mental marvel. He not only knows the players and their lines of parts, but generally he knows where the player is working at the moment, when he will be through, and the next best bet. He can do this "out of his head" ninety-five times out of a hundred, and the other five he can get the information from his cards.

Every player who has worked for Metro is in the files, and each time he works additional data is added, so that any given card is a complete history of that player on the M-G-M lot. Dwarfs or giants, fat ladies or living skeletons, Asiatics or Slavs, babies or centenarians, they are all listed in the index and listed in such an orderly fashion that their location is the matter of only a moment. No police records are more carefully kept or more fully informative.

Robertson is the man who "discovered" Valentino, but he has helped hundreds of others to climb the ladder, for he is a good picker and directors rely on his judgment when untried players must be used. He has worked in other large studios before coming to Culver City, but it is here that he has developed his system to the utmost point of intelligent elaboration.

Few directors remember the minor players once a picture has been cut. They rely on Robertson, and he can get "the man who played the blacksmith" in a certain picture, or a man "something like him, only a little shorter." He knows all the types and specialists, and he knows the work of these not only in other M-G-M pictures, but what they have done for other companies. The chances are that he even could have helped Diogenes in his famous hunt. If there is an honest man in the Hollywood area, Robertson has him properly listed in his files.

The film handling at Culver City is primarily under the direction of John Nickolaus, in charge of the photographic department, who controls the raw stock and assigns the cameramen, seeking to suit the man to his job. For example Hendrik Sartov, who is an expert in light manipulation, is assigned to such stars as Lillian Gish or Marion Davies, while John Arnold, who likes rough and tumble assignments, gets "The Big Parade" and other action pictures.

The daily output is sent to the laboratories and two prints from each negative are made and sent to the cutting room, these being known as the A and B print.

A cutter is assigned each production, and he roughly cuts the A print, the exact splicing being done by his assistants, and the script titles are joined in. When the final shooting has been done, the print is cut roughly to length.

Before the final cutting, the title writer is called in, for it is seldom that the titles originally provided in the script are suitable for the finished picture. The Metro staff of titlers include Joe Farnham, Ralph Spence, Marion Ainslee, Lotta Woods, Ruth Cummings and Earl Baldwin. Frances Marion, better known as a scenarist, also titles on important occasions and occasionally outside help is called in. Today the title writer is a far more important person than in the past.

With the titles printed and inserted, the A print is now exactly cut, the B print is cut to correspond and they are turned over to the laboratory where the commercial printing is done.

While it is impractical to carry on the salary roll the huge casts often assembled, M-G-M maintains an ample stock company from which its standard players may be drawn, and about forty famous names are weekly inscribed on the salary register.

These include Renee Adoree, George K. Arthur, Eleanor Boardman, Greta Garbo, Lew Cody, Kary Dane, Roy D'Arcy, Marcelene Day, Frank Currier, Ralph Forbes, Lars Hanson, Nathalie Kovanko, Louise Lorraine, Aileen Pringle, Claire Windsor, Carmel Myers, Conrad Nagel, Marc McDermott, Tom O'Brien, Sally O'Neill, Dorothy Sebastian, Tim McCoy, Joan Crawford, Jacqueline Gadsden, Tenen Holz, Bertha Kalich, Gwen Lee, Owen Moore, Gertrude Olmstead, Pauline Starke, George Cooper, James Murray, Patricia Avery and Maurice Kains.

Although stage and book successes still figure largely on the M-G-M program, the original story is finding more and more favor. It has been demonstrated that the story written directly for the screen is more apt to prove suitable than a stage or book story tortured to get in the necessary action and cut out the unnecessary verbiage.

This does not mean that M-G-M is "in the market." Quite to the contrary. The average free lance writer cannot conform to screen requirements and the hits are written by studio-developed authors, often the directors themselves. "Tell It to the Marines," "The Fire Brigade," and "Upstage" were all originals, and in the current production program are many more including "The Cossacks" and an as yet unnamed original play by King Vidor. "Annie Laurie" is an original, as is "Jenny Lind," "Frisco Sally Levy," "The Unknown," "California," and many others.

The director is no longer expected to make whatever is handed him. His wishes and tastes are consulted, while the story is in preparation. He is no longer a mechanical transfer man, putting action from the page to the screen, but is regarded as a creator, who works up the script material into an achievement. The M-G-M success of today is the product of an enthusiastic artist, intelligently supervised and provided with the best of material as regards script and players. Successes are no longer accidents. They are premeditated. No one can foretell the eventual fate of a production at the hands of the public, but the percentage of hits is materially increased by systematic preparation and forethought.

couple of wise-cracking titles very early in the action got laughs and thereafter the comedian was established and the second preview gave an entirely different result.

From two to five previews are had, but these are pitifully few as compared with the opportunities of the stage director, who can work over a dramatic production until success has been wrested from failure. A play may be kept on the road for weeks or even months before it is brought in for metropolitan production, but the cutter must give the same results with only five or six unannounced public showings, and from these he must approximate the audience reaction of the entire country.

In sending her congratulations to MOVING PICTURE WORLD, Miss Pickford added:

"Whether the motion picture will show the same progress in the next twenty years that it did in the past is problematical. Unquestionably we are becoming more stabilized. We have also lacked writers and inspiration, to a great extent.

"I believe this will be developed, but it will be from within the industry and not from without. The property boys, film cutters and extras of today will be our actors, writers and directors of tomorrow. It is up to the youth of our industry how much we progress. I do not believe we are going to advance through the efforts of those who have attained fame in other lines, coming into the industry from now on.

"Yet it will continue to be a mighty business, and an influential factor in the life of the world."

Douglas Fairbanks, who has made a keen analysis of the business, sees in the gradual development of united efforts the hope of the motion picture. There was a time when one factor was dominant, whether that was the star, the director or the producer. Today the combined efforts of author, scenarist, producer, director, star, editor and titler are all necessary to obtain the full result. The picture has ceased to be a one-man accident and has become the finished product of concerted and intelligent effort. "The motion picture industry," he concludes, "is progressing each year just as rapidly as producers learn from experience what not to do. They cannot learn what to do. They can only come to know certain things they cannot do and still succeed."

Film Editing

By Lloyd Nesler

LOOKING back over the years of progress made by the motion picture, with its ever changing method of production, one will find the craft of film editing abreast of the times, contributing materially its share to the advancement of the art.

The days of my apprenticeship in film cutting, served many years ago with Universal, required nothing more than a mechanical knowledge of matching scenes and placing them in their position of continuity as described in the working script. Very little thought was given by the cutter in those days to tempo and rhythm. Orchestration was a mystery and titles were accepted and placed from the original scenario, whether they fitted or not.

This all, of course, was before the period of fewer and better pictures; a time when the public was not so particular and would accept anything in the way of a motion picture. However, with each advancing year, pictures were forced to take on a more serious aspect in their making, which effected and made possible the progress that has been shown in the past decade by every branch of production, resulting, in the final analysis, that the editing of a picture today has become most complicated, lifting it from its previous plane of mechanical operation into a sphere of science hard to penetrate and very difficult to describe.

There are two distinct classifications in the film editorial division. One is a cutter, the other editor. The cutter is a person who can assemble the many sequences of a picture, make a first cut and doesn't know just what to eliminate or add for a final release. Sometimes he assumes the responsibility, much to the detriment of the production.

A film editor is one who possesses the acumen to know how to extract the wheat from the chaff, to eliminate dead action and retain the fundamental parts that will tell the story in such a manner as to make the audience feel that the characters are live human beings and not puppets guided by strings from behind the curtain. He must also know how to build up the big moments of a picture and in doing this, an even tempo of rhythm must be adhered to at all times. He must know in a general measure what is most apt to please the public taste in every city, town and hamlet. The successful film editor will keep abreast of the constantly changing likes and dislikes of that great army of people who daily patronize the theater to be entertained.

There are times when a difference of opinion creates friction between the editor and director; in some cases two versions of the same picture are edited before all parties are convinced that one or the other is right.

Many people have asked me why it is necessary to shoot in excess of a hundred thousand feet of film for a six-reel feature. This is a very difficult question to answer because of the many elements that enter into a production. However, it can be summed up in two words—"protection shots."

Actors, staff and overhead comprise the bulk of production cost. The cost of film is small in comparison to the cost of taking a scene, therefore in order to protect the original investment of shooting a scene, a director, regardless of what he feels will get over from one angle, will shoot the same action from many angles, thus insuring against future retakes and though the result adds more work in the editorial rooms, it will afford the film editor a greater variety of action to select from in the final editing and conserve eventual costs.

On one of the pictures I have edited, the director shot in excess of 1,600,000 feet of negative from which 850,000 feet of positive was furnished me to reduce down to its final exhibiting length of 12,000 feet. One sequence alone furnished 200,000 feet and was finally reduced to 1,000 feet. People not familiar with the details connected with the making of this sequence would condemn this as an insane way of spending money, but this was one case where the waste footage was necessary because of the many difficulties in obtaining the required action and the danger of life, not to speak of the many thousands of dollars involved during the filming.

In our present day method of making pictures, much rests upon the editorial department to make or mar a production. It has reached a point where the film editor is being recognized as playing an important part in this great drama of making entertainment for the world.

The Greatest Theatrical Force

By D. W. Griffith

CAN it be twenty years since motion pictures first sneaked into the theaters, only to stay and become the biggest theatrical force in the world?

The worries then were pretty much the worries now; better stories, finding actors who could be natural and interesting; struggling to put into pantomime effects which your imagination painted. No one ever satisfied with anything.

Everyone wanted more salary then, as they do today. Then it was forty dollars a week; now it is four thousand dollars a week.

When some little novelty of treatment came up, everyone was excited, remarking it as a great step forward in the work. But tricks are never important. To tell a story sincerely, vividly, and simply: that was the big effort then and it is the big effort now.

Many useful new tools for the making of pictures have been created since those early perplexities, but the big implement was then and always will be the mind-power to narrate a story in the medium. Technique is only experience, it is not force. No two stories should ever be told alike, but that requires genius and where can you buy that?

The motion picture is an important medium; perhaps the most important. The people who pride themselves upon their culture and education spurned it in the beginning, for that is the conservative class, always bucking everything new. Kings who were illiterate made reading and writing unpopular in their day.

But pictures have now snipped all croakers aside. And now that the form is somewhat stable, this mighty force is claiming the authority and dominance due it.

HUMAN INTEREST MAKES PICTURES

By Joseph M. Schenck

REGARDLESS of surface indications, the hearts and souls of all men and women are essentially alike and subject to the influence of common emotions.

In this simple truth, it seems to me, lies the most pointed indication of the foundation of the future photoplay, concerning which there has been such widespread discussion.

The universal popularity of motion picture entertainment has been based on its presentation of the human emotions, drama, pathos, comedy. There is no reason to believe there will be any material change in these elements of appeal.

The picture offerings in the early days of the nickelodeon were pitiful efforts, indeed, in comparison with productions of today, but a combination of these basic elements in the first one and two-reel offerings laid a lasting foundation for the popularity of the screen.

Motion pictures of the future will attain an ever greater standard of excellence. They will be more artistic, more finished than the most elaborate productions of today. In this regard, the industry will progress steadily just as it has progressed from the time of the short length "thrillers." Coming photoplays may be lighter vein, or in deeper theme, but the basic combination of pathos, drama and comedy, with love dominating, will not be lost sight of by producers. Nor will the public countenance any deviation from these essentials.

My opinion is not expressed from the American viewpoint alone. Careful analysis has convinced me that the points of appeal to human sympathy and understanding are the same the world over. Life, love, work, play and death come alike to all men. Thus, the normal picture, rather than the unusual, is calculated to interest and entertain the greatest number of theatergoers.

The mechanics of motion picture production and the technique of presentation undoubtedly will meet with revolutionary changes, but our screen entertainment will continue to be based upon the play of natural, human emotions, with love as the dominant theme.

Present-Day Casting Methods

By
Fred Schuessler

PRESENT day casting methods — if there is any method—would seem a simple routine in itself. Yet it is this routine which lays the real foundation for every production; because, without intelligent casting, the story, direction, and photography lose their significance. As yet, no one has burst forth with the final dictum as to just what constitutes an intelligent casting director. Nor have I any intention of doing so here. I do believe, however, that in casting the most necessary equipment is imagination, insight, a sense of humor, and a good memory for names and faces.

When the script is submitted to the casting director, he must visualize the characters necessary for the various roles. With these characterizations in mind he then consults the classified list of leading men and women, juveniles, ingenues, heavies, and character men and women, which contains 15,000 names and has taken many years to compile. No name is entered on this list unless the person can be recognized by name and face. That is where a keen memory plays an important part. Being able to recall at a moment's notice not only a certain type or a certain face but the ability and name of the desired individual as well, is one of the most essential features of casting. Then too, it is necessary to be able to picture the make-up possibilities of an actor; how they will look with or without a beard or moustache; what changes grooming and different apparel will make in their appearance.

Old volumes with photographs taken half a century ago are often used as guides when we are looking for types of that period. In costume and historical productions we often utilize many old paintings, prints, albums, and books for this same purpose.

The casting director of any studio has it within his power to make more friends, and, incidentally, more enemies, than any one else on the lot. Every day hundreds of men and women, and children with ambitious mothers, crowd his office waiting, waiting, always waiting for the opportunity that he alone can give them. Unless he has a real insight into human nature and a sense of humor to help him over the rough spots, the casting director's path is not an easy one. Every girl who comes into his office—whether she has just graduated from a local high school or just arrived from small town—says she has been in the Ziegfeld Follies. Most of the men have played with some big star in Broadway stage productions; only they usually forget to mention that they were merely part of a mob scene.

Casting directors develop sort of a sixth sense that indicates to them whether or not a person is an actor. Almost invariably before a man has spoken a word he can tell whether or not a person is an actor. Almost invariably before a man has spoken a word he can tell if that man will do. No matter how impossible, how annoying, or how trying these interviews are, however, the utmost courtesy is required to prevent any feeling of antagonism or resentment. Although statistics show that only 25 out of every fifty thousand extras ever rise to stellar heights, the casting director must regard every person who enters his office as a possible candidate for that chosen group. To this end he must forget all personal prejudices, religious bias, or unreasoning obstinacy. He must be able to see through whatever masks these people may assume, and know them for what they are.

Contrary to popular opinion, casting directors are not quite so ruthless and inconsiderate as they seem. If they let every bit of pathos and every tearful entreaty affect them, if they considered every reckless offer that was made them, if every little ruse was allowed to make an impression, casting directors would all be subjects for psychopathic wards. Which is all on the gentle art of casting.

I believe a few unabridged expressions of opinion will be welcomed by those who either contemplate making medical motion pictures or else getting others to make them in the form of a commercial enterprise.

As just a few casual notes on the matter of producing it might be well to bear in mind that there is as much difference between making a few "shots" here and there of operations or cases and the ultimate medical teaching film as there is between the news glimpses in which modern motion pictures originated and the complete narrative film in which it has reached its highest form. In other words, until medical motion picture producers realize that the film is a means of expression in exactly the same way printed literature is, they will fall short of obtaining an acceptable product. As a means of expression it is only effective when it conveys an entire thesis and this can only be obtained by a carefully thought out and complete statement of every important fact relative to the subject under discussion. Moreover, I believe it will ultimately be found that efficiency in teaching by means of motion picture film will come with the careful grouping together of all subjects within a special field of medicine to the object that we may have a motion picture course in each of the medical specialties similar to my own.

As in the field of commercial film, I believe it will soon be found that the production of motion picture film is one matter and its profitable distribution quite another. The field is exceedingly limited not only in point of patrons but also because of the peculiar psychology of the medical profession. Not only the traditional conservatism will be found to act as an obstacle but the personal element will very quickly make itself felt. Doctors are notoriously consistent in disagreeing, and upon the subject of respective merit of some other doctor's pictures there will be plenty of room for "reasonable doubt."

In the newspapers recently there was announced in all seriousness that a certain noted surgeon had decided to make motion picture films of surgical operations employing the phonofilm or speaking motion picture film. Much publicity was given this statement but, of course, it must be evident that that part of the public announcement was included more for its news value than because of any belief in its educational value. Those of us who have been actually making surgical films for a period of years are well aware of certain technical difficulties which the beginner is bound to encounter. The phonofilm, and I speak of it as merely representing a type of talking film, never can or will be of value in medical teaching. The reasons for this are immediately apparent when we visualize certain phases of the suggestion. Suppose for instance we were showing a surgical film portraying the removal of an appendix. If the picture is taken correctly it will show a close up of the operative field. In such a field of vision nothing will be seen other than the appendix, the portion of the intestine to which it is attached, certain surrounding tissue, a few instruments and possibly the hands of the operator.

What could be more grotesque than to have a voice come thundering out of the dark telling the story of the operation and thereby endowing with a personality the defenseless organ whose diplomatic relations to the patient are about to be severed. This, of course, presumes that the sonorous tones of the operator are in English, as she is spoken, and sufficiently clearly spoken as to be understandable. This, of course, leaves out of question any possible element of pleasing musical intonation, which makes a lecturer easy to listen to or else a satisfactory substitute for veronal. To anyone who has ever been subjected to the task of listening to the average medical lecturer I believe it will be very apparent that neither good English nor good enunciation run rampant among medical lecturers. Bearing in mind, therefore, all the responsibilities rhetorical, grammatical and elocutionary as demanded by the alleged necessity of canning the great surgeon's voice for the edification of countless generations of still unborn medical students answer me this question. Would you want to be the patient upon whom the operation is being performed? I think not. To my prosaic mind the surgeon's duty is to perform his operation and have the patient back in his room as soon as possible and not to hold any premortem testimonial meetings over his senseless body.

An extensive landscape gardening scheme accentuated the general improvements. The net result is that the studio is now one of the real showplaces of California.

The Fox Hills "location," made necessary by the steady growth of the company's business at the Sunset and Western plant, in Hollywood proper, today boasts some of the most complete and magnificent sets in America. The list includes Spanish haciendas, German towns, French villages and English estates, in addition to the set already mentioned.

Nor has this exhaustive improvement program been confined to exteriors. Throughout the entire studio scores of departments have been reorganized and re-equipped. New furniture valued at $150,000, recently arrived at the

Tiffany Productions, Inc.

TIFFANY PRODUCTIONS, INC., became favorably known to exhibitors with its very first achievement, the making of the first series of Mae Murray pictures. Released and distributed through Metro, these laid a solid foundation of quality upon which it has been possible to rear the national and international producing and distributing organization which is the Tiffany of today.

This growth and spread has not been due to chance or to good breaks in luck. Rather it is the outgrowth of a steady purpose backed up by hard work and the business acumen of M. H. Hoffman, who has been vice president of the company since its inception. The steady purpose with which Mr. Hoffman imbued the organization which he built up was the production of pictures which could rank high on the box office statements of the men whose theatres were the barometers of public good will. That this purpose has been fulfilled without fail is evidenced by the present day showing. For Tiffany is represented in every key city of the United States, England and Europe; it has its own exchanges, its own staffs of trained men under exchange managers developed under a policy of square dealing and good pictures.

To M. H. Hoffman is due much credit for the level headed laying down of a basic policy of the sort that could stand the test of the years, that could bring his company to the forefront among producers and distributors, that could make this policy a synonym for the box office test. His reputation as a shrewd producer and a master showman has never been questioned; in his career with the motion picture industry he has handled some of its biggest sales campaigns and has been instrumental in putting over numerous box office successes.

The qualities within its organization gave Tiffany a sound start. Two years ago its product was being distributed through the Independent Market and exhibitors were standing by a brand they had come to like; but Mr. Hoffman saw far ahead and his vision was broad. He saw the possibilities for the pictures and the organization that he had in mind, and began building to make of Tiffany a national producing and distributing factor of real standing. That he has attained his purpose is beyond question for the organization which he established for this end in 1926 with the inception of the string of Tiffany exchanges, has made film history.

As a National distributor, the organization started off with "Twenty Tiffany Gems," seventeen of which have been completed at this writing. They have all been acclaimed by exhibitors and reviewers as comparable with others of the best of the year's output.

For 1927-1928 Tiffany has again announced Twenty Gems, and also four special super-productions for long run showings.

With the record for achievement backing up the ideal with which Mr. Hoffman imbued his colleagues when the organization began to function, it is no wonder that the name of Tiffany stands for quality in production, and the fact cannot be denied by any that this organization has made remarkable strides within the past year. The driving pressure of a great idea was Mr. Hoffman's, as were the brains to execute it and the ingenuity to guide it to success: the greater strides that are coming will further attest his genius.

Columbia—The Gem of Brandt and The Cohns

COLUMBIA STUDIO on Gower Street has always been a proving ground for writers and some of the leading scribes of the industry have learned much of their trade under Harry Cohn's watchful eye, and Cohn has three young writers under contract who give every promise of living up to the reputation of Bernard Vorhaus and other of their predecessors.

Dorothy Howell, the ace of the Columbia writing staff, has been with Harry Cohn for three years and has penned some fifteen scripts in the past year. She was responsible for the continuity on "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "The Wreck," "The Romantic Age" and other Columbia hits of the past year. Miss Howell formerly was the private secretary to Irving Thalberg, B. P. Schulberg and Harry Cohn before she took up writing.

Bill Branch, a former stage writer and manager of many stars and attractions, broke into screen writing the first of this year and in two months has written three varied and distinct types of stories for Columbia in "Pleasure Before Business," a Jewish Irish comedy drama; "Poor Girls," a drama of the night clubs and mother love "For Ladies Only," a riotous farce. Besides that Branch has found time to write "Women of Iron" for F. B. O. in collaboration with Al Boasberg, and a new stage play in which Richard Bennett will appear next season.

Sophie Bogen, who has lived more stories in her short life than any scenario writer could write in a long one from her experiences as a canteen worker during the war and her adventures as the only American girl in Moscow during the bolshevist revolution, is bringing to the screen an originality that is making her stories commandingly different. She has written two original stories already produced by Columbia and is a factor in every story conference, because of the dramatic human touches she can supply the most ordinary plot.

Harry Cohn, vice-president and in charge of production for Columbia Pictures Corporation, favors the personal supervision of pictures.

Not only does he think that it enables the executive to keep a rein on the production which an enthused director might cause to mount to terrific production costs, but the Columbia head feels that it is of considerable aid to the director as he knows daily whether his efforts are meeting with the approval of his employers.

Many a poor picture could have been made into a good one had there been a supervisor on the job in the old days, according to Cohn. In his opinion the detached view of the supervisor is essential to the making of consistently good screen product.

Columbia will not endeavor to make any particular style of pictures next year but will strive as always in the past to make good pictures. It is a fallacy, Mr. Cohn contends, to think that any particular sort of production will be paramount any one season. It is true one outstanding success of a certain type will carry several similar pictures but that does not mean that all pictures will be successes that season. A good story, well told and well played will always succeed and the story does not need to be limited to any particular type.

During the coming year Columbia will retain the same policy as it had last year and expects to have several productions that will overshadow the success of last year, "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" and "The Lone Wolf Returns."

MOVING PICTURE WORLD has been telling the trade for the past three years that it was the leader in this field.

It was.

No amount of bunkum can down that fact.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD tells the trade now that its leadership in exhibitor circulation and general purchasing power is more solid than ever.

The Audit Bureau of Circulations in its audit just completed establishes our claim of 7,337 paid exhibitor circulation.

This---by far the largest A. B. C. verified exhibitor circulation of any trade paper in the field---is exactly what MOVING PICTURE WORLD sells its advertisers.

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING COMPANY, for the three year period referred to above, and in the future, guarantees to rebate on a percentage basis any money that any advertiser spent or spends in MOVING PICTURE WORLD whenever the Audit Bureau of Circulations shows us to have less paid exhibitor circulation than we claim in our own Publisher's Statements.

had begun, and it was necessary to arrange for a mail overflow. Somehow the "Answers Man" seemed like a safe father confessor, and by far the most interesting part of the correspondence never got into the papers.

Meanwhile the Vitagraph stars were cashing in on their popularity by making personal appearances under the chaperonage of Sam Spedon. Some idea of the heights to which hero worship had risen may be gained from a single incident.

At one of these appearances Maurice Costello happened to mention that he was looking for a home. One of the women members of the audience begged "Cos" to let her present him with a home. Laughingly he put her off, but the next morning a lawyer appeared on the Vitagraph lot, commissioned to discover exactly what the star desired and to purchase it for him. He had almost to be clubbed off the lot.

It was in 1910 that the first effort was made to introduce the stage star. J. Austin Fynes, former manager for Keith and later for Proctor, offered a number of the companies the services of a number of well-known stars in plays based on their own stage successes. Oddly enough one of the tenders was John C. Rice, who had been starred in the Rice-Irwin Kiss in a much earlier day, but no one seemed able to see Rice and his clever wife, Sallie Cohen, in a succession of their vaudeville skits. It remained for Adolph Zukor to perfect his Famous Players idea, and even he found that the studio stars exerted a much stronger pull than the greatest stars of the stage.

Back in 1910 Lois Weber was a star player, but even then she had aspirations to direct. Marion Leonard was a close second to Mary Pickford, but gradually seemed to lose ground. Cleo Ridgley was another well liked luminary. John Bunny and Flora Finch did not come into the limelight until 1911. In the fall of 1910 Bunny was in training for the camera, playing butlers and other small parts, and rather ashamed of it. When the occasional visitor from Broadway came out to Vitagraph he was apt to slip away back of some set until the intruder had gone.

Lubin at that time had no real stars, though Harry Meyers was then a juvenile with the company. Ellie Caines and a Miss Davis were the leads, but they never achieved stardom, and it was not until the advent of Florence Lawrence that the studio had a star of the first magnitude. She had started with Vitagraph, but went over to Biograph, despairing of getting a leading role in Flatbush. The Talmadges, Mabel Normand, Helen Gardner and Lillian Walker were the other near Vitagraph stars of that time.

Mary Fuller and Gertrude McCoy were the Edison leads of that day, while Gene Gauntier was both leading woman and staff scenarist for Kalem. Alice Joyce and Ruth Roland were secondary stars. In those days Miss Joyce was designated by the big boss as the purest type of American womanhood (beating Ziegfeld to it), and if you can remember that far back you never will be able to recall a picture in which she was kissed. It was strictly against orders.

Kathryn Williams was a Selig star, and Eugenie Besserer was the Essanay best bet. Gilbert M. Anderson was the feminine idol of the day, and the hero of both the women and children. Just how the women felt about him might be gathered from the fact that one enthusiast offered the Answers Man fifty dollars for an introduction, but G. M. was out in Niles, California, too far from the Marie Antoinette to materialize the fifty. Anderson had worked with most of the eastern companies without even making a dent, but as a wild western hero he had even Bill Hart spotted. Hart did not come until a year or so afterward.

Of course Henry Walthal always has been a favorite. It is customary to date him with "The Birth of a Nation," but he and James Kirkwood were Bio favorites from the earliest days.

In those days stardom was determined by public favor rather than the written contract, and the first "thousand dollar salary" was a ten-day wonder until it leaked out that for that munificent salary the star contracted to make the entire two-reel production, but somehow the thousand dollar idea stuck around and the rider was forgotten, until a thousand dollars was the one idea in salaries. And five years before everyone who played in a picture got a flat five dollars. Making the same price to all avoided argument. It was all jobbing then. If you were told to make up, you were paid for the day. No make-up; no money. It was not until 1906 that Vitagraph put a few players under weekly wage and formed the nucleus of the first stock company.

It was the make-up rule which gave birth to one of the classic stories of the studios. Sigmund Lubin was making the Passion Play and on a certain Saturday had cleaned up all but the crucifixion scene. This took so long to set on the tiny stage of the Arch street studio that it was decided to postpone the shooting until Monday, as early in the afternoon the shadow of the City Hall tower fell across the stage. Everyone was told to report and make up at once on Monday, so that no time might be wasted.

Sunday disquieting rumors reached Lubin, and mindful of the make-up rule and the fact that the order had been given on Saturday, he was first at the studio Monday morning, turning away the actors without the slightest thought of irreverence when he explained: "You must go home. We cannot crucify Christ today. He is drunk."

Seventeen years is a long time in pictures, and of the stars of that day only Mary Pickford retains her stardom, but many of the other players are still in harness. Miss Besserer did splendid work as the Mother in "The Fire Brigade" not long ago. Harry Meyers (with a corporation) is still in demand, and a list of several hundred of the still active might be compiled without including Mrs. Mary Carr, who was not a star in 1910. Quite to the contrary her director-husband was almost apologetic when he used to slip into the scenario room and urge that a part be given her in the next picture. You don't catch Mary Carr working for a five dollar extra ticket these days. That's another phase of the star system.

Naming the stars has cost the producers a lot of money, but there is this silver lining to the financial cloud: It has made many times what it has cost. It saved the day back in 1909 just as "The Great Train Robbery" changed the map in 1903 and "The Birth of a Nation" gave another start in 1915.

dresses, clothes, and pretty nearly everything else. In one town there were thirty-seven merchant windows, all dressed with "Mickey" goods. In its day "Mickey" probably made more money than "The Birth of a Nation" but it did not last as long. Other comedies have made as much money, perhaps, but none has ever made the same tremendous popular hit.

In 1917 Sennett made two additions to his studio. One was Ben Turpin, whose crossed eyes and pathetic smile brought him more fame than had been anticipated. The other star was a half-starved kitten so emaciated that the director was moved to make proffer of a saucer of milk.

True to the tradition of its race, the cat came back and was adopted by the studio. This was the once famous but now almost forgotten "Pepper" the first real animal star in studio in Hollywood. Stage seven, on the west lot, has been reconstructed to house this addition to the furniture department.

A furniture shopper has been at work six months making selections for the studio. Included in recent purchases are antiques, foreign creations of all periods and the last word in modern productions. Several pieces of the Napoleonic era are included in the lot, as well as others from the royal palaces of Europe. Rugs in wide variety, draperies, curtains and mural decorations were carefully selected for their motion picture values.

To offset fire hazards, modern and expensive fire-fighting apparatus has been installed. This applies to Fox Hills as well as the "city" studio in Hollywood. There are trained fire crews in charge of experienced fire chiefs.

To improve lighting facilities, experiments are constantly being conducted by Mr. Hoffner. Camera equipment, always the very latest, is being augmented month by month, and $50,000 was spent recently on new equipment. Scenic artists, the best in the world, are employed throughout the year. These represent every country and include some internationally known painters. Louis Usabel, of Valencia, Spain, famous as a portrait painter of Europe's theatrical celebrities, is among this group.

With 35 directors almost constantly engaged, either in cutting or shooting, Fox Films executives find that even greater expansion is necessary. It is not at all uncommon to find twenty dramatic and fifteen comedy directors shooting, or preparing to shoot, at the West Coast plant.

In addition to numerous other improvements, the studio has just installed a new 500-kilowatt motor generator which, when "hooked up" with the immense plant already in operation at the West Coast plant, will supply sufficient power to illuminate a city of 150,000 population. Giant incinerators, porcelain drinking fountains and dressing rooms for hundreds of extra workers have been installed. Shower baths and other accessories are included for all.

This organization, which is constantly sending its best directors abroad for the purpose of including authentic backgrounds in stellar productions, is just finishing several such pictures.

Where Many Moving Picture Stars Began

By Chicot

LAST week vaudeville celebrated its centenary. This is much like our own thirty year celebration of last year. It marked a distinctive period, but takes no account of the formative years beyond.

The light form of entertainment from which the once despised "variety" takes its more polite designation of "vaudeville" has been in existence for centuries, but 1827 gave a definite starting point.

As a matter of fact, it was back in the 'Sixties that the late Tony Pastor made the initial effort to clean the variety show into something a decent woman could attend. He figured that if only the men came, he could draw from only half the possible attendance, and he made an effort to clean up his performances and drew a reward in the vastly improved matinee business.

But the real change came when B. F. Keith inaugurated family vaudeville in a little store in Boston, which started with the exhibition of a negro baby weighing only four pounds. A four-pound infant did not look like much for ten cents and a few inanimate curios were added, including a number of relics from the Greeley Relief expedition. Mr. Keith got the idea that a little vaudeville entertainment such as Barnum had inaugurated at his old Ann Street Museum might help along, so a short program was provided.

After a time the baby ceased to draw, but the theatre still did well, though Mr. Keith noticed that many persons who came a little late, would turn away on learning that the next show would start in half an hour.

He cudgled his brains for some scheme to hold this lost patronage, and finally evolved the continuous performance. He announced that a person could come any time and stay as long as he wished.

Even the house staff could not quite see the idea, and there were dire predictions of failure, but Keith merely smiled and advised them to wait until Monday and see for themselves.

The show opened with Sam K. Hodgdon, a sort of assistant house manager, lecturing on the Greeley relics. After the program had been run through once, Mr. Keith reminded Hodgdon that it was his turn again.

"But they have seen me," expostulated Sam. "Half of these people were here when I went on last time. They'll walk out on me."

"That's exactly what I want," explained the smiling Keith. "See how it works."

Hodgdon went on and most of those who had seen him before went out. The next turn went on and a second exodus was begun. The first vaudeville "chaser" congratulated his boss.

Hodgdon remained in Boston until he was brought to New York to manage Keith's Union Square. When the booking office was formed, Hodgdon was placed in charge of the booking, and still held that job at his death.

Technically every vaudeville act is a chaser in that the normal person is content to see the show once through and quit. But it was found desirable to clear the house at certain times and a more definite chaser was invented. This was a turn not too bad to go on and yet not so good that people could endure a repetition. The chaser would make two appearances, fairly close together, and clear the house.

This was essential, particularly in Boston where on a holiday the thrifty would come in around 10 o'clock and bring their lunches with them. They did not have to go home until supper time.

To get them out on a holiday was a tough problem, but generally Hodgdon could find his chasers. He met his Waterloo, however, in an impersonator known as "Siegfried, the Man of a Thousand Faces."

One holiday they put him on four times in seven turns. Each time he went a little better than the last. It was not until he left the stage after his fourth triumphant show that the mystery came out. Carefully choosing the side of the stage where Hodgdon was not, he ran into Keith, whom he did not know. "I fixed Sam," he confided cheerfully. "He was trying to use me for a chaser, but I fooled him. I changed my act each time, and I'll bet they'll be waiting all the afternoon to see me come back and do some more." They did. It cut the receipts several hundred dollars.

The prosperity of the initial Boston venture was such that houses were obtained in Providence, Philadelphia and later in New York, and for years the lucky four-leaved clover was the Keith design. Today it would take an over-size fern to give the same floral suggestion.

E. F. Albee early came into the business with his former associate, and it was largely to his force and initiative that the wonderful new house in Boston was built, to be followed later by one in Philadelphia and eventually by the Palace in New York and the Albee in Brooklyn. The Boston house was the first really beautiful theatre to be devoted to vaudeville, and it contributed more than any other single factor to the advancement of vaudeville in public esteem.

But the real success of the Keith venture was due to the careful editing of the show. Profanity, obscenity and vulgarity were not tolerated. It is probably apocryphal that a Shakespearean reader was asked to substitute "hades" in the "lines." "And straight from the mouths of hell let loose the dogs of war," but it is typical of the care exercised.

Women came in numbers. They felt it safe to let the children come. The clergy approved and came themselves, and vaudeville was at last respectable.

Originally there were practically only three houses playing European music hall acts. These were Koster and Bials, in New York, a place in Chicago, and the Orpheum in San Francisco. About 1898 the continuous houses began to get the acts after their runs at Koster and Bials, and vaudeville took another stride forward, for it was considered not quite the thing for women to attend theatres where drinks were served to patrons. It remained for prohibition to make intoxication a feminine adventure.

With the decadence of the music hall idea the vaudeville theatre came fully into its own.

But even before that, in 1895, in his search for novelties J. Austin Fynes, then New York manager for Keith, induced Charles Dickson and Lillian Burkhardt to play a vaudeville sketch, and these were followed by Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew and John Mason and Marion Manola. Sydney Drew later went into pictures, but with his second wife, whom he met while playing for Vitagraph following the death of the first Mrs. Drew.

Keith was one of the first to use motion pictures in his houses, but it was not for long that he held this monopoly, for he put the Cinematograph in for a summer run in 1896 and by fall practically every vaudeville house had some form of the device. When the novelty wore off the pictures were put on to close the show.

For a time the prosperity of vaudeville was threatened by the constant increase in salaries. Tony Pastor treasured a little book in which he had entered his weekly budget for many years back. Acts to which he paid $40 to $60 in the 'eighties were now getting $250 and $300 and putting up the salary of $25 a season.

This brought about the establishment of the first so-called trust, originated by Pat Shea, of Springfield, and Wilson and Smith, his New York vaudeville agents. The idea was sold to Mr. Albee, who aided in the formation of the agency. This was followed a year or so later by the first White Rat strike, which was killed as much through treason from within the ranks as though the unsoundness of the idea. The second strike, some years later, found the booking offices so firmly established that the White Rats went out of existence and their club house was taken over by the National Vaudeville Association, founded and still largely sponsored by Mr. Albee.

It is interesting to recall that a similar effort was made to establish an association sponsored by the managers, during the first strike.

The growth of the picture theatre lead Marcus Loew and William Fox to elaborate their chain house systems, and the close corporation formed by the booking office did much to provide these picture circuits with good vaudeville material. An act "holding out" on the booking office for more salary, could play for Loew meanwhile, for less money but the upholding of a principle.

Today the picture house with vaudeville has largely supplanted the vaudeville house with pictures. The five-reel feature gave these houses a real headline offering, and it was cheaper to make the picture the feature and fill in with vaudeville than to use vaudeville headliners and fill in with a picture.

Today a change seems imminent. The productions such as are being made by Publix and other circuits, and the employment of radio bands and other radio features has whetted the taste for "live" entertainers, and with the entry of E. F. Albee and John Murdock into the production mergers it looks as though vaudeville were about to stage a comeback. Probably the next five years will be as important to the twin industries as were the five years immediately following the formation of the booking office to the vaudeville end. In those days the pictures were too unimportant to be considered. Now the shoe is on the other foot.

Francesca Redding, one of the early stage beauties who achieved success in vaudeville.

Miss Norton (above) was known professionally as "Miss," using no initial. Lillian Burkhardt (below) was one of the first dramatic stars.

"Those Were The Days"

Out of the dim past come memories of these early beauties of the period 1895-1905. Above we see "Charmion," an alluring beauty of the late-nineties, who scandalized the men by disrobing on the trapeze and tossing her garters into the audience. This act was classified as the height of daring, and by some was considered very dissolute. The scramble for the garters was a nightly classic.

Lucie Sturges, dancer, remembered as one of the first to pose for Kinetoscope pictures.

Maude Fulton (above) is recalled as an actress of talent, and also as the author of "The Brat." "Saharet" (below) was the American "Carmencita."

pictures. Up to that time animals had been used to dress the set though they gave an infinity of trouble. Pepper could act and acted so well that presently Teddy, a great dane, was added and soon animals became even more important than bathing girls on the Sennett lot.

But in the same year Sennett produced a conglomeration called "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." No one ever gave it an exact classification; it defied it, but it was funny after a fashion, and to help along Sennett loaned some of his bathing girls to appear "In person." The picture might have flopped, but with the aid of the girls it made another cleanup for its producers.

"Down on the Farm" came in 1918. It cost $50,000 to make, but it brought back $500,000 and everyone was satisfied, including the exhibitors who had contributed the half million. They had theirs, too. Molly O, brought in $200,000 more than this the following year.

By 1924 a change was made in releasing affiliation to Pathe and the discovery of Harry Langdon gave the Sennett Comedies a new fillip, and when Langdon went to star on his own account, Sennett promptly dug up Eddie Quillan. His recent return to Paramount is still news.

The Sennett lot covers a space of 28 acres on Glendale Boulevard, Los Angeles, for Sennett started early enough to find space within the then city limits. Its present equipment includes two dark stages 118 by 150 feet and 130 by 218 feet, with two open stages, one 100 by 130 and the other 175 by 110. The combined area is 220,000 square feet. The property was acquired in 1910 for Keystone Comedies, of which Mack Sennett was part owner, and in 1917 the entire acreage and equipment was taken over by Mack Sennett, Inc.

Four companies are maintained to make 50 productions a year and about 150 persons are carried on the weekly pay roll.

The present players include Raymond McKee, Alice Day, Madeline Hurlock, Andy Clyde, Eddie Quillan, Johnny Burke, Ruth Hiatt, Mary Ann Jackson, Ruth Taylor, Mary Ma-berry, Barney Hellum and Irving Bacon.

The directors are Harry Edwards, Earl Rodney and Alf Goulding with Phil Whitman, Harry McCoy and Jell Moffitt on the scenario staff.

Some of the best known players of the day made their start with Mack Sennett including Chester Conklin, Marie Prevost, Phyllis Haver, Gloria Swanson, Fatty Arbuckle, Langdon and Chaplin. Wallace Beery is not included in the list, as he was earlier with Essanay.

First National

mands from its already ample stock. Where it becomes necessary to hire articles, they are stored in a separate room to prevent confusion.

If the properties are to be taken to a set, they are collected and the transportation section notified. A "mule" calls for the equipment, takes it on the set, and then is left free for other service about the yard instead of lying idle until the property room again requires it. All trucks and automobiles are under the same general management, and duplication of effort is avoided with a consequent saving in investment and running costs.

"Supervision" is a term that simply isn't used around Burbank. Instead "unit production" is the word. The unit producer works with a director, just as a supervisor does. The result is about the same. But it sounds less commercial. John McCormick, general production head, has charge of the Colleen Moore productions and some all-star features. He also keeps in touch with the unit heads. These are Al and Ray Rockett Carey Wilson, Frank Griffin, Charles S. Rogers and Wid Gunning. Each unit producer goes over the ground with the director, scenarist and perhaps others. All questions are smoothed out at these conferences before the word is given, and then the picture moves evenly to production. No time is lost wrangling over details, all are headed in the same direction, and the absence of friction makes for a smoother finished product.

Of the directors at First National, most are characterized by their easy methods. George Fitzmaurice, widely traveled, and with the background of a classical and art education, brings from the atelier a knowledge of composition and modeling that serve him in good stead in his work at the megaphone. His recent production of "A Night of Love" is a fine sample of his style, and "The Tender Hour" is expected to be even better. It is being produced with John McCormick, with Billie Dove and Ben Lyon. Carey Wilson wrote the story.

Al Santell, on the other hand, is happier in light and frivolous types, and much of his best material is put in while the production is under way. The living actors give him ideas the words of the script do not suggest. In this he is diametrically opposite Fitzmaurice, who does practically all of his planning in advance. Santell has two highly promising pictures in "The Patent Leather Kid" with Richard Barthelmess, produced by Al Rockett, and "Orchids and Ermine," a John McCormick production with Colleen Moore.

Charles Brabin, who produced "So Big" and "Twinkletoes" follows the European school of direction. He has an easy method of directing, but is exacting in his demand for sincerity. He is working under Ray Rockett with Milton Sills in "Diamonds in the Rough," a story of the South African diamond fields.

Millard Webb is another who does not seek to gain his effects through storming at the players. He is almost subdued in his direction, but he gets his results. His last work was "An Affair of the Follies" with Billie Dove under Ray Rockett, and he is now working under McCormick on Colleen Moore's newest story, "Naughty But Nice."

Alexander Korda, a UFA director, is shortly due in Burbank to try his luck with American actors in a story by Carey Wilson, who will also act as producer. This has a European locale such as might be supposed to appeal to Korda and is known as "The Stolen Bride."

Daniel Kelly is the casting director, and with a card index keeps track of about 20,000 players of all ranks. He appreciates the fine work of the Central Casting Bureau, but a recent check-up showed that he answers about 170 telephone calls on the average day in addition to dispensing information to the directors. With four assistants he has his records in perfect order and any desired player can be located within a minute, if reference to the files is necessary. Last year First National used about 200,000 players, and Kelly supplies the information that five men are employed to every two women.

The script department is under Edna Schley, who helps select the stories and gives them to the scenarist who is best fitted to handle that particular type. A vast number of stories must be read to obtain the desired material and she and her assistants have but few idle minutes. Carey Wilson, one of the producers, is also an able writer and has much to do with the scenario end. Mervyl Le Roy is the gag man or "Comedy constructor" who puts the laughs where the scenarist forgot them, and puts in most of his own time on the Colleen Moore comedies, leaving to Howard Green, Gene Town, Hank Mann and Stuart Heisler the other units.

Al Hall is the chief cutter, heading a staff which includes Leroy Stone, Frank Lawrence, George McGuire, Frank Ware and Al De Gaetano. He declares that it takes as long to qualify a cutter of films as it does a surgeon. If a surgeon makes a wrong cut he merely loses a patient, but if the cutter does not know how to handle his shears, he may wreck a film worth anywhere from $100,000 to $1,000,000. He must know as much about writing as the scenarist and be as familiar with production as the director, that he may check on the errors of both. At Burbank the cutter shares the confidence of the producer and director from the moment production is started, for John McCormick feels that the cutting room is of equal importance in the perfection of the result and gives the cutters the fullest information.

On the completion of a story the entire run of film is shown for the director, the producer and the cutter. This is usually a matter of from twelve to fifteen reels. Duplication and excess are removed and the film is once more viewed and the necessary cuts made to get it down to the prescribed length. Gerald Duffy heads the department with Rufus McCosh, Dwinelle Benthall and Morton Blumenstock as assistants.

Stills are regarded as important at First National and directors are instructed to give every assistance to the still men, for it is recognized that good stills are the basis of good lithographs, while the lesser houses often draw more business with good stills than with any other form of appeal.

The First National studios have put Burbank on the map, just as the studios in Hollywood and Culver City were responsible for much building. Only five minutes from Hollywood, and on the main line of the Southern Pacific, it is advantageously located and already the surrounding property had been taken up and sub-divided. A real estate boom is on, and one more film city is about to be added to the credit of the cinema.

who know the good from the poor, and who have arrived at their supervisory position through the excellence of their work as scenarists. These are C. Gardner Sullivan, F. McGrew Willis, Bertram Milhauser and Walter Woods. While their work now has to do with production and not the creation of scripts, their intelligent appreciation of scenario values still stands them in good stead.

In the script room are some of the superstars of the writing game including Jeanne McPherson, special writer for De Mille himself, who created "The Ten Commandments" and "The King of Kings." Olga Printzlau, whose name also has been associated with stories of the glamorous type, is another. The four "aces" are Albert Shelby Le Vano, Clara Beranger, Beulah Marie Dix and Douglas Z.

Doty. Others on the staff include Zelda Sears, a practised playwright; Garrett Fort, a short story writer of note; Fay Garnett, John Farrow and Leonore Coffee, who wrote "The Volga Boatman." In the script room an effort is made to get away from the cut and dried formulae of the past and to sound a new and original note.

In the matter of cameramen the De Mille list includes Peverell Marley, special cameraman to De Mille; Arthur Miller, Lucien Andriot, Hal Rosson, Dewey Wrigley, Fred Westerberg, Charles Boyle, Henry Cronjager, Georges Benoit, J. Badarracco and a small army of assistants, for the modern picture is never made with a single camera and on important scenes a dozen or more may be shooting from different angles.

In the matter of stars, there will be raised to first line prominence a number of names this coming season. Having established Marie Prevost, it is now proposed to advance to stellar rank another Mack Sennett graduate in the person of Phyllis Haver. Joseph S. Schildkraut, already famous on the stage, will gain new laurels as Judas in "The King of Kings" which also will bring fresh favor to H. B. Warner.

Harrison Ford, who came into his own in "The Nervous Wreck"; Franklin Pangborn, Kenneth Thomson, Julia Faye, Junior Coghlan, Louis Natheaux Victor Varconi, Majel Coleman, Sally Rand and Josephine Norman are among others who figure prominently on the roster.

In the matter of directors, Cecil de Mille probably uses a larger staff of assistants than any other producer. Frank Urson, a director in his own right, acts as chief of staff to De Mille productions, with a small army of well trained assistants. The big scenes are directed by telephone from a central station, and the really great scenes of the super-spectacles bring into commission every camera on the lot, each shooting from a different angle and each controlled by telephone from the central station, the cameramen working with headsets to leave their hands free. The telephone system is a one-way wire. There is no talking back.

In addition to Urson there are Donald Crisp, Rupert Julian, E. Mason Hopper, William De Mills, Scott Sidney, Niles Olaf Chrisandre, George B. Seiz, William K. Howard, Alan Hale and Paul Sloane. These all work with the four supervisors already mentioned, and an effort is made to give each director the particular style of script in which he has done his best work.

Donn Hayes is chief film editor at the Metropolitan and Ann Bauchens fills the similar position at the De Mille lot. The former has for assistants James Morley, Arthur Huffsmith, Ray Schneider and Thelma Connors, while Jack Dennis, Claude Berkeley, Bobbie Hunter and J. E. MacLarnen assist Miss Bauchens.

Supplementing their work are John Krafft, Lesley Mason and John Farrow, as title writers.

Some idea of the trend of De Mille productions may be gained from Mr. De Mille's statement that while production seems to move along two general lines, the spectacular and the human appeal, in reality the spectacle of today must carry the human appeal or lose its effect.

There was a time when sheer magnificence, force of numbers, stupendousness of setting or a combination of the three could command the respect due the super-spectacle, but today it is a matter of degree only, and the human angle must be as pronounced in the super-feature as it is in the intimate drama. It may be surrounded by all the pomp of palaces and fairly totter under elaborate settings, but all of these must be merely the frame to the intimate appeal or the production is lost.

Griffith sensed this in his first great picture, "The Birth of a Nation," but those who came after him saw only the gigantic scale of production and did not realize the heart was lacking in their work.

Today the great spectacle must possess this story appeal or a million dollars worth of scenery and effects may be completely thrown away. Certainly "The King of Kings" tells the most appealing story in the history of Civilization, and from this huge spectacle down to the least ambitious program release the De Mille forces labor to inject the one proven "sure fire" of human appeal.

could respond, but the guest list looked like a Who's Who In Filmland, for literally hundreds of present-day star and featured players were developed in the long career of Universal. Today the list of directors actively engaged includes William A. Seiter, Emory Johnson, Richard Smith, Melville Brown, Harry Pollard, Willy Wyler, Robert Hill, Edward Sloman, Paul Leni, Ernest Laemmle, Edward Laemmle, Sidney Olcott and Reeves Eason.

Contract players include Hoot Gibson, Norman Kerry, Ivan Moskine, Conrad Veidt, Reginald Denny, Laura La Plante, Mary Philbin, George Siegman, George Lewis, Raymond Keane, Charles Puffy, Barbara Kent, Marian Nixon, Dorothy Gulliver, Jean Hersholt, Slim Summerville, Ted Wells, Derelys Perdue, Churchill Ross, Eddie Phillips, Edwardo Raquello and many others.

These are employed in a variety of productions ranging from two reel comedies to fourteen reel super-features, the newest of the latter being stupendous production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," intended to be the last word in the presentation of this perennial favorite even though it does not use two Topsy's.

Unit supervision is followed at Universal City, for experience has shown that the best results accrue when someone not too close to the product stands back of the director and his cast. Paul Kohner is the supervisor, and his policy is contained in Mr. Kohner's own remark that a supervision should not be meddlesome. He is there to catch errors, check inaccuracies and to control the settings, but he fails in his work if he seeks to dictate every petty detail.

Supervision is regarded as a comparatively recent fad, but Commodore Blackton could tell you that fifteen years ago he and A. E. Smith made a point of seeing every scene that was rehearsed within reaching distance of the Vitagraph studio.

Universal scripts are prepared under the supervision of Edward J. Montagne, (not Montague as it is frequently misspelled), who began as a free lance and obtained his studio experience with Vitagraph. Included in his staff are Don Cobb, who used to be in the oil business; Leigh Jacobson, a stock clerk; James O'Donohoe, an assistant director; James Madison, a vaudeville writer and editor of Madison's Budgets; Charles Logue, a newspaper man; Al Cohn, an author's agent; Charles Kenyon, playwright; Curtis Benton, actor, and Agnes Christine Johnson, a stenographer.

It is Mr. Montagne's contention that writing in scenario form is an art in itself and not a development of the author. The good technician is to be preferred to the able author who does not know the camera.

Some years ago every footloose author on the Atlantic coast was shipped to California. Most of them came back—licked. Those who did stay made brilliantly good, but this was not because they were authors, but because they trained themselves in camera technique.

At Universal City promising material is added as needed without regard for previous literary experience. The novice is permitted to watch production, sit in at script conferences and otherwise absorb the production idea. Sometimes they "hold the script" for the director or aid in the cutting rooms. If they fail to show progress they are advised to try some other line. But along with technique, the would-be writer must show originality and fertility in invention.

Welfare work, under the more acceptable name of "service" has a large place in Universal City. The employees have a club and large club house in which frequent entertainments are given, a swimming pool is to be constructed and there are tennis and handball courts while a Safety Engineer is a permanent employee. There is of course a hospital for emergency cases, and arrangements are made for further care at one of the Los Angeles institutions, where the injured persons are given every attention.

The property room has a useful adjunct in the "library" to which contributions are made by the Universal agents all over the world. The most valuable feature is photographs of street scenes and interiors from every part of the globe, but labels from wine bottles, foreign newspapers and posters, small properties and almost anything that might serve some useful purpose are sent in by the correspondents. The photographs are used in making sets. The other material is passed on to the property room, to augment its already large collection.

Universal City is a Mecca for tourists, for they can see much from the adjacent hills, even though access to the studios is difficult to obtain. It is a splendid advertisement, but above all it is intensely practical.

Presently he found himself an assistant director and then he found himself in the Army.

After the Armistice he returned to his post as assistant director and eventually rose to be co-director with George B. Seitz. When Seitz left, he was the logical successor. He has been on the Pathe pay roll for about ten years, the continuity being broken only by his war service.

The scenarist is Joseph A. Roach, another old timer, though not always a serial man.

Joe had been a newspaperman, but a political expose was his Waterloo. The "gang" was more powerful than the press, someone must be the goat, so the reporter who had written the irritating stories was given short shrift while the newspaper made its peace with the ring.

Disgusted, Joe turned his attention to the then new art of scenario writing and found to his pleased surprise that a man with ideas could eat three meals a day and not have to climb up the fire escape to dodge an unpaid landlady. By the time the Famous Players were started Joe had attained a position that got him the order for the first F. P. script as well as the next three. But he did not confine himself to any one company in those days. He has been scenario editor for a lot of the old timers. Now all he has to do is write 80 reels a year and repeat the next twelve months.

That sounds simple, but Joe does not merely dash off the stuff. He works it out. He is constantly seeking for new situations, novel thrills, different themes, and the scripts he turns out are not the same old stunts worked over into slightly different form, but each has an entity of its own.

He works out the full 20 reels in complete detail before the story is submitted for final approval, and once the O.K. has been given, the story is followed absolutely. It is the sort of script that can be followed to the last detail, for working with the same people on every story, and knowing precisely what they will do, Joe is able to write to length. It is not necessary to condense one chapter to its two reel length and then expand the next. Each section of the script will give two reels of action with very little trimming and leave the advancement of the story at a point where you can't figure out how the heroine can possibly stop falling out of the airplane or by what means she can shin up the mine shaft.

It is this exactness of script that is largely responsible for the smoothness of the Pathe serials, and all this exactness comes in large measure from constant consultation with Bennett and Reineck.

One odd production kink is the rule that all sets must be erected the previous day and must be seen not only by the executives but by all of the players who are to work in the set. It is theory, which seems to be good psychology, that familiarity with the set makes for better work the following day. The sense of newness has worn off and the player is able to concentrate on the action. This is not possible on location, but location work is less important in this regard.

Another system is to lay out the work systematically. The entire cast is not called to loll around the studio while a few work on a set. The work is planned and timed in advance. Only those required are called, and so closely is the work figured that a player can be called within a quarter of an hour of the time he is needed.

As a result the Pathe western section has run within eight percent of production cost estimates, within four percent of time schedules other than delays due to unexpected bad weather, and within twenty percent of the estimated footage.

Each picture carries its own budget. The stories must not be made for so much apiece. If more money is required to produce a more ambitious picture, that money is forthcoming, within reason. The cost and time allowance of each picture varies to some degree and is not averaged up.

Pathe has a property man, but no property room. Everything is rented, and everything can be rented in Los Angeles if you know where to go. "Blackie" Rule looks after the unusual props and Ray Heins locates the more conventional material. He knows all the second-hand men, knows almost by heart the stocks of the professional property renters, but keeps a list as a refresher to his memory, and knows where he can locate and hire apart from the usual channels. Rule reads the newspapers to mark down the unusual, prowls into out-of-the-way places and keeps in touch with other studios.

Whatever Blackie and Ray bring in is turned over to Charles Stevens, master of properties, who photographs it for identification, makes a record on the back of the photograph, puts the material into the set and gets it back to the owner as quickly as possible.

There was a time when Pathe owned thousands of properties, but they were all disposed of, partly because it was found that it was cheaper to rent material actually to be used than to pay storage space on a lot of junk that might never be needed. The other reason for renting is that Pathe salesmen reported that the old system was objected to by exhibitors, who had come to recognize the standard props. The system might not work in other studios, nor where there is a greater production activity. It works well for Pathe only because it is in the hands of men who keep in touch with the rental market.

Thomas Storey, younger brother of Jack Storey, Assistant General Manager of Pathe, is the casting director as well as assistant director. The combination of duties has its advantage in that the extras are more likely to give prompt and willing service to the man who hires and fires. There really is not work enough for a casting director, and it would be more correct to say that the assistant director engages the players.

Edward J. Snyder and Frank Redman are the cameramen. Snyder has been with Pathe for fourteen years except during the war, while Redman has been on the job for only ten years. In the intervals of production he sometimes works on other pictures.

Oliver Sigurdson, a newspaper photographer, does the stills, and his newspaper training enables him to get pictures that give the maximum of action with the greatest art value. In his leisure he does considerable work for magazines and newspapers.

Ralph Dietrich is the film cutter and laboratory contact man. The final cutting is done in concert with Bennet and Roach, the scenarist supplying the additional titles, where any may be needed.

The stars are Allene Ray and Walter Miller, who were chosen for their acting ability plus physical prowess. They have worked together for so long that team work makes possible many stunts that would be unattainable were they not so thoroughly familiar with each other's abilities and methods.

In spite of fan insistence, they are not married—at least to each other, but Miller is proud of his charming wife and a wonderful baby.

Miss Ray is not only an all around athlete but so fine a swimmer that she was regarded as a likely contender in the recent Catalina Channel swim. Possibly she lost out because she had no boy to put through college.

whom probably know that they are attending a preview.

At the conclusion of the run the clocks are compared and if there is a discrepancy they are averaged up. If the laughs do not clock up to the studio standard, the first step is to remove the failures. New titles may be inserted, some may be taken out, and with a reduced footage the staff shoots off in another direction to try the picture again. The same house is never used for two showings of the same picture. It may take even three or four previews before the staff is satisfied that all has been done that can be and the picture is ready for release.

Even then no one knows exactly, for the picture that will "knock them dead" in a mill district will be received in haughty silence in a more polite section. The best the staff can hope for is to hit a good average. Experience gradually develops a sixth sense that enables the cutter to play fairly safe, but with comedy you can't ever really tell.

Jack White, one of the foremost supervisors of comedy, believes that the comedy has only begun to come into its own and looks forward to a gigantic advancement in the next few years. He points out that with the general nastiness of stage plays, the bulk of theatre-goers have turned to musical comedy and acquired a taste for light entertainment that will find reflection in their screen choice. He points also to the marked advance over the days of custard pies and bathing girls when crude slapstick and feminine pulchritude constituted the two chief appeals. Comedies are growing better as the field broadens, and the all comedy programs, he feels, are just around the corner.

This was in sharp contrast to the West Coast, but there was still another drawback. There were few facilities for rustling props and costumes. Costumes had to be shipped from New York or Philadelphia and the few second hand shops dealt mostly in Naval stores.

Only the Karlem Company had erected a permanent studio. Lubin worked in an old boat club house and the visiting companies did mostly location work, though Edison spent one season at the old ball park and fairgrounds in West Jacksonville. With no heaving investment, it was easy to pull stakes and depart for the West.

Coytesville and Fort Lee also languished as producing centers, although there are still laboratories and studios existing there.

From 1909 to the present day the growth and spread of the studio activity has been a marvel of mechanical ingenuity and of production advancement. Carl Laemmle's shift from the exchange to the production field, from which has evolved the Universal of today, was but one of the business achievements resulting in veritable cities under the general term "studios" and the inception of Famous Players, the formation of the Jesse L. Lasky company and the outgrowth of the present huge Paramount organization, indicate the business growth which justifies such massive assemblies of production facilities as both the west coast and the eastern states now boast. Though once more production is about to go west.

Fox, alone of all the big production companies, plans to retain an eastern studio, though it is probable that for a time the bulk of the talking pictures will be made here in the East. Apart from that it is a case of Westward the cinematic empire takes its way.

The Organized Exhibitor

The others stood pat and re-elected Mr. Neff, and the bolters returned. Such was the early day exhibitor politics of that first and last New York convention. Mayor Gaynor, who later addressed the delegates, introduced by Trigger, little knew their versatility.

Among the reports of that interesting session as recorded by MOVING PICTURE WORLD of that date some of the topics under discussion by the delegates sound somewhat amusing today. They were important then, however, there is no doubt.

One of these was the question of how many reels ought to be shown for five cents and how many for ten. It will doubtless amuse Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana to have it recalled to him that he strongly advocated "2 reels for 5c and 3 for 10."

Quoting further from the files of MOVING PICTURE WORLD, it is reported that "Mr. Phillips, of Milwaukee," (not the Texas Phillips already mentioned), stated that his competitor ran six reels for five cents, but "that he had refused to run more than four for five cents," showing that even then competitive practices corresponding to the "double feature" program of 1927 were already in vogue.

In the same account, it is also commented on that "Fred J. Herrington viewed with alarm the fact that some fifty-seven theatres were owned by exchanges," in his native city of Pittsburgh. Later events have surely proved that his alarm was more or less justified, though it is a matter which would hardly create comment nowadays.

The convention finally decided that three reels for five cents was about right. Among the other resolutions adopted was one to pursue a "middle of the road" policy in booking licensed and independent pictures, and another urging producers to refrain from allowing scenes to be taken, showing cigarette smoking. The Kansas delegation must have been responsible for this last one.

As a finale to this convention, the exhibitors held a banquet at the Brighton Beach Casino, which was turned into a love feast, the bolters returning en masse to the fold. Some of the oldtimers will recall, with a pang of memory, that John Bunny, the famous Vitagraph comedian, acted as toastmaster at this dinner and was a prime factor in bringing about harmony again.

The year following (1914) Marion S. Pearce was elected president of the league at Dayton, O. President M. A. Neff, then a very ill man, died soon after, a very real loss to the exhibitor organization which his efforts had built up, for with his passing the league lost one of its ablest and most active executives.

Mr. Pearce was succeeded in the following year at the fifth annual convention of the league, held in San Francisco, July, 1915, by Fred J. Herrington of Pennsylvania, who had been a field organizer during the term of President Pearce and whose efforts had resulted in greatly increasing the membership of the organization.

In the same year Lee A. Ochs, who was rapidly coming to the front in exhibitor politics, as a national figure, was elected president of the New York State branch of the League.

In this year also, the film industry began to reshape itself, following the dissolution of the Motion Picture Patents Co., along new lines. The Motion Picture Board of Trade was organized, under the leadership of Jacob W. Binder, formerly of the National Board of Censorship, to afford the different producer and distributor groups an organization through which they might function in matters which affected the interests of all.

Whatever its original objects, the Board of Trade actually became the natural enemy of the Exhibitors League, whose growing strength was not regarded with unconcern by the big companies.

In May, 1916, open war was declared between the New York State branch of the League and the Board of Trade, the reason being that the Board decided to hold an Exposition of its own in the Grand Central Palace the same week that the New York exhibitors were to hold theirs at the old Madison Square Garden. Inasmuch as the Exhibitors League Exposition had been planned and announced nearly a year before, while that of the Board of Trade was the result of a decision made a few weeks before the actual opening, together with the fact that the latter had selected the week chosen by the exhibitors for their show, the exhibitors involved became considerably wrought up. Names were called and the free-for-all began.

To set forth the details of that fight, with which the writer is quite familiar, would make a most interesting article all by itself and distinctly illuminating to those unfamiliar with the means and methods employed by all parties in those days to gain their ends.

It is sufficient to say that the fight of the New York exhibitors was a complete success and brought their president, Lee A. Ochs, into such national prominence that at the convention in Cleveland, Ohio, later on that summer, he was elected president of the national organization, practically without opposition.

The regime of Ochs was a tumultuous one. He was earnest and sincere in his interest in exhibitor welfare. He was a fighter. But sometimes he hit heads that he shouldn't have and offended personalities whom he ought to have propitiated. He had unbounded confidence in himself and in his convictions. But like many sincere men, he was frequently wrong and more apt than not to damage his own cause by his very sincerity.

It must be remembered also, that he came to the presidency of the Exhibitors League at a time when the big producers and distributors, who had been struggling independents during the era of the General Film and Patents Company, were now coming into their full strength. Moreover, they feared and distrusted the League and the possibilities it contained for enforcing the demands of the exhibitors.

Openly they dared not antagonize it. Secretly, they hoped to overcome or emasculate it by sapping its vitality from within. Ninety per cent of the plain and fancy politics which diverted every League meeting of those days, State or National, was motivated by one or another or all of the producing and distributing companies and their agents.

In that day there were practically no producer owned theatres. But there were scores of them that were openly or secretly producer-controlled. Consequently, there were League members galore, who took their orders from the head office of some one of the big producer-distributor companies.

Lee Ochs, I think, never fully realized this. At least, if he did, he didn't know what to do about it. Had there been a little more of the Machievelli about him, probably he would have known how to handle that phase of the situation. And right there was where it got out of hand.

In the Fall of 1916, in association with

Louis F. Blumenthal, then treasurer of the New York State League and an executive in national councils and the writer of this article, Lee Ochs founded The Exhibitors Trade Review, a trade publication with the motto "of, for and by the exhibitor." Such it actually was, in every respect, with the Exhibitors League holding the predominating stock control, yet it was made the basis for unbounded criticism of the Ochs administration through the adroit manipulation of those large interests, who naturally were opposed to the Exhibitors League and who feared anything which might give it added strength or cohesion.

The result of this under-cover campaign came to a climax at the League Convention in Chicago in 1917, when those opposed to Ochs re-election bolted and left the floor of the convention hall rather than remain to be snowed under by the overwhelming majority which Lee Ochs showed he had among the delegates. It was a dramatic moment in the history of the League. Sometime the inside story of that bolt may be told, but not quite yet.

Many of the bolters were entirely sincere in the reasons for their withdrawal, others did not hesitate to admit later that they had been misled. Still others showed by the developments of later years that their interests at the time were neither those of the League nor of an honest, bona fide exhibitor. One man, who need not be named, for it is known to all who were at that convention, has since made millions by selling out his friends and supporters on that occasion.

This split marked the beginning of the end of the League, as such. The convention at Boston in 1918 elected Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer of Chicago, to succeed Lee Ochs. Sidney Cohen, just coming into national prominence at that time and the leader of the New York delegation, opposed Schaefer and fought for a compromise candidate.

William A. Brady, then president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the successor to the Board of Trade, which the year before under Exhibitor barrage had dissolved out of the picture, had come to Boston to address the convention. His popularity with the exhibitors was great. They believed in him and trusted him. But they didn't want him to lead them as an exhibitor.

Nevertheless his name was proposed in opposition to Schaefer's in a last minute attempt to stampede the convention. When the count was made he received just nineteen votes (the New York delegation's) out of some 160 cast.

The election of Alfred Black as president of the League in St. Louis in 1919 marked its final downfall. Later disclosures about this man, who is now dead, are too recent to require description, other than to say that the fable of the chickens, who invited the fox to come into the coop and run the works, would be fully analogous.

Meanwhile the exhibitors all over the country, badly disorganized as they had become, were searching for a leader. They found him in the person of Sydney S. Cohen, unquestionably the ablest, most brilliant and best liked standard bearer the exhibitors of America have ever had.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was formed at Cleveland in 1920, practically every State in the Union being represented by a large delegation. A rump convention of the old League held in the same city at the same time, came over and joined it in a body and added their votes to the others in unanimously electing Sydney Cohen as the new organization's first president.

At the three succeeding conventions, in Minneapolis in 1921, Washington, D. C., in 1922, and Chicago in 1923 he was also the overwhelming choice of the delegates and only his own determination to withdraw entirely from active leadership prevented them from repeating the performance at the Boston convention in 1924.

M. J. O'Toole, one of the retiring president's staunchest supporters and most valued lieutenants, then became the choice of the convention. He is the present business manager, some three months ago succeeding Joseph M. Seider, who had occupied that difficult post most efficiently since 1924.

The M. P. T. O. A. convention in Milwaukee in 1925 elected Pete Woodhull, prominent New Jersey theatre owner to leadership, while that in Los Angeles last May named Eli W. Collins of Arkansas. This year the convention will be held in Columbus, Ohio.

The M. P. T. O. A. has done much for its membership in standardizing business practices and in putting an end to many abuses from which the exhibitor has suffered in the past. It is fully organized and functions with an efficiency that would hardly be believable to the theatre owner of ten or a dozen years ago. Its activities are entirely constructive.

In closing this article, it would be incomplete without mention of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York. This organization which is entirely independent in its operation, is a protective alliance among theatres in the metropolitan zone only, but has been the model for exhibitor organizations in other cities.

It was founded by William Brandt, its first president, Sydney S. Cohen and Sam Berman in 1919, when the election of Alfred Black as president of the old League made the New York exhibitors determine to take steps to insure their own protection. Among the names on its charter are John Manheimer, Sam G. Bock, Louis F. Blumenthal, Charles Goldreyer and I. Gainsboro, all well known theatre owners.

Its presidents have been William Brandt (1919-1921) William A. Landau (1922) and Charles L. O'Reilly, who to date has been re-elected three times.

into action. It is for this reason, in part, that unsolicited manuscripts are not considered.

In the West Coast studios there are nearly fifty men and women on the staff, not more than one-fifth of whom were prominent as authors before they became scenarists. Ethel Doherty and Louise Long, for example, were school teachers in Los Angeles. They work in collaboration and have done excellent script. Jessie Burns and Albert Vorhaus form another team.

Some of the old guard need no introduction, such as Tom Geraghty, Julian Josephson, Grover Jones, Robert N. Lee, and John F. Goodrich. They are regarded as the aces. Other writers are Harman J. Mankiewicz, Alfred Hustwick, Theodore Shane, Lisle Bell, George Marion, Jr., Grant Clarke, Dorothy Egan, Theodore Benedek, Doris Anderson, Lloyd Corrigan, Scott Darling, Jules Furthman, Hope Loring, Paul Gangelin, Percy Heath, John F. Goodrich, Robert N. Lee, Norman McLeod, Fred Myton, Vernon Smith, Chandler Sprague, John Stone, Keene Thompson and others.

Al Boasberg was a Paramount exploitation man before he went over to the scenario staff.

He is one of the comedy constructors, which means a gag man for dramatic plays. He puts in the comedy relief.

Some of these men are also title writers, for the two departments are closely related. Theodore Shane puts in the script and other temporary titles and then one of the final titlers come in on the picture and seeks to elaborate Shane's suggested titles or improve on them. This work is not held back until the picture is completed, but proceeds as the working print is assembled.

In the line of stars Paramount recently developed a "natural" in Clara Bow, who has made a remarkably rapid rise to stardom. Her best work was done in "Mantrap" but she scored her most sensational hit in "It." She is to be strongly featured in the forthcoming series of releases, for she is one of the best box office bets.

Pola Negri recently came into her own in "Hotel Imperial" and it is believed that she will repeat in "Barbed Wires." She has several plays in the new list and it is anticipated that she will now draw as well as she did in "Passion."

Bebe Daniels thinks highly of her new "Senorita" and has gotten over nicely in most of her recent productions, while Florence Vidor, firmly established as a star, has found her forte in comedy drama with a touch of seriousness.

Esther Ralston is expected to follow her success in "Old Ironsides" with "Fashions for Women" and "Ten Modern Commandments." Betty Bronson will make her next bid in "Ritz."

Richard Dix is easily head of the male romantic leads, with Emil Jannings still an uncertainty as far as his American work is concerned. He should take his place at the top of the line if he stands transplantation. Gary Cooper, in Westerns, is something new and the comedy end is strongly represented by Wallace Beery, Raymond Griffith, Eddie Cantor and W. C. Fields.

Twenty-five directors appear on the Paramount roster, and of these James Cruze stands well to the head. Cruze is a high speed director. He knows what he wants, knows how to tell his players what he wants, and if they give him a realization of the scene, he does not care whether they make a gesture with the right hand or the left. He spends less time on rehearsal than almost anyone in the business, and the result is a greater spontaneity and naturalness in the finished picture. He does not tire his players with interminable rehearsal, but that does not mean that he is not ready to accept anything they give him. He knows what he wants, and he knows how to get it. Cruze is one of the few directors to come up from the acting ranks. He began his career in the old Tanhouser lot in New Rochelle and has been pretty much everything in pictures, including the ostensible head of a correspondence school of acting.

Herbert Brenon works by the reverse method, but gets excellent results. He outlines the action to the most casual gesture. Victor Fleming is another who fairly paints the scene through his direction.

Richard V. Lee, who has just made "Barbed Wire," is quietly effective. He studies his players and knows how to handle them. His forte is tense drama, and he makes even the connecting scenes with the same meticulous care that he gives the big situations. Clarence Badger is even more restrained than Lee. He never raises his voice and keeps everyone in good humor.

Eddie Sutherland, who shines in comedy, is one of the most nervous men on the lot, and carries a cane as a vent for his energy. He gives his directions with an amplitude of gestures, emphasized by the cane, but when the camera is turning he sits tensely quiet, only to break into action the moment the film stops running. Even at that he is quiet alongside William Wellman, who directed "Wings." When Wellman gets excited he sits on the chair instead of in it. Yet he has extraordinary patience in working for his effects.

On the Paramount lot most of the assistant directors come from the property department. As property men they become familiar with the duties of direction, and make excellent detail men, taking the little worries, and some of the large ones, from the director himself. One of the men in this capacity was a trick roller skater in vaudeville before he became a screen actor, and he left the makeup to go into the property room, where he saw greater opportunities for eventual advancement. He took his place with the "swing gang," the men who do the rough work, and rose rapidly until he is now within one step of his goal, with every prospect of making that final rung.

Another assistant is likely to remain in that capacity because he is a veritable genius at handling mobs. He is a happy-go-lucky individual who does not relish too great a responsibility, but he is a wonder when it comes to getting his director's ideas over to the extras.

The Casting Director at Paramount is Fred Datig, who came to Los Angeles in the hope of getting work as an actor. No one seemed to have a job for him, however, and so he stepped to the other side of the railing and began giving out the jobs he could not win for himself. He was thirteen years with Universal before coming to Paramount.

Naturally he has a fine memory for names and faces, but he leaves much of the contracting to his assistant, Richard Stockton, who arranges the interviews and takes the routine work from his shoulders.

Datig spends much of his time looking at screen tests for new faces, interviewing and telephoning. He has four telephones in a row on his desk and can handle them like a clerk in a ticket speculator's office. He maintains an unusually complete filing system, but uses his memory far more often than his files.

Filmdom's second woman director has just emerged from Paramount's cutting room. This is Dorothy Arzner, who was "script girl" for James Cruze in "The Covered Wagon" and "Old Ironsides." A script girl is a sort of bookkeeper as well as cutter, for she must keep track of all takes and footages. These she later cuts for assembling and finally cutting to release length. The experience she received will be invaluable to her in directing, and the cutting room it rooting for her to the last man and girl.

Probably the biggest script job of late was that on "Wings," in which as many as eighteen cameras were used in filming some of the scenes. In this instance the "girl" was Carl Pierson, who had to tabulate the shooting of 900 scenes and record the takes of each individual camera. The full footage was about 750,000 feet, which must be reduced to 14,000 feet, with due allowance for the titling.

Cameramen have to use their heads, too. The director indicates the shots, but the cameraman is responsible for the lighting and general effect, and often he takes long chances.

In shooting "Wings" Harry Perry disregarded positive orders to keep well back from the French village was bombed. With a metal screen for the camera and an aviator's padded shock cap for himself, he crept to his selected location and ground while the village went up in the air. He got the only ground shot that fully registered.

Again, while shooting "Old Ironsides" Al Gilks, the chief cameraman, did not stop grinding when the Tripolitan frigate was sunk. He kept on, though the scene was finished. A moment later the foremast of the frigate shot half its length into the air, one of the most effective bits in the vivid production.

At least two of the Paramount directors have been cinematographers. Both Victor Fleming and Alan Dwan once stood behind the crank. The wonder is that more do not change over.

Still cameraman are assigned each company. They are provided with 8 by 10 cameras with speed shutters, and they shoot while the camera is turning. They all have had training in the selection of dramatic poses, and Otto Dyar seems to have a sixth sense that warns him what is coming. During the shooting of "Wings" he caught the crash of a plane into a French house at the exact moment of impact, getting the plane still in the air with the shingles flying from the roof. A moment either way would have lost a most remarkable shot. Several similar scenes occur in "Wings" and Dyar caught them all.

According to Jesse L. Lasky, comedies will be in the ascendant and war dramas have but begun.

"The development of the popularity of comedies has been one of the most striking features of the past year in films," says Mr. Lasky. "This can be no more aptly illustrated than in our own experience. Whereas, when 'Behind the Front' was made a year ago, it was practically our only current out-and-out comedy, today forty per cent. of our present production is devoted to the purpose of providing laughs.

"It is a notable factor in the comedy field of today, however, that laugh films are now aimed directly at definite human interest. The days of broad slapstick, with the films composed of a series of gags has gone.

"Eddie Cantor's new picture, 'Special Delivery,' telling the mishaps of a human and lovable but blundering letter carrier; Wallace Beery's 'Casey at the Bat' and 'The Big Sneeze'; W. C. Fields' 'So's our Old Man' and 'The Potters' are outstanding examples of what I mean. Each has a definite story, each has genuine drama and heart tugs, but, after all, the pictures are primarily intended to create laughter. Harold Lloyd has always held to this form of comedy. 'The Kid Brother' has a very definite heart appeal, while, at the same time, it is probably the funniest picture he has ever made. It is the tendency that will prevail throughout the coming year.

"As to war pictures, the cycle that was begun by 'The Big Parade' and strengthened by 'What Price Glory' has actually only begun. War, after all, is the most dynamic experience that can come to the human being.

"But here, too, we find a changing standard. The war pictures of the future will not depend for success upon their spectacular nature, with sweeping battle scenes. Spectacle, simply as such, can no longer grip the audience.

"We are now in the phase of war pictures which present the sublime drama of the individual human being against the background of the limitless battle lines. 'Beau Geste' is a war picture, but its keynote is a distinctive departure in film plot, the love of three brothers.

"'Old Ironsides' is a war picture, but it is centered both around a small group of human beings and what cannot be described as other than the distinctive personality of a great fighting ship.

"'The Rough Riders,' which we have but recently completed, is one of the most human war pictures ever made. The entire picture has a human personality, with one of the greatest and most human figures of history, Theodore Roosevelt, as the dominating character.

"In 'Wings' we picture a chapter of the World War that has never been brought to the screen, the air service. This film is not yet completed, but it promises to be, at once, one of the most spectacularly thrilling and human gripping pictures ever made.

"I venture to predict that war pictures, that is, films which have a war background, will be tremendously popular throughout 1927 and 1928 and even after that, they will be made with real success, always touching some new angle of the conflict.

"As to the class of production which will prevail during 1927, roadshow, long run special, or weekly change feature, the chief change will be the tremendous strengthening of the last named type.

"We believe in them for the possibilities which they offer in production and presentation, for their advertising value and for the reason that the public has shown that it wants them.

"But there is no question but that the weekly change feature productions are the backbone of the film industry. They reach more people. They are more profitable. The finest theatres in the world are those devoted to weekly change feature films. This has brought us to the realization that the weekly-change picture must be of the highest calibre possible. It must have roadshow quality, without roadshow length and have less of the spectacular and more of the direct drama that marks the roadshow. One of the great objectives of Paramount during 1927 is the elevation of the weekly-change feature to the highest standard it has ever attained."

One of the most famous of the longer of these films was "The Bridge of Ships."

Motion pictures proved immensely valuable to the government in the taking of scenes of actual warfare, troops on manoeuvre and bits of difficult terrain. In the archives at Washington, D. C., there are now impressive records of actual battles that will be immensely interesting to all posterity and invaluable to the army for a study of military technique.

Quite different it was during the Spanish-American War. Photographers were not allowed on board ship. Albert E. Smith met the demand for war films with bath-tub movies. Miniatures with pictures of battleships pasted on them floated in tubs against painted backgrounds. Beside each tiny gun lay a tiny mound of gunpowder to be touched off by a red-hot wire in Smith's hands, giving the effect of gun fire. They fooled the public and scored wherever shown. Great was the patriotic fervor as they flashed on the screen.

Now we have thousands of feet of actual battle scenes on file in the nation's capital—an invaluable pictorial record of the greatest war of modern times.

Space does not permit more than this suggestion of what an incalculable service the motion picture rendered the government during the World War. It is, and ever will be, one of the finest and richest chapters in its history—a chapter of splendid, unselfish service.

rescue the heroine who had fallen out of a boat.

In front of Keith's the poster showed a girl floundering in the water and the hero in midair. One block to the west the same picture was being shown at a flash house. Here the poster showed a girl in the water menaced by a revolver in the hand of a man who stood in the bow of a rowboat that almost grazed her chin. In the stern a second man was preparing to whang the first one over the head with an uplifted oar.

The man who ran the show said the A.B.C. posters were "too tame." They were, for him.

The other drawback was the rented poster. Some of these were mounted on muslin. Others were merely folded. Sometimes they were hired from the same exchange that rented film, but more often there were separate poster exchanges where for a moderate fee you could get one poster on each subject, bringing it back the following day and exchanging for another set.

For a little while one New York poster exchange sent a man around with a rubber stamp to backstamp the posters rented from an opposition concern. Shortly after an "inspector" would come along, point to the incriminating stamp and confiscate the alleged stolen poster. It was not long before the scheme was detected and stopped, but it was a fine graft while it lasted. A plain poster would last from six to ten trips. The muslin backed posters lasted indefinitely.

When the Sales Company was formed they followed the General Film in getting out true-to-film posters, and when this split into the Universal and Mutual, it was even better for the lithographers.

Getting stills was a mean job in those days. It was almost impossible to persuade the cameraman to photograph the desired poses, even when the pose desired was marked on the margin of the working scrip. If there was a spell of inclement weather and production backed up, it was still worse, and it was no uncommon thing to send a boy with a bicycle along with the outfit when it started to make a picture. On the first location a couple of stills would be shot and hurried back to the studio to be developed and rushed to A.B.C.

The art work in those days was the crudest sort, but it was better than stock paper. More of an effort was made with the coming of the two-reel pictures which brought the three-sheets in their train, but it was not until the development of the five-reel that the 24-sheets came in, and some time after that before high-grade poster artists were employed.

It is common for exhibitors to kick about the paper today, but they don't know how lucky they are. Today some of the finest poster artists are employed, and the results are usually good. They cannot be too good. Paper much have a punch. It must be big, and a trifle gaudy. It must have a visual appeal. There is such a thing as getting a poster too good. Only the other day a man pointed out a beautiful stand and remarked that it was a pity that the production companies did not get out paper like that.

It would be more of a pity if they did. The poster in question was done for a national advertiser. It was designed to stay on the boards for a few months. It did not have to hit and run. It had a couple of months in which to sink in.

Another man brought in what he declared to be the most artistic poster produced in months, the only artistic poster, if you please. An hour or so later this artistic poster was encountered on a display stand of nine 24-sheets, three deep and three wide.

The first of those nine posters to show up was a Paramount: a highly colored head of Pola Negri. The second was a Metro, the next three were commercial posters and a poor sixth was the artistic example.

On a board by itself it really was very pretty, but it could not fight stronger work in the mass.

Some of the originals prepared for motion picture posters have been gladly accepted by art galleries making a display section of poster art, but the best work is the poster which gets the most attention and sells the most tickets.

If you really want to see what progress the cinema posters have made, try and find some of those old A. B. A. one sheets.

Then you'll know.

The old posters had only one advantage. No one "presented," the producers were unknown, the authors were unknown, the art and technical directors were unknown, the wise crackers had not yet come into the title writing game, no costumer asked for credit, and the supervisor had not yet been thought of.

After all there was that advantage. The A. B. C. posters just sold the pictures and the pictures had not yet acquired a tail as long as a comet's.

Censorship

them of salaries for the blessed work of purifying and saving the world. From a third group, that was composed of perfectly sincere people intent on possessing a wholesome thrilling entertainment for their children and themselves such as a wise, legitimate development of the screen would give, were agitated by the tendency of the films, as they were then in some cases being produced by irresponsible, calloused and money-seeking interests, to pander to the tastes of the low-minded, the morbid, and the seekers of the lurid and sensational.

"Arrayed against these three classes, organized for warfare in the case of the paid reform element, on whose protest politicians were already casting appraising eyes, was that vast army of the common people, among whom were the toilers, who had found, in the nickelodeons where the magic screen with its moving shadows was hung, food for their spiritual hunger and a blessed means of recreation, and above all a channel through which to approach and reach for an hour a land of romantic fancy and thus satisfy their dreams. The poor man had found, in other words, his theatre. He could have it for a nickel or dime; and it is to be feared that the privileged in life were beginning to see a menace to their safety and their monopoly of more expensive entertainment and to resent this encroachment on their domain of control and enjoyment of the arts. For the motion picture in its humble temple bore unmistakable signs of being an art, what kind no one yet knew, but at least it was a powerful magnet and a novel, entrancing and far-reaching form of expression, a purveyor of ideas and symbols and secrets. It could tell a story and that story might well get to the point, indeed had arrived at it, where it could narrate facts to the great majority and offer suggestions which the jealous minority did not intend, as it never has intended, the humble servants of humanity and an exploiting civilization to know.

"The first need, then, on the part of liberal, socially minded people, as well as of narrow purists and members of the aristocracy of ignorance, prejudice and suppression, seemed to be some sort of regulation. The screen, in short, had become feared by those who had cause to fear for themselves and others, was regarded askance with bewilderment and misgivings by the intelligent forces desiring to think wisely and constructively about the social welfare, and was generally misunderstood by all except the masses, whom the motion picture had wooed and won with a conjuring mysterious and wonderful. Light was wanted and the lens brought to bear was bound to be that of the censor, focused by the old theory of protecting society's morals. It was the first answer that came to hand—the short cut to an end and purpose little understood, which society has always taken when confronted with a new, confounding and seemingly dangerous problem."

About the time Mayor Gaynor was making his position clear, the National Board had discovered facts for itself destructive of the theory of censorship. It had discovered that among the most intelligent people and between people of equal moral feeling and rectitude, there was a profound difference of opinion as to the moral tone of pictures, as to what should and should not be deleted, as to what should and should not be condemned in entirety and hidden from the public view. With Mayor Gaynor, the Board's leading members were contending that censorship, temporary or permanent, would not work; that its operation was a fallacy, being unable to cure those ills, real or imaginary, that it was supposed to cope with and overcome; that it was un-American in principle and that the very word "censorship" was opprobrious to the mind and best interests of the masses of American citizens and not definitive of the work with which the Board was really concerned and should, if its work was to be on a constructive plane, perform in the future: that work being the improvement of motion pictures, morally, educationally and artistically, through the gradual awakening of the conscience of motion picture patrons, producers, and users to the finer elements to be found in the screen, as well as a stimulating of responsiveness to be expected through the discovery and estimate of those elements.

Although the Board continued to operate for some time under its original title, in 1916 its control body, containing many of the founders of the Board, changed the name of the organization to the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, as being one more accurately descriptive of its work and purpose, and the philosophy of "Selection—not Censorship—the Solution," which experience had set in evolution, was definitely evolved. Even before this, however, the Board had taken an active position in opposing legal censorship of motion pictures. Its constructive non-legal censorship program had also been indorsed by the Mayor's Conference Committee of New York State and by various communities and officials elsewhere.

The art had grown, however, and its business foundation had begun to assume proportions undreamed of by its originators. It was also the age of control of big business. Despite efforts both by the industry and by far-sighted leaders of the public, a state board of censors was established by law in Ohio under the Industrial Commission of the state in May, 1913. In July, 1921, in Ohio the business of censoring was transferred to the Department of Education, Division of Film Censorship.

The principle of thwarting an art and taxing a business under the guise of protecting the morals of the public was now well under way. It was a principle in which the suppressive members of society and the politicians might well seek to cooperate in order to give it perpetuity by affixing to it additional seals of the law. In June 1, 1914, the law governing the censorship of motion pictures became effective in Pennsylvania. In April 1915, under the Department of Education of the state, censorship went into effect in Kansas. In 1916 a censorship ordinance was passed in Maryland. This was repealed, but a new law was passed under which a board of censors has been in operation there since June 1, 1922.

Although censorship was introduced in New York State in August, 1921, and in March, 1922, in Virginia a commission was appointed to operate under a state law, the crest of the censorship wave appears to have been reached in Massachusetts in 1920, where, after long agitation by professional reform elements in the state, during which there was much political maneuvering to and fro, the people of the state in a referendum at the polls repudiated the theory and practice of censorship by an overwhelming vote. It may be mentioned that about two years ago, under the justification of exerting a necessary censorship control, a tax law was passed in Connecticut levying $10 a reel on entertainment pictures brought into the state. At the present writing it appears as if this unfair law would meet an early repeal.

A certain amount of censoring has been carried on by cities themselves and by local groups either self-constituted or appointed by local authorities to exert some control over local motion picture entertainment. These control factors, of course, are in greater or lesser degree expressive of the censorship notion. They are relatively unimportant, however, and because of limits of space, need not be further dwelt upon; also, many such groups have abandoned censorship for participation in the so-called Better Films Movement, with "Selection—not Censorship—the Solution" as its slogan. It is sufficient to state in this very brief outline of the genesis and history of censorship of motion pictures in this country that the idea has found its most important and perilous expression in the state laws which have been passed in those states mentioned. The fact that such laws have been comparatively isolated in and confined to these states, despite the perennial crop of censorship bills of one kind or another introduced in various legislatures, points to a healthy reaction on the part of public and statesmen alike against further legislative enactment for censorship and indicates that as greater enlightenment is brought about with regard to motion pictures as to their real nature, uses and meaning, censorship will be restricted to a narrower and narrower region as both un-American and unnecessary, and its supporters will dwindle away. Then will a free screen be granted with all its attendant possibilities for the larger development and use of the motion picture as an art and educational force. At the present time two pernicious bills, the Swope and Upshaw, seeking to create a federal censorship, are lying on the shelves largely because of the voicing of opposition to further censorship enactment by leaders of public thought in many parts of the country.

For Over SIMPLEX A Have Served the Faithfully

For nearly a quarter of a century, a period covering the entire commercial history of the motion picture industry, the products of the International Projector Corporation have played a conspicuous part in the development of this field. In our shops during the pioneer days of motion pictures were originated and developed the safety devices, ease of operation and light sources of motion picture projectors which permit them to be used with eminently satisfactory results in the motion picture palaces of the world's greatest cities and with dependability in the remote and isolated parts of the globe. In the science of projection we have kept pace with the art of production and today American motion picture equipment maintains an international leadership which is by no means inferior to the splendid pre-eminence of American motion pictures.

Twenty Years AND POWER'S Motion Picture Industry and Well

The manufacturers of Simplex and Power's Projectors have given this industry a delicate and complicated mechanism dependable under all conditions, made with scientific accuracy to safely handle a fragile and inflammable material. This splendid efficiency has been achieved in spite of the fact that there are less than 20,000 theatres in the country and with a demand for hardly 3,000 projectors a year we have had to meet the problems of economical production, installation and servicing of motion picture equipment for this great industry.

With an output so greatly restricted this company has nevertheless put into its products all that can be supplied by long experience, carefully trained men, scientifically selected materials, and basic mechanical excellence. Dependability, simplicity of operation and superior projection have won for Simplex and Power's Projectors a reputation as the world's standard motion picture machines, although they have been sold and serviced at a cost which by any basis of comparison has always been considered remarkably moderate.

With a full sense of our responsibility to this great industry we pledge ourselves to anticipate your requirements for tomorrow by a thorough understanding of your practical needs today.

went. Mr. X couldn't be touched legally.

Some of the producers went after him—the new "clean" ones like Zukor, Laemmle, Fox. They hired real legal talent, too. But Mr. X's political pull was too great. The gang that Smedley Butler went up against years later, insisted on protecting X, their political lieutenant, and the King of the Dupers laughed the New York lawyers and private detectives to scorn.

He really welcomed their "raids" and then went out and stocked up all over again. And he didn't lay off until natural growth of the business changed his market: the honky-tonk nickelodeon went, and the newer, better-class exhibitors wouldn't take his "dupes" at any price.

One must remember that many early exhibitors couldn't get the films of certain leading producers except through the Dupe King for the reason that they weren't "licensed" by the first Film Trust. Without this license, for which you were bled two dollars a week, you couldn't buy the Trust films—from a regular exchange, that is. Then Arthur Butler Graham came along with his smashing verdict against the Patents Company and you could show any make of pictures you pleased.

I know for a fact that much of Mr. X's business was "spite business"; customers who refused to be mulcted of the license fee by that first Trust but wanted to run Trust pictures just the same.

After Mr. X, most of the conspicuous duping was done for export abroad. Producers were able to wake up in the morning without the fear that yesterday's release was being announced from Philadelphia but that didn't go for the foreign market. You might see your big special advertised in the China territory by someone who had never bought the rights! Or in India! Mr. Hays and Major Herron have done a lot in late years to hit the thieves who steal prints for shipment abroad, but credit for the first drive on them must go to Minot Pitman, Louis Schwartz and the Film Theft Committee of the old National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, on which I had the good luck to serve for three years.

This committee came into action when the film thieves were shipping a hundred reels abroad weekly, taking them right out of the shipping rooms of the largest film companies in New York and Chicago! On a ridiculous appropriation we engaged Wilmot Comfort Hawkins as special investigator and in a year cut the thefts in half. Hawkins' policy was to send the actual "big boys" up the river—this happened to a half-dozen of them—and gets the shipping clerks in the film offices, their tools, off as lightly as possible.

He found that many of the guilty shipping clerks were underpaid, and fell easily for the bribes of the actual thieves. Mr. Hays has consolidated this work, but Hawkins initiated it, under a multitude of handicaps, and should not be forgotten when the credits are given out. Nate Manheim, then with Fred Elliot of the National Association, also advised in this first drive (round about 1918) and Nate Burkan and Bill Seabury were darn helpful on the legal side.

Your request for copy mentions "film frauds," and I'm blessed if I can tell you when or how they originated. Even a pioneer can go only so far! But I know there was a fake producer selling stock in Brooklyn, New York, in 1911. There was no Hays to chase him out, and no Vigilance Committee of the Advertising Clubs of the World, and this crook got $40,000 and then quit.

A bigger haul was the proposed Abraham Lincoln photoplay in Chicago about ten years ago, "The Birth of a Race," where the promoters got $150,000 mostly from colored people. The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, under the presidency of Glendon Allvine, brought the fake movie acting schools to Mr. Hays' attention; and he sicked Homer Platten and Jerome Beatty onto them, with immediate results.

And when a Filmy Faker comes to a bank with a questionable finance scheme these days, it is ten chances to one referred to experts like A. H. Gianuni, Archibald Emery or Platten, who know almost as much about pictures as their own banking game. In the "good old days" there were no banking men who knew much else about films than that they were run off on reels which went round, and accordingly many was the slippery financial deal that pseudo film men put over. It is related that fifteen years ago there was not a rich man's club in New York City in which one wouldn't encounter a dozen members who had acted as "angels" for impossible film schemes!

The Animated Cartoon

proper assembling of no more than three thousand, five hundred to four thousand original drawings, and which require about seven artists or "animators" one week to do.

The ideas which we hope will make you laugh are the most important thing in the production of animated cartoons. For you do not have time, in the theatre, to criticize the finer points of technique in drawing or action, but if the idea is good and even fairly well done, it is bound to get a laugh. While it is really necessary for the drawings to be more or less good, there are so many of them required that the general contour is all that is needed. It is very much like a very long freight train which passes you rapidly, and which has a great variety of cars—in glancing at it you get the illusion of the contents of the entire train, by the impression made by one car. So, you see, that getting laughs are the most important purpose of movie cartoons and the very fact that they are an unusual medium makes them interesting.

A movie cartoonist has to be more than just a little bit crazy, he must in most cases be a raving maniac. In the beginning he must have the endless source of perfectly silly ideas and then in order to work them out so as to provoke laughs in the theatre, he has to have the qualities of a butcher, a carpenter, musician, actor, soldier—and—and even though they are all girl shy—they must even know how to be a "Sheik or great lover." And that's the hardest thing that comes in the day's work. In fact, any man with a one-track mind that knows how to shovel coal, run a steam engine, tune a fiddle and jump off skyscrapers would be able to do the work.

All the drawings are made on sheets of paper 8 inches by 11 inches held in register by two round pegs which engage or go into two round punched holes in the paper. The whole process is almost exactly like the registering of loose leaves in book-keeping. In fact, I think that it must have been some broken down bookkeeper with an artistic sense that started the whole thing.

Movie cartoonists have learned that human figures require about eight different phases or positions of the legs and arms to make one complete step—and to advance their character about two inches on their sheets of paper. This will, of course, be due to the tremendous magnification, amount to several feet on the screen. Then, too, all animals, as well, have their peculiarities of movement which must be studied in order to make the cartoon action at all natural. In other words, God only knows what a vast number of things a movie cartoonist has to study and observe before he can do his day's work. In fact, everything from how a snake makes love, to cooking a Spanish omelet in an Irish restaurant.

It is not unusual in a cartoon studio to see several artists doing high dives off their desks, or playing leap frog, maybe doing a dry swim on the floor while several others stand by and watch to study the timing of the action.

It takes about twenty different backgrounds which correspond to the big sets in the regular films. All of these are drawn on sheets of bristol board, eight inches high and ten inches wide, which is the usual screen proportion. The appearance of elaborate tones and shading are produced by a process called "Wash Drawing."

Then when we have this wash background completed, we have all the paper action-drawings which go over this, traced on thin sheets of clear, transparent celluloid with a very black ink, India Drawing Ink. Then the figures are covered on the back side of the celluloid with opaque colors; usually just black, and which gives it the color value and at the same time does not allow the background to show through the figures.

There are many cases, while the drawings are being photographed, that one or more drawings can be used a great number of times, because they form one certain element of an act which is repetition. Four or more drawings sometimes work in what is called a cycle and is repeated one after the other. Of course, they are always shaken up in a varied way and usually "very fast and furiously" so that any repetition is not noticed by an audience.

It is safe to say that there is no artist who can "bet his life" that his direction of exposure is going to produce the result he expects, or that it is strictly according to "Hoyle." Every one of us—not being actors, tightrope walkers, expert swordsmen, marksmen, or submarine engineers, we go along guessing at the right way to do all of these things in drawings, making extravagant exposure sheets and trusting to luck for the result. If it comes out extraordinarily good, we shake hands all around and say: "I knew I could do it." But if it is a "flop," a dyed-in-the-wool fizzle, nary a word is said, and then if we're not too forgetful or "dumb" we can profit a little.

After the photographic stage, movie cartoon making is practically the same as a regular feature film. The film negative is developed, the prints are made, proper titles are made and inserted, then after careful editing and assembling, the production is ready for release in theatres everywhere.

In a day or two, the laboratory process is finished and our picture is assembled in proper order to be shown. When we've all assembled in the projection room, the lights are turned out—we almost close our eyes and utter a silent prayer. But after a time the picture starts—and on comes the big scene, the crooked villain choking the beautiful little Mildred. Handsome Harry the Hero is being burned to death in the dungeon cell. The two crosseyed sisters of the heroine are wildly throwing oil on the dungeon to drown out the flames. That as we say it: "Is always a good gag." In fact, our best bet is always in the very absurd burlesque of heavy drama. Even if it is so heavy you can't cut it with a knife, it's all the better. But no matter what we have to do, so long as we are able to do something that will make the audience laugh, then we feel that as Longfellow would say: "Have earned a man's repose."

Carl Laemmle Says —

TWENTY years is a long time or a short time in the moving picture business, depending upon the way you look at it. But twenty years full of such useful, independent and praiseworthy effort as the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has produced are worthy of commendation by the entire moving picture industry which it has so ably served.

One might also give the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the distinctive credit of having created, defined and developed a moving picture market. It brought buyers and sellers together in the day when it was difficult to know who were the vendors and who were the vendees; who were legitimate competitors and who were camouflaged spies. It brought a business consciousness into an industry which no one really regarded at that time as an industry.

I well remember the first advertisement that I took out in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. I had been advertising in such papers as the Billboard and the Dramatic Mirror. They were theatrical papers and at that time we thought of ourselves, when we had time to think, as a part of the theatrical industry, and we thought of these magazines as media which reached all of the people in our line of work. I felt that the Laemmle Film Service had achieved a very distinct forward step when it took out a two page advertisement in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in April of 1909 to announce my determination to become independent of the Patents Company.

Never will I forget the splendidly independent attitude of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in accepting my advertising in the face of the bitter opposition of the Patents Company, opposition that finally expressed itself in withdrawing its own advertising from the World. From that time to this I have admired the World's courageous and successful stand for independence in the industry and I wish it twenty more years of this kind of success.

CARL LAEMMLE,

Non-Theatrical Pictures Have Come to Stay and to Entertain

NON-THEATRICAL pictures, once one of the greatest opponents of an exhibitor's box-office receipts, now have, through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., been so regulated that they are far less a menace than hitherto.

The passing out of existence of several companies that endeavored to popularize the idea of supplying a regular rental film service to homes with projectors, in direct competition with theatres, lessened the strain on the exhibitor.

Then the Hays organization came forward with the plan of supplying motion picture entertainment to shut-ins who can in no sense of the word be termed potential theatre patrons.

A general weekly service is supplied shut-ins—army veterans, homes for incurables, hospitals, etc.—through the different Film Boards of Trade.

During 1926 10,997 feature pictures were distributed in this way, 6,166 comedies and 683 other subjects, a grand total of 17,846 pictures.

The list of institutions to which film is furnished gratis occupies a lot of space in the filing cabinets of the Hays organization. A search of the files discloses that during 1926 over 200,000 shut-ins were thus entertained.

A little work with an adding machine reveals that about 625 institutions throughout the country receive this service.

For example, under the heading of Arkansas are the names of the Veterans' Hospital, Little Rock; Oakville Sanitarium, Shelby County Hospital; St. Peter's Orphanage, Home For Incurables, Crippled Children's Hospital and Knight of Columbus, all of Memphis.

The following is the amount of gratis film furnished institutions by each U. S. Film Board of Trade:

In the original compilation for 1926 public schools were very much in the minority. However, a supplemental list for that year reveals that toward the year's close twenty-three high schools in Mississippi began using the service. Whether the service to public schools will be much extended is not known.

Motion pictures also figure otherwise in educational work. One of the most interesting experiments of recent years is the new Eastman school textbook idea. This service will be gradually developed until, it is predicted, every college in the country and most of the schools will be utilizing motion pictures in classroom work.

Short Subjects

send their friends in to see the very funny "Saturday Afternoon."

Pathe recently bought second rights to a set of Chaplin comedies for half a million dollars. And they are going to get it back, and more, for already "Shoulder Arms" has saved a lot of weak first run features.

Even if you pay only $2 for a comedy, at least give it a chance to earn its own wages. It can at least do that. Often it will do a great deal more.

And with all of the releasing companies coming in, there will be much competition. Paramount, M-G-M, and perhaps others will have their own comedy releases and news reels with which to supply the demand. They realize that the fight this season is going to be on the shorts rather than on the features. All companies can hold together pretty well on the features, but the shorts are going to be the battle ground. And they are going to be real pictures.

There is not a comedy studio that is not girding up its loins. Keep your eyes on the comedies and you'll see a couple of eye-fuls. There are going to be better shorts this coming season than have ever been made. And you will be a bad last in a two-house competition if you do not get in and share in the profits on these improved products.

This year's fight will be made on the shorts, and that may cut down the features to a reasonable length. If a company can sell you a five reel feature and a short, they will not be so terribly eager to pad the feature to a seven with two unnecessary reels. It may remake the entire business and put it on a saner basis.

How many thousand feet of wholly unnecessary film have you rented this past season? You know the answer. And you've killed some patrons just because you had to show them a tiresome seven reeler instead of the same thing smartened down to a five with a snappy two reeler to fill out with.

If the shorts did no more than this, they would be well worth while. When you figure you'll sell more tickets, too, the answer reads like money from home.

Twenty Years Ago

Most people in the moving picture business regarded it as a "craze," which would pass out of public favor as surely as the bicycle or roller skates. Everyone was out to "get it" while the "getting" was good.

Now look at this "ephemeral" industry!

Gentlemen:

We want you to know how very much we appreciate the wonderful service and co-operation which you extended to us in preparing engravings used in connection with the Producers Distributing Corporation insert, which appeared in Moving Picture World last week.

We also, at this time, wish to thank you for the intelligent and courteous service which Mr. Harry Kaplowitz, your contact man, gives week in and week out to this company on both our publications.

If you ever have a party who doubts your ability to render REAL engraving service, we shall be very glad to have you refer them to us.

Sincerely yours,

Gentlemen:

Allow me to compliment you on the quality of the cut you delivered to me this morning with all those inserts. It really surprised me to see the results you obtained from such poor copies. I did not think you could separate the colors so accurately and obtain the results you did.

You may rest assured I appreciate the value of such co-operation and would not hesitate in recommending the Keystone Engraving Company to anybody desirous of purchasing high class engraving.

Respectfully yours,

Gentlemen:

It has indeed been a great pleasure to do business with your concern during the entire past year. The personal services rendered by your Messrs. Kaplowitz and Addison have been a great help to us.

The quality of the work is most excellent. We find that in a great many instances, your plates need a great deal less corrections than the average. Everyone in this office is more than satisfied with your work and your service.

I am quite sure that during 1923 we will give you more business than in 1922 and I know that you will take proper care of our work. If I can at any time, recommend business to you, you may be sure that I will do it. If you should desire at any time to refer prospective customers for reference, you are at liberty to do so.

Yours very truly,

Gentlemen:

Attention: Mr. Harry Rabin
 This letter will be a surprise to you, since its only solicitation has been your good work, your splendid service, and your ability and desire to please.

Of the many organizations I deal with, you are the second, when, by dint of all-around desirability, I have felt it my duty to compliment and thank.

If this little note of approval can convey to you the feeling of satisfaction, and assurance of work well-done, then you will experience the same pleasure that I have, through dealing with you.

Yours very truly,

chant to do most of his advertising for him through some trade hook-up.

M. W. Larmour, of Graham, Texas, is well known to our readers, but Mr. Larmour writes that he is resting up at present, or rather changing pace to give his patrons a change from stunt stuff. One of his inspirations was to build his lobby structures in the lobby during the morning, to get the people interested in his ideas even before he put them on show, and his great achievement has been the winning of the support of the public schools.

Arthur Swanke, who used to do wonderful lobbies in Eldorado, Ark., is buried at present in a couple of the Saenger houses in Mississippi, he has the drama and the vaudeville house, and no chance to build the lobby displays which put the Eldorado houses on the map. Swanke often sold his displays to a manager in a nearby town before he had them completed.

Probably before this issue comes from the press we shall think of many others who should have been included. We make our apologies in advance.

Today exploitation is drifting away from the spectacular. It is going in more for national hook-ups, better newspaper work and fewer but better lobbies. Like everything else it runs in circles, and after one form of appeal has tired it is wise to make a change. Don Nichols, who used to make wonderful lobbies in Durham, N. C., is giving more time to newspaper work at present, while on the other hand Frank H. Burns, who has turned out some wonderful newspaper displays now goes in more for stunts and lobbies in Orlando, Fla.

The radio has figured largely in recent exploitation and promises to become more and more useful. Charles Morrison, of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, frequently goes on the air, for he is a former stage professional, and when he sings he generally adds something about his shows, and lately the American theatre, Denver, got a two weeks' exploitation with the aid of Universal.

Each form of aid will come to the surface and be submerged again as the wheel of time turns on its axis. The main point is to do something, and do that something well. A surprisingly large number of managers are doing this, but an even greater number are losing money because they are salving their consciences with the alibi that it is not dignified. That's generally either the excuse for laziness or incompetency. You can't sell tickets on dignity alone.

In fifteen years a greater progress has been made in the sale of cinematic amusement than in all the centuries of the theatre. The theatre never had such competition to encounter, and the theatre sold standard attractions; the Broadway successes of the year before and the stars of many years standing. In this business stars are made overnight and fade as quickly. Plays come and go in such rapid succession that even the fans cannot keep track of them all. It takes sheer selling ability, showmanship of the highest order, and in a short fifteen years we have developed the most highly trained publicity experts the amusement business has ever known. It's a record to be proud of. Be proud of the business and yourself.

I would not be without it and you can count on me to continue to be a subscriber to your valuable magazine as long as I stay in the business.

Here's congratulations to you and hope you will have many anniversaries.—Julius Levy, proprietor and manager, New Lyric Theatre, Brady, Texas.

A Valuable File

Because of the fact that we have been very well pleased with the World we have continued to subscribe for it since 1908 and at the present time have an almost complete file, just a few issues missing, since that time. It is quite a lot of fun to look back through the old pink covered issues to see what was going on at that time. It would take quite a chunk of money to get us to part with this file.

Hoping that you have many years of continued success, with best wishes, we are, very truly yours, Hardwick Brothers, Lyceum Theatre, Clovis, New Mexico.

A Seventeen-Year File

I wish to congratulate the Moving Picture World on the coming Twentieth Anniversary number.

As your circulation manager states, I have been a subscriber since October, 1912, and previous to that date I purchased copies from news stands so that I have read this valuable magazine about 17 years and I have all of my files intact.

With the growth of the moving picture from the old store show to the present palaces, Moving Picture World has kept abreast of the industry and in my 20 continuous years in the show business I fully appreciate the information and help obtained from the several departments of this valued trade magazine.—H. C. Bartlett, Citizens Theatre, Oxford, N. Y.

A Letter from Home

During the past 14 years your publication has been a valuable help to us, in fact, we would feel handicapped without it.

Every week we look forward to the World. It's just like a letter from home.

Wish you continued success.—Hersker-Sidari Theatres, Hazelton, Pennsylvania.

Necessary Equipment

We wish to extend to you our congratulations upon the completion of your Twentieth Anniversary of the publication of your worthy magazine.

We have been subscribers continuously for the past fifteen years and feel that your paper has become a necessary part of our equipment. It has kept abreast of an industry whose wonderful growth and development has no equal. We wish you many more prosperous years.—R. M. Beede and F. Stamm, Proprietors, Casino Theatres, Antioch, Calif.

The Small Town Need

It is with pleasure that I submit this letter for publication in your 20th Anniversary number.

Having been a subscriber for 15 years, I think I can safely say that your paper has done more for the small town exhibitor than any other medium, to keep him in touch with the different branches of the industry, and make him realize that the business is growing very fast. And in order to protect the public interest as well as his own, he should continue to subscribe for your paper on account of the information it contains.—R. A. Flora, Manager, Powers Theatre, Caribou, Me.

Thirteen Dependable Years

When I opened up the Lyric Theatre, I knew nothing about the business and had to depend on the Moving Picture World for my information.

After taking it for 13 years I find I need it just as much now as I did then. I don't believe there is any paper any better for the exhibitor and could not get along without it.

The business has advanced so rapidly that one has to be on the alert to be a success.—Ellen B. Larsen, Lyric Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

For Twenty Years

To paraphrase an old saying, "The Proof of the Pudding is the Eating," we would say "The Proof of the Magazine is the Continued Subscription," which in our case starting this week, will be the 20th.

This nullifies all such statements as "The Best Ever," "Couldn't Get Along Without It," etc., etc.

Suffice to say, we hope to look forward for a good many years to getting it each week, the same as we have for the past 19 years.

Like's Van Best

Just ran into your letter informing us we have been subscribers since 1912, but find magazines dated March 4, 1911, so at least we have been with you 16 years this coming March.

We like the World and like the straight from the shoulder about the best of any part of it and if one issue gets delayed, or for any reason, we look it up as it is missed.—Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre, Neola, Iowa.

It has been my pleasure to be a subscriber of your worthy publication Moving Picture World for the past 17 years. During this length of time I have found the news and other information that it contains very helpful and useful at all times.

It certainly gives me great pleasure to recommend your publication to any of my brother exhibitors who are not at this time subscribers.

With best wishes for your continued success.—A. Martini, Martini Theatre, Galveston, Texas.

Likes Tom Waller

I am only too glad to have the opportunity of expressing my appreciation of your valuable trade journal, which I consider, in the many years I have been a reader of, to be the best one in circulation.

I travelled to the Coast and back, last Summer, with your special Hollywood representative, Mr. Tom Walker, on the M. P. T. O. special train to the convention in Los Angeles, so am deriving great pleasure every week in reading his articles written from Hollywood.—Helen Ulman, Ulman's Opera House, Salisbury, Md. (Subscriber since January 1, 1910—17 years.)

For Seventeen Years

I take great pleasure in congratulating you on your Twentieth Anniversary. I have been a constant subscriber of your magazine for the past 17 years and with the pleasant relations that have always existed in the past, I hope I will be able to continue for 17 more.—J. E. Smith, Manager, Tonopah-Goldfield Amusement Co., Tonopah, Nevada.

An Aid in Developing

I wish to extend the Moving Picture World my most sincere congratulations on your Twentieth Anniversary. From the time I entered the motion picture theatre business 15 years ago in a store room equipped with 200 folding chairs, a white sheet and a fifty dollar machine, I have been a subscriber and ardent admirer of the Moving Picture World. It has given me a great deal of valuable information and inspiration and I attribute a liberal part of my success in the business to your excellent magazine. I feel it has helped me to develop my small start in the business into the leading Fort Scott theatre.—D. Filizola, Manager and Owner, Empress Theatre, Fort Scott, Kansas.

work on a single script, once the main idea is selected, and many of these lead ideas come from the newspapers, for Al Christie believes that the newspapers are the true mirrors of public interest and reflect the mood of the moment. Of course he avoids the tabloids, being mindful of censorship, but he finds better material in the news items than he or his staff can devise. His own ideas, he feels, might not always appeal to others, but the newspaper is in general a safe guide.

With the central idea gained, the various situations are devised, and eventually assembled into a more or less practical script form, though the script on a comedy lot is about the most elastic thing imaginable. The main idea is to get the laughs, and if a better laugh suggests itself during the process of filming, it goes in without benefit of typewriter.

Often the suggestions of the players are woven into the idea or some untoward happening may suggest a new lead and wrest triumph from apparent defeat.

The bulk of the titling is done by Al Martin, a former newspaper man, who is now in his second year with Christie. He reads the script when it has been prepared and keeps in close touch with the progress of the work, but the titles are not prepared in advance. Often some chance remark on the set provides the suggestion for a good laugh.

When the film is finally assembled, it is run for the director, cutter and Martin and "spotted for titles" which means that note is made where titles are either necessary or would be desirable. In comedy the explanatory leaders are supplemented by titles if the title will gain a better laugh than an equivalent footage of action.

One or more sets of titles are written and the most desirable of these are cut in at the proper place, when the film goes to a preview before an unwitting audience, the staff going along to take note of the laughs or lack of them. Titles are changed, where necessary, action may be shifted or omitted, another preview and perhaps two or three more, and the film finally is decided to be about as good as it can be made.

This seriously cuts into the sleeping time of the staff, but it is one of the most important parts of the work.

When the final choice is made, the temporary titles are discarded for the art titles that will appear in the released film. These are lettered in white on black cards and turned over to Norman McLeod for the "daffydills" which are characteristic of Christie comedies.

A student at Washington University and then at McGill, McLeod won a Rhodes scholarship to Oxford and had been at that University about a year when the war broke out. He enlisted in the British Flying Service, to exchange to the American Air Service when we entered the war. He won honors as an ace in the air and the lightweight boxing championship of the A. E. F. on the ground.

A crash 6,000 feet in the air put him into the hospital for a year, and with the war over McLeod got a job on the Christie lot as Assistant Director, later being promoted to gag man, and finally passed to the title department. He stands at the head of his profession, for he is the only man to put daffydills on film titles.

Alice lived in advance of her day, for in spite of the fertile imagination of Lewis Carroll she never saw a wonderland like the Christie lot. The Mad Hatter and the March Hare were tame and rational beings beside the comedians she meets at every turn as she wends her way through the alternate brilliance of the lighted stage and the dark recesses in between. Back of the looking glass she never saw men stand patiently in the rain of water from a fire hose, she never saw the people in her dreamland clutch feverishly at the bosom of their burning trousers, she never saw Tweedledum whang Tweedledee over the head with a six inch maul or saw him smile when the director ordered another trial "and hit him harder this time."

Alongside the Christie lot Wonderland would seem as tame as Philadelphia on a Sunday afternoon.

A pioneer in production, Al Christie is also a pioneer in methods. He had the vision to see past the days of the slapstick and the custard pie and sense an eventual demand for the comedy with more story and common sense. In such products as "Charley's Aunt" and similar full length comedies, story is, of course, essential to carry the action for the full five reels or more, but even in his two reel product he depends more upon the cleverness of the situation than the mechanical effect, though he does not disdain the aid of the latter. If a breakaway will help a laugh along, he uses one, but he does not feel that if he simply smashes a table over someone's head he does not need more. He is perfectly willing to cause his comedian to make an exit through a window instead of the more conventional door, but he wants a reason for the window; and it must be a reasonably plausible excuse. He wants laughs; as many as he can win, but he wants laughs that come from the head at least in sufficient number to temper sheer clowning.

In his earliest day his comedies were voted funny, but a bit slow in comparison with others. Today he leads the fashion, and it is the comedy idea rather than the slapstick, the flypaper and the mass of dough at which all producers used to aim.

He started with a well defined idea. He knew what he wanted, and he wanted that because he believed others would want it. He wanted young people. He wanted pretty girls and good looking young chaps. He wanted plenty of clean humor, light and laughter. He avoided the tramp style of comedy and he avoided coarseness.

He built up his company along those lines. He worked hard to create a company spirit. He wanted them to be happy and contented under his direction, because he knows that only with these conditions prevailing could he obtain the most spontaneous humor. He built up his staff of writers to carry out his ideals, to write his way. They were urged to forget the joke books and the comic papers, to forget limburger cheese and stale eggs.

It was not altogether easy to get his idea over to the writers who were hardened in the traditions of the past, so he leavened the mass with new men; men without preconceived notions, and today he has carried over his ideas to the point where the Christie type is a standard.

"So, in the main, they have simply stopped going after the big-city first runs. They have eliminated a possible 20 per cent of their business and concentrated on the obtainable 80 per cent. In this procedure you have the explanation for the recovery of the States-Rights group.

"There was no picture-reason for their inability to get into the first-runs. The Independent pictures averaged just as good as the pictures produced by national organizations; oft-times they were better. But financial and other alliances kept them out.

"It took them a long time to come to it, but by cancelling the effort on leading first-run possibilities, the State-Righters have come back on their feet. Their ranks are cleaner than they have been in many years; they have systematized their business; they produce exactly what they promise and advertise they will. The distributor knows where he is at with the producer; the exhibitor knows where he is at with the distributor.

"I think the State-Right plan is the real hope of the industry. Too much nationalization means getting in a rut and the tremendous institutions which have been created by nationalization are producing grooves, which in time wear into ruts. You can see how the players are rebelling; more and more of them are going on a free-lance basis.

"The happiest note of all is that the petty jealousy is disappearing. All of a sudden the national organizations as well as the exhibitors are recognizing that a States-Rights market is an aid to the industry and what keeps an industry healthy keeps them healthy, too. One no longer hears of efforts to kill off this and that Independent. People are sticking more and more to their own knitting; improving themselves and not worrying so much about the other fellow.

"We note the change particularly in the patronage of the big exhibiting concerns. They are buying our pictures and moreover they make a handsome profit on them. I have no doubt that the big-city first runs will, sooner or later, follow the lead of these big exhibitor circuits and likewise patronize the States-Rights distributor. We saved ourselves by eliminating the effort and expense we used to invest in them; I would not be at all surprised to see their business come to us unsolicited.

"The Independent or States-Righter has certainly had his ups and downs. It is only just to say in this particular interview that he has always had the sane and able support of Mr. Chalmers and the WORLD. That support is now being justified by events, for just as sure as the industry will continue to develop, so will the firm which produces and the firm which distributes pictures on the State-Right basis. I think all Independents—I suppose that term is ineradicable by now—owe thanks to the WORLD and its publishers and I want to take the opportunity in this interview to offer them on behalf of the institutions I represent. We all hope they will have many more anniversaries to celebrate."

The publishers of the Moving Picture World show good business judgment in mailing each issue flat—in an envelope. The book does not arrive all curled up in a tight wrapper. It reaches you in a flat, readable condition. Thus the Moving Picture World receives a more intensive reading. The advertiser benefits because his message is seen.

We are proud of the part we play in the success of the Moving Picture World. Our contribution is a modest one, but none the less important. It lies in manufacturing the special kraft envelope in which the magazine is mailed.

Our service and facilities are available to publishers and manufacturers with a mailing or packing problem to solve.

Today we are engaging the best available producers, surrounding them with an organization of scene painters, costume designers, costumers, lyric writers, ballet masters, composers and a tremendous organization of assistants to produce these productions. No expense is spared in perfecting these productions. The talent, such as singers, dancers, comedians, novelty features, are the best that can be procured, in fact, the entire world is being scoured by our representatives for suitable talent.

These productions vary in cost as to their size and elaborateness, ranging anywhere from $20,000 to $50,000. The typical presentations now in vogue vary in type from musical comedy to operatic and symphonic renditions—Victor Herbert Melodies, Pompadour's Fan, Roaming Gypsies, Pearl of Damascus; also our very large revues which run from sixty to seventy-five minutes, such as "Opera vs. Jazz," "Take-a-Chance Week," etc.

These productions have caused the motion picture public to appreciate real artistic rendition, changing the public's life so that today the old-time show would be distasteful. Today the public hears compositions of Beethoven, Mozart, Chopin; selections from opera by Wagner, Verdi, Gounod; the compositions of symphonic composers, Liszt, Chopin, Schubert; this is the work that Publix is doing and developing—the aesthetic progress of cultural development. The public today appreciates all of these. We are developing lovers of grand opera, of symphonies, of the ballet—surely an uplift movement that makes life the more enjoyable.

tion to the depreciation of the franc, it will be recognized that the French exhibitors are paying as much as the freight now will bear.

The fact that there is tremendous competition between leading American distributors for French business, also doubtless has something to do with the present low film rentals.

The market in Belgium, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, and Italy, is generally under the supervision of the French organization and the systems in vogue in these countries are practically the same as in France.

In the Scandinavian countries pictures are generally booked or rented on a percentage basis. This is the rule followed in the main by theatres and distributors in Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

If the pictures presented in Stockholm, where the trade showings are usually held, are favorably commented on by the local critics the gross on a given picture is apt to be fairly substantial. The theatres trust in the critics judgment and book and pay for their pictures accordingly.

The smaller countries of Europe are greatly influenced by the successful or unsuccessful showing of a picture in the larger centers of one or another of the above named countries. Otherwise their systems of sales and distribution differ very little from that of their bigger neighbors.

country. First came "Passion" based on the French story of DuBarry and then "Deception", the story of the English king Henry VIII, then the Egyptian subject "The Loves of Pharaoh," and the story of Peter the Great of Russia. It will be noted that though made in Germany with German casts none of these were German subjects.

The Germans by this time had unquestionably taken the lead among foreign producers, and following the successful reception of these pictures especially in the larger cities there followed a veritable deluge of German films many of which were excellent although a lot of these pictures could not compare with the better class of domestic product.

Coming up to a very recent period we find that only a few short weeks ago Broadway offered an excellent example of the fact that meritorious productions of foreign manufacture stand excellent chances for at the same time Russia, France and Germany were represented by big special productions and the majority of them were enjoying extended runs in competition with the long run specials of domestic origin.

European countries, notably Germany, are admittedly producing excellent pictures. In fact, in certain respects they have taken the lead, for example, in the subtle, the sophisticated, the allegorical, the symbolic, the tragic, the purely artistic, or in a word, what is commonly known as high-brow pictures, films that appeal to the intelligentsia rather than to the general run of people. So much so that many have the impression that this is the only kind of films they make. Very few of the lighter type of films have been brought over, although "The Waltz Dream" is an excellent example of a genuinely entertaining film of this type. The Germans too have taught us several new camera tricks introduced unique lighting effects and novel ways to effectively register certain situations and emotional reactions.

As in the past, American producers have been quick to take advantage of what the foreigner has to teach us and not only have we made use of his ideas and in many instances improved on them, but we have even brought over to this country some of the most notable European directors and stars such as Lubisch, Buchowetzki, Pola Negri, Emil Jannings and a number of others.

In view of the fact that we are admittedly so much in debt to the foreign film, it would seem as a natural corollary that European-made pictures would enjoy as much if not greater popularity than the domestic product. It is a well-known fact, however, that such is not the case.

Probably the main reason lies in the basic difference in racial psychology. The marked preponderance of the very points enumerated above in which they excel works against their wide popularity here. Man for man we bow to no other people in the matter of intelligence, and while there are many points of excellence in the foreign films that we are quick to discern and appreciate, few foreign pictures measure up to our mass ideas of entertainment. We are a light-hearted lot as a rule, and we want primarily to be amused when we go to the movies. Artistry appeals to us but we don't want artistry alone, a little symbolism goes a long way, the sordid, seamy side of life does not entertain the average man nor does the allegorical. We can enjoy a certain amount of subtlety and sophistication but too much of this is apt to bore us. We are optimistic and much prefer to gaze upon the brighter side of life. We are an energetic people and we want dash, vigor, vim, go, vitality, pep, action and we want our symbolism, our drama, our subtlety in such settings and in adopting the ideas of the foreign producers, our directors see that we get this.

The enormous popularity of our own players is another angle that adversely affects the popular reception of the foreign film, for the average person in the country has grown to know and like certain actors and actresses and he looks for them on the screen. He feels that he knows them and has a personal interest in them, while in looking at a foreign film he sees just a bunch of actors that he probably never heard of, does not care for, is not interested in and probably does not expect to see again, and what is especially important in this connection they are as a rule persons of entirely different and unfamiliar types that do not appeal to him. Of course there are exceptions, notably in the case of Emil Jannings, but no matter how superior, their work may be, the foreign actor as a rule does not succeed in getting over his personality or his magnetism with the American public in general.

To put it bluntly, the foreign film does not appeal to the average American because he does not like the type of story and he has no interest in the players, and when these foundation stones are missing or weak the entire entertainment structure falls no matter how superb the decorations of the building may be.

its original starting position—and no further. The number of revolutions depend upon the number necessary to establish the beat, but they must be visually completed. The whole cycle, then, must be just as complete as each beat of the rhythm and the rhythm itself is established by a repetition of the cycles.

Necessarily, all motion is not rhythmic. But an entire production may be made subconsciously rhythmic with changes in meter to shade and enhance the dramatic values of the action.

As a matter of fact the first drama, that of the Greeks, was rhythmic. This condition prevailed as long as rhythm could intensify the perception of the dramatic emotions portrayed. The introduction of settings, lighting and mechanical effects and a modern school of acting made rhythm with its necessary excess verbiage too cumbersome. Motion pictures required still less of words. The eye could comprehend situations and action much faster than words could tell them. But rhythm in motion pictures does not concern words. It is subconscious, but for that reason tremendously effective.

The choice of interpretative meters is wide and much more flexible than Griffith's original two-four or Valse tempo, and, through a proper acceleration of repeated rhythmic motion cycles, unheard of action speed may be obtained. All great epic pictures are rhythmic to a degree. In the greatest of them all—at least in popular appeal as evidenced by the box office—"The Big Parade," the recurrent epic theme is not only rhythmic but the meter is established and emphasized in the titles, and from thence carried over into the scenes themselves. These passages beginning with the regular beat of "Men, Men, Men—" and "Guns, Guns, Guns—" are unforgettable.

I don't know whether King Vidor developed these sequences from a preconceived rhythmic rule or whether it was the same sense of rhythmic direction that guides great poets and musicians. At any rate there are certain definite uses and possibilities for rhythm and he has applied them with a masterly hand.

It is reasonable to suppose that Rhythmodynamics or the application of rhythm in one form or another will play an important part in the future development of motion pictures.

It will play just as important a part in the motion picture of the future as photography, lighting effects and settings do now. That is, rhythm will not actually make the great pictures of tomorrow. But it will certainly enhance the appreciation of a great picture if it is kept to its true perspective in relation to great story and great director.

Superintendent, Transportation Department and timekeepers in addition to the property room.

The property room is in charge of Albert C. ("Whitey") Wilson, who came to Warners three and a half years ago to take charge of the then very small collection. Today the stock in his care is valued at $400,000 and includes 15,000 numbered pieces of property, 3,200 drapes and about 1,400 pieces of electrical fixtures. One single purchase of antique and art objects amounted to $60,000, and "Whitey" made a special trip to New York to pick precisely what he wanted from recent importations. This stock includes the properties obtained from the Vitagraph purchase. After furnishings and drapes have been used a few times, they are sold to make room for fresh purchases that the dressings of the sets may not become trade marks.

Much of the material is produced in the various mechanical departments, such as the furniture, cabinet, paint, machine, stone and electrical shops and little has to be purchased or rented. A recent achievement was the rounding up of prehistoric automobiles for "The First Automobile." Hollywood could produce but four of the earliest types of cars. Doc Salmon directed a combing of Southern California and made the picture with eleven "museum pieces" ranging from 26 to 28 years of age. The chief rental item, however, is animals, for it is the Warner policy to keep no animals on the lot.

John L. Warner is in personal charge of production, and presides over a production cabinet composed of Darryl Zanuck, associate executive; William Koenig, studio manager; Louis Geib, technical director; "Doc" Salmon, general superintendent; Esdras Hartley, chief architect; Harold McCord, Editor, and Whitey Wilson, master of properties.

Each spring Mr. Warner comes East to consult with his brothers, Harry M., Albert and Sam Warner, regarding the campaign for the season. For the season now waning it was planned to make a series of 26 features and six specials at a cost of $14,000,000.

On his return to Hollywood consultations were initiated and the production schedule mapped out, which has been followed with little difficulty. The scripts were given to the members of the studio staff best qualified to handle that type of story, and special writers were hired where it was felt that they could do the work better.

The policy is to make the better-than-program picture, and it is Mr. Warner's belief that the special of today will be the program standard of the coming years.

The Warner stars include many real stars. Syd Chaplin, who has at last worked himself out of the eclipse of his more famous brother's name, has done splendid work since he came under the Warner Brothers, and the beautiful and talented Dolores Costello owes to them a majority of her best roles. Monte Blue is a long-time favorite, and Irene Rich needs no special comment. Louise Fazenda supplies much of the comedy and Patsy Ruth Miller excels in modern roles. May McAvoy has lately been added to the stock, and Jason Robards, a comparative newcomer, is rapidly gaining fame. Myrna Loy is another new name, but William Demarest brings with him his dramatic and vaudeville reputation. Helen Costello and Leila Hyams are two baby stars who are rapidly outgrowing their swaddling clothes.

The scripts are developed by the scenarists under Darryl Zanuck, and includes Graham Baker, Harvey Gates, Anthony Coldeway, Johnnie Grey, Tom Gibson and Bryan Foy.

As soon as the scenarists have begun their tasks, Frank Kingsley and his assistant, George Leonard Taylor begin to cast the production. Both are experts in their line, and while their work has been simplified by the Central Casting Bureau, theirs is no sinecure.

Among the directors the chief are James Flood, Walter Morosco, Charles Reisner, Monte Bell, Howard Bretherton, who graduated from the film cutting ranks; Byron Haskins and Ray Enright, also a former cutter.

Included in the assistant directors are Henry Blanke, Ross Lederman, Sandy Roth, Gordon Hollingshead, Ted Stevens, Eddie Sowders, William Cannon and George Webster.

Both directors and assistants are supplemented by special engagements, but these are the standing army.

Among the cameramen on the lot are Ed du Parr, who did the unusually good photography for "The Better 'Ole." Following that production he was brought to New York for special instruction in Vitaphone technic, and will have charge of the camera work done on Vitaphone for the western studio. Others are Dave Abel, Nelson Laraby, Akeley and stunt camera man, who puts the thrills on record; Virgil Miller, Hal Mohr, and Al Nicklun, the latter in charge of equipment and the titling cameras. All of them are men of long experience and highly developed technical knowledge.

Probably no department is more important than the cutting room, and it is from here that many of the best directors have emerged. The experience the men get from cutting and trimming the rushes and assembling them for final selection gives them a sense of scene and story values that is even better training than the more active service of the assistant directors.

Following the usual system, the positive goes to the cutter, who trims and assembles, day by day, following the story sequence, until the complete product is assembled. By the time the shooting is done there will be from 12 to 30 reels; much of it duplicate, but still enough original matter to require expert handling to get it into the final five to seven or eight reels.

The director sits in with suggestions, and is consulted on changes in the continuity or rearrangement of scenes which the editor has reason to believe will tense up the action or give better contrast. When the final cutting and titling has been done, the picture is taken to some theatre to give the editor an opportunity to sense the audience reaction and sometimes there may be one or two more; each followed by changes in the cutting and titling, before the completed picture is shipped to New York and the editor turns his attention to the next job.

Harold McCord is head of the editing department and personally has cut "Don Juan," "When a Man Loves," "Millionaires," "Finger Prints" and "A Million Bid."

Clarence Kolster is chief aide, and cuts from six to eight pictures a year. Charles Henckel is another fast worker and Ray Enright has cut most of the Syd Chaplin comedies, and did so well that he has been promoted to a directorship. Howard Bretherton is another to drop the shears and cement brush for the megaphone.

Title writing is another of the fine arts too little appreciated, and the ideal aimed at in the Warner title department is to make the titles fitting companions to the pictured action and yet so inconspicuous that the spectator carries with him no vital memory of the titles. The Warner policy is to regard the title as a general detriment to the action, and to make interruption only where it is necessary to explain the action or account for a lapse of time.

There are instances, however, where the use of a subtitle not only explains an action, but has a dramatic value peculiarly its own. One example of this is to be found in "Clash of the Wolves" in which Rin-Tin-Tin is supposed to run a cactus thorn into his paw. To picture this action, particularly in a close-up, as would have been necessary, would have aroused a resentful sympathy for the animal that would have reacted against the production. A subtitle with a drawn design of the foot coming down forcefully on the thorn was used instead. The drawing did not offend. It created the proper understanding, and no one wrote letters to the newspapers calling upon the S. P. C. A. to do its stuff.

From another angle, in "Three Weeks in Paris," it was pointed out, when the film was ready for release, that scenes were shown in the interior of the Opera House, but the exterior of the building was not shown.

Instead of lengthening the film with a library shot of the Paris Grand Opera, the titles for this sequence were redrawn with a picture of the building. It worked even better than the cut-in, and held the picture down to length.

The art work in the titles is done on black card with various shades of grey pastel, and the title cards are painted in white on black cards by a special process.

Last year all main titles were hand lettered in a uniform script. This season a change has been made to an individual lettering for each title, suggested wherever possible, by the title itself, as in "Across the Pacific" in which the lettering ingeniously suggests a wave effect.

Where possible the titles are taken from the original script, but it is more often found that these can be improved upon when viewed in connection with the actual action and they either are changed or completely replaced.

The title writer is a specialist in his line and often is able to suggest material improvements, and always he thinks of titles in terms of audience comprehension where the original script writer is more apt to consider only the literary values.

Robert Hopkins is the title writer on the Warner lot and personally had titled a majority of the product. However such experts as Rupert Hughes, Don Ryan and Walter Anthony have been called in to assist when the pressure exceeded the one-man capacity.

Fifteen years ago the editor, who in those days was also the advertising man and publicity writer, felt that the gods indeed had been kind if he could coax a half dozen stills from the cameramen on a one-reel release. And if one of those six could be worked into a really good cut, his cup of bliss overflowed. In those days the cinematographer was provided with a still camera; generally a 5 by 7, and when he remembered to take it out of its carrying case, he would shoot the dearest part of the scene. Contrast this with the set of 600 8 by 10 stills made during the filming of "Don Juan," and the equal number for "The Better 'Ole." Even on the less elaborate productions the number never runs below 100 and is often more. In addition each set is photographed before it is used and again before it is torn down, for the convenience of the technical department should any emergency require its rebuild.

Each Warner unit has its own still camera—man who is trained to a sense of what is and is not good material for reproduction. In addition he makes the "portrait stills" of the players as they appear in that particular production, and aids in the making of "production stills," which are stills made during the production rather than of it. Many of these portray the difficulties or the humorous incidents during the filming of a picture, may show special devices or merely show the routine of production. There is a large demand for these from fan magazines, the daily and weekly papers and the trade publications. A second class of production stills are those showing the home life of the stars. On the Warner lot they even photograph the properties.

Things certainly do sprout in California—when they are properly irrigated. Back in 1918 the Warner lot boasted one building, employed an average of 75 persons and paid them approximately $1,200 a week. Today the entire thirteen acres are neatly and compactly studded with buildings and the cashier pays out around $150,000 a week to some 700 employees. Evidently the salaries have grown, along with other things, in that well-advertised climate.

The Director's "Bag Of Tricks"

TEN years ago we were turning out pretty fair pictures for those times and rhythm was still faintly guessed at, "stylism" simply wasn't and "pattern" was something you used to cut out dresses with. In the last few years art with a great big A has come in with a vengeance, mostly bearing the usual brand "Made in Germany."

Today the newspaper critics fairly slobber about these and other things. Perhaps they know what they are talking about: sometimes it does not seem as though they do, and the less they understand the more they have to say about it.

Really there are such things; all efforts to bring into being an individual film technique that shall not be a patchwork of the terms of the drama, the atelier and the photographic studio. It is an ambitious, but not always successful effort to give to the cinema an individuality.

In reality it is merely a striving to put into concrete form things that were half-guessed, half-sensed in the earlier days. Long ago film cutters understood the value of so joining scenes that the action had fluency of movement, but they did not call it rhythm. They just called it a good job. Ten years ago they did talk about tempo, but in those days tempo was merely acting neither too fast nor too slowly for the best photographic recording. "Stylization" was merely "light effects," and still retained its sanity.

Ten or twelve years ago the director's little bag of tricks was small indeed. He knew the value of close-ups as centering interest on a limited area of a scene. He no longer "burned out" a figure with the strong glare of a spotlight. Now and then some trick of scene painting would give an unusual result.

Gradually there arose the consciousness that the pictures gave results that its related arts could not provide. Instead of being merely the magnification of some action, the close-up became symbolical. A pistol on the floor, the smoke still curling from its barrel, was more effective; more artistic than the full-screen suicide; a man's feet plashing along a muddy road was more definite than the full-figure scene of the road. Pictures no longer were told in straight photography. They spoke a language purely their own.

Today we stand only at the threshold of this new language, and most users are talking "baby talk." They have something, but they do not know what it is or how to use it. The result is akin to the ludicrous mispronunciations of childhood, but they are learning the language. In time stylization will come to take its proper place, neither overdone nor underdone. Just now atrocious crimes are being committed in the name of stylization, but it is one of the prices we must pay for eventual progress.

The advent of "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" brought stylization into the scenery. The picture was a failure on its first showings. It came out of Germany far too soon after the war. Also it carried the idea to an excess that the public was unprepared for. More recent productions, working along less pronounced lines, have been better received, and "Caligari," itself, has been taken from the vaults to win a belated applause from some hand picked audience. Perhaps some day it will be exhibited beside "The Great Train Robbery" as another original source.

Rhythm and cadence came in with the progress of the film cutter from the hired man stage to his present proper position as one of the real production elements.

Even before they passed the purely mechanical stage some of the cutters sensed the basic idea of rhythm. They gave it no name, but they found that they could cut to accentuate the mood of the sequence, and that is one of the things that raised them from mechanical workers. In this they were aided by some few directors who sought to make the picture action roughly conform to cadence. Today the value of the proper cutting is recognized and the rhythmic movement of the plot action is fully understood.

Today we are in one of the most important periods of change. The great influx of European pictures, in which new ideas and fresh principles are employed, has given impetus to change in Hollywood. Not all directors know what they are doing or why they are doing it, but they are trying, and eventually from this chaos of trick stuff there will be evolved a sane and intelligent use of photographic aids peculiar to the camera which will enhance effects without destroying illusions.

That's the trouble with the new stuff today. It's pulling the play production out of shape. It's making a museum freak of the hitherto respectable pictures. A picture overladen with this new material no more represents a real feature than the fat woman or living skeleton of the dime museum represents the average human being—and it is average human beings the public prefers as a steady diet. It's what the public will get in the long run.

Just now stylization is spoiling some pictures. Eventually it will make all pictures better. Meanwhile we must suffer, with such patience as we can command, the overuse of the new toy.

a man caught the idea, which finally began to spread rapidly, until today several states have incorporated it into their laws, many, many unions have adopted it into their constitution and by-laws and use it on their stationery, while thousands of men scattered all over the world, but mostly in the United States and Canada, consider the term "machine operator" as in the nature of an affront. Also the society of Motion Picture Engineers long ago officially adopted this term into its nomenclature.

And here is the big thing in it all: I have never yet met a man who exhibited pride in the fact that he was a "machine operator" in the sense that a designer of buildings is proud of being an Architect, or a lawyer is proud of being an Attorney, but I have received hundreds upon hundreds of letters from men who have evidenced therein the fact that they have real pride in being a "Projectionist."

Man after man after man has written saying, "I have adopted the name, or title Projectionist and (here is the real answer to it all) I INTEND TO LIVE UP TO IT."

In closing I believe it is only right and just that the work of the Projection Department of this paper be considered, because its work is intimately connected with advancement in both projection and projection equipment.

The department was started in the spring of 1910, and has been published every week since that time. Its work has been diversified, though its primary purpose was to assist the then "Operator" in the problems of his every day work. Very soon, however, it broadened its field and became an educator in matters projectional, and a sort of clearing house for projection knowledge between men engaged in projection pretty much all over the civilized world. It has, even as long ago as fifteen years, received requests for help from exhibitors and projectionists in China.

The Projection Department has done one work, and an extremely important one too, for which it has never received the slightest credit or recognition. In fact, I think very few except its editor realizes the extent of what it has done in acting as a sort of go-between for designers and manufacturers and exhibitors and projectionists.

The editor would note from time to time, in his letters from projectionists or exhibitors, a complaint or mention of some fault or some weakness in equipment. When sufficient mention had been made of the particular thing to convince the editor that it really was a weakness or fault, the matter would be taken up with the manufacturer and the suggestion made that it receive attention. In some cases a remedy was suggested which was adopted about as made.

Were it possible to have the records of the past I am certain you would all be astonished at the improvements which have been made in projection equipment at the suggestion of the Projection Department of MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

For example: In almost every projection room today you will see metal pipes leading from the top of lamp-houses to the open air or to the vent flue. The opening in the lamp-house top to which the pipe is attached was added to both the Simplex and the Powers projector at the personal solicitation of the department editor after receiving many complaints that the gases from burning carbon were unhealthy.

The department claimed and claims no particular credit for doing those things. It considered them as a part and parcel of the service it had the privilege of rendering.

The writer desires to take this opportunity to express his sincere appreciation of the splendid support he has received from the owners of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in the long fight for better projection standards. No unreasonable restrictions have ever been imposed upon him and the theatre owners of this country owe much to this publication for its unselfish efforts to bring about better conditions in the "booth." I say "unselfish," because real sacrifices have often been made by the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in giving space to this department, often all out of proportion to the amount of equipment advertising secured and by frequently excluding advertising copy which sought to promote the use of inferior equipment. In seeking to arouse the pride of the projectionist, I all too often have awakened bitter animosity, because especially in the early days, the men could not fully realize that they were being criticized for their own good. In time many learned to see things in the true light, and we are proud of the fact that thousands of men have become competent projectionists and better employees through reading the Projection Department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. A "projectionist," if a man lives up to the real meaning of the word, is one who secures better screen results at less cost to his employer, thus contributing much to the pleasure of the audiences and increasing the prosperity of the motion picture industry.

In closing, may I ask the reader to pause for a moment and let his thought dwell in loving memory of two pioneers of projection who have gone forward into the mists of the Everlasting Shore. Nicholas Power and Frank Cannock both did their part, and did it well. The impress of their work is still fresh upon the industry, and will remain in evidence long, long after you and I, my friends, have followed them into the Hereafter.

for aged, and orphanages now have motion pictures regularly; Be Kind to Animals Week found the industry, through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, helping to spread the doctrine of humane-ness; Child Health Week promoters met with similar responses for assistance.

In other words, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America has lent its assistance to every laudable purpose by which films might be utilized for the betterment and advancement of the world. Its purposes have been set into practice.

Through cooperative endeavors members of the association have governed the selection of suitable screen material, brought in responsible and invaluable assistance in producing pictures, and identified itself with countless enterprises all of which bring the motion picture closer into the consciousness of the people as the favorite form of entertainment and a real, vital need for their happiness.

Of the future, Mr. Hays says: "The public has learned to understand the problems of the industry and willingly gives assistance in solving them. This understanding has brought a continually growing friendship between the motion picture and the public. The people are ready not only to praise their chief amusement, but at all times to defend it. The future success of the motion picture is limited only by the discharge of its duty; it is bounded only by the public appreciation which will come as the reward for our service well performed."

HOW few pictures actually grip the hearts of audiences and stir them profoundly.

Very rare, such pictures, aren't they? And always your biggest money makers.

"The Miracle Man" was a supreme example. "CHILDREN OF DIVORCE" is the latest of the type, and the only one in many, many months.

Two big stars. The book of the hour. Produced by Frank Lloyd. A picture sure to rank among the three best of the year!

Produced by the same unit that made "The Green Archer" and "The House Without a Key," the greatest serial production outfit the business has ever seen.

Gets off to a blazing start with the first chapter and never lets up.

All the class of a big feature, all the speed and sensations of a breath-taking melodrama.

If you want to know what this serial unit can do for your business, just look over these exhibitor comments, culled from just three trade paper issues.

Do Pathe Serials Pay? READ!

HOUSE WITHOUT A KEY (Pathe), starring Allene Ray and Walter Miller. This very mysterious serial started off to greatest kid matinee business on record and should hold up. Boost first chapter big and do anything to get them in. Serial should do the rest. Copyright, 1926. Film condition, very good.—S. G. Lebedoff, Homewood, Minneapolis.

HOUSE WITHOUT A KEY (Pathe), starring Allene Ray and Walter Miller. After an extensive advertising campaign, we opened to the biggest kid business on record with this serial. It surely is a winner and I can't see how anyone can afford to pass it up. Copyright, 1926. Film condition, very good.—Joe Goldberg, Southern, Minneapolis.

HOUSE WITHOUT A KEY (Pathe). This is an A1 serial. It is well liked by our young and old and is better than most serials.—J. T. Stroud, Park, St. Paul, Minn. (Pop. 246,001)

Amusements

THE GREEN ARCHER: (Pathe.) Special cast—This is one more Jim Dandy serial. There is enough action and mystery to please even Sherlock Holmes, and my patrons are sure keeping up with it. Every one wants to know who "The Green Archer" is, so do I. Buy it; advertise it. Then thank Pathe and me. Ten chapters.—Frederic O. Gooch, Lyric theatre, London, Tenn.—General patronage.

THE GREEN ARCHER: (Pathe.) Allene Ray—This is the best serial produced in a long time and kept them coming here, besides causing a lot of talk. Thanks, Pathe, for putting out such a good one. Ten chapters.—M. A. Manning, Opera House, Baldwin, Wis.—Small town patronage.

THE GREEN ARCHER: (Pathe.) A fine serial. Increased our business with these. Two reels.—Z. E. Gooding, Palace theatre, Grand Ledge, Mich.—General patronage.

SNOWED IN: (Pathe.) Allene Ray—Believe this held the interest as well as any serial we have had in some time. The real identity of the characters was not known by practically any one until the end. Ten chapters.—Horn & Morgan, Star theatre, Hay Springs, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Laemmle Denies All Rumors of Universal Merger

Declares Subject Has Never Been Considered

BY TOM WALLER

(Wired from Hollywood Bureau,
10 P. M., March 30)

Reports last night in Hollywood and even today in Universal City that Carl Laemmle had been induced to merge his interests were emphatically denied by Mr. Laemmle's secretary tonight. The denial went so far as to include information that the subject has never been considered nor have any offers been made. The report today was that universal and Warners had practically become aligned with the West Coast Theater chain during the past 24 hours after negotiations reported pending during the past several months. Executives reached at the Warner studio expressed ignorance of the report. One of them, however, stated "anything may happen."

William Dudley Pelly, writer, announces $50,000 in awards and prizes "to the scenarist, director, assistant director, photographer and in the sales end, with the distributors sales force and the exhibitor best exploiting the film" on the next ten of Pelly's stories to be adapted to the screen. In making the offer he states that "all too frequently the credit and acclaim appropriated by the author for a distinctive photoplay belongs as much to the production crew as to the man who originally conceived the plot."

M. C. Levee, west coast studio executive for First National, will shortly leave that post which he has held for several years to fill an important position with United Artists, according to late information at Burbank.

Marcus Loew Returns Improved in Health

Marcus Loew returned to New York last week after several weeks' sojourn in Florida, and was congratulated upon his full recovery to health and strength. Mr. Loew went to California several months ago for a much needed rest, following a period of over-work which threatened his health. Before returning to New York he stopped in Florida. He attended an important meeting of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, and is expected to leave this week for Boston to attend to business matters there.

Salt Lake Film Board Warns Against a Faker

The Inter-Mountain Film Board of Trade at Salt Lake City recently set about to protect the exhibitors and exchanges in the territory from bad check passing, fake advertising men, etc.

A. M. Russell, Manager of the Rialto Theatre Co., at Bozeman, Montana, has brought to their attention an advertising campaign manager who had been handling popularity and business stimulating contests for theatres and newspapers, who entered into a contract for a six weeks' contest with the Rialto Theatre and left owing $150 to the exhibitor.

He later secured a contract in Big Timber, Montana, and the sheriff of Big Timber writes that he holds a warrant for his arrest on the charge of grand larceny and theft of currency. It is charged that he took funds belonging to the Sweet Grass News.

The National Better Business Bureau is sending out a bulletin to one thousand newspaper publishers in the United States and Canada, warning them against this man.

"Ironside" Follows "Beau Geste"

"Beau Geste" closed at the Auditorium Theater in Chicago last week and was followed by "Old Ironsides" which opened to capacity business.

Chicago Uptown House

Huscagh and Hill are planning the erection of two large uptown theaters, to be located in the neighborhood of Lawrence and Winthrop Avenues.

London Cable

The Government seems determined to carry through the quota bill which has passed second reading extremely amended and modified. Definite opposition is expected. Will become law in 1927. Present average annual British production forty pictures and quota for 1928 would be sixty reaching two hundred eight years hence. Present invested capital of British exhibitors estimated forty million and production probably four million. France opposes attempted introduction of blind booking and may demand quota legislation. Germany making big push with front line films like Metropolis. Hugenberg, prominent nationalist, named as purchaser of UFA. New York Independent Theatres May Form Gigantic Combination

Will Pool Interests to Oppose Encroachments on Neighborhood Houses

By Epes W. Sargent

RUMOR generally is news in the making, and Broadway has been interested in the report the past week that meetings of various independent theatre owners in the Metropolitan district have been held, looking to a pooling of interests in order to put up a united front to the contemplated invasion of the neighborhood districts by Publix.

The most interesting story runs to the effect that a meeting was held by members of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, in the offices of their attorney, Nathan Burkan, looking toward a combination to be backed by moneyed interests. This is denied by Mr. Burkan, but the report was definite and apparently has a considerable foundation in fact. The meeting may not have been held in the Burkan offices. Certainly it was not an official move on the part of the T. O. C. C., and not all of the members were represented, but something evidently has been put into the making, looking toward some co-operation in some form.

It was announced some time ago that Publix would enter upon a heavy building campaign in New York. Most of these houses, as announced, are in the vicinity of large houses owned or partly controlled by other releasing interests. Many of these will not interfere with houses which are not directly in the small business centers into which Greater New York is divided. It is apparently with the idea of checking the further encroachment that the managers have sought to band together.

The first open effort was made not long ago when Roxy made a proposition to take over a number of houses to be operated in connection with the three or four large theatres it was purposed to erect.

Nothing definite seems to have come of this meeting other than to center attention upon the need for some sort of connection, and it is not improbable that the recent resumption of the discussion, wherever it may have been held, is merely the carrying on of that first discussion with the Roxy eliminated.

It is known that banking interests not in affiliation with the concerns handling the various producer-theatre mergers, are on the lookout for a chance to share in the attractive profits which have engaged the attention of those already in. They doubtless feel that, lacking participation in the producer controlled houses, they can at least take some profits from the lesser houses. The exhibitors realize that they need some more compact consolidation than chains of from five to fifteen houses.

The present rumor may be merely the forerunner of a real consolidation. It may be the consolidation itself. In any event, something is cooking up on both sides.

Theatre Burns

The Victory theatre, owned and operated by L. L. Connor, and located at Cambridge, N. Y., was totally destroyed by fire last week. Mr. Connor and his family resided in apartments in the rear of the theatre and lost all their household belongings. Small insurance was carried.

Harry Kosch Moves

Harry G. Kosch, the well known theatrical lawyer, counsel for Roxy, Herbert Lubin and other big film men, is preparing to move from his offices in the Loew building, where he has been located for many years, to the Roxy offices at 383 Madison avenue.

Motion Picture Legislation Is Killed in N. Y.

Despite frantic efforts by backers of censorship repeal bills in the New York state Legislature during the closing hours of the session last week, nothing was accomplished and as a result the censoring of pictures in New York state will continue for at least another year. Republicans in the Assembly downed an effort on the part of Maurice Bloch, minority Leader, to have the Hackenbush bill repealing censorship reported out of committee and go to a vote.

The session of the New York state Legislature failed to pass a single bill affecting the motion picture industry. Every one died in committee. The Coughlin bill, providing that special tickets entitling the holder to standing room only must be issued in cases where seats could not be provided, died in committee without a struggle.

Another bill introduced by Mr. Coughlin met a like fate. This bill provided that there should be no higher charge of admission on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays than during any other day of the week, except in cases where added attractions were provided.

The Ryan bill, which excepted cities having a bureau of buildings, from a provision providing for a fire drill twice a month, also remained in committee. The Greenberg bill, which would have placed employees in studios, who receive not more than $25 a day or $100 a week, under the provisions of the workmen's compensation law, remained in committee.

Moving Picture World desires to express its sincere appreciation of the pleasant reference to its twentieth anniversary contained in the last issue of Exhibitor's Herald. It hopes, in due course, to have the pleasure of similarly noting the Herald's attainment of veteran standing. Meanwhile it genuinely values this unsought and thoughtful courtesy from its able contemporary.

The Wales bill, which would have made it a misdemeanor for any person, with authorization of parent or guardian, accompanying or assisting a child under sixteen years of age to gain admission to a moving picture theatre, also died in committee.

It was generally conceded that if the censorship repeal bill had been passed by the Legislature, it would have been signed by Governor Smith.

Padlock Bill

The Wales theatre padlock bill, which would permit local licensing authorities to revoke for not more than one year the license of a theatre where the management of the same had been convicted of producing an indecent play, has passed the New York State Legislature and is now in the hands of the Governor. It is generally expected that the Governor will veto the bill as being too drastic in its provisions.

Seven Films in Row Are Coming to Loew

Through a coincidence, Loew will get seven pictures in a row, after presentation at the Paramount Theater. The arrangement is a 50-50 split between Loew and Keith-Albee, but owing to the moving of the Paramount eastern studio forces to the western coast instead of alternate pictures Loew will get them one after the other. No doubt when the pictures contracted by Keith-Albee come through they will get them in order without a break.

The next five pictures booked for the Paramount Theater are "Casey at the Bat," "Afraid of Love," "Knockabout Riley," "Special Delivery" and "Cabaret."

George Nichols Passes On

George Nichols, musical director for "The Big Parade" road show was taken suddenly ill in Quincy, Ill. He was rushed to the hospital, but in spite of every care and attention he died on March 29. Mr. Nichols was well known in the musical and film worlds.

Greta Garbo Signs Contract With Metro

Greta Garbo, popular film star, has signed a five-year contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and will be starred in that company's forthcoming production of "Anna Karenina," a dramatization of Count Tolstoy's novel which will be directed by Dimitri Buchowetzki.

Hays Organization Has Sixth Annual

At the sixth annual meeting of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., the following directors were re-elected:

G. McL. Baynes, Charles H. Christie, R. H. Cochrane, William Fox, D. W. Griffith, E. W. Hammons, Will H. Hays, Joseph P. Kennedy, Marcus Loew, Frederick C. Munroe, J. Homer Platten, Richard A. Rowland, Joseph M. Schenck, Albert Warner and Adolph Zukor. The members elected United Artists Corporation to membership, the roster of the Association now being twenty-four members.

At the regular quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association immediately following, Will H. Hays, Carl E. Miliken and J. Homer Platten were re-elected President, Secretary and Treasurer respectively.

Jersey Chains Sign Record Film Contract

According to a statement from Louis F. Blumenthal, president, the Haring and Blumenthal Theatrical Circuit of New Jersey, owners of the Central, National and Ritz Theaters, in association with Jack Keale, representing the State Theater, and Kutinsky and Kleban, of the New Jersey Theatrical Enterprises, owners of the Tivoli, Strand, Apollo, Monticello, Fulton, Rialto, Majestic, Cameo and Capitol Theaters, have consummated contracts whereby the entire product of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and First National Pictures, Inc. will be shown exclusively in their theaters.

It is said the contracts are for a long period of time and cover such pictures as "The Big Parade," "Ben Hur," "Metropolis," "Beau Geste," "Old Ironsides," "The Rough Riders," "Slide-Kelly-Slide" and every other picture of importance. According to the announcement it is the first time such an exclusive arrangement has been entered into.

Vitaphone Show In Chattanooga, Tenn.

As the result of an arrangement entered into by the Western Electric Company, the Vitaphone Corporation and Milton B. Ochs, owner of the Chattanooga Times, a special three-day showing of Vitaphone subjects will be given at the Municipal Memorial Auditorium in Chattanooga, Tennessee each afternoon and evening of April 7-8-9.

The Western Electric Company has arranged to have seats set aside at each performance for the free use of near-by exhibitors.

Manager Averts Panic

Manager Daniels, of the Grayland Theater, Chicago, by his coolness and presence of mind in calming the audience, avoided a panic when smoke from a slight fire back stage drifted into the auditorium.

COMING and GOING

Curtis F. Nagel, president of Colorart Pictures of Boston, accompanied the Hope Hampton company which sailed for Bermuda last Wednesday to film exteriors. The pictures are to be in two reels, released through Tiffany Productions.

Howard E. Brown, treasurer of Colorart Pictures, sailed for Europe on Saturday, to arrange for the production abroad of Hope Hampton films. Mr. Brown will also visit Africa with the color camera, covering the coast line and then plunging into the interior, for a series of scenes. He will be gone three months.

J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, has arrived on the West Coast to consult with Louis B. Mayer, regarding the 1927-28 picture schedule of that organization. More than fifty stories are already lined up for early production. Half a dozen other productions will be started within the next thirty days and more than a dozen will be in production within the next two months. Rubin will remain in Los Angeles for another week before returning to New York.

Earle Hampton, assistant to Robert M. Yost, director of publicity at Fox Films West Coast Studios, Hollywood, arrived in New York this week to assist Vivian M. Moses, director of publicity and advertising, in the preparation of a publicity campaign for the 1927-28 schedule of Fox Films productions.

William Howard, director of "White Gold," is in New York for a conference with P. D. C. officials, and to attend the opening of "White Gold" at the Roxy Theatre next week.

Cecil B. DeMille, vice-president of P. D. C., is arranging to come to New York to attend the opening of "The King of Kings" at the Gayety on April 11.

Mike Comerford and Wm. Cadoret were in New York last week to confer with the M. P. T. O., and to look over the picture situation with the purpose of arranging bookings for the big Fox-Comerford house in Buffalo, which is scheduled to open about the first of May, playing pictures and vaudeville.

Leon J. Rubenstein, now of Boston, Mass., was in New York this week closing a deal for the rights to a subject for which national distribution has been arranged.

S. C. Jacques, Central Division Sales Manager, left last week for a tour of the Pathe exchanges in Cincinnati, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Buffalo and Indianapolis. He will be gone about six weeks.

Charles Stombaugh, special representative, is on his way to the branches in the middle west, with St. Louis as his first stop, to be followed by Kansas City and Oklahoma City.

The Capitol Ballet, members of the Capitol family which Major Edward Bowes will bring to the A. M. P. A. dinner at the Astor Hotel April 2.

Mobilization Sets Record At Paramount Lot

All records in the mobilization of talent at a single studio promise to be broken by Paramount when the consolidation of the East and West coast plants is completed. Twenty-four directors, 29 featured players and a score of non-featured players and members of the Paramount school will be assembled. It will not only be the greatest array of talent ever gathered under one studio roof, but the greatest number of luminaries ever developed by one company within its own organization.

Paramount's personages achieved their eminence on the home grounds. Of the 16 stars only two, Pola Negri and Emil Jannings, were established stars before they joined Paramount. The other 14 are distinctly products of the Paramount development policy.

Eleven are players who have risen through years of screen experience. Five, Clara Bow, Esther Ralston, Florence Vidor, Wallace Beery and Gary Cooper, were elevated to stardom in the past year. The other six previously made stars are Bebe Daniels, Betty Bronson, Thomas Meighan, Richard Dix, Raymond Griffith and Adolphe Menjou.

Paramount's other three stars, Eddie Cantor, W. C. Fields and Ed Wynn, were established on the stage when Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Paramount, brought them to the film public.

Nine of the two dozen directors were handed their megaphones by Paramount. James Cruze, who made "The Covered Wagon," "Old Ironsides," and is preparing to make the "Beau Geste" sequel "Beau Sabreur," was an actor when Paramount made him a director, as was Eddie Sutherland, who made "Behind the Front" and "We're in the Navy Now" to his credit. Others made directors are John Waters, Frank Tuttle, Dorothy Arzner, Luther Reed, Monte Brice, Richard Rossen and H. D'Abbadio D'Arrast.

The array of Paramount directors contains such names as Erich von Stroheim, Ernst Lubitsch, Victor Fleming, William Wellman, Mauritz Stiller, Rowland V. Lee, Arthur Rosson, Clarence Badger, Larry Semon, Malcolm St. Clair and Gregory LaCava.

Herbert Brenon Will Release Through U. A.

Herbert Brenon, director of "Peter Pan" and "Beau Geste," signed a contract last week with United Artists Corporation to produce his films independently for release through United Artists. Mr. Brenon's first production will be "Sorrell and Son," based on Warwick Deeping's current novel. Mr. Schenck has purchased the screen rights to "Sorrell and Son."

Mr. Brenon sailed for England Saturday, March 26, to meet Mr. Deeping in London and collaborate with him on the scenario for "Sorrell and Son."

Edwin Carewe Seeks Actor For Del Rio

Edwin Carewe, director and co-producer with Inspiration pictures of the film version of Tolstoy's "Resurrection," left New York for Los Angeles last Wednesday. He has been in New York attending plays and consulting with executives of United Artists Corporation in his search for a male actor to be co-starred with Dolores del Rio, who was discovered by Mr. Carewe.

As yet, the producer said, he has been unable to find an available male screen actor to play opposite to Miss del Rio.

He is to make other films for United Artists Corporation and is anxious to develop a screen pair such as Mr. Goldwyn's combination, Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky.

Mr. and Mrs. Zukor Sail for Vacation

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor sailed Friday night April 1 on the Majestic for a two month vacation trip abroad. They expect to visit Paris and London and will spend considerable time in Spain and resorts on the Riviera, returning at the end of May.

Saxe May Sign Up

Indications pointed to the closing of the Saxe-Public merger in Milwaukee, Wis., this week, which has been pending for some time. If Saxe closes it is expected that Finkelstein & Rubin will make a similar arrangement.

Max Balaban Honeymoons

Max Balaban and his bride, nee Miss Dena Sakanoff, have sailed to Europe for a honeymoon trip.

Exhibitors Fight Tax Bills and Blue Laws

R. R. Biechele, president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, who resented exhibitors at the Kansas and Missouri legislative sessions, reports that five measures detrimental to the exhibitors was killed in Kansas, one allowing each county to censor its own films; one decreasing the personnel of the state board from three to one person; and one to compel the board to pass on posters, slides and all accessories. Another measure would have allowed the state fire marshal to inspect all booths and make a charge, as well as designate the type of equipment which should be used.

"The bill creating local option on Sunday shows won so much public favor that I feel certain a similar measure will be passed at the next meeting of the legislature," Mr. Biechele said.

The Oklahoma State Legislature failed to pass the anti-Sunday show bill offered by representative Faulk. The defeat of the bill was largely due to the able efforts put forth by Hon. Allen Street, a former member of the legislature and one of the owners of the Orpheum, Liberty and Empress Theatres at Oklahoma City, Okla.

Canada to Oppose American Made Film

Premier G. H. Ferguson of Ontario announced at the sitting of the Ontario Legislature at Toronto on March 25 that the Provincial Government was taking steps for a wider showing of British Empire pictures in the theatres of Ontario, this announcement being made in connection with the adoption of an appropriation of $130,625 for the Ontario Government's motion picture studio at Trenton, Ontario, for the coming fiscal year.

Hon. J. D. Monteith, Provincial Treasurer, told the Legislature that the Ontario Government had decided to support the movement for greater distribution of British pictures in Canada.

Rembusch Charges Trust

Frank J. Rembusch, president of the Indiana Exhibitors' Association, was called to Washington last week by the Department of Justice to present evidence of charges made against the members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, that monopolistic tendencies were driving the independent film men out of business.

Gov. Milliken Endorses Saturday Morning Movies

Carl E. Milliken, of the Hays organization, was in Albany, N. Y., last week and spoke at a luncheon given by the Junior Movie Committee of the city on the importance of the motion picture theatre in character building of boys. He was much interested in Junior Movies, which are given each Saturday morning in Albany, and which attract boys and girls to the capacity of the huge Harmanus-Bleecker Hall. These Saturday morning movies have the endorsement of the Mayor, the police force and parent organizations who have been quick to discover that there have been fewer accidents on the streets of the city on Saturday mornings, and that if handled rightly, these shows can go far in building character among the boys and girls who attend.

Stern Laboratory Opens

The Plastograph Film Laboratory, located in the Miles building, Astoria, N. Y., began active operation this week.

Kent Issues Denial

In a formal statement issued yesterday, S. R. Kent, general manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, emphatically denied rumors that he was to resign.

"I have no intention of leaving Famous Players," said Mr. Kent. "My present contract with the company has eighteen more months to run. I have just signed a new five-year contract which becomes operative on the expiration of my present agreement. Thus for the next six years and a half I shall continue with Paramount those pleasant relations which have marked my career for the last nine years. I hope this formal statement will set at rest for all time any rumors of my departure."

Combined Laboratories Closes Its Doors and Quits Business Historic Film Building, Opened as Crystal Film Studios Fifteen Years Ago, To Be Turned Into Laundry

The Combined Laboratories printed its last foot of film last week and gives up business, and the equipment is to be sold at auction this week. It is reported that a laundry will take over the building, located at Claremont Parkway and Park Ave., New York and formerly known as the Claremont Laboratories and prior to that as the Crystal Studios and Laboratories.

Ludwig G. Erb and Ben and Harry Goetz opened this place in 1912 as a studio and laboratory. At that time the two story and basement building with a 100 ft. front was looked upon as an imposing structure, and the studio worked day and night. Some of the greatest directors and stars in the industry today have produced pictures in the Crystal studio in years gone by. Here it was that Pearl White made her first serials, and Ivan Abramson produced many state right features in this place.

A. Alperstein and Joseph A. Golden had become associated with the Crystal, and in 1918 they bought out the interest of Erb and the Goetz boys, who started the Erbograph plant on 148th St., which is today the home of the Consolidated Laboratories, which dominates the laboratory field.

In 1920 Walter E. Greene became interested in the plant in association with Alperstein and Golden. Differences arose, and Greene bought out his partners, and in 1926 he consolidated with Mark M. Dintenfass and Thomas Evans, and the new company was called Combined Laboratories. This combination enjoyed but one year of business life.

When the plant was operated as the Claremont the printing and developing was done on many big productions, including "Thief of Bagdad," "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," "Robin Hood," "Don Q," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Birth of a Nation," "America," "Isn't Life Wonderful," "I Accuse," and many other famous pictures. The negative for "When Knighthood Was in Flower" was entirely developed in the Claremont laboratory, as well as a score of other Cosmopolitan productions.

Walter E. Greene, president of the defunct enterprise, was at one time a prominent figure in the film world. As a partner of the late Hiram Abrams in New England. When the Famous Players combination was made in 1918 it was generally understood that Adolph Zukor was grooming Greene for a big executive position, and he was first made president of Artcraft and later vice-president in charge of distribution of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He did not remain long in this position.

His later venture proved disastrous, including the American Releasing Co. and Pyramid Pictures. Mr. Greene has not signified his future activities.

252 Norwegian Houses

Carewe Gets Leading Man

When Edwin Carewe left for Hollywood on Thursday he took with him a Broadway juvenile leading man with a view of having him play opposite Dolores del Rio. Mr. Carewe would not disclose his name as he is yet to undergo screen tests. Also accompanying Mr. Carewe were Mr. and Mrs. Scarborough who will join the scenario staff. Mr. Scarborough has written many Broadway plays.

South African Picture Syndicate Organized

A new motion picture syndicate has recently been formed in South Africa, according to advices to the Department of Commerce from Johannesburg, South Africa. This new organization has been registered as Kinemas, South Africa (Proprietary) Limited.

None of the capital is being offered to the public as sufficient financial backing has been secured, it is stated, in South Africa and England. Super-cinemas will be erected in Johannesburg, Cape Town and Durban, while a film-renting department is also said to be contemplated. At present, programs will be shown in the town halls of the larger municipalities.

Nolan and Kravetz Get Wyoming Houses

H. T. Nolan and Max Kravetz, of the Plains Theater Corp., were given a lease on the America and Rex Theaters, of Casper, Wyo., last week by the receivers of the houses. Nolan and Kravetz control the Lincoln, at Cheyenne, Wyo., was the Rex, Greeley, Majestic, Grand Junction, and the Colonial at Pueblo all in Colorado.

Our Stock Market

By Ervin L. Hall

Amusement issues on the Exchanges have been irregular due, in a measure, to the unsettled condition of the industry. Mergers and readjustments have got the investing public guessing as to just what might be done next. Besides, the attention of the trading public seems recently to have been absorbed in a more actively speculative industrial and railroad line of stocks.

FOR INVESTMENT. B. F. Keith Bonds, First and General 6s of 1946. Present price around 98½ and current income 6.07. Call price is 104 and at gradually lower prices. Prior liens amount to $4,800,000 and the number of times that the interest is earned on the entire funded debt of the company is 4.16. The bonds bear a good rating with a substantial yield and likelihood of price appreciation.

PREFERRED STOCK. Famous Players 8% Convertible Cumulative Preferred. Par value of $100 and recent price 121. The yield on the money invested is 6.65% and the shares are callable at 120. The per share earnings of 1925 was $71.48 compared with $72.31 for 1926. Each 10 shares of this preferred stock is convertible into 7½ shares of common.

PREFERRED STOCK. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer 7% Cumulative. Par value $27 a share and recent price 25½. This investment yields 7.76% and stock is callable at 27. The per share net earnings adaptable to this stock in 1925 amounted to $10.90 compared with $16.94 in 1926. Earnings are running at a still higher rate at present. The yield is attractive, entitling the stock to enhance in price.

FOX THEATRES CORP. A report of the company just released shows approximate net earnings after all charges but before federal taxes of $750,000. There are at present outstanding 900,000 shares of both class A and class B stock. The company is constructing 9 new theatres in prominent cities of the country and the revenue from these should go to swell the income for the present year. Within the last few days Fox has purchased control in the Roxy Theatre properties and it is estimated that these properties during the current year will show net earnings of at least $1,250,000 for Fox Corporation. Entire earnings of the Corporation, on a gross basis for last year were $3,400,000 compared with $2,527,241 the year before on 500,000 shares of combined class A and class B no par stock outstanding. Fox Theatre Corporation maintains 57 branch offices in 28 foreign countries and from this source alone derives approximately 40% of its total revenue.

FAMOUS PLAYERS COMMON. Earned $10.82 a share on 459,020 average number of shares outstanding last year compared with $18.39 a share on 275,102 shares in 1925. This is only a very slight decline considering the number of shares taken in each year as a basis for profit. In fact, there was no decline in view of the ambitious expansion program of the company in which its position was consolidated by the addition of important chains of theatres. The stock may be profitably bought on recessions.

West Coast Theatres Confer in New York

Abe Gore, one of the biggest stockholders in West Coast Theatres, arrived in New York this week for a conference with Harold Franklin, who is shortly to leave for the West to take over the presidency of the theatre organization.

Big Game Hunting in America

Everything But Story

SOME years ago the slogan of "fewer and better pictures" was broadcast. Comparing the release lists of today with those of that period, it is apparent that the pictures are fewer in number. That part of the slogan has been lived up to. But the other half seems to have slipped in one sense. We have had better pictures in the sense that more money has been spent, more stars employed, more care taken in many angles of production. The only neglected point seems to have been story. It is seriously to be questioned whether even the optimist may declare the stories to be much of an improvement.

It is very true that the years which have intervened have given us some wonderfully fine productions. We have only to recall "The Big Parade," "Beau Geste," "What Price Glory" and the rest of the war dramas and comedies, not to mention the more general catalogue, which may not be listed here without consuming too much space. The past few years have produced many pictures to which the adjective "great" may be applied.

But on the other hand the average program picture is, still, just a program picture. Most producers seem to labor under the delusion that if they spend more money, they will achieve a better result. It is not so much a matter of money as of idea.

You can spend a million dollars on a stupendous production and without plot the effort will be worthless. It's brains that counts; scenario brains, and without brains, without intelligence, mobs of thousands of people, sets of the utmost lavishness, stars sufficient for a universe will be worthless. Unless a real story is there to hold the interest, interest will be but casual.

The real grip of any film drama lies in the appeal of the plot, plus the personality of the players, plus care in production. Costly sets, gorgeous costumes—or the lack of them—genuine antiques and all the rest, not to mention the ever present train wrecks cannot replace the lack of story interest. . . .

As usual the scenario departments are the last to be developed. Even the wise-cracking sub-title writer gets more encouragement.

Let's make next year's slogan run "Fewer and saner pictures." Shakespeare had the right idea.

Pioneer Exchange Men

By Merritt Crawford

THE genesis of the film exchange of today may be said to date back to a day in 1902, when Harry J. Miles and his younger brother Herbert L. landed in the city of San Francisco, with 5,000 feet of Alaskan "shots," which they had just taken between them in the far north, and started in, with the co-operation of old Peter Bacigalupi, then Edison's Western representative, to make a specialty of renting and selling film.

Among the earliest of motion picture camera men, their experiences dating back to 1896, the adventures the Miles boys had in Cuba and the early days of Nome and the Klondike gold rush would fill a hefty volume by themselves. Before coming to Frisco they had also taken a try at exhibiting a few films, which they happened to have, in an empty store in Seattle in 1901.

When these films wore out and their patrons got tired of paying to see the same "shots," they were forced to close up because they could get no further supply and it was this fact that gave the Miles Brothers the idea to start an "exchange," on their return from Alaska in the following year.

Peter Bacigalupi, Edison's agent in San Francisco, whose principal stock was phonographs, but who also sold kinetoscope film, also played a part, because he informed them how they could get film and projectors before they went North.

They took with them a couple of phonographs, a supply of kinetoscope film and the only projector, which Bacigalupi had on hand as a sample and which until then he had regarded more or less as a curiosity, because no one in San Francisco wanted it.

When they returned with the film they had taken, they arranged to represent the Biograph Company in Frisco and at once started in business. Mostly they sold film, instead of renting it, and they were soon supplying "store shows" and fairs from San Diego to Seattle and East as far as Denver. As nearby business increased, however, they would make an allowance for film turned in on the new film delivered, so that a sort of rental system developed.

In 1903, the following year, Herbert L. Miles, Harry's younger brother, came to New York to facilitate film shipments. He took an office at No. 11 East Fourteenth Street over what was then the Biograph studio, shipping the film as it was made to Harry in San Francisco and sharing profits with Biograph.

The next year Herbert was enabled to buy 500,000 feet of Biograph subjects in a block and with the subjects Harry Miles sent him from the coast soon afterward began to function as a film exchange, independent of the Biograph.

He rented projection machines to his customers and at one time had a contract with Nicholas Power to furnish the Miles Brothers Exchange with five machines a day to open new houses. Marcus Loew, then just starting, took his service from Miles Brothers, renting seven projection machines for as many houses and using four reels daily. Adolph Zukor, in 1906, who had then just sold out his interest in Hale's Tours in East Fourteenth Street, came to Miles Brothers for his "show" for the nickelodeon he was operating on Sixth Avenue near Fifteenth Street.

Other customers were Carl Laemmle, who bought film for his Chicago exchange and theatres and William H. Swanson.

By 1906 there were a number of other exchanges operating, most of them giving film service only. Plenty of "store shows" were running with their own projection machines. Among those who may be mentioned who came into the business of renting or selling film at this time are Alfred Weiss, William Steiner and William Fox, with his Greater New York

Pioneer Exchangeman and Moving Picture Showman

Film Exchange, the one which later was to be the stumbling block over which the Patents Co. crashed to its destruction.

Adam Kessel and C. O. Baumann, with their Empire Exchange were the first to use brand names for their films, Bison, Kaybee and Keystone being well remembered.

For several years, however, Miles Brothers kept well in the lead. Both Harry and Herbert Miles were camera experts and each kept the other well supplied with new subjects in their respective territories, besides the film obtained elsewhere. In 1906 Herbert went abroad and came back with much product and as the American agent for a dozen or more of the leading English, German, French and Scandinavian producing companies.

Among them were such well known names as Hepworth, Walturdaw, Urban, Gaumont, Pathe Freres, Deutsch Bio Gesellschaft, Nordisk (Great Northern) and several others.

Other exchanges were established by Herbert Miles for Miles Brothers in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D. C. and Savannah. On the Coast, besides the parent office in San Francisco, Harry operated exchanges in Los Angeles and Portland.

Early in 1906 Harry Miles opened the first fully equipped motion picture studio on the coast in San Francisco, in what had been the Knights of Columbus drill hall.

"The Chanticleer Hat or Buying An Easter Bonnet," the first picture to be made in it was also the last, for the earthquake arrived just as it was completed and the studio was destroyed, like most everything else in San Francisco save its fighting spirit.

Harry Miles, nothing daunted by the destruction of his new studio took 12,000 feet of the earthquake scenes, later roadshowing them in all parts of the United States and Canada and cleaning up some $30,000 in a few weeks.

At the peak of the Miles Brothers exchange activities, it is said, the weekly intake was over $25,000. This was about 1908. Then in 1910 came the now historic fight of the Patents Co. to eliminate the independent exchanges, first by the cancellation of licenses and the cutting off of all supplies of film from the individual exchanges and second by invoking the powers of the law, which for the time were ranged on the side of the group, who first tried to trustify this industry.

The old order changed, concerns equally as strong and prosperous as Miles Brothers passed out of existence almost overnight, and it became necessary to bring about a complete reorganization and realignment of the business.

Eventually the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company was formed, the Patents Co. was dissolved, and from the elements of each the business of marketing and distributing films as we know it today came into existence.

The origin of the word "Exchange" as it is used in the film business, dates back to 1894. Jean A. Leroy, inventor of one of the earliest film projection machines, who is still active, despite his seventy two years, may properly be termed the pioneer of pioneers among exchange men.

Leroy, in addition to his projection experiments, did a general business in repairing kinetoscopes, the "peep-boxes" in which the motion picture was then confined. He also dealt in the kinetoscope film, which he sold, rented and "exchanged."

With his projector, which was in use until some time in 1896, he showed how the film could be taken out of the "peep box" and displayed on the wall or a sheet. Needless to say he did a land office business.

He called his place of business at No. 143 East Thirteenth Street the "Acme Exchange," his middle name being "Acme," and thus in 1894 the first film "exchange" came into being. Jean Acme Leroy didn't know what he was starting.

Others in the gay nineties, as that mauve decade is now called, who may be named among the sure-enough pioneers as exchange men, are the late William T. (Pop) Rock. (1896) later one of the triumvirate who controlled Vitagraph. C. H. Oxenham, (1897) whose exchange was on Halsey street, Brooklyn. Charley Howard of Boston, (1899) and Walter Isaacs (1898) of Fulton and Nassau Streets, New York. Nicholas Power also operated a film exchange in 1899 somewhere on Nassau Street, New York.

Mr. Rock handled kinetoscope film as a side line, in connection with his billiard parlor on 125th Street and it was in this way that he became acquainted and later associated with

WILLIAM FOX, the lone wolf of the motion picture prairie and the boldest and most aggressive of independent showmen, has taken unto himself and his great organization the Roxy, newest and greatest of motion picture theatres, and with it has secured the services of the peerless "Roxy" himself, whose showmanly genius has been a beacon light for a dozen years past in the progress of the motion picture.

THE news is significant in far more ways than are apparent at first sight and its local aspects have already been fully discussed.

THE fact that William Fox, in his own time and in his own dramatic fashion, at last has obtained control of a Broadway house to reinforce and amplify his ambitious expansion policies, need not be enlarged upon here, nor need comment be made upon the further fact, that with the Roxy, Mr. Fox also secures a dominant interest in the proposed Roxy chain—the Mansion Theatre, at Fifty-eighth street and Lexington Avenue, and the Midway, which is to be built at Seventy-fifth Street and Broadway, together with the other theatres originally planned for this circuit.

THESE houses, with the Fox Academy of Music, at Fourteenth Street and Irving Place, will afford Fox Films unquestionably a unique booking and trading advantage in the New York territory, which will give the company a commanding position in the increasingly intensive competitive warfare, which is the outstanding feature of this period of the film industry's development.

REPORTS from other cities, Philadelphia and the like, indicate that the Fox expansion plans do not make any concessions to possible or fully entrenched competition in any territory no matter how powerful it may be.

IN other words, William Fox, master strategist and rugged, pioneer independent, does not intend to be crowded out of any territory, the acquisition of which he believes to be necessary for the proper development of his company's interests.

MERGERS and coalitions, re-groupings and combines of other elements in the industry, with their potential threat of stronger and ever stronger competition, evidently mean little to William Fox, who has in the past shown fully his ability to protect himself and his interests.

IN the War of the Giants, already begun and which will be well nigh desperate before another year rolls around, William Fox has issued the first important "defi," by acquiring control of the Roxy.

NOW a Roxy in Chicago—NEXT?

THE motion picture business moves in a vicious and ever narrowing circle, with an increasingly costly distribution overhead as its main problem.

MERGERS and combinations to cut down these burdensome distribution costs are merely stopgaps—temporary expedients to meet the ever growing competition of the big companies and not a real solution.

Concerning the "Penalty" Rate

PRODUCER-owned distributing companies build theatres to take care of their pictures in a given territory, add costly prologues and presentations to get the business, and two or three or half a dozen smaller houses close up or sell out to one or another of the big combinations.

ELSEWHERE some other producer-owned company does the same thing and the merry-go-round goes on endlessly, each thinking, momentarily, that they have gained some advantage over their competitors.

THE sum total is that there are less and less independent theatre bookings for all concerned, and, of course, distributing costs go still higher.

INDEPENDENT exhibitors who manage to stay in business, for protection either join one of the big circuits or form chains of their own and their concentrated buying power, coupled with the fierce competition, results in lower prices being paid for film, so the self-deluded producer suffers further for his own sins and again the cost of distribution goes up.

TRADE paper advertising is slashed to the bone, petty economies of all kinds practiced (except where they should be) and of course, the cost of selling and distributing mounts still further.

ISN'T it about time it is realized that the highly expensive exchange system, as now organized for the distribution of a given company's product, is not an asset but a tremendous liability for the company owning it, and that some more efficient, economical, intelligent and mutually co-operative or neutral means must be found for distributing the product of all the companies or a crash is bound to come.

PROBABLY the whole industry will have to take a licking, before anything is done about it, but, boy, what a licking it is going to be.

THE Fourth Estate, March 26 issue, carries two illustrations of recent advertisements in the New York Evening Telegram, which ought to be convincing evidence to any newspaper publisher as to the unwisdom and genuinely bad business of longer maintaining the penalty amusement rate against the motion picture theatre.

THE Telegram recently decided to change the penalty amusement rate until then in force on this publication for the run of paper rate in favor of the motion picture theatres, with an immediate increase in copy that amply demonstrated the wisdom of its altered policy.

A COMPARISON of just two advertisements—both of New York's Paramount theatres—tells its own story, the one appearing before the removal of the penalty rate amounting to exactly 103 lines, while that placed afterward totalled 1827.

FIGURES like these point their own moral.

Negro Fans Choose High Class Pictures

By Epes W. Sargent

SOME time ago J. M. Francis opened the Star Theatre in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, catering to the colored population of the town. There are hundreds of such theatres through the South.

Following the advice of the film salesmen, checking up on the other colored houses, Mr. Francis laid out the program that was suggested, a combination of westerns with the more vivid melodramas, and the usual comedy and news reel offering. There was another negro house in town with the same style of program, and they shared the business.

But Mr. Francis was more observant than many of these managers. He presently noticed that the better response came to the better class of pictures. The action westerns and the blood and thunder melodramas drew in business, but the occasional fill-in picture, booked merely because there was too limited a supply of the supposedly necessary action play, seemed to average up better than the staple diet.

There was such a uniformity of result that Mr. Francis went deeper into the study of his figures and decided that it did not merely happen that he had drawn more money with Norma Talmadge than he had done with the buckets of blood type.

It was reasonable to suppose that people came to see the star because they wanted to and had not merely happened to come in unusual numbers on that night. A single appearance might have been a coincidence, but a repeat argued that lightning was not striking twice in the same place half a dozen times, to jumble the simile. It really seemed that it was possible that the supposedly illiterate negroes with unformed taste really had come to see Miss Talmadge because they had a distinct fondness for the type of plays in which that star appears.

Putting his theory to test, Mr. Francis gradually reduced his westerns, cut down the number of melodramas and set out to cater to what he believed to be the real taste of the negro.

Today Mr. Francis runs a program which includes First National for two days a week, Universal one day, F. B. O. one day, Progress one day and Paramount and a general program on the other two days.

A careful check of his box office shows that Paramount and First National bring in about three times the business of the other days, and that his best box office bets are Norma and Constance Talmadge, Lewis Stone, Richard Dix and Milton Sills.

He has gained exceptional returns with such pictures as The Four Horsemen, The Ten Commandments, Abraham Lincoln, The Iron Horse and The Lost World. He has done as well with these features as the "white" houses but he is discarding the super-features from his discussion. They should draw anywhere. The point he makes is that he has built a better regular business through the use of higher type pictures.

He keeps careful note of patron requests and when there seems to be a sufficient demand for a certain picture, he endeavors to book it in. Among the more recent pictures which have been played because of the many requests received are Gigilo, The Volga Boatman, Charley's Aunt, Behind the Front, The Sea Wolf, Getting Gertie's Garter, Up in Mabel's Room and Three Bad Men.

Some of these are not exactly highbrow, but they are far removed from the westerns. Mabel's Room and Gertie are frothy, but they are clever and require intelligence to appreciate. They are far from appealing to the same class of mind that responds to the crude slapstick that is supposed to be the limit of the negro comprehension and appreciation.

Mr. Francis reprehends the tendency to play too strongly on divorce and domestic infidelity. He feels that these themes are overstressed and avoids them where he can. On the other hand he did an unusual business with Universal production of His People, which was supposed to make its chief appeal to the Jewish patronage. He writes that his patrons caught the lesson of filial respect and appreciated the fine acting.

His opposition has clung to the original formula of westerns and melodramas and does a good business through its appeal to the less intelligent, but he notes a steady accession in business from the clients of the other house and feels that even the laborers and similar type, following the crowd, are coming to turn more and more to the appeal of the intelligent.

Many of these are reached through his special matinees for the children. The children are almost always better educated than their parents. They appreciate the better things and gradually persuade their parents to attend the showings.

Mr. Francis deals wholly with the problems of his own house, but it would seem that there is a broader lesson here. It is one of the basic faults of this business that directors and producers hold their audiences in too great a contempt. They make their appeal to what they suppose is the intellectual limit of their patrons, they cheapen their drama and broaden their comedy. They fail to realize that the world has advanced in the past decade. They are turning out the same type of cheap picture that was in demand ten and fifteen years ago and the exhibitors have been turning them over to their patrons in the same spirit. They do not analyze, as Mr. Francis has done, the relation of cause to effect. They do not compare group results. They cling tenaciously to the idea that the pictures must be such as will appeal to the child and the moron. They give action without idea, feeling that action alone is

ALL the tickets for the First International and the Seventh Annual Dinner of the A. M. P. A. were gone early this week, so there's no use in making a last minute call. If you have a ticket, you will be at the Astor Saturday night without fail and if you haven't one you will have to wait to hear all the scintillant details from some one of the lucky ones later anyway, so there isn't much use now in adding to the din.

This is merely to record that Walter Eberhardt (among many others) deserves a lot of credit for "putting over" quite the biggest party the A. M. P. A. ever had in its colorful history. As president, the palm naturally goes to him, even if he hadn't done much of the work and nearly all the worrying necessary to make the affair a signal success.

Now that Paramount has moved its offices into the new building at the World's Crossroads, they must get that big clock working so that the office force can tell whether they are late or not as they pour out of the subways these mornings. Times Square will then have a double meaning.

Harold B. Franklin, who is going to have no sinecure in putting West Coast Theatres where they belong on the motion picture map, hasn't hesitated to pick and choose the men who are going to help him do it.

So it happens that three "live-wire" New Yorkers will shortly be transplanted to California's fertile fields. Freddy Schader, of Variety, who has been with Sime Silverman so long it is hard to think of one without the other two, is one of them. Jack Mansfield and Louis Cohen, lately with the Publix organization, are the two others. Do we hear any more names to add to the Franklin list?

Joe Weil is out to make a new record for himself, as director of advertising and exploitation, for Universal chain theatres. Based on past performance it is a safe bet to predict that Joe will set a pace that only the fastest big timers can follow. Hand it to Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane as being good man-pickers. One of the reasons for Universal's consistent big success.

Martin J. Quigley, editor and publisher of Exhibitors Herald, has launched a new paper in his native city, similar to the New Yorker. It is called the Chicagoan and those who have observed M. J.'s marked abilities in the publishing field predict big things for it. All the industry will wish him well in his new venture.

It begins to seem as if the Hugo Riesenfeld Gold Medal is to become a permanent decoration for Educational. E. W. Hammons gets it again this year with "The Vision," a Romance Production in Technicolor. Last year Educational's "Voice of the Nightingale" was awarded the honor as being the most novel short subject released in 1925.

Will H. Hays presented the 1926 medal to Mr. Hammons at the Astor on Tuesday. The Committee, who selected "The Vision" for this year's distinction were Harold B. Franklin, David J. Chatkin, short subject buyer for Publix Theatres, Joe Plunkett, managing director of the Mark Strand, New York, and Frank Newman, manager of Sid Grauman's Metropolitan and Million Dollar theatres in Los Angeles.

C. F. (Bill) Yearsley is going to leave New York flat or his New York flat, one or both, and venture into the wilds of Hollywood right after the A. M. P. A. dinner. If he finds the California fishing to his liking, maybe this old burg may not see him for a long, long time.

Then, again, if he can't get P. A. (Pathe) Parsons to come out and try his luck with rod and reel on the trout streams of the Golden State, Bill is apt to get lonely. With his other friends, who are hogtied here along the Main Stem, we voice the hope that Bill will not become transplanted altogether.

Now that First National is sending out scouts to round up likely looking college boys for film careers, we want to apply for the chief scout job, as soon as they start in on the women's colleges. We can think of nothing sweeter than wandering in the groves of Academus, while a bevy of beautiful buds listen rapturously to the careers we can paint for them once they hit Hollywood.

It's a job, however, that Dick Rowland will probably want for himself but at least our application for it is duly filed.

Will A. Page's defense against George Bernard Shaw's $100,000 suit for the suppression of his book about Broadway, should delight the ingenuous folk who clutter up Broadway and Seventh Avenue from 42nd Street to 49th, these bright afternoons. Will declares that George's law suit is only a publicity stunt and an able effort to attract attention to a forthcoming lecture tour, which Shaw is to make under the management of Morris Gest. Well, there is no use guessing. We will have to wait to see.

A week ago somebody sent this department a pair of horse-shoes, carefully packaged, but with no word of explanation.

Since then we have been expectantly waiting to get another pair and perhaps a horse as well. Like the little boy who found the horseshoe in his Christmas stocking and thought the good steed Santa Claus had left had got away, we were so intrigued that it never occurred to us to be disappointed.

Now we learn that the horse-shoes were sent us for good luck by W. A. V. Mack of Pathe and as a reminder that Monty Banks' latest feature comedy offering is named "Horseshoes." Might add that it is one of the funniest films this popular young star has done, which is saying much.

ANYONE who says that Eddie Carewe isn't the prima donna among star-pickers, from now on will have to take a back seat. About a year and a half ago he brought forward the lustrous Dolores Del Rio, who had then recently come to Hollywood from her native Mexico City, where she had been one of the belles of the Southern Republic's capital, and calmly announced that here was a young lady who had everything—beauty, charm, personality and genuine dramatic ability—which is essential for stellar honors and screen eminence.

A lot of folks pooh-poohed Eddie. Said he was prejudiced and liked to hear himself talk. Others said even more sarcastic things and in one instance at least, there was a public exchange of compliments between a well-known critic and Mr. Carewe that made it appear that casualties would be in order if they chanced to meet.

All this must be very pleasing to Eddie—in retrospect. How seldom does an actor or a director have a chance for a real comeback at the carping critic, who may have broiled them alive on the printed page?

For a girl who, in a single year, scores as Miss Del Rio has in Fox's "What Price Glory," who plays the featured feminine role in "Resurrection" for United Artists and in M-G-M's forthcoming "Trial of '98" and Fox's new "Carmen," all big productions of road show caliber, and with "The Vision," a Romance who will then be starred in "Ramona," United Artists big special which Eddie Carewe will direct, surely classes as star quality of the first magnitude in the film firmament.

All of which must give Eddie Carewe—not to mention Miss Del Rio—considerable satisfaction. It is good to be right, but a lot better to be right, when everybody said you were all wrong.

"Slide, Kelly Slide" at the Embassy, in which William Haines makes his debut with M-G-M, has started off the Broadway baseball season with a rush. It looks to be a pennant winner among exhibitors and will set a fast pace for other baseball films to follow.

"When Babe Comes Home," First National's feature starring the only Bambino and Para- mount's "Casey At The Bat" with Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton are due next and forecast high batting averages at the box office this season.

WHEN J. Henry Wellington breezed into the small city of Compton with the avowed intention of turning it inside out, he found he had undertaken a rather large contract. Compton was conservative, to say the least. It had no Rotary Club, nor yet a Kiwanis. There was no Chamber of Commerce and it was one of the few towns along the entire line of the D. G. & M. which did not have a billboard in the station yard reading "This is Compton. The fastest growing town in the State." Compton was content to drag along with the shirt factory, the creamery and Ladow's sash and blind shop.

J. Henry was far too high pressure for the place, and Compton rather resented him. The Palace picture theatre, run by their own townsman, Bill Sprague, gave them about all they wanted in the way of picture entertainment and with the Star Luceum Course at the First Baptist Church satisfied their cravings for amusement. They did not respond to J. Henry's intensive exploitation. Outside a few of the younger element, they preferred to go over to the Palace to see what J. Henry called junk, in preference to paying a dime more to see what Wellington figured they should crave.

And J. Henry did not improve with closer acquaintance. He was out of step with the town, but he felt that the town was out of step with him, and he minced no words in saying so. He had a biting tongue, and a gift for making enemies.

It got him nowhere in particular, but he was built that way, and when he was arrested for painting the fountain in the City Hall Square to advertise "The Painted Venus" the town hoped that he would be sent to jail. They got their wish. Wellington was fined $10 and offered a $50 confederate bill. "I didn't think you knew the war was over," he explained when the judge remonstrated, and he got five days for contempt of court.

Harris Langdon, the editor of the Compton Courier, saved him from a much longer term when he refused to take a page ad abusing the judge. Wellington called him eleven names; four of which were brand new, and pulled his advertising from the columns of the Courier, coming out with a throwaway (printed in the next town) to explain that he was tired of paying charity to the Courier.

Langdon had thrashed bigger men than the pugnacious but undersized Wellington for less than that, and the town was surprised when he merely laughed at the broadside.

It seemed that Wellington had gone about as far as he could to render himself unpopular, but that was an error. It was only a few weeks later that he came out with a score of 24-sheets for "People of Paris" that were promptly covered up by the police. It was about as noisy a lithograph as even an old time States Right Company could concoct and its nudity was an affront to decent men.

Wellington was warned that any attempt to play the picture would land him in jail, but he scorned advice. It was, he held, a free country, and no one could tell him what not to do. The picture had played other towns, and he was going to give Compton a treat.

There was some talk of a vigilance committee, but cooler heads prevailed, and Wellington came out with a daily distribution of heralds and throwaways to replace the billboard advertising denied him.

Then Compton got the shock of its staid existence. Sunday morning every church in town was plastered with three sheets for "People of Paris" and if anything the threes were even more objectionable than the larger stands. Public indignation rose to fever heat and Wellington had been arrested even before the sextons had removed the paper from the walls of the seven churches thus desecrated.

Nothing could be proved when the case came up the following morning. No one had seen the paper go up. No one could trace the purchase of the paper to Wellington, and the Scotch verdict of "not proven," had to stand. Loudly the Courier called for action, but no action seemed possible. The only result was the dwindling of Wellington's patronage to the point where even he felt that to try to combat public sentiment was of no avail. When his business dropped below five dollars a night he simply went away from there to the general satisfaction of all of the community save those few to whom he owed money. The old skating rink which he had used for a theatre went back to its original use as a place for occasional dances and church fairs, and Compton resumed its even tenor.

Wellington was forgotten after a time, and it was five years later that the incident was recalled. Compton "came alive" at last. A Chamber of Commerce was formed and it was decided to put a billboard down by the railroad station. They finally put out two. One was to the effect that Compton was the fastest growing town in the State. The other offered free factory sites to industrial concerns.

Half a dozen of the members of the Chamber lingered after a meeting to listen to Harris Langdon, newly appointed chairman of the advertising committee. It had been a lively session, and someone had brought in some applejack. Langdon was slightly mellow.

"What we need is lithographs," he said, a trifle thickly. "Men I'm strong for bright paper."

"That sounds funny, coming from a newspaper man," joked Bill Sprague, who naturally was on the committee. "I thought you would urge a newspaper campaign. What do you know about lithographs?"

Langdon swung around to face the speaker. "Bill," he said impressively, "I am going to bare my dreadful past. Thirty years ago I was the slickest advertising man on the Jenkins Three-Train All Railroad Shows. I was on car one, the opposition car and I could stick bills faster than the opposition could tear them down."

Two hours later Bill was guiding Langdon's unsteady feet toward his home.

"Harris," he said coaxingly, "where did you get the idea of pasting up the churches that time?"

"That's an old one," laughed Langdon. "I pulled that trick on the Sells-Flotow forty years ago. Picked up a package of their paper in an express office. They were ten days ahead of us into Curtis, North Dakota, and I smeared the Methodist church with fourteen twenty-eight sheets. They pulled the show over into the next state at fifty miles an hour, and we played to a turn-away."

"But why did you play the trick on Wellington?" urged Sprague.

"You didn't hear what he called me in my office one day," reminded Langdon. "I could have licked him, but licking a little runt like that would have made sympathy for him."

"Got the paper from New York; had it shipped in a soap box so it wouldn't be spotted, and I ain't forgotten how to boil up a kettle of paste yet. You don't have to thank me, Sam. I wasn't thinking about you. I was out after Wellington—and I got him—good."

Miss Olmsted Cast for M-G-M

Gertrude Olmsted has been cast for an important role in "The Callahans and the Kellys," the screen version of Kathleen Norris series of stories published in magazine form. Production under the direction of George Hill will start in a few days at the M.-G.-M. studios. Sally O'Neill, Lawrence Gray, Marie Dressler, Eddie Gribbon and other well-known players will appear in the cast.

Virginia Valli Meets Lady Luck

With offers from both Fox and Paramount to be considered, Virginia Valli is now en route home from a short vacation in Honolulu. With the expiration of her Fox contract recently she made known her intention of turning to the free-lance field. Whether she has altered her decision or not will be definitely answered upon her return to Hollywood.

Film Ingenue "Closes" Tijuana

Paula Howard, film ingenue, will be guest of honor at the closing ceremonies to be staged at the Tijuana race track with the drawing of the curtain on the racing season on April 3. Miss Howard has just finished a part at the Columbia studios and is next scheduled for a featured role in the Taylor Holmes series of domestic comedies.

Short Canal Zone

Buster Keaton and company are now at Balboa, where they will remain for the time being getting exteriors for the frozen-faced comedian's latest comedy for United Artists. Keaton's supporting cast includes Ann Cornwall, Grant Withers, Harold Goodwin, Snitz Edwards and Florence Turner. James W. Horne is directing the picture, as yet untitled.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" Lifted To Epic Class By World Series

"His Son" Soon To Be Released

"His Son," produced by Sam E. Rork for First National, is now being edited and prepared for release.

The screen story is an adaptation of the literary effort of Garret Fort and was put in screen form by Jane Murfin. Every scene of the production was made in the studio, necessitating no location jaunts.

Lewis Stone, as the Pierre, the headwaiter, gives a finished performance, according to those that have seen the rough cut. Robert Agnew, as his son; Priscilla Bonner, Lilyan Tashman, John Patrick and E. J. Ratcliffe are the other important members of the cast.

John Francis Dillon directed "His Son."

Stallings to Write for M-G-M

Lawrence Stallings, author of "The Big Parade" and "What Price Glory," has been signed to write exclusively for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to an announcement from the office of Irving Thalberg. It is understood that Stallings will write at least three original stories.

Rubin On Coast

J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of Loew's, Inc., and an M.-G.-M. executive, is on the west coast for consultation with Louis B. Mayer regarding the 1927-28 picture program. In the neighborhood of fifty stories are now lined up for production at the Culver City plant.

Stars Mingle With Cardinal and Yankee Baseball Veterans on Big League Benches

THEATRE owners in New York City and St. Louis who were fans at last season's World Series may not have known at the time that some of the most thrilling clashes between the big leaguers which they were witnessing were providing climatic material for a picture which is just hitting the first runs. The boys who count the tickets in both of those towns had the opportunity of watching what we write about in this section every week: How pictures are made on the set.

Seeing a director direct and a star perform before the camera was a part of the World Series bill - of - fare. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer was responsible for securing the greatest baseball aggregation on the greatest baseball acreage ever worked into a screen story. They did it in "Slide, Kelly, Slide!"

Like "Tell It to the Marines" is an epic of the U. S. Marine Corps and "The Fire Brigade" is an epic of the fire department, so "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" is being recognized as an epic of the American game. Unquestionably, it is the greatest and most convincing inside and outside story of baseball ever brought to the screen. It is the greatest because it is real; because Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, like it went to Brigadier General Butler and the National Association of Fire Chiefs, also enrolled the complete and unprecedented support of the controlling powers in American baseball. Colonel Rupert in New York, Miller Huggins on the road and Sam Breadin in St. Louis literally turned over their gavels to Director Edward Sedgwick, permitting him to let members of his cast intermingle on bench, train and diamond with their own prize bat swingers during the crucial pennant winning weeks of the 1926 season.

Getting tough old big leaguers to play their game for a "movie story as well as the grandstands—to become actors as well as ball players—proved for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, from what we gathered this week, a much tougher job than enlisting Marines and firemen for sun arc duty. That veteran manager John McGraw, was one of the large timers who thought the whole thing was a huge joke. Before negotiations were completed, however, every ball player backed up the proposition and Director Sedgwick and some of his cast were allowed not only the privilege of sitting on the players' bench during the World Series games but were welcome into the Yankee fold.

For three weeks, Director Sedgwick told us, principals in the "Slide, Kelly, Slide," company traveled, slept, ate and practiced with the Yankees. The company first joined the Yanks at the opening of the White Sox series. This had necessitated Sedgwick and his crew, headed by William Haines, as the star of the baseball epic, traveling all the way from Holly-

Who's Who In "Slide, Kelly, Slide"

*The StarDirectorCameramanThe ExtraWILLIAM HAINES

THE raw rookie from the small town breaks into the big league. His pitching prowess is so good that it defies old-timers in their attempts to convert him from a Smart Alexander to one of the regular fellows. His swell-headedness riles to the limit his associates. But their tempers never give way. There is something about this rookie that is likable. That is William Haines in "Slide, Kelly, Slide!"

As Jim Kelly, Haines has another "Skeet" role. His manner and that pardonable insolence are identical in a baseball outfit as they were in the tight fitting uniform he wore in "Tell It to the Marines." He "gets away" with things that few people in real life could ever do. Yet on the screen he is convincing and as true to form as the few people.

Haines is now a M.-G.-M. star and his own director told us that there is no star in Hollywood like him. That neither comedian nor character actor could essay as realistically the title role as Haines does it in "Slide, Kelly, Slide!"

None other than Mike Donlin groomed Haines in the art of swinging a bat in a big league way; the position a big league pitcher assumes in his box and the thousand and one little details which would be minutely recorded by the camera and which would have to be just as correct if "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" were to be presented before the hundreds of thousands of highly critical experts on the game.

EDWARD SEDGWICK

EDWARD SEDGWICK is an ardent baseball fan, anyway. "Covering" the 1926 World Series as part of his job in bringing "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" to the screen, has now made him actually rabid on the subject and at the same time it may have spoiled him as a fan—because, at the last series he flaunted a huge official badge that not only caused turnstile manipulators to step away but also led him past the bleachers and beyond the boxes right to the players' bench on the other side of the wire.

Sedgwick was heavy with baseball jargon even when we saw him the other day. He worked his mouth just as though it were filled with old "Mail Pouch" and smacked his hands together just as though they were about to fist onto a bat when we got him to reminisce about how John McGraw and Nick Altrock and many of the other big boys of the diamond reminisced to him before and after the big games.

As a Mexican border correspondent for the Associated Press, a trouser, an actor in musical comedy and a few other things, Sedgwick signed up in the Lubin days of pictures as an actor. His first experience as a director came a few years later when he megaphoned a serial for Fox. After that he directed Tom Mix in five features.

At Universal City Sedgwick directed Hoot Gibson in twenty-two consecutive pictures.

Sedgwick told us that during his six years with Fox, four with Universal and one and a half with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, he has not missed a single week's pay in eleven years!

HENRY SHARP

OVER 150,000 feet of hits, runs, noted baseball faces, world series crowds, hotels and trains were packed away by Cameraman Henry Sharp when the day was called in production work on "Slide, Kelly, Slide!"

Then into the cutting room went the 150,000 feet, later emerging in nine reels. Even though this footage is nothing in excess of the amount of negative exposed in filming a production of the type of "Slide, Kelly, Slide!", yet Director Sedgwick expressed to us the regret that necessity forced the elimination of a lot of excellent material. At the result, however, only the highlights of the big baseball games in the series of 1926 are shown.

It is doubtful if there is a single trick shot in "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer cameras perched on the fire line of home runs during the most thrilling period of the entire season of the Polo Grounds found straight shooting produced the best results for filming actualities.

Despite the fact that baseball, with its great fields and thousands of fans was caught in abundance in this screen epic of the game, yet more than half of the camera work took place under studio roofs in Culver City. Here hotel room scenes, the interiors of Pullman cars and other places which necessitated sets, furnished the atmosphere for the activities of a big league ball player after he was divested himself of his uniform and is lounging about in his bathrobe or strutting the streets in a natty civilian suit.

BOB MEUSEL

BOB MEUSEL and his brother Irish of the Yanks and Tony Lazzeri worked all during the filming of "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" After Director Sedgwick had completed camera work on the World Series in New York and St. Louis he brought the three baseball stars back to Hollywood. Here they had to doff their crowns to William Haines, the star in the picture, and his leading lady, Sally O'Neill.

For bit players, however, the baseball drawing cards got their faces and forms before the camera more than anyone else in their supposed class we have yet seen on any lot.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide!" records their initial appearance as actors. And as actors they were as natural on a Hollywood set as they are on a New York ball field.

At this writing Bob Meusel, to whom in particular this column is dedicated this week, is now on the other side of the continent busily engaged in spring training. We get from his film director, however, a very interesting story. This is about the difficulties Bob encountered when he stepped to the home plate for the first time when it was illuminated with the sun arc atmosphere of the studios.

It seems that the California day on this occasion was so dark that Sedgwick ordered M.-G.-M.'s biggest lights to be brought to the Wrigley Field where the sequence was being shot. Meusel was ordered to whail the ball. He struck out five times in succession to balls pitched in a way that in New York would put the furthest wall of the Polo Grounds just a few yards away.

Playing Ball With The M. G. M. Stars

MARIA CORDA, Hungarian actress who is now one of the featured players on First National's contract list. She will have one of the acting plums of the year as the entrancing Helen in the forthcoming picturization of John Erskine's most successful novel, "The Private Life of Helen of Troy."

M A R I A C O R D A

By Tom Waller

West Coast Representative

MARIA CORDA is going to stay in America for a long time. She told us that with the qualification—unless the American public does not like her. But Madam Corda, whose proprietorship of an English vocabulary already boasts a duration of over six months, observes that intelligent people are the same the world over. Europe's intelligentsia liked her. She played in some of UFA's biggest releases. And First National has substantiated her logic about some things being the same the world over by its long term contract which she now has tucked away in a bureau drawer in a nice little Hollywood home.

Shortly a month before Christmas, Madam and her husband, Alexander Korda, arrived in the film colony. And now it is announced that she will have the much desired and sought after featured role in "The Private Life of Helen of Troy."

Will Make Ideal Helen

That the titian-blond ex-UFA star will make an ideal Helen in a picture that is expected to exhaust a production budget of approximately $800,000 was the decision First National executives reached. They reached the decision after many well-known American players had "received" the honor from quite a few local newspaper prognosticators. Many such names appeared in print as being practically certain for the role long before First National executives had made up their minds. It was the kind of a role that Hollywood cinema femininity sensed as being a la unusual. The kind that caused them to prod their press agents and be more than the usual "especially nice" to the little girls who come around to the studios with pencils instead of lipsticks and then write nice things in big local papers.

So, when the official announcement was made, Madam Maria Corda accomplished the first big step toward her goal for staying in America a long, long time. Everybody who was looking forward to it and those who thought they had it and those who predicted others had it all saw Madam Corda's picture alongside of type proclaiming her as the official choice. This happened one bright morning recently. Needless to say, it has established Madam Corda in Hollywood.

Box Office Byword in Europe

Maria Corda is a box office by-word in Europe. She has been associated with the Erich Pommer and many of the others who have developed productions registering as big in America as in Europe.

About her entrance into film-dom, Madam Corda has not much to say. She does not consider it romantic. Things with romance, she expressed herself as believing, have the strongest appeal for American journals.

With a number of smiles she finally told us how shocked the director of the Opera Royale Ballet was when she told him about four years ago that she had harkened to the persuasions of friends and had decided to enter cinema land. Her first screen experience was with Vilma Banky when she made four pictures, each four reels in length. Then she traveled to Berlin for UFA where, we learned, she was one of the first women stars for that company.

Has Appeared in Eleven Pictures

"Madam DuBarry," directed by her husband and "The Last Days of Pompeii" are considered by Madam Corda as among the best of the eleven big pictures in which she has appeared up to this point in her career. "Moon of Israel" is another picture to which Madam Corda is also partial. This she made in England, having been loaned for the occasion to a London producer.

Madam Corda received her first offer to come to America from Universal, she said. At the time, she observed, she was still under contract to UFA. Then later Richard Rowland presented the proposition which resulted in Madam and her husband arriving in Hollywood before the New Year.

It was at that time that the difference in the spelling of their names was noted in this department. That Madam begins hers with a "C," while her husband adheres to the "K" way of his father.

Madam's explanation affords just another glimpse into her keen showmanship. This is it:

Her husband is a director. She is a star. And she sums up one and one in this particular instance as "different."

First American Picture in April

Early in April Madam Corda will commence work in her first picture to be filmed in America. Then "shooting" will start on the screen adaptation of the book about which the Publishers' Weekly of January 22 states:

"The two books that headed the non-fiction 'best seller' list for many months came out on top for 1926, according to the report compiled by Books of the Month. The two novels are 'The Private Life of Helen of Troy' and 'Gentlemen Prefer Blondes.'"

Something was said about having an interpreter assist us in this little chat with the continental actress whose wish to make America her home is being fostered in every way as the First National record shows.

But no. Madam has a very charming smile which registered perfectly affirmative and negative reaction to our questions and gestures. Only at one time in particular were we at a loss. That was when rigid concentration insisted upon us interpreting Madam's summation of the remuneration received by stars in Europe as "prize." We were all clear and happy again, however, when a knowing gentleman nearby relieved the situation and acknowledged our stupidity by saying: "The word is price."

With that dilemma solved, we understood Madam to say that central European producers more or less, collectively speaking, have a certain top figure that cannot be exceeded no matter how great the star from the standpoint of box office and length of service. Madam had reached that height before she came to America, she told us. The height, we were told, is about 200,000 marks. Madam's previous figuring places 40,000 marks at about $10,000 American dollars. And, we also understood, in Europe they pay by the picture, and seldom does a producer make more than two big productions yearly, while in America in most cases, as everyone knows, a contract means a weekly stipend regardless of the number of pictures.

Born in Budapest in 1902

Emphasis upon American production methods affording far more opportunities for far more appearances on the screen was laid by Madam upon this sequence in our interview. The subject of remuneration was incidental. We gathered that Madam, although born in Budapest in 1902, has in her make-up a generous proportion of the brainy material which has made America's showman the greatest showmen in the world. Not too often, but frequent enough to be always apparent, seems also to be Madam Corda's visualization of the tempo for a name over a box office and a face on a screen.

Lya De Putti Makes Debut As Unsophisticated Blonde

Hungarian Actress Seeks the Preference of Gentlemen in a Continental Romance
With Joseph Schildkraut Opposite

By JIM POWERS
West Coast Staff Writer

A BLONDE, instead of the usual brunette, Lya De Putti, makes her bow in "The Heart Thief," latest Metropolitan production, which has just been previewed at one of the Hollywood theatres. The Hungarian actress, who first achieved fame opposite Emil Jannings in "Variety," plays the part of an unsophisticated maiden and does well with what opportunities are allowed her.

Finding it necessary to review the picture from a seat two rows from the screen, it is impossible to say whether Miss De Putti is more appealing as a blonde than she is in her own raven tresses. From our point of vantage the screen was more or less of a blur with the players as a consequence appearing far from at their best. Offhand it would seem to be to the producer's advantage to make certain that reviewers of their product were seated where a satisfactory view of the screen would be possible.

The story is laid in Hungary, with Joseph Schildkraut cast as the conquering lover. He takes himself too seriously and as a result the character is overdone. It is a role in which the late Rudolph Valentino would have excelled.

Robert Edeson gives his usual finished performance cast as the lustful count. The unfortunate feature is that Edeson is on the screen too short a time.

Charles Gerrard and Eulalie Jensen make the most of their opportunities as a pair of fortune hunters.

That Title Will Knock 'Em Dead

"Rough House Rosie," Clara Bow's latest for Paramount, will soon be standing 'em up at the box offices throughout the country.

The popular little star, it is rumored along the boulevard, was forced to take a vacation from her labors with the finishing of the picture in order to get a much needed rest. Said rumor hath it that she was on the verge of a nervous breakdown. This is strongly denied by B. P. Schulberg, Famous Players-Lasky executive.

"Rough House Rosie" is an adaptation by Max Marcin of Nunally Johnson's popular short story and was prepared for the screen by Ethel Doherty. Reed Howes, Douglas Gilmore, Arthur Housman and Doris Hill are in the supporting cast.

Warners Start Two New Pictures

Two new productions get off to a flying start at Warner Brothers this week. Monte Blue has started in "The Black Diamond Express," while Dolores Costello faced the camera in a new story, at present untitled. Howard Bretherton is directing Blue and Michael Curtiz fills the same role with Miss Costello.

Jack Warner also announced this week that Warner Oland, character star, had been signed to a long term contract.

Laemmle, Jr., Casting About

Eddie Laemmle, Universal director, is now busy considering prospective players for the cast of his next Jewel production, which will be an adaptation of the successful stage drama, "Counsel for the Defense."

Laemmle has just finished "Cheating Cheaters," with Betty Compson and Kenneth Harlan in the leading roles.

Duke Orbach Qualifies As a "King-Maker"

Duke Orbach, Hollywood publicity purveyor, thinks he should be ranked with the old Duke of Warwick as a king maker. The Duke of Orbach tells us that he has had Kenneth Harlan elevated to royalty in the guise of "King of the California Raisin Festival," to be held in Fresno, April 29-30. Another of Duke's clients, Marie Prevost, was recently "Queen of the Mardi Gras" in Fresno.

Fred Peters Is Signed By Universal

Fred Peters, who recently completed an important character in "Tarzan of the Gold Lion," for F. B. O., has been signed by Universal for an equally important heavy role in "Eternal Silence," which Ernest Laemmle will direct. Peters is just getting back into harness after being laid up for eighteen months with an injury sustained during the filming of a picture. Neil Hamilton and Francis X. Bushman are featured in "Eternal Silence," with June Marlowe as the feminine lead.

Notables Reach Hollywood and "Look It Over"

Philip Strange, Blanche Le Claire and Marion Ivy Harris, formerly with Paramount's eastern stock company, are among the recent arrivals in Hollywood.

Miss Le Claire has been assigned a role in "Wings," while Miss Harris is now working with Adolphe Menjou in "The Headwaiter."

So far Strange is just taking it easy and giving Hollywood and its environs the "once over."

From B. P. Schulberg's office comes the further information that Ralph Block, former editor-in-chief of the Paramount Long Island studios, has been named one of the three editorial chiefs at the west coast studio. E. Lloyd Sheldon and Louis D. Lighton are the other two.

Block will handle a triangular block of producing units which will include the Richard Dix, Florence Vidor and Adolphe Menjou companies.

wood to New York and from then on with the Yanks back to St. Louis again to New York, finally returning to Hollywood.

"A few years ago they would have laughed at us and then thrown us out," Sedgwick observed in commenting about the "kidding" which he and his cast first underwent when the subject of co-operation was broached to the big leagues.

When they learned that we intended to bring to the screen a picture exploiting baseball, not only on the field but in the home, on the train and behind the catcher's plate they gave us every co-operation.

The print of "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" which we reviewed in an M.-G.-M. projection room on the Culver City lot fully substantiates Sedgwick's last assertion. You get full "shots" of the Polo Grounds, the Yankee Stadium and the home of the St. Louis Cardinals and they are all unmistakably not inserts from newsreels. Every time anyone of the big batting grounds are shown they are directly tied-up with William Haines, the Jim Kelly of "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" There is no mistaking the fact that Haines was right on the firing line in New York and St. Louis during the 1926 pennant contest.

Close-ups of Haines as New York's no-hit pitcher were made after the World Series in the stadium of the Los Angeles Angels and also a few acres in the Culver City plant.

Since the picture has just been released and also has been reviewed in another department in a previous issue of Moving Picture World, exhibitors are becoming acquainted with the story. William Haines plays the title role of Jim Kelly, the great major league pitcher who is finally taught that eight other men have to work in order for a team to be victorious. Sally O'Neill essays the role of the daughter of the team's catcher and guides the romance which aids considerably in making Kelly one of the boys. Harry Carey is the veteran catcher. Incidentally, we learned that during the filming of "Slide, Kelly, Slide!" Carey felt right at home in his catcher's mit, having one time played professional baseball.

Of all the actors whom Mike Donlon coached probably the toughest one to get acclimated to a glove was Karl Dane in the role of Swede Hansen. Dane, we are informed, was on the other side of the water during the time that American youth is learning its favorite sport. However, Dane, when he stepped in the field before the camera, shouldered a bat equally as well as Donlin himself.

Lya De Putti Enters Preferred Class

Snowbound Players Back in Hollywood

Clarence Brown, director of "The Trail of '98" and his company of M.-G.-M. players are back in Hollywood after a month's location stay at the top of the Continental Divide. Members of the company were, without exception, glad to get back from the frigid climate that has been their daily portion ever since they pulled into Corona, Colo., where the camp was pitched.

Glad to Return

Blizzards and zero weather are far from intriguing to dyed-in-the-wool inhabitants of southern California and there was no shedding of crocodile tears when the order to proceed home was issued.

Brown will start work on interior sequences immediately at the Culver City studio.

Another Reporter!

Reed Heustis, Los Angeles newspaper man, has moved his typewriter to the editorial department of the Hal Roach studio and in the future will specialize in scenarios. During the absence of H. M. "Beanie" Walker, now in the East, Reed will also be responsible for the titling of the Roach comedies.

Haines Made Star

Production will get underway shortly at the M.-G.-M. studios on "Spring Fever," William Haines' first picture as a full-fledged star in his own right. Hobart Henley will direct.

Look Where They Put Ralph Spence

A number of motion picture stars were included in the income tax liens filed in the Federal Court by Revenue Collector Galen H. Welch. The liens include many prominent Los Angeles people and are said to represent months of investigation by Federal tax experts. Among those named are Ralph Spence, author, 1920, $98; Ben F. Wilson, 1921-1925 inclusive, $12,659; Corinne Griffith, 1919 $316.40; Herbert Rawlinson, 1925, $121.85; Jack Norworth, vaudeville star, 1919, $132.40.

Ban Sightseers From Studios Of M-G-M and Warner Brothers

No More May the Anxious School Teacher View the Wonders of Hollywood and Return
With Tales of First Hand
Experience on the Lots

TOURISTS from the East and hinterland, anxious to see what a studio looks like in order that they may be able to give first-hand information to the folks back home, are going to be out of luck in the future, following a blanket mandate from the larger Hollywood studios clapping a ban on visitors and sightseers. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Warner Brothers are the first two studios to publicly announce the new ruling, but it is expected that the other companies will immediately fall in line, making it more difficult than ever for the curious bent to pry their respective ways past the eagle-eyed, grim-visaged gatemen.

This ruling, of course, does not affect those having legitimate business on the various "lots." Writers and representatives of recognized and established publications will continue to avail themselves of the courtesy that has always been extended to them in practically every studio. In Hollywood there is but one producing organization that merits the appellation "big-timer," which of late has been religiously making access disagreeable for those with legitimate reasons for visiting that particular studio.

At this studio those individuals under salary to established publications as gatherers of motion picture news are barred from the "lot" and expected to depend entirely upon said studio's publicity department for "hot news copy." This is hardly a successful and valuable arrangement—for the studio.

As we mentioned above, this new ruling at the other studios does not affect those that must visit on legitimate business transactions. M.-G.-M. officials declare that during the past few months a desire to allow out-of-towners an opportunity to view the inside of the studio has cost thousands of dollars and resulted in the withdrawal of the courtesy.

The players are opposed to an avalanche of sightseers bearing down on a "set" for the good and sufficient reason that they cannot do their best work under the circumstances. In many cases these "audiences" are rather critical also and verbally exchange among themselves their disappointment upon seeing a favorite of the screen in person. This is disconcerting to the actor or actress if they happen to be listening in and quite naturally ruffles their feelings, which in turn, detracts from their work.

Following is an excerpt from the statement issued officials at M.-G.-M.: "When visitors appear on a 'set,' few artists can give the best there is in them, with the result that they 'go through the motions' until the

Mae Murray Launches Suit Over Antiques

Mae Murray, film star, has named Jack Donovan and the latter's mother, Jeanette G. Donovan, co-defendants in a suit filed in the superior court for $37,600, charging fraud and blandishment in her purchase of a home at 13047 San Vicente Boulevard.

Miss Murray claims that the furniture in the house at the time she purchased it were represented to be antiques, which, she asserts in her complaint, turned out to be cheap imitations.

visitors leave. Then the scene is taken as it should be done. This involves holding up an entire company and in the instance of one player alone, it was estimated that more than $2,500 was lost in one day."

The decision of Warner Brothers comes after considerable contemplation. When we discussed the matter with Hal Wallis, publicity director at the studio, he informed us that during the past few weeks the place resembled a sequel to "The Big Parade," with the large number of visitors continually surging through the place.

"Exhibitors and those with bona fide business to transact will be extended the same courtesy they have always enjoyed at Warner Brothers studio," declared Wallis.

So in the future Mother Hubbard on her visit here from the corn belt will have to get her closeup of the studios from sightseeing buses and from the chatter of the players and "extras."

"Synthetic Sin" With Colleen Moore

"Synthetic Sin" will be Colleen Moore's first starring picture on the 1927-28 series for First National. John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production, made the announcement this week of the purchase of the stage success written by Fred-eric and Fanny Hatton.

Miss Moore will start work on the production immediately after finishing in her current picture, "Naughty But Nice." Supporting Colleen in the latter are: Donald Reed, Claude Gillingwater, Hal-lam Cooley, Kathryn McGuire, Edythe Chapman and Clarissa Selwynne.

Al Christie's wire-haired fox terrier, "Let's Go," is now king of the Christie kennels, having won an international championship.

DIRECTOR AL ROGELL will leave on a short vacation with the finishing of "The Sunset Derby," First National production, now in the cutting room.

AARTHUR SHADUR, former studio manager at Universal City has been elevated to a supervisory berth by Carl Laemmle. Shadur has been with the organization during the past five years. His first story will be "Betty's a Lady" from the pen of the late Gerald Beaumont.

ADOLPH MENJOU and company have returned from location at Lake Tahoe on exterior sequences for "The Headwaiter," Menjou's current Paramount production. Supporting Menjou in the cast are Kathryn Garver, Lawrence Grant, Charles Lane and Sally Blane.

WITH the completion of her role in "Old Heidelberg," Norma Shearer will commence work in "Liberty Bonds," an original story by Monta Bell. Bell will also direct the picture.

LOIS MORAN, Donald Keith, Vera Veronina and Larry Kent have the featured roles in Paramount's, "The Whirlwind of Youth," adapted from A. Hamilton Gibbs story, "Soundings."

CLIVE BROOK has the male lead in "Underworld," Ben Hecht's drama of metropolitan life. Josef von Sternberg will direct with Evelyn Brent in the feminine lead.

LARS HANSON, Swedish actor, will play opposite Lillian Gish in "The Wind." His work opposite Miss Gish in "The Scarlet Letter" earned him the male lead with the latter in the screen adaptation of the Dorothy Scarborough novel. Victor Seastrom will be in charge of direction.

DOUGLAS McLEAN is on a short yachting trip preparatory to starting on his next Paramount release, "See You Later."

UNIVERSAL announces the signing of two directors, William Beaudine and William Craft. Beaudine will direct Norman Kerry in "Too Many Women," while Craft's first assignment will be with an all-star cast in "Patents Pending."

DORIS DEANE, wife of Fatty Arbuckle, has signified her intention of making the trip to Germany with her husband when he leaves to fulfil a motion picture contract there. It is possible that Mrs. Arbuckle may also appear with Fatty on the screen.

THE make-up of Emil Jannings in "The Way of all Flesh" his initial starring venture for Paramount, was declared to be the finest he had ever seen by James Montgomery Flagg, noted illustrator. Bell Bennett and Phyllis Haver have supporting roles with the German star.

CORINNE GRIFFITH is expected back on the coast shortly to start work in her first starring production for United Artists under her new contract. June Mathis is preparing the story, "The Garden of Eden."

LILYAN TASHMAN and Armand Kaliz have been added to the supporting cast of "The Stolen Bride," Billie Dove's first starring picture under her new First National contract. Alexander Korda, former UFA director, will handle the megaphone.

BYRON HASKIN, a graduate of the camera ranks is now directing May McAvoy in "Irish Hearts" for Warner Brothers. His first picture was such a success that he was tendered the direction of the McAvoy production.

JOSEPHINE CROWELL, one of the veteran character women of the screen, has an important role in Edward Everett Horton's current two-reel comedy, N. J. (Nick) Barrows is directing.

BILL CODY, producer-star of western features, is now in Weepah, Nev., where exteriors are being "shot" on his next production, under the present title of "Gold from Weepah."

Doug's Newest Will Be Titled "The Gaucho"

The name of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture will be "The Gaucho," which in its English equivalent means "The Cowboy." The story is an original by Elton Thomas, who wrote "The Black Pirate." The scenario is now being prepared by Lotta Woods. F. Richard Jones will direct. "The Gaucho" is a tale of cowboy life in South America.

It is expected that Fairbanks will begin work shortly, the film being made at the enlarged United Artists Studio in Hollywood.

"Magic Flame" Selected For Colman-Banky

"The Magic Flame" has been chosen by Samuel Goldwyn as the title of the next Ronald Colman-Vilma Banky film, based on Rudolph Lothar's play, "King Harlequin," for the United Artists.

The film is now being made in Culver City, under direction of Henry King, who made "Stella Dallas." It is the fourth film in which Miss Banky and Mr. Colman have been co-featured in the last two years.

Oliver Designs Spanish "Sets" For "Carmen"

Harry Oliver, world traveler and widely-known authority on the architect of the world's empires, designed the Spanish settings for Fox Films production of "Carmen," made under direction of Raoul Walsh, director of "What Price Glory."

Oliver's work has established him as one of the most advanced art directors in pictures and many of his ideas have been adopted throughout the West.

Four Premieres For P. D. C. in L. A.

With four Western premieres taking place in Los Angeles theatres within a period of eighteen days, Cecil B. De Mille's Producers' Distributing Corporation believes it has set a record.

"White Gold" made its world premiere at the Figueroa, Friday, March 19.

"The Yankee Clipper" opened at the Forum on Wednesday, March 24.

"The Clinging Vine" made its debut at the Hillstreet, March 13.

"Getting Gertie's Garter" opens at the Metropolitan, April 1.

Direct Contact With 14,000,000 Readers Established By M-G-M

Foreign Language Newspapers Use Publicity on M-G-M Pictures; Home Office and Studio in Net-Work

DIRECT CONTACT with fourteen million people in the United States and Canada, most of whom cannot read English and practically all of whom are movie patrons, has been established for exhibitors of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, through a departure in national publicity announced by M-G-M., upon the first anniversary of its operation.

Columbia Film In Chicago Runs

"Wandering Girls," Columbia's drama of modern youth, which just ended its first showing in Chicago, was greeted with equal enthusiasm by both the audience and the critics.

During the week of March 7 it was presented simultaneously at three first-run houses, where it played to appreciable returns.

Up to a year ago, the fourteen million readers of newspapers and magazines printed in foreign languages throughout North America, were practically overlooked in the national publicizing of films and film personalities, it is pointed out.

This vast public, representing every foreign tongue, comprises in its large majority, regular motion picture patrons whose chief entertainment is found in the "universal language" of the screen.

A year ago, realizing the importance to exhibitors of this tremendous patronage and following a complete survey, M-G-M instituted a publicity service to these newspapers and magazines that for thoroughness rivals the service generally accorded American newspapers and publications.

Participating in this service are the offices of the publicity departments at the studio and the home office in New York, with special staffs assigned to the work. With the operations of the staffs at both ends of the continent dovetailed in a unique manner, a network of contacts throughout the entire extent of North America has been established.

Tabulated results indicate that practically all of the space accorded to motion pictures in foreign-language publications here and in Canada for nearly a year has been devoted to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer personalities and pictures, it is announced.

Among the languages covered by this publicity service are Jewish, German, Polish, Russian, Spanish, Italian, French, Czech, Slovakian, Jugo-Slavian, Swedish, Norwegian and Danish.

Following its institution of Radio Clubs on thirty of the most powerful radio stations throughout the United States, whereby M-G-M pictures and personalities are publicized over the air to twenty-five million people weekly, the foreign-language publicity service offers another potent departure in national publicity sponsored by M-G-M.

During the world war the Government operated a special publicity bureau to reach these fourteen million people, and this work became of great importance in the scheme of things.

Dorothy Gulliver's New "U" Feature

Dorothy Gulliver, who has been coming on with the rapidity of a comet, has finished the sixth episode in the second "Collegians" series and has immediately been assigned to play opposite Fred Humes in "One Glorious Scrap," which is being directed by Edgar Lewis.

Upon the completion of "One Glorious Scrap," she will return to "The Collegians" to finish the remaining four of the series for the coming year.

In the meantime, Nat Ross, who directed the second "Collegians" series, has been assigned to direct an original picture written by Hampton Del Ruth, entitled "Stop That Man."

James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, bids "good-bye" to F. W. Murnau, as the noted director of "Sunrise" took his leave of Hollywood.

Dolores Del Rio Proves She Can Fight Fiercely

It is not unusual to see two rugged men engage in physical combat in motion pictures. Rather, it is an expected portion of nearly every film. In Fox Films screen version of "Carmen," an embroglio of a widely different nature is staged.

Raoul Walsh, director of the spectacle, has planned fistic engagements for men, innumerable times during his career as a picture maker, but the "battle" between Dolores and Del Rio as "Carmen" and Carmen Castillo, one of the cigarette girls, was the first screen fight he has photographed wherein the identical ferocity needed in a fight between men was needed for disagreements between two feminine characters.

And it was a fight! Thrills, action, speed and realism in goodly portions. When the two screen actresses finished the fight both were possessed of numerous bruises, scratches and marks of a battle.

Laemmle's Next A Raine Story

Universal has just announced the principals for Ernest Laemmle's new feature, "The Eternal Silence," adapted from William McLeod Raine's story, "The Yukon Trail."

The cast is headed by Francis X. Bushman, famous screen star, and includes Burr McIntosh, June Marlowe, Neil Hamilton and Otis Harlan.

MacDonald Signs

Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president of Fox Films, has renewed the contract of J. Farrell MacDonald. On the day the agreement was signed MacDonald went to work in his tenth picture this season. It is "Rich, But Honest," a screen version of Arthur Somers Roche's story, and is being directed by Albert Ray.

Miss Tell Signed

Olive Tell has been assigned the leading role in "Slaves of Beauty," which is the new title of the screen version of "The Grand-flapper," Nina Wilcox Putnam's story, being directed by J. G. Blystone at Fox Films West Coast Studios.

O'Connor to Direct

Frank O'Connor has been signed by Fox Films to direct "Macushla," a screen version of the play by Rida Johnson Young, according to an announcement by Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president.

Two Warner Films Ready

Production work on two big outdoor pictures was finished this week by Warner Bros. when the last scenes were completed on "The Brute," starring Monte Blue and "Tracked by the Police," starring Rin-Tin-Tin.

"The Brute" is an adaptation of W. Douglas Newton's story of the West, which is vividly depicted in many unusual locations including Mt. Whitney, Death Valley and the oil fields of Oklahoma. Irving Cummings directed the cast, including such well-known names as Leila Hyams, Clyde Cook, Carrol Nye and Paul Nicholson, who appear in support of Monte Blue.

The Rin-Tin-Tin picture, "Tracked by the Police," was filmed largely in Arizona. Ray Enright was at the megaphone with the featured players, including Jason Robards, Virginia Browne Faire, Tom Sant-echi, Dave Morris and Wilfred North.

Alice Terry in M-G-M's "Garden of Allah"

Baseball Experts Wire Praise Of M-G-M's "Slide, Kelly, Slide"

DOZENS of enthusiastic telegrams from members of the Boston Braves and New York Yankees, and from newspaper writers and club magnates with the teams, arrived at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offices in New York following a showing of "Slide, Kelly, Slide," at the Florida Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., last week. This showing was arranged in honor of the Yankees, who took part in the baseball epic, now at the Embassy, New York, for an indefinite run.

This expert expression of approval of the new film, with William Haines in the title role, followed similarly enthusiastic and unanimous praise by such nationally known sporting authorities as Grantland Rice, W. O. McGeehan, Hugh S. Fullerton, Alex Sullivan and Ned Brown, who saw the film in pre-view in the projection room of the Capitol, as guests of Major Edward Bowes.

Among those notables of the baseball world who sent personal wires of praise for the film, which has been termed "the greatest baseball picture ever made," are:

This little chicken is really Dorothy Gulliver who makes George Lewis' heart beat faster in the Universal Series, "The Collegians."

Benefit With "Fire Brigade" In Bridgeport

One hundred per cent. co-operation was received from the Bridgeport Fire Department when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's special production, "The Fire Brigade," was presented under the name of the Bridgeport Fire Department, for aid of their Sick Benefit Association fund, at the Cameo Theatre.

A M-G-M exploiteer assisted the manager of the theatre in putting over one of the most complete campaigns this picture has had to date. Arrangements were made with Fire Chief Daniel E. Johnson for his men to handle the sale of tickets throughout the city.

Twenty-five per cent. of the gross receipts of such sale of tickets were to be turned over to the Bridgeport Firemen's Sick Benefit Association.

Johnny Hines in "All Aboard"; Release May 8

Following the arrival in New York of the print of the New Johnny Hines comedy, "All Aboard," produced under the personal supervision of C. C. Burr, comes the announcement from First National Pictures that the offering has been scheduled for general release through the country the week of May 8th.

Seldom has a film comedy received unstinted praise during the preview period as has "All Aboard" from the hands of critics and reviewers both in Hollywood and New York. The work of the comedian has been hailed enthusiastically by the press as the best work of Johnny Hines' Career.

Johnny Arthur's Next

Glen Cavender, who is so often seen as a sheriff or policeman in comedies made at Educational Studios, appears as a hard-boiled football coach in "The Draw-Back," the new Tuxedo Comedy featuring Johnny Arthur.

Young Bushman To Be Star of "Scarlet Arrow"

Francis X. Bushman, Jr., son of the famous screen star, and himself rapidly winning his spurs as a star, has been signed by Universal for the starring role in "The Scarlet Arrow," one of Universal's big serials for next year. Bushman, the father, also is now with Universal.

"The Scarlet Arrow" will be one of five big serials to be made for 1927-1928 release by Universal. The others are "Blake of Scotland Yard," starring Hayden Stevenson; "The Vanishing Rider," starring William Desmond; "The Haunted Island," starring Jack Daugherty, and "The Trail of the Tiger," also starring Daugherty.

Young Bushman has definitely established himself as a coming factor in the screen world. During the past year he played important roles in such pictures as "Brown of Harvard," "Midnight Faces," "Dangerous Traffic," "Eyes Right" and "The Understanding Heart."

A. E. Shadur To Supervise "U" Production

Studio Manager Arthur E. Shadur has been appointed supervisor of an as yet untitled production, according to an announcement just made by Universal.

Shadur has been given full supervisory powers, in accordance with which he will select a story, director and cast, assuming full responsibility for the production. A detailed announcement of his plans will follow shortly.

Shadur, one of the best informed executives in the industry on production matters, has filled practically every position with his company, having been promoted to his present post last year after a satisfactory term as chief engineer.

Actor Loaned

Ivan Petrovitch, the Serbian actor whom Rex Ingram discovered in Europe, will be farmed out to a French company as soon as the Metro-Goldwyn director has finished with him in "The Garden of Allah," the picturization of Robert Hichens's famous novel now being made on location in Africa and France.

Fox Cast

The cast of Fox's "Slaves of Beauty" includes Earle Foxe, Margaret Livingston, Richard Walling and Holmes Herbert.

Will Hays Gives Some Figures

At the Astor luncheon this week, where the Huge Reisenfeld Medal award was made to "The Vision," Educational's two-reel Romance Production in Technicolor, Will H. Hays gave some interesting statistical data on the Film industry. According to Mr. Hays—

More than 200,000 miles of motion picture film are manufactured each year.

During the past four years more than 150 billion feet of film have been shipped by parcel post, express, or truck in the United States alone—enough to encircle the globe 6,000,000 times.

During this four-year period only four fires resulted in shipments, with total loss of only $450.

17,846 feature pictures, comedies and news reels shown last year, without cost of any kind, to shut-ins, hospitals, orphanages, homes for the aged and prisons.

A quarter of a million workers engaged in making, distributing and showing motion pictures.

Roughly a million of our citizens are directly dependent on film industry for their living.

Motion pictures thus affects nearly every trade and profession.

As an example, $67,000,000 go annually to the newspapers and magazines of the country for advertising. Thus, the printer, lithographer, the paper manufacturer, and publisher are all affected.

More silver is used in treating motion pictures than in making silver coin.

Thousands of bales of cotton are needed in the manufacture of film base.

Howard University, Columbia, Washington University, Pennsylvania, Western Reserve, and other great educational institutions are now giving special study to the development of the motion picture as an art and as a business.

Dolores Del Rio To Be Starred In "Romona," For United Artists

D OLORES DEL RIO will be starred in a United Artists picture, "Ramona," which Mr. Carewe will direct and co-produce with Inspiration Pictures in California as soon as Miss Del Rio has finished "The Trail of '98."

Mr. Carewe left for California yesterday to begin work on the scenario of "Ramona," a film version of Helen Hunt Jackson's novel.

Miss del Rio, a native of Durango, Mexico, will play a Mexican girl in "Ramona." She was a French girl in "What Price Glory" and in the Inspiration-Carewe production of Tolstoy's "Resurrection" (United Artists), she is "Katusha Maslova," Tolstoy's Russian heroine.

Gloria Swanson, back in Hollywood after two years in the east, is greeted by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks in Los Angeles.

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

The Winning Combination

Advertising will not put over mediocre pictures any more than it will put over a poor cake of soap or a poor can of soup. The first requisite for a successful advertising campaign is a quality product. But every retail dealer in the land knows that a product of real merit, backed up by extensive advertising, is his best seller. And this is just as true of motion pictures as of anything else.

Highest merit, supported by service and advertising, makes Educational Pictures your "best sellers" among short features. They have long been recognized as the dominant quality leaders in their field. And they were the first short features to be advertised nationally to your patrons—in fact, the only short features that have had consistent magazine advertising.

Educational Pictures have been making new friends and extra profit for a steadily increasing number of exhibitors for seven years—there are 13,000 theatres showing them now. And they are the short features you can depend on most confidently for continued quality, service, advertising support, and box-office profit, next season.

Temple Bailey Signs Contract With F. B. O. For Five Years

IN KEEPING WITH their policy of lining up those authors with the greatest following among the reading public, an announcement is made by Joseph P. Kennedy, president of Film Booking Offices, that Temple Bailey, one of the most popular of novelists, has affixed her signature to a five-year contract, by the terms of which F. B. O. acquires the rights to film every novel that comes from her pen during this period.

The first production to be filmed is "Wallflowers," a serial in Good Housekeeping Magazine.

Temple Bailey has written thirteen novels to date, which include "Judy," "Glory of Youth," "Contrary Mary," "Mistress Anne," "Adventure in Childhood," "The Tin Soldier," "The Trumpeter Swan," "Gay Cockade,"

"The Dim Lantern," "Peacock Feathers," "The Holly Edge" and "The Blue Window."

In commenting on Miss Bailey's affiliation with F. B. O. and the purchase of "Wallflowers," Mr. Kennedy said:

"Miss Bailey's novels are in the same class with Gene Stratton-Porter's. Her following is legion, and there is a ready made audience of over 1,500,000 who have already read 'Wallflowers' in Good Housekeeping Magazine, with several millions who will read it in book form, awaiting the screen version of the novel.

"We are planning to launch a nation-wide publicity and advertising campaign for each film as soon as it appears in book form and is ready for screening."

Bacon Will Direct "Maryland"; Crosland To Do Another Film

PRODUCTION news from the Warner studio this week states that "The Heart of Maryland" will be directed by Lloyd Bacon, and not by Alan Crosland, who was originally scheduled to make this story to be released before the end of the current season.

Director Crosland will pick up the megaphone for another production, soon to be announced.

Dolores Costello's next starring vehicle, as yet untitled, is now being cast. An interesting group of players has been assembled with Betty Blyth returning to the screen to appear in the production. Opposite Miss Costello will be Malcolm McGregor. The heavy role is to be in the hands of Warner Oland.

The signing of another new director by Warner Bros. is announced in the acquisition of Archie Mayo, lately credited with a number of successful features, but perhaps best known for his comedy work with Educational and Christie. His first assignment is soon to be decided upon.

Other activities on the Warner lot centre about the starting of Syd Chaplin's next comedy special, to be directed by Charles F.

Reisner, who has guided the star's other recent hits to box-office success. The picture is being prepared under the working title of "The Race Track Tout," but a new name will be given it before release. Helene Costello has been chosen as a member of the cast and other selections are now being made.

Irene Rich's newest, "The Climbers," directed by Paul L. Stein, is progressing toward completion. The name of Kathleen Key was the last to be added to the line-up of players.

Edward Everett Horton

POPULAR comedian who is being starred in a series of two-reel comedies now being filmed by Hollywood Production for release through Paramount's new short subject department as one of their first attractions. Mr. Horton scored a big hit in the title role of "Ruggles of Red Gap" and was hailed by the critics and public for his fine portrayal of an unusual role in "The Beggar on Horseback," both for Paramount. He was subsequently signed by Universal and starred with great success in "The Whole Town's Talking" and co-starred with Laura La Plante in "Poker Faces" and with Marian Nixon in "Taxi, Taxi."

Dorothy Sebastian, M-G-M player in "On Ze Boulevard," having a coat of tan removed.

Rupert Julian Production In Rare Preview

"The Yankee Clipper" was given a preview screening at a dinner given in honor of the adjourning Fifty-Fourth General Assembly of Missouri by the Jefferson City Chamber of Commerce, March 22.

Headed by Lieutenant Governor Bennett of Missouri, and Mayor Thomas of Jefferson City, the brilliant assemblage that greeted the Rupert Julian special made for Cecil B. De Mille included the most distinguished representatives of civic and commercial life of Jefferson City and the State of Missouri, and joined the members of the Missouri Legislature in acclaiming "The Yankee Clipper," a masterpiece of realistic sea action and a faithful chronicle of that colorful era of the clipper ship when American sailing ships dominated the seven seas and wrote a glorious page in maritime annals.

"White Flannels" Wins Praise of New York Press

After housing "The Better 'Ole" for six months at advanced prices, the Colony, New York City, has reverted to a continuous performance policy with the Warner Brothers' production, "White Flannels," which scored a distinct hit with Broadway's picturegoers and Broadway's critics.

The metropolitan reviewers found the picture notable as containing what they believe will be rated as one of the year's outstanding performances. This prediction was directed to Louise Dresser's handling of the mother role around which the story's action revolves.

Hopkins Signed

Robert Hopkins, title writer and former columnist on the San Francisco Call, has been signed by Paramount. His first assignments are "The Whirlwind of Youth" and "The Big Sneeze." During the last year and a half Hopkins has titled 43 pictures for Warner Brothers.

Paducah Notes

Irvin S. Cobb is the author of "Turkish Delight," filmed at the De Mille studio under the direction of Paul Sloane.

Miss Haver's Role

Phyllis Haver, the charming blonde of the Cecil B. De Mille lot, becomes a spitting wife in

Menjou to Visit Old Battlefields

Adolphe Menjou has been granted a two-months leave of absence from Paramount studios for a trip to Europe.

Menjou's leave will start as soon as he completes his present picture, as yet untitled. The picture will be finished in a few weeks and Menjou is to be back at the studio in time to start another picture by May 23.

Predicts Gross Of $5,000,000 For "Don Juan"

A few years ago there were producers in the moving picture industry who prophesied that the day would come when pictures would be presented that would gross $1,000,000 in receipts. These men were considered visionary.

Those who laughed at the prophesies do so no longer, for there has loomed up not one but several pictures that have succeeded in eclipsing the $1,000,000 mark. In fact, a $1,000,000 gross has ceased to be the goal set for a successful feature picture.

It is claimed for the John Barrymore film, "Don Juan," that it will have a gross of $5,000,000 easily.

Warner Bros. haven't the slightest doubt that this sum, considered fabulous a few years ago, will be reached before the picture goes into the limbo of the shadows.

"Flats" Breaks All Cleveland Records

"McFadden's Flats," the First National comedy, has completed its fifth week in the Cameo, Cleveland, breaking all records for Cleveland.

It has already broken records in Toledo and Washington.

New Orleans Girl

Leatrice Joy, who plays the starring role in "Vanity," filmed at the De Mille studio, was born in New Orleans.

Vera's First Role

Vera Reynolds, the De Mille star of "The Little Adventuress," first played before the camera in "A Chorus Girl's Romance," featuring Wallace Reid.

Claire Windsor plays the leading feminine role in Universal's "The Claw."

Margaret Livingston in Fox's "Married Alive" and there's certainly nothing dead about this.

Edward Laemmle's Next Picture To Be "Counsel For the Defense"

EDWARD LAEMMLE has been assigned another melodrama for his next production, it has just been announced by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation.

The picture, "Counsel for the Defense," will be a colorful drama of the law courts from the versatile pen of Henry Irving Dodge. It was produced as a play by Cohan and Harris in New York. Charles Logue is writing the script.

Dodge, in addition to a talent for chilling melodramas, has also a flair for comedy, having written "Skinner's Dress Suit," which Universal produced last year with Reginald Denny and Laura La Plante.

Edward Laemmle recently completed "Cheating Cheaters," a melodramatic comedy of the underworld, in which Betty Compson and Kenneth Harlan were featured. Before that he did "Held by the Law," reputed to be one of the most thrilling melodramas of the year, featuring Marguerite de la Motte and Johnny Walker.

Among young Laemmle's other productions are "The Whole Town's Talking," "A Woman's Faith," "The Man in Blue," "Spook Ranch" and "The Still Alarm."

Klein Signed

Philip Klein, son of Charles Klein, the eminent dramatist, has been placed under a long term contract to write and supervise pictures for Fox Films. He recently completed the screen version of "Is Zat So," and is now at work on adaptations.

Milton Sills' Next

"Diamonds In The Rough," the Milton Sills starring vehicle, has reached the midway production mark, it was announced by Ray Rockett, First National producer. This is the first picture in which Natli Barr, celebrated Russian beauty plays opposite the star.

"Rosie O'Grady" Booked In Big Run Theatres

"Sweet Rosie O'Grady" has been chosen as the attraction for the opening of one of Nebraska's finest houses, the Rivoli, in Hastings.

This theatre belongs to the Universal Chain Theatre, and considering that they have the product of practically every old line company under contract, this selection of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" for the opening feature must be taken as an exceptional compliment, not only to the picture, but Columbia Pictures as a whole.

The same picture recently completed a week's run at Stanley's Cedar Theatre in Philadelphia. Joseph Conway, manager of the house, was so impressed with the entertainment value of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" that the Stanley Company broke their two-day policy for the theatre and booked the Columbia comedy for a week.

Mr. Conway put over a special publicity and exploitation campaign on "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" which resulted in record-breaking business.

Bill Cody Starts Western Feature

Bill Cody, whose current feature offering is "The Arizona Whirlwind," has started another big Western for Pathe release at the California studios.

"Out of the Dust" is the working title and Alvin J. Neitz is directing assisted by Joseph Murphy. H. Wenstrom and Dave Smith are at the cameras, with W. S. Johnson, formerly Mary Pickford's illuminating engineer, in charge of the lighting.

John Barrymore, as the gay Francoise Villon in U-A's "The Beloved Rogue."

Fred Kohler to Have Role In "Underworld"

Fred Kohler, whose acting as the top sergeant in "The Rough Riders," now at the George M. Cohan Theatre, has attracted some attention from the critics, has been engaged by Paramount to play an important role in "Underworld," Ben Hecht's original story of gangster life, now being directed by Josef von Sternberg.

The principal role has been entrusted to George Bancroft. Evelyn Brent will play Moll, the girl and Larry Semon will furnish the comedy.

Artclass Makes Animal Serial

Artclass Pictures Corporation announces for the season 1927-28 a wild animal serial, "The Perils of the Jungle," featuring two popular screen stars, twenty elephants, more than one hundred lions, half a dozen hippos, jackals and all the denizens of darkest Africa.

The serial will be released in ten episode form and the first episode will be ready for screening this month. Production is now under way.

Indications point to "The Perils of the Jungle" as representative of the large lineup of product which Artclass is releasing this coming season.

Vera, the Tomboy

Vera Reynolds, the De Mille star of "The Little Adventuress," was once known as "the tomboy of motion pictures."

Gardner James of Inspiration Pictures doing an odd job on a house that "might" look well in Hollywood.

Jack Mulhall trying to keep out of jail in First National's "See You in Jail." Alice Day is the girl.

United Artists' Picture Opens New W. G. V. House in Easton, Pa.

THE BIGGEST SOCIAL and entertainment affair in many years in Easton, Pa., was the opening of the new Wilmer & Vincent Theatre, the Embassy, on March 19.

A series of United Artists pictures has been booked to start the current season of the new Embassy.

The Roland West production of "The Bat" was the premiere attraction when the doors were opened.

Among the United Artists pictures to play following "The Bat" are "The General," "Stella Dallas," "Sparrows," "The Son of the Sheik," "The Black Pirate," "The Love of Sunya," "The Winning of Barbara Worth," "The Beloved Rogue," and "The Night of Love." These will play until June.

Leatrice Joy "Bob"

The famous "Leatrice Joy bob" will be worn again by the fascinating De Mille star in "Vanity."

Julia Faye, who enacts an important role in "Turkish Delight," was featured in the first picture made at the Cecil B. De Mille studio.

Returns to Drama

In response to popular demand Leatrice Joy, De Mille star has returned to strong drama in "Vanity."

Julia Faye, Co-Ed

Born in Virginia, Julia Faye, featured actress of the De Mille studio, who plays an important role in "Turkish Delight," was a co-ed at the University of Illinois.

Lucien Andriot At Camera On Fox's "Carmen"

Lucien Andriot, expert cameraman, is cranking on "Carmen," being made by Raoul Walsh for Fox Films. Andriot has been associated with the screen's greatest stars and has many film successes to his credit.

Dolores del Rio, Victor McLaglen and Don Alvarado are in the principal roles, with Mathilde Comont, Jack Bastain, Ralph Sipperly and Nancy Nash in other important characterizations.

Willis Goldbeck Returns to U. S.

Willis Goldbeck, who wrote the scenario for Rex Ingram's picturization of Robert Hichens's "The Garden of Allah," for Metro-Goldwyn, has returned to the United States after several months spent in southern France and Africa, and will go out to Hollywood after taking a short vacation in the East.

He reports excellent progress by the Ingram company now making "The Garden of Allah" on location in northern Africa.

Goldbeck adapted three of Ingram's outstanding Metro-Goldwyn productions, "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Scaramouche" and "Mare Nostrum" to the screen.

Buck Jones' Next

Buck Jones has just finished "The Holy Terror," and is preparing to begin screening "Good as Gold," a film version of Murry Leinster's story, "Owner of the Aztec." Scott Dunlap will direct production at Fox Films studio in Hollywood. Lambert Hillyer directed "The Holy Terror."

Doty Writes Plot

Douglas Z. Doty, former editor-in-chief of Century Magazine and Cosmopolitan, wrote the plot of "Vanity" for the Cecil B. De Mille studio.

Claire Windsor as a belle of 1870 in M-G-M's "The Bugle Call" starring Jackie Coogan.

Gilbert-Garbo, In Combination, Stands 'Em Up

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Flesh and the Devil," which recently established a world's record by its sensational four week run at the Capitol, New York City, continues to be one of the greatest hits of the season. John Gilbert is starred, with Greta Garbo playing opposite him. Lars Hanson enacts one of the chief roles in this adaptation of Sudermann's "The Undying Past."

The latest reports on the film now playing in the South and Middle West may be summarized thus: "SRO." "Flesh and the Devil" recently opened at the Vendome Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., to establish a new record for the house.

At the same time "Flesh and the Devil" opened at the Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, to capacity business, selling standing room daily.

Work Started On "Finnegan's Ball"

"Finnegan's Ball," to be released as a special production, will bring resumption of activities at the Graf Bros. Studios, San Mateo, Cal., this week, according to Louis Graf, general manager of that plant, formerly known as Pacific Studios.

The production is being made by Pallas Photoplays, a San Francisco corporation, from a story by Max Graf, who will supervise. James P. Hogan will direct.

Charlie McHugh, Aggie Harrington, Mack Swain, Johnnie Heron and Blanche Mehaffey are among the principals.

"Circus Cyclone"

Tom Mix is preparing to start work on "The Circus Cyclone," for which Jack Jungmeyer has written the continuity. Ben Stoloff will direct production at Fox Films Hollywood Studio. Mix has just finished "The Outlaws of Red River," a Gerald Beaumont story which Lew Seiler directed.

Miss Conrad Cast

Dolores Conrad, winner of the Denver Post's beauty contest last year, has been added to the cast of "The Trail of '98," according to advice received at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio from Director Clarence Brown.

Seitz to Direct; Milne On Story

Peter Milne is at work on the story, and shooting will commence as soon as the script is completed.

George B. Seitz has been signed by President Joseph P. Kennedy to direct "The Great Mail Robbery" for F. B. O., one of the Gold Bond productions on the 1927-28 program.

Universal Announces Record Production Schedule, 1927-28

REPORTS that Universal has been planning an unprecedented array of features and short subjects for next season, a production schedule of such proportions as to offer a startling challenge to the industry, were graphically confirmed this week when Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, announced the full details of Universal's program for 1927-28. It is by far the most ambitious program ever laid out by Universal in any one year and will be aptly in keeping with Universal's celebration of its twenty-one years in the field.

Embracing more features than ever before, and especially a great increase in super-production, as well as an enlarged program of short products, the Universal production schedule bids fair to more than match all competitive schedules. It will represent an expenditure of more than $15,500,000, Laemmle states, and will mark Universal's supreme bid for its place in the sun.

Popular Broadway stage successes, world-real novels, and an unusual array of high class screen originals make up the material from which Universal's forthcoming pictures are being made. To carry out this schedule, the Laemmle organization has built up at Universal City a great corps of directors, stars and players. Some of the most popular names on the screen are included among those to be seen in the Laemmle product for next year.

In specials, or super-productions, the schedule calls for a round dozen of this type, an increase of 50 per cent. over previous years.

There also will be thirty-three Jewel pictures, of superior quality, including seven Hoot Gibson Jewels.

Also, Universal will contribute twenty-two other feature pictures to the market, ten of the "thriller" variety, and twelve "fast action" Westerns.

In the Short Subject field, Universal has more than 600 one and two-reel comedies, Westerns, serials, specials and newsreels.

This output will include several series of high-class comedies, and a group of new serials, the quality of which may be judged from the fact that Laemmle has decided to rate the first one, now in production, as a Universal Junior Jewel and present it under his own name.

The funniest thing in Hollywood is a 3-foot crib, according to Nicholas Stuart, who is shown trying to laugh off a hot one handed him by Louise Fazenda, featured player in "Cradle Snatchers," a Howard Hawks production for Fox Films.

This Baby Is Doing Nicely; We Thank You!

"Tell It to the Marines," one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's special productions, continues to uphold the record it established as one of the greatest box-office attractions in the history of the film industry.

The picture is keeping up its remarkable countrywide triumphs by playing to capacity business at the various well-known theatres in Pittsburgh, Washington, D. C., Superior, Wis., and Salt Lake City.

The reports of the theatre managers, the critics and the patrons in the different cities where this film has appeared, are all enthusiastic, the film winning the popular favor of all concerned.

Wires of enthusiastic comment continue to pour in daily at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer office.

Mebbe a Kelly Was the Manager

H. C. Cohen, manager of the Los Angeles exchange of Film Booking Offices, sold "A Regular Scout," an F. B. O. picture starring Fred Thomson, to the Broadway Palace Theatre, Los Angeles, for a two-week run. This is a record engagement for that theatre.

Ray's Rare Role

Hungarian Actor

Victor Varconi, De Mille featured player, who enacts an important role in "The Little Adventuress," was born near Budapest, the Hungarian capital.

Wins New Contract

Dorothy Sebastian, who has just completed four picture roles at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, has been given a new contract.

St. Polis Cast

John St. Polis has been added to the cast of Lon Chaney's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, "The Unknown," which Tod Browning is directing.

Ralph Ince On F. B. O. Contract

Joseph P. Kennedy, president of Film Booking Offices, announces that Ralph Ince, one of the best known directors in the industry, this week affixed his signature to a five-year contract with F. B. O.

Ince has been responsible for some of the biggest box office successes that have emanated from the F. B. O. studios.

Five Ready For Stern Series of "Buster Brown"

The new Buster Brown Comedies, being made by the Stern Brothers for Universal release next year, are coming through in fine shape, according to reports from the Stern Brothers studio in Hollywood. Five two-reelers of the new series already have been completed.

The first of the new series has just been received in New York. It is "Buster's Home Life" and when previewed a day or so ago by Universal executives and home office department heads, it was hailed as the beginning of a new style in Buster Brown comedies.

Ramon Novarro Stars Next In Conrad's Novel

"Romance," Joseph Conrad's novel, will be Ramon Novarro's next vehicle as soon as the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star completes work in the spectacular screen version of "Old Heidelberg," now being made under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch, with Norma Shearer co-starred in the feminine lead.

John S. Robertson will be the director of "Romance."

Signs Russian Girl

Vera Veronina, Russian beauty who was recently brought to Hollywood under contract to Paramount, has been assigned an important emotional role in the new Pola Negri starring picture, "The Woman on Trial."

Krafft Contract

John Krafft, one of the greatest title writers in the motion picture industry, has been placed under a renewed and long term contract by the Cecil B. DeMille Studio.

Betty Compson as she appears in the Edward Laemmle production, "Cheating Cheaters."

Barbara Bedford, just three in June and her Mother, Barbara Bedford, who is soon to be seen in First National's "The Notorious Lady."

Murnau Insists Camera Angles Shall Be "Dramatic," If Anything

"INTERESTING camera angles" were given a knockout blow by F. W. Murnau, the German director, at a luncheon in his honor at the Ritz Carlton Hotel, last week, just prior to sailing for Germany to complete his contract with UFA.

He will later return to America to direct for Fox Films, with whom he has signed a five-year contract.

Mr. Murnau has just completed his first American made picture for Fox Films at that company's Hollywood studios. This film, "Sunrise," is the most ambitious ever undertaken by Fox.

"When it was announced that I was coming to the United States, there was one question that was asked most by your newspapers and magazines devoted to pictures: What will you be able to do with American studio facilities? You will have to judge and to answer that yourselves when you see my Fox picture, 'Sunrise.'

"I like the spirit of friendship with which everybody who worked in my unit stood at my side, always willing to give his best, always willing to help me. In this way they all created an atmosphere of harmony in which even the hardest work became a pleasure. That is the only atmosphere in which art can grow.

"There is one subject I would like to talk to you about, that is the interesting camera angle in pictures. You cannot open a newspaper or a magazine dealing with the screen without reading about it, you cannot start a conversation about the movies among your friends without hearing it again and again. Interesting camera angles: It seems to be the most used—I think also the most abused term in pictures—talking, reading, and producing. Such a thing as an interesting camera angle should not exist. By itself an interesting camera angle does not mean a thing. If it does not help to intensify the dramatic action of the scene it is not only useless, it is dangerous, because instead of helping the dramatic action, it detracts from it.

"But what should the camera angle be if not interesting? It should be dramatic. That is to say, a camera angle that helps to intensify the dramatic action of the scene. If you use the phrase 'interesting camera angle,' it implies an adverse criticism, while the phrase 'dramatic camera angle,' conveys high praise. This subject certainly brings to your mind the foreign director, for it is in connection with him that it is usually mentioned. When we talk of art we cannot talk of countries. An artist really cannot be classified by nationality. He is international and the thing which he creates is international.

"Some publications, dedicated to sensationalism in pictures, have referred to the 'foreign invasion' in the film world. How can there be a foreign invasion in art? You would not differentiate between Kreisler and Spaulding, because one is a European and the other an American. Both are great violinists. There are no border lines in art. We, in Germany, would be proud to have a motion picture industry so large as to attract the greatest directors this side of the Atlantic Ocean to show their art in competition with our own. In art, like in every other form of creation, the best work is obtained through competition."

Severe Storm Fails to Stop "Trail of '98"

Despite one of the severest snow storms that ever visited the state of Colorado, a storm that last week lashed with fury the heights of the Rocky mountains where Clarence Brown and a large cast of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer players are on location filming the gold rush sequences for the Robert W. Service's famous story "The Trail of '98," work on the picture was not impeded.

"This is the kind of weather that the gold seekers of the Yukon were forced to contend with," said Director Brown, while the blizzard was raging its fiercest, "and it was because of the frequency and severity of the storms in the Rockies that I chose this location to properly record the sufferings and hardships of those who risked all in the mad quest for gold."

Scenarists Go West

Two scenarists of the Paramount Long Island studio staff departed last Sunday for Hollywood. They are Becky Gardiner, who adapted "Cabaret," Gilda Gray's new starring picture from Owen Davis' original story, and Howard Emmett Rogers, author of "Paradise for Two," a recent Richard Dix film, and adapter of Thomas Meighan's "The Canadian."

Schildkraut's Role

Rudolph Schildkraut, the "man of a thousand expressions," is co-featured with Julia Faye in "Turkish Delight" which is being filmed at the Cecil B. De Mille studio.

Carmel Myers, M-G-M feature player, impersonating a peacock.

Sterns Acquire Chicago Beauty From Universal

Julius Stern, president of the Stern Film Corporation, makers of two-reel comedies for Universal release, reports that he has signed Florence Allen, Chicago beauty contest winner, for appearance in Stern Brothers Comedies.

Miss Allen, a statuesque blonde, was selected as the most beautiful young woman in Chicago a year ago in connection with the beauty contest staged in that city by Universal's See America First Tour. She received a contract with Universal and for the past year has been appearing in Universal pictures.

The Stern Brothers liked her work and sought a release for her from Universal. This finally was obtained and she is now on the Stern Brothers lot.

International's Chinese Views

A mad jumble of soldiers, homeless refugees, wandering children, bewildered thousands, seeking safety behind the barbed wire barricades of the foreign zone, such is Shanghai, China, a city of chaos, as pictured exclusively by International Newsreel, in its current issue No. 26.

The pictures arrived in New York by airplane from Vancouver on Thursday evening, having reached that city thirty-six hours earlier, from Ariel L. Varges, head of International Newsreel's bureau in China.

The pictures show the terror that reigns in Shanghai, and the wild scenes of confusion as the besieged city awaited its fate.

Ray-Miller Serial, 'Hawk of the Hills'

Pathe has placed "The Hawk of the Hills," a new ten chapter serial in production at the Fine Arts Studio in California.

Allene Ray and Walter Miller are the stars. Their supporting cast will be headed by three Pathe veterans; each of whom has appeared in more than 250 reels of Pathe pictures. They are Paul Panzer, Frank Lackteen and Wally Oettel. The remainder of the cast is now being engaged by casting director Thomas Storey.

Blondes-Brunettes

Nearly all the pretty girls on the roster of the Christie Studio appear in "Dumb Belles," the new Educational-Billy Dooley Comedy in which the "dippy tar" comedian is starred. And there are nearly as many brunettes as blondes in the squad of beauties who cavort in this picture.

Pathe News Helps President Coolidge Pick Summer Home

Pioneer News Reel Extends Cooperation to Nation's Chief Executive, Choosing Domicile For His Vacation

Margaret Hampton, who gained fame in Mack Sennett and Hal Roach Comedies, appears as a full fledged leading lady in Pathe's "The Arizona Whirlwind."

HELPING President Coolidge pick a summer White House is a timely and exclusive feature in Pathe News No. 26. This reel presents scenes of possible summer White Houses in Western territory in vivid reality, offering the Chief Executive and the people of the Nation first-hand views of some of the Western homes available for President Coolidge's vacation occupancy.

The idea for this ingenious presentation of pictorial views of available "White Houses" was conceived by Ray Hall, editor of Pathe News, and he immediately instructed cameramen throughout these territories to "shoot" the most attractive scenes of the various homes for this special feature.

Theatre patrons throughout the country will have an opportunity to see these scenes this week, and a special reel has been presented by M. H. McIntyre, Pathe News Washington representative, to President Coolidge, so that he may make his selection at leisure.

Among these exclusive pictures of beautiful homes offered for Mr. Coolidge for his summer vacation are: El Pomar, the Penrose estate at Colorado Springs, thrown out in relief by the majestic background of the Rockies; the Crozier camp, located at the Michigan resort of Harbor Springs, a picturesque locality that aspires to be the summer capitol. At this location the President would occupy a large rustic edifice of logs, which is still under construction, but would offer him a brand-new house; Pine Crest Inn, a low rambling residence located at an elevation of 6,500 feet in the secluded Wasatch Mountains of Utah, the William R. Coe estate outside of Cody, Wyoming—a rambling bungalow type of house with many open fireplaces. Here Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Robertson, a most genial couple, the caretakers of the ranch, would be possible hosts to Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge; the State Game Lodge in the Black Hills of South Dakota. The reservation is full of game and the highways to the house wind through a natural wonderland where rough-riding cowboys of the real West are ready to welcome the President.

This is the first time on record that the nation at large has had an opportunity to view at "first hand," the numerous summer White Houses under consideration by a Chief Executive.

Billy Bevan in Sennett Comedy

Billy Bevan, famous for his comicalities in Pathe comedies produced by Mack Sennett, has returned to the noted producer's lot in Hollywood, being cast in a prominent role in the current Madeline Hurluck-Eddie Quillan vehicle being directed by Earl Rodney.

Phil Whitman and Jefferson Moffitt are responsible for the story. In addition to Bevan, the supporting cast includes Andy Clyde and Barney Hellum.

Country's Foremost Showmen Book New M-G-M Newsreel

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER announces that some of the foremost exhibitors and circuit managers in the country already have booked the new M-G-M News Reel, which makes its bow on the market with the issue of August 17, and will be distributed twice weekly thereafter.

Confidence in the new product, which is backed by the vast resources of the Hearst organization, has been expressed in very substantial form in the shape of contracts with such outstanding showmen as Major Edward Bowes, John McGuirk, S. L. Rothafel, Stanley Chambers, I. Libson, J. H. Kunsy and many others. This is considered a very unusual demonstration of approval in the new project, announcement of the formation of which was made recently by Nicholas M. Schenck.

The list of prominent exhibitors and theatres which have been among the first to book the News Reel includes the Capitol and the Roxy, New York City; Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y.; Stanley Circuit in Philadelphia; Kunsy Theatres in Detroit; M. B. Shanberg Circuit in Kansas City; Grombacher Circuit in Spokane, Wash.; Libson Theatres in Cincinnati; Nathan Yamins Circuit in Fall River, Mass.; Stanley Chambers in Wichita, Kan.; Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City; Grand Theatre, Salina, Kan.; Midland Theatre, Pittsburg, Kan.; the New State Theatre, Springfield, Ohio; and the entire Loew Circuit.

Fred C. Quimby, who has been appointed to handle sales for the M-G-M Short Subjects Department, points out that the News Reel should mark an innovation in standards of efficiency, since the backing of the extensive Hearst news gathering facilities insures the maximum of speed and service. The Hearst controlled newspapers throughout the country now number twenty-seven, and magazines of national circulation operated by the same organization include some of the country's best known periodicals.

This association has the largest staff in the world and, although the production of the News Reel will be entirely independent, this worldwide news-hunting force obviously is an unexcelled guarantee of service.

Grantland Rice's "Water Sprites" In Roxy Theatre

"Water Sprites," a splendid Spring season Grantland Rice Sportlight, produced for Pathe by J. L. Hawkinson, was shown at the Roxy last week.

The turn to water sports in the last few years has been phenomenal, especially so on the part of women, who have broken more records than anyone ever dreamed to be possible.

There is something more in water sports than record breaking, and the modern girl is proving that there is the possibility of grace and beauty and artistic effort that is more exciting to look upon than any 100-yard dash to a new split-second mark.

John L. Hawkinson, producer of the Grantland Rice Sportlights series, took eight of the leading girl swimmers to Bermuda.

In this list of crack women swimmers and divers are Martha Norelius, Agnes Geraghty, Helen Meany and other champions and record holders.

Vernon Locked Up

Bobby Vernon "tells it to the judge" in "Jail Birdies," his latest comedy for Educational, which is being released in April. Arrested for speeding, Bobby has to explain why he was traveling so fast to Tom Dempsey, who plays the role of police judge.

Brothers' Fight

Wallace Lupino, a brother of Lupino Lane, is cast as the villain in "Naughty Boy," the latest Educational-Lupino Lane Comedy. The scenario calls for Lane to win a rough-and-tumble fight with Brother Wallace, and he does it with alacrity.

"Come Hither"

The piquant Eleanor Black throwing a "come hither" at some poor victim. She's a Mack Sennett beauty appearing in Pathe comedies.

"Melting Millions," Patheserial, Goes to Showmen on April 10

LOVE, ADVENTURE, INTRIGUE, MYSTERY AND THRILLS are featured in "Melting Millions," the latest Patheserial, the first chapter of which is released on the short feature program of April 10th. Also on this program is Charley Chase's latest comedy effort "Forgotten Sweeties"; Pathe Review 15; "The Honor Man," one of Aesop's Film Fables; Topics of the Day No. 15 and two issues of Pathe News, the pioneer news reel.

Allene Ray and Walter Miller co-star in "Melting Millions," the new ten chapter serial written by Joseph Anthony Roach and directed by Spencer Bennet. The plot is replete with mystery.

Pathe Review No. 15 presents: "Down in Tropic Banana Land"; Harvesting, packing and loading bananas in Colombia, S. A.; "A World Center of Learning": Glimpses in color of Cambridge University, England, an ancient institution and today one of the world's famous colleges; "If a Table Could Talk": A novelty subject on furniture; "Shanghai Super-Cops."

Allene Ray and Walter Miller in a Scene in their forthcoming Patheserial, "Melting Millions."

Jack Duffy Has Completed His Christie Comedy

That genial young "grandpa" of chin-whisker fame, Jack Duffy, has just completed a new Educational-Christie Comedy, "Queer Ducks." Duffy has gone to San Francisco for a brief vacation but he will M P W—Twenty-Two Voyt 3.00 return as soon as the picture is edited and ready for review.

Hal Conklin, who wrote "Queer Ducks," has woven a tale of golf weddings and golf widows that is crowded with hilarious situations. Ann Christy, who was recently elevated to play leading roles as the first "real Christy girl" at the Christie Studios, appears as the leading feminine player. Harold Beaudine, director was assisted by Eddie Baker, who has taken comedy roles and aided in the direction of numerous outstanding comedy productions made by Christie this year.

In the supporting roles will be Billy Engle, Jimmie Harrison, Gus Leonard, George French and the Christie beauties, who include Gail Lloyd, Evelyn Egan, Elinor Black and Helen Cox.

Pathe Is Ready With Baseball

Available on Pathe's program of releases for Spring and Summer are many subjects, featuring the great national pastime, baseball. Numbered among these are two big feature pictures, "Play Ball" and "The Battling Orioles," the Grantland Rice Sportlights, Pathe News, and several comedy films.

There will undoubtedly be a heavy demand on the part of exhibitors for pictures woven around baseball, due to the nation-wide interest centered on the sport at this time of the year.

Mildred Kornman Returns to Work

Mildred Kornman, eighteen-months-old-baby in Pathe's "Our Gang" comedies, has returned to studio work in the current Hal Roach comedy with the "Gang" after a couple of month's traveling visit with her older sister, Mary Kornman, who was in vaudeville with Mickey Daniels.

Mildred was taken from the "Gang" on three months' leave by her mother, but the leave of absence was automatically cut short when Mary became ill in Chicago and was rushed home to recuperate in Hollywood.

Jean Darling, recently made the "leading lady" of "Our Gang" comedies, and who bears the screen name of "Bossie," is reported by Directors Anthony Mack and Charles Oelze to be a real "find" and a success in the particular roles given her. She is four years old.

To Do Originals

Agnes Christine Johnston, who scenarized "Beverly of Graustark," and Marion Davies's new starring vehicle "Tillie the Toiler," will contribute originals and also adapt a number of other authors for M-G-M.

Tie-Ups Await Two Fox Films

Showmen playing "The Music Master" and "One Increasing Purpose," Fox pictures, will find a splendid window tie-up available with Cook Shops, as Grasset and Dunlap, publishers, have issued popular editions of these works, illustrated with "stills" from the pictures.

Sixteen Years Of Pathe News

Peter D. Beckero of the City Theatre in Highland Falls, N. Y., informs Pathe Exchange, Inc., that he has been a continual user of Pathe News for the last sixteen years and that he finds that it has a particular draw week in and week out.

In discussing his success with the Pathe News Reel, Mr. Beckero stated that he knows of at least fifty or sixty patrons who come regularly to see the Pathe News reel. He also stated that there were eight or nine high military officers from West Point who come each week to see the news events, leaving immediately after its screening.

Mr. Beckero played Pathe News on his opening program when the pioneer news reel was but a year old and he has kept pace with its progress ever since and is one of the strongest boosters of the House of Pathe.

"The Vision," An Educational Release, Wins 1926 Gold Medal

A facsimile of the Hugo Riesenfeld Gold Medal awarded "The Vision," Educational's Romance Production. Both sides of the medal are shown, with the inscription which has been engraved on one side.

THE Hugo Riesenfeld Gold Medal for 1926 has been awarded to "The Vision," Educational's Romance Production in Technicolor, as the most novel Short Subject motion picture released in this country last year.

The outstanding honor in the Short Subject field was awarded to this two-reel dramatic subject by vote of a committee consisting of Harold B. Franklin, for a number of years head of the Paramount Theatre Department; David J. Chatkin, Short Subject buyer for the Publix Theatres; Joe Plunkett, manager of the Strand Theatre, New York City, and Frank Newman, manager of Sid Grauman's Metropolitan and Million Dollar Theatres in Los Angeles.

The Riesenfeld Medal is given annually to the producer of the best Short Subject, exclusive of comedies, during the year.

This is the second year in succession that an Educational Picture has been awarded the Riesenfeld Medal, "The Voice of the Nightingale," another Short Feature made for Educational, having won the distinction of being the most novel Short Subject in 1925, when the Riesenfeld Medal was awarded for the first time.

An interesting fact in connection with the vote of the committee is that every vote cast by the committee was for an Educational release.

"The Vision," released on May 2, 1926, by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., was the first of a group of Romance Productions. It was done entirely in natural colors by the Technicolor Process.

All the Romance Productions were based on Arthur Maude's conception of the history of world famous paintings.

In the case of "The Vision," the story told in this two-reel Short Feature was Maude's interpretation of what inspired John Everett Millais to paint his masterpiece, "Speak! Speak!" now hanging in the Tate Gallery, London.

Werner Goes West To Arrange "Uncle Tom's Cabin" Road Show

DAVID C. WERNER, theatrical expert and stage advisor for the Universal Pictures Corporation, has just left the Universal home office in New York for Los Angeles at the call of Carl Laemmle. He is speeding to Universal City to confer with Laemmle on the plan now being devised for the road-showing of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the big super-picture now nearing completion at Universal City under the direction of Harry Pollard.

Werner, who joined the Universal organization a year ago after several years as an executive of the stage producing firm, Lewis and Gordon, will aid Laemmle in completing arrangements for the handling of the big 'super-picture' in legitimate and other theatres all over the country.

The magnitude of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the fact that this great show, more than any other attraction ever adapted to the screen, is typical road-show material, have convinced Universal that the picture should be handled in this way.

Duck Saves Felix

Felix the Cat proves to be a good samaritan in "Felix the Cat in Barn Yarns," his latest animated cartoon comedy released by Educational. A duck saves him from a watery grave and Felix, in return, rescues the kindly duck.

"Big Boy" To Star in Films

"BIG BOY," three-year-old star who has played the principal comedy roles in Educational-Juvenile Comedies in the 1926-27 season, is considered such a versatile player even at his age and such a favorite with comedy fans that he will have a series of comedies named after him. Announcement of this has been made by Educational, which will star "Big Boy" in a series of eight Big Boy-Juvenile Comedies in 1927-28.

"Big Boy's" rise to stardom has been one of the wonders of the picture world. Beginning as an "extra," when he was barely able to toddle about the Educational Studios back in 1924 and 1925, his ascent was so rapid that before the close of that season, he had won the right to be named in the cast of a Juvenile Comedy. He was cast as the "baby" in "Baby Blues," released in June, 1925, although he was only eighteen months old when this picture was produced.

The 1925-26 season saw "Big Boy" making even greater strides, for he was co-featured in the initial Juvenile Comedy, "Baby Be Good," which was released in October, 1925. The youngster had not reached his second birthday when it was made. His work in this comedy was of such caliber that he was featured in the next comedy "Bachelor's Babies." "Big Boy" had just passed his second birthday when this comedy was released in December, 1925.

In all subsequent Juvenile Comedies this kid star was the featured player of the series. With the advent of the present season, "Big Boy" was given real star roles, being featured prominently in the six Juvenile Comedies of the year.

His work in his first four pictures in this series—"My Kid," "Open Spaces," "Funny Faces," and "Grandpa's Boy" was of such outstanding merit that it was decided to give him name to the series of comedies he has done so much to popularize.

Four Units At Work On "Wings"

Four separate units at work upon the same motion picture simultaneously at locations many thousands of miles apart was the record established during the filming of "Wings," Paramount's air service epic.

Two units of the company were shooting near San Antonio, Tex., fifty miles apart, while at the same time in Hollywood, another group was taking insert shots.

Simultaneously, in Paris, H. D'Abadie D'Arrast was photographing Parisian scenes.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"Breaking Records"

Universal—Two Reels

With this issue, No. 10 of "The Collegians" series, the college term is shown coming to an end. George Lewis, pictured here, is, of course, the hero, with Eddie Phillips as Trent and Dorothy Gulliver as the girl. There is a pole vault in which Lewis, as usual, is the victor, but Phillips has the misfortune to have his pole break. Much of the footage is taken up with the final class dinner of the winning Freshman, with Phillips as the guest of honor. And the episode closes with Phillips apologizing for the mean tricks he has attempted to pull on George, and they depart for the summer vacations as the best of friends. This series, which we understand will be followed by a number of other episodes taking up the new college year, has been a cracker-jack, and the high standard of the first has been held up all the way through.

"Taking the Air"

Pathe—One Reel

IN THIS AESOP'S FABLE cartoon, Farmer Al sets out to win a prize offered for the aviator who establishes a new altitude record. His first attempt lands him at the foot of a precipice. The second time he goes up so high that he only comes down because the machine blows up. He wins the prize, which turns out to be a bag of mice. It is an amusing number.

"Hot Lightning"

Educational—Two Reels

Clem Beauchamp is featured in this Mermaid Comedy, with Lucille Hutton in the leading feminine role. The action concerns a scapgrace young chap who is invited by his aunt, who owns a hotel, to come and be the manager. Between a professional reformer, his pretty daughter, a suspicious hotel detective and the chap's aunt there are a series of amusing complications. To add to this, Clem manages to get hold of a patented lightning attractor that does its work too well and creates havoc during a severe storm. There is a rapid succession of hilarious slapstick, ending with the house being flooded and a complete wreck.

"Felix Sees 'Em in Season"

Educational—One Reel

THE COMING OF SPRING furnishes the inspiration for this timely Pat Sullivan cartoon, in which Felix and the others are first inspired by the death of winter but finally fall victim to spring fever. This subject has been cleverly handled and a particularly fine bit of animation shows Felix chasing a mouse. The effect of "slow motion" is achieved and both cat and mouse gradually slow down and finally abandon the chase.

"The Last Word"

Fox—Two Reels

Charles "Heinie" Conklin appears as a tough burglar in this number of the "Helen and Warren" series with Kathryn Perry and Allan Forrest who is pictured here. This time, Helen goes in for uplift work and becomes interested in a burglar and invites him to her home. He falls in love with her and resents the appearance of her husband, who he mistakes for a burglar and an interloper. The appearance of police looking for the real crook finally save the situation and Helen is forced to admit that she muddled things up and that Allan maybe is right, after all. There are some amusing situations and it is up to the standard of the series.

"Duck Soup"

Pathe—Two Reels

Two tramps certainly manage to fall in soft in this Hal Roach comedy. Stan Laurel, pictured here, and Oliver Hardy appear in these roles. It is an amusing comedy with quite a lot of laughable situations, several of which are of a familiar type but cleverly handled. The two gentlemen of leisure learn that the owner of a mansion has gone away and they invade it. A couple, played by William Austin and Madeline Hurlock, come along and the tramps rent the place to them and, of course, the real owner comes along and the tramps rough-house him. As the result of all this, there is a lot of complications that will evoke laughter from the majority of patrons.

"The Frost Line"

Pathe—One Reel

WINTER SPORTS FURNISHES the subject of this the newest of Grantland Rice's spotlight series. The spectator is taken to the big white spaces and sees a variety of snow and ice sports, such as sledding, skiing, skating, with champions in the different lines doing dare-devil stunts as well as exhibiting the grace that aided in making them champions. Both men and women contribute to this interesting reel.

"Somebody's Fault"

Educational—Two Reels

To the variety of roles in which he has already appeared, Lloyd Hamilton in this comedy adds that of a boob electrician, and, of course, he manages to mix everything up with increasing disastrous results that mean merriment for the slapstick fan. He muddles up the shop and is sent to a pretty girl's home where he connects a high voltage wire with the house circuit. The result is that the vacuum cleaner sucks up everything in sight, the radio swells up and bursts, the piano goes to pieces, and in fixing it Hamilton manages to blow up the whole house. Some of the situations are familiar, but there are a number of new ones, and they are cleverly handled.

"The Pride of Pipe-rock"

Universal—Two Reels

Pee-Wee Holmes, pictured here, and Ben Corbett keep up their rivalry for the hand of pretty Susie Harper, portrayed by Dorothy Kitchen, in this, the newest of the Pipe Rock series of Western Comedies. Both propose and Ben, thinking he has been accepted, arranges for a big wedding, but when he starts to kiss the bride it turns out that Pee-Wee is masquerading in her place. The humor in this subject is moderately amusing but seems considerably forced. After the wedding fiasco, other complications are introduced, including an exciting time when it is rumored that Susie is ill and it develops that it is only Susie's kitten which has the same name. Vin Moore directed as usual.

"A Small Town Princess"

Pathe—Two Reels

Moving picture making furnishes the idea of this Mack Sennett Comedy featuring Billy Bevan and Madeline Hurlock, with Bevan again appearing without his familiar make-up. Of course, the subject is handled with a straight comedy vein with considerable burlesque of the idea of star making. Madeline is cast as a country girl from Paris—Iowa—who is ambitious, and finally lands in Hollywood. She is signed by two producers amusingly played by Nat Carr and Bud Ross, as a Russian princess, at a high salary, and finally lands the handsome leading man whose pictures she has admired in the papers. It fact, this was the real object of her going to Hollywood. There are a number of good laughs and it should prove a popular comedy number.

"She's My Cousin"

Universal—Two Reels

This episode of the Excuse Makers series featuring Charley King and Constance Darling is amusing farce with a sprinkling of slapstick which should please the average patron. It is one of the best of the series. Charley, a woman-hater, finally falls so suddenly that he does not have time to hide the evidence of his former affairs before he brings wife home. Photographs, stockings, etc., and finally one of his lady loves who appears on the scene and whom he introduces as a cousin, keep him in hot water.

"Bruce Scenics"

Educational—One Reel

HAWAIIAN BEAUTY SPOTS AS unfolded in panoramic form from a railway train furnishes the subject of the first section of this Bruce Scenic under the title "Hawaii from a Car Window," while "The Harbor Beacon" is the second subject, the light house being shown from various angles and in various lights. It is a good Bruce number with the first half consisting of scenic beauties, while the second half has a striking cloud and light effects with Bruce's usual fine composition and photography.

Illinois

Chicago, Ill., Mar. 30.*

THE Balaban and Katz circuit have organized a baseball league among the various theatres of that organization and Lubliner and Trinz. In addition the sport of wrestling will be promoted among the house staffs of the various theatres. In the basketball tournament, the Oriental theatre team won the championship from the Chicago theatre boys, by the close score of 26 to 24. Lloyd Bruder is coach in charge of the sports for the Balaban & Katz organization.

Frank Schaefer of the Crystal theatre is back on the job after several days' illness, and J. J. Daily of the Southern theatre at Oak Park, Ill., is also back in harness after a tough session with the flu.

Ben Serkovich of the Balaban and Katz publicity staff has gone to Omaha to handle the publicity campaign on the opening of the new Riviera theatre in that city, and Lloyd Lewis of the B. and K. Staff has returned from a French Lick vacation. John Balaban is expected back shortly from his Florida trip and the publicity department reports the Gertrude Ederle engagement at the Chicago and Uptown theatres as record breakers. She will play the Tivoli, the de luxe south side theatre of the circuit, early in March.

The Oddfellows Lodge have closed a deal for the Shoaff theatre at Paris, Ill., and they will remodel the building for their own use.

W. D. Alexander is planning to build a 1,500 seat picture theatre at Bloomington, Ill., and has purchased a site for the new house, according to word from that city.

The Central Park Theatre of the B and K circuit will add an eight piece orchestra under the direction of Jole Lichter to the program of that house. The managers of the big circuit now have a house organ of their own under the name of the Department News.

Senator Roy C. Woods of this city has introduced a bill in the State Senate at Springfield for more drastic censorship of theatres and other amusement places. The bill comes from the office of State's Attorney Crowe where it was drawn by Assistant State's Attorney Frank Peska at the bequest of the Law Enforcement Committee of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs.

The Bellflower Theatre at Bellflower, Ill., opened last week to capacity business. This is one of the finest movie theatres in that part of the state.

M. Bogart of Sandwich, Ill., has taken over the interest of Gus Heth in the Plano theatre at Plano, Ill., and plans some improvements in the house.

Kewanee

It is reported that the Great States circuit will build a new movie theatre at Kewanee, Ill., to cost about $75,000 and the circuit has taken over the Valley theatre at Princeton, according to report from that city. The house will be remodeled.

Harry W. Small, Emanuel Simons and N. W. Fein have organized the Reel Goldwin Amusement Corporation with offices at 3256 Argyle avenue, Chicago, to stage presentations and other productions for the theatres.

Kentucky

B. W. DAVIS, 19 years of age, of Greenville, S. C., was so severely burned at 7:15 o'clock last night, by explosion of sixteen reels of film, while operating the projection machine on the Florida Exposition train laying off at Louisville, that it was reported he would lose sight of both eyes.

The car had been fitted up for exhibiting views of Florida, and a small crowd was on board, viewing the showing. There was a flash, and the car filled with smoke. The persons on board rolled off, choked with smoke but uninjured, except in the case of Davis, who fell from the car with first and second degree burns about the face and hands.

Robert H. Lucas, for a number of years one of the youthful and early suburban picture theatre operators, who made moving pictures carry his then slim law practice, has announced that he is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Kentucky.

Paul E. Krieger, manager of the First National Pictures, 913 West Jefferson street, Louisville, has been transferred from the Louisville exchange to the Cincinnati division, after six years of fine work here, handling Kentucky and Tennessee distribution. Previously he was in Washington as manager of the Fox exchange for some years. He was originally a resident of Cincinnati. Maurice White, formerly assistant manager of the Cincinnati division of First National, and more recently managing the Cincinnati Educational Exchange, succeeds Krieger at Louisville.

Milton Washington, negro, has been sentenced to twenty years for robbery and assault of Abe Finberg, manager of the Gayety Theatre, Louisville. The negro and an accomplice ran Finberg's auto into the curbing with a stolen machine, struck him on the head, and robbed him, while his wife and family were with him in the machine.

About fifteen patrons of the Orpheum Theatre filed out when a film recently took fire. The rest kept their seats. The projectionist closed the shutter from the projection room, while the watchman turned in an alarm. There was no excitement.

B. J. Curry, Louisville, has recently purchased the Strand Theatre, at Shelbyville, Ky., from Walter F. Jurt and D. A. Revel Lynch, who in turn purchased the property last summer from M. O'Sullivan.

It has been announced that contracts have been let for work to cost about $100,000 in completing the theatre in the Union Labor Temple, Louisville, on Market street, near Second. The Webb Clark Co., Louisville, received the contract. The building was completed, other than the theatre, some time ago, but the latter was not finished, due to lack of funds at that time. The old site for many years was occupied by Music Hall, including a theatre which did quite well with pictures and cheap vaudeville.

It has been announced that work on the new $1,500,000 theatre building, on Fourth street, to be leased by the Loew interests of New York, will be started within a few days. It is planned to complete the building by April 1, 1928, according to Menefee Wigram, vice-president of the Fidelity & Columbia Trust Co., which will erect the building on a half million dollar lot.

IN the new Masonic Temple to be built in the near future in Troy, N. Y., a huge motion picture theatre may be included. The architect's plans already drawn for the temple include such a theatre and it is said that a lease for a long term will be offered to F. F. Proctor, who already operates two theatres in Troy. The new Masonic Temple will be located directly across the street from the Griswold Theatre, now operated by Proctor, but which has been purchased by a business concern which will occupy it within a comparatively short time.

Having recovered from a threatened attack of pneumonia, William Smalley, of Cooperstown, owner of a chain of more than a dozen motion picture houses in central New York, made his appearance on Albany's Film Row, last week, and was warmly welcomed. Mr. Smalley was brimful of news and stated that he would build a new house in Stamford this summer with at least $60 seats and possibly an additional 200 if he puts in a balcony.

Glens Falls

Fred Maussert, of Glens Falls, has one regret these days, and that is that he did not make his new business block, which stands in front of his theatre, with an arcade leading to the latter, much larger. Mr. Maussert has rented all the stores in the block, which will be completed as soon as the necessary marble arrives.

Ilion

Bob Pierce, of Ilion, one of the best known exhibitors in central New York, has been nursing a decidedly sore thumb during the past week or so. The accident occurred while Mr. Pierce was bowling, a game at which he has but few superiors in this part of the state. In the neighboring city of Utica, Nate Robbins has just broken ground for a new theatre that will be located in the residential section.

Jefferson

C. G. Danforth, who runs the theatre in Jefferson, is a busy man these days, looking after his sap buckets. Mr. Danforth owns a large grove of maples. The other day a couple of the boys from Albany's Film Row dropped in to see Mr. Danforth and, after being treated to a glass of cider, they were invited to taste some maple syrup. With matters sweetened all around, Mr. Danforth signed several contracts.

Watervliet

John Christie, of Watervliet, will probably be forced to close his theatre in the near future, in order to comply with certain requests made by the State Troopers, following a visit to the house. Mr. Christie is endeavoring to get a few weeks of grace, and incidentally dollars, by being permitted to run until June, but the State Troopers are not taking kindly to the idea. Mr. Christie has been ordered to remodel his exits and also install a new projection room.

There was a time, but it was several years ago, when H. O. Worden, local manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was the center of all eyes, as he swung from the trapeze high in the tented arena on some circus. Mr. Worden quit the life of a showman however, when the stork first visited his home, and since that time has contented himself with a more prosaic and far less hazardous occupation, although admitting that he misses the plaudits of the thousands.

Schenectady

Frank Learnan, manager of the Strand in Schenectady, did a lot of handshaking and murmured a lot of "glad to know you," last week, in connection with a contest that he staged at his theatre, awarding a purse of gold to the oldest married couple in town. Mr. Learnan specified that competitors should bring their marriage license to him and that the wife must introduce the husband.

Fenton Lawlor, salesman at the First National exchange for some time past, resigned last week to accept a similar position with the Fox exchange. Clayton Eastman, former booker at the Paramount exchange, is now holding down a road job with the same house. Julius Singer, of the Universal exchange, returned Saturday from a swing through northern New York. Harry Seed, manager for Warner Brothers, was in Utica during the week.

Watertown

The Schine Enterprises are considering the purchase of a large park in Watertown, turning it into a children's playground and sport park. The ground has been leased to Sol Manheimer, local representative of the Schine interests in Watertown.

Carthage

Ivan Baumgartel, new manager of the Strand in Carthage, has installed a new lighting effect in his theatre that is being warmly commended by the residents of the Northern town. Mr. Baumgartel will run a fashion show early in April and has made several changes in his orchestra.

Canton

Alec Papayanakos, of Canton, who has made his pile in the motion picture business as well as in the stock market, is spending several thousands of dollars in bringing his theatre up to the minute through the installation of the Vitaphone. It will be the first one installed in northern New York.

Julius Byck, who was in town during the past week, reopened his theatre in Tannersville on Saturday. Jimmy Rose will reopen his house at Quechey Lake on July 1. The Casino at Fleischmanns will be sold on April 7. Dick Bolton will reopen his house at The Hague in April, running one night a week, with a dance following the pictures.

THE Broadmoure Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, has been purchased by the Rialto Theatre Corp. from E. E. Webber and will be operated by the former concern, which also operates the Roanoke and Alamo Theatres. The Madrid Theatre, also a suburban house of Kansas City, has been returned by Universal to George Trinastich, the former claiming that the theatre was not as profitable as was represented, which resulted in a law suit.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Mrs. Charles Barron and Mrs. Helen Tally of the Kansas Theatre, Wichita, Kas.; G. E. Silkett, Rex, Joplin, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit Electric, Springfield, Mo.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth Kas.

S. W. Nusbaum is the new manager of the Penn Valley Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City.

Sidney Condon has succeeded Roy Casey as auditor of Capitol Enterprises, with headquarters in Kansas City.

W. C. Haynes, special sales representative, will manage the new Universal exchange which will be opened in Wichita, Kas. An Arctic Nu-Air branch also will be established in Wichita, according to James Folland division manager, to be managed by John Hubbel, advertising manager of the Wichita Eagle. E. E. Langan left Kansas City hurriedly this week for a tour of National Theatre Company Supply offices. A. T. Bail, sales representatives for Advance Trailer Service, returned to Kansas City after two busy weeks in the territory. Jack Quinlan, manager of the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, was a St. Louis visitor as was C. A. Schultz P. D. C. branch manager. R. O. Pearson, Pathe branch manager, spent the first of the week in Topeka, Kas., on business.

Patrick Campbell, Pathe Southern division sales manager, was in Kansas City for sales conference, while Leo Adler, traveling auditor for Pathe, also visited the Kansas City branch. Bob Gary, Universal exploiteer, returned after several weeks in the Kansas City territory. J. A. Masters, F. B. O. office manager, went to Des Moines, Ia., to inspect the bookkeeping system which he recently installed there. C. A. Jones, Educational branch manager, spent the week hustling in the territory. Leo Chaikin has been Pathe sales representative for Northern Kansas.

Two suburban theatres fast are nearing completion in Kansas City. The Rockhill Theatre, at 4608-20 Troost, which will seat 1,600 persons, and the Ocaso Theatre, Fifteenth street and Prospect avenue, seating 900 persons, are to be ultra-modern. The Rockhill is to be operated by the Midwest Theatre Co., of which L. M. Miller of Wichita, Kas., is president. E. C. Rhoden of Kansas City is to be the manager. Superior Theatres, Inc., will operate the Ocaso Theatre.

A combination six-story office building and suburban motion picture theatre is to be built at Armour boulevard and Troost avenue, Kansas City, it was announced this week. The building, which will be a $500,000 project, will house a 1,800-seat theatre according to Mrs. Amy H. Priestly of Chilli-cothe, Ill., who owns the property.

"The most costly theatre per seat in the United States," is the manner in which United Artists officials in Kansas City described the remodeling task of the Liberty Theatre, first run house of Kansas City, which is under contract to be bought by United Artists. The house at present is under lease to Universal, being owned by Samuel and David Harding of Kansas City.

Minnesota

Minneapolis, Minn., Mar. 30.

THE Minneapolis Joint Board of Arbitration is continuing its efforts to have disputing parties settle their differences out of arbitration since the success of this method has eliminated many cases from the docket and has speeded up the machinery in dealing with the others. The report of the secretary last week showed that there are now only 40 cases remaining on the docket. At the request of the board the parties interested in the case brought by F. B. O. against Mrs. E. W. Jensen at White Sulphur, Minn., "got together" and were able to come to a settlement. Pathe also withdrew its case against George Miner, Rice Lake, Wis., after the board asked them to attempt a settlement.

Last week saw a number of motion picture officials in Minneapolis visiting the various exchanges. Among these were F. C. Aiken, newly appointed manager of Pathe's Midwest district, and Tom North, Midwest representative of Aesop's Fables and Topics of the Day. Fred Knispel, special representative of Producers Distributing Corporation, returned to Minneapolis last week after several weeks' visit in Chicago and St. Louis. George Miner of Rice Lake, Wis., and Mr. Edwards of Swanson & Edwards, Ely, Minn., were two of the out-of-town exhibitors who came to Minneapolis.

St. Paul

Vitaphone had its premier in the Northwest at the Capitol theatre, St. Paul, on March 26. Vitaphone equipment has been installed by Finkelstein & Ruben in the Capitol and in the State in Minneapolis, but a disagreement between the operators' unions and the Northwest M. P. T. O. over the number of men to be maintained for operating purposes delayed the opening performances for several weeks. An agreement was reached between the St. Paul union and the M. P. T. O. that two men will be in a projection room and this made possible the premier at the Capitol on the 26th. Negotiations are still on with the Minneapolis union and so the Vitaphone equipment at the State continued to lie idle.

Oliver Rowe, owner with William Mustard of the New State theatre, St. Paul, returned from Los Angeles recently where he transacted business concerning their proposed $750,000 vaudeville-motion picture theatre in St. Paul. Rowe was just in time to see the cashier of the New State, Miss Ann Anderson, robbed of $475.11 belonging to the theatre at the same time that a vaudeville bandit on the stage had the audience convulsed with laughter. Mr. Rowe and Mr. Mustard did not laugh, however, as the real bandit escaped in the crowds on the street.

The house committee of the Minnesota state legislature recommended for passage last week a bill prohibiting the establishment of daylight saving time in the state and adopting legally the standard time. The motion picture exhibitors of the state are hoping to see the bill passed as it has been found that the change to daylight saving often has a bad effect on theatre attendance.

Clarissa

Olaf Lind, owner of the Rex theatre, Clarissa, Minn., was found dead in his bed March 17. Lind, who was 67 years old, has been suffering from rheumatism. He had been in the theatre business for several years.

Hallock

At the recent election at Hallock, Minn., the legalizing of Sunday motion picture shows was defeated. The theatre at Hallock, now operated by Bennie Berger of the Berger Amusement Company of Grand Forks, N. D., has been sold to D. J. Larson of Cavalier, N. D.

Indiana

Indianapolis, Ind., Mar. 30.

AN arrangement with the Universal Chain Theatres Corporation and the Universal Chain Theatre Enterprises, Inc., affiliated companies of the Universal Picture Corporation and all headed by Carl Laemmle, for the operation of a new $500,000 picture theatre in Fountain Square, was closed recently by Mark Margolis and associates who promoted the project. According to Margolis, this arrangement is one which will mean the construction of a number of other theatres in Indiana for the chain.

A corporation will be formed in the next few days by Margolis, Pierre F. Goodrich, Leslie Colvin and Donald Graham, which will build a new theatre at 1043-49 Virginia avenue.

The Colonial Theatre, operated by Harry F. Cohen and E. H. Bingham, which recently went into the hands of receivers, has been sold to the Capitol Amusement Company, of which Frank J. Rembusch is president. The building will undergo extensive repairs and be ready for the operation of the theatre in April, Rembusch said.

The Circle Theatre Company of Indianapolis, one of the largest theatre corporations of the Middle West, has closed a deal with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Publix Theatres Corporation by which they acquire a part interest in the new Indiana Theatre, which will be opened in June. The cost of the theatre is $1,300,000.

Argyle

The city hall at Argyle, Minn., has been rented by W. O. Gast and Joe Coninx, who will present shows twice weekly.

Staples

The New Palace theatre at Staples, Minn., has been sold by Isabel Getter, who will continue to operate the Gaughren at Sauk Center.

Rochester

Plans have been announced by Finkelstein & Ruben for the $250,000 theatre at Rochester, Minn. Ground will be broken April 1 in order to assure the completion of the theatre, with a seating capacity of 500, for the fall season.

North and South Dakota

The Happy Hour theatre at Burke, S. D., has been sold to Henry Hogrefe and Dr. R. J. Quinn.

Perfection low-intensity reflecting arcs used in conjunction with an 18-ampere generator have been installed in the Rex theatre at Kennebec, S. D., by P. E. Casey.

Charles Kingsbury, owner of the Clifford theatre at Edgerton, S. D., and his wife will celebrate their fiftieth anniversary April 2. Everyone is invited to attend the festivities in the lodge rooms over the theatre after the regular program at the theatre.

W. A. Steffes is in New York on important business concerning affairs of the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest, of which he is president. He was accompanied on the trip by Theo. Hays, general manager of Finkelstein & Ruben, who is in New York on business for his firm.

A St. Patrick's party was staged by the Minneapolis Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer club at the Italian Room of the Radisson hotel, where a banquet was served, followed by a dance.

Harry Quinn, assistant manager of the Minneapolis branch of Universal, has resigned and is to be replaced by Fred Finnegan, former booker. Eddie MacErlane has been appointed booker.

San Francisco

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Berkeley, Cal., Mar. 16.

THE Riviera Theatre, which succeeds the old Star Theatre on Haight street, between Fillmore and Steiner, was formally opened on the evening of March 5, with city officials taking a prominent part in the dedicatory ceremonies. This new house is owned by the Golden State Theatre & Realty Corp., of which E. H. Emmick is president and Robert A. McNeil general manager, and which operates a circuit of fifty theatres in Northern California. Mark Harrison, former owner of the Star Theatre, is house manager.

The Crim Estate and Ackerman & Harris have taken out a permit for the erection of the theatre to be built on Mission street, near Twentieth. This house, which will be known as the El Capitan, will be the largest in San Francisco, with a seating capacity of more than 3,000.

Dean B. Worley, manager of the Wilkes Theatre, passed away in a local hospital on the evening of March 5, following an attack of pneumonia. Mr. Worley, who was fifty-three years of age, began his career as theatre manager in 1900, when he was placed in charge of the Star Theatre at Tacoma, Wash. Later he joined the Sullivan & Considine organization and in 1915 became associated with the Wilkes Bros.

Louis and Harmon Perry, who conduct the Alhambra and Egyptian Theatres at Ogden, Utah, were recent visitors at San Francisco on their way home from a trip to Hollywood.

G. S. Jones, of the Victory Theatre, San Jose, Cal., and Charles Fraler of Tracy, were recent visitors on San Francisco's Film Row.

Sacramento

Markowitz Bros. plan to open Godard's Theatre, recently acquired by them, late in February. Considerable remodeling and re-decorating will be done.

San Jose

The opening of the new West Coast house on South First street is scheduled for April and will be made a gala event. Harry Brown, manager of the California Theatre, will be placed in charge. The house will have a seating capacity of about 2,200.

Oakland

Robert Harvey, for years connected with the publicity department of West Coast Theatres, Inc., having served at Berkeley, San Francisco and Oakland, has been made manager of the Oakland T. & D. Theatre, succeeding Clem Pope, who has been in charge for the past five years and who is retiring because of ill health. Ward T. Casady, assistant manager for Clem Pope, will continue in the same capacity for the new manager.

Porterville

Everett Howell, manager of the Monache Theatre, and Helen Kuglis, cashier, were recently confronted by an armed bandit, following the night show, securely bound, and the cash box relieved of $370.

Berkeley

The management of the Rivoli Theatre, Berkeley's newest moving picture house, is broadcasting the information that this theatre has installed a "baby silencer," insuring comfort and peace of mind to patrons, as far as annoyance from crying children is concerned. A sound proof room with seating space for about twenty has been installed in the balcony, the walls of this being of two thicknesses of plate glass, with an air space between to deaden the sound. R. E. McGinnis is house manager of the Rivoli.

FOLLOWING close on promotion of Stanley C. Jacques from Cincinnati branch manager of Pathe to sales manager of central district, comes announcement that Roy H. Haines, for several years in charge of Cincinnati First National branch, has been given the Pittsburgh, Pa., office, with wider scope of activities. Paul E. Krieger, for past six years manager of Louisville branch of First National, will succeed Haines. Maurice White, formerly assistant manager First National in Cincy, but now connected with Educational, returns to his original company and will be Krieger's successor at Louisville.

Libson-Heidingsfeld-Keith interests have acquired property immediately adjacent to the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, and will build an addition which will permit 500 more seats being added. The addition will extend to the Cox Memorial Theatre on Seventh street, thus giving Cincinnati a "Playhouse Square."

E. F. Albee was among the distinguished visitors in Cincinnati during the past week. He came to inspect the progress of the Fountain Theatre now in course of construction at Fifth and Vine streets. The new house, with a seating capacity of 5,000, will be one of the finest in Ohio.

Attendance is expected to be stimulated in Cincinnati as result of lecture delivered by Dr. Clinton Wunder, minister Baptist Temple, Rochester, N. Y., before Cincinnati Better Motion Pictures Council at a dinner recently given. The affair was attended by the public. The speaker pointed out the good side of the movies.

Hamilton

Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, Silver and Turberg, managers, will install a new Wurlitzer organ, which is now in transit. Dedication will take place Easter Sunday with appropriate program.

Harry Turberg, co-manager Palace Theatre, received word that his father, Sander Turberg, died at Vilkauskis, Lietuwa, a province bordering Germany.

Dayton

Dayton, Ohio, will have a new house at Grand and Salem avenues, sponsored by a recently organized company as the Salem-Grand Co. The theatre will be part of a $1,000,000 business block to be erected.

Oxford

Edward Keen, manager Oxford Theatre, Oxford, Ohio, has arranged sliding admission scale, same being ten cents on Monday night, twenty-five cents on other nights except Friday and Saturday, where scale is raised to thirty-five cents. Orchestra from local college plays the pictures on the thirty-five cent nights, otherwise piano music.

Bucyrus

New business block will be erected at Bucyrus, Ohio, by Moose Lodge. It will contain movie house which has been leased by Shrine Entertainment Co., of New York.

Cleveland

Bureau of Jewish Education, Cleveland, Ohio, entertained children from six neighborhood at Purim parties at Halthnorth, Waldorf, Doan, Ritz and Heights Theatres. Parents as well as youngsters were admitted free. Films depicting Jewish activities according to Biblical lore, were shown.

Variety Amusement Co. incorporated at Cleveland by I. N. Loser, L. D. Lucal, E. Segal, J. L. Nichols and others.

Philip Dunas has been appointed assistant director of sales for "U" office in Cleveland, and will be associated with Leo Devaney.

Michigan

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Detroit, Mich., Mar. 30.*

RECENTLY David Palfreyman, secretary of the Detroit Film Board of Trade, handed out some interesting figures on the results of arbitration in Michigan during the past year. According to this report, 42 cases, amounting to $10,210.13, were filed but settled before date set for hearing. Sixty-five claims, amounting to $17,331.08 were considered by the Board of Arbitration. Seventy-seven claims, amounting to $18,584.90, were withdrawn. Two claims, amounting to $6,587.50, required a seventh arbitrator.

Birmingham

As a result of the election in Birmingham upholding Sunday shows, John H. Kunsy is proceeding with the erection of his big theatre there and plans to have it ready for opening in the late fall of the year. It will be the first amusement place Birmingham has ever had.

The last film concern has moved to the new Film Building, which was occupied for the most part early in January. This firm is the Metropolitan Motion Picture Co., which occupies half of the seventh floor. Final moving was completed last week.

Many old time exhibitors in the Michigan territory will regret to hear of the death of George (Doc) Owens, who was manager of the Knickerbocker Theatre, Detroit, nine years ago. Death was caused by pneumonia. He leaves a widow and son.

Henry S. Koppin, Detroit chain theatre operator, has returned from New Orleans with his wife and baby, where they have been spending the winter season.

With the recent opening of the new Keith-Uptown and the Orient Theatres, Detroit now has ten theatres playing first run pictures and two of these are on a split week plan. Thus the city uses twelve first runs in weeks where the downtown houses do not play "run" pictures.

M. J. Caplan, president of Metropolitan Motion Picture Co., has returned from a three weeks sojourn in San Antonio, where he trained with the Detroit Tigers. He plans to leave for Europe, May 25, to attend the International Rotarians Convention. Sam Caplan, vice-president of the company, has also returned to his desk after a three months' vacation.

Dunas was formerly with Reginald Denny productions in a sales capacity.

All officers of the Cleveland Film Board of Trade were reelected to serve for ensuing year at a meeting held recently.

Broadway Theatre, Cleveland, was visited by burglars who blew the office safe and made a get-away with $2,000, representing week-end receipts.

George Rea, formerly manager of Grand Theatre, Massillon, Ohio, has severed his connection, and is succeeded by Harry Allen erstwhile manager for various houses of the Saenger Theatres.

South Chestnut Co. has been formed at Ravenna, Ohio, for erection of new movie house in that city.

Mayor J. L. Larkin, of Batavia, Ohio, who admits that he seldom visits a movie, objected to posters announcing showing of "Faust" on ground that the posters were indecent. This was followed by announcement that he would not permit picture to be shown. On plea of public, His Honor relented to extent of permitting one performance which he will censor, with understanding that he will order house closed in case picture is as indecent as he believes it will be.

Canada

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Ottawa, Canada, Mar. 30.*

R. S. PECK, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Studio, Ottawa, has announced that, during his recent trip to Hollywood, he secured a number of important contracts for Canadian Government releases. A contract was signed with Hammond Productions, Inc., for a selected group of current subjects, known as the "Seeing Canada" series, for theatrical distribution, while the William Horsley Laboratories of Hollywood and the Bell and Howell Company of Chicago signed for 16 m.m. prints.

An old fire pumping cart, used in Ottawa in 1840, was used as a street exhibit in front of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, as a stunt recently. Uniformed firemen were in attendance at every performance, while uniformed fire fighters "manned" the hand pumper. Manager Ray Tuban also used mechanical effects during the fire scenes of the picture, then playing, including an alarm gong, siren, fire truck bell and whistle, to heighten the action.

The Ottawa Human Society held its annual show for the older school children of Ottawa at B. F. Keith's Theatre Saturday morning, March 26, the theatre being placed at the disposal of the organization by Manager J. M. Franklin, who is a director of the society. More than 2,600 children attended, admission being by ticket only.

Regina

When Manager Pete Egan of the Capitol Theatre, Regina, Sask., had a theatre full of children for a special Saturday morning matinee, Fire Chief White of the local department, asked him to conduct a fire drill. With a number of firemen in the theatre, Manager Egan gave instructions for the clearing of the house at a given signal. The many youthful patrons scampered through all exits and the house was empty in two minutes without disorder or mishap.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Manager W. P. McGeachie of the Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, has received a letter of thanks from the local Y. M. C. A. as an evidence of appreciation of co-operation extended by the theatre several times recently.

Toronto

Famous Players Canadian Corp. has opened still another handsome suburban moving picture house in Toronto, this being the Belsize Theatre at Mount Pleasant Road and Belsize Drive, in North Toronto. The house was opened March 24 by Mayor Foster, Controller Wemp and Ald. Beamish and other celebrities. The Belsize accommodates 1,000 persons, cost $160,000, and has a balcony in which there are 200 loge chairs exclusively. Adjacent property has been secured to provide parking space for automobiles. Among the features that stand out are a winding staircase with wonderful balustrade, handsome hand-made electroliers, and a lobby and foyer faced with Venetian mirrors. Two beautiful friezes of "Carmen," costing $1,200 each, adorn the walls. The manager of the Belsize is Harold Hutchinson, formerly manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Toronto. The architect was Murray Brown and the builders were G. W. Hunt and Ronald McClelland.

Quebec City

The old Auditorium at Quebec City, Quebec, has closed and building operations are under way to reconstruct the whole building, making it double the size. The new Auditorium is to open in August under Keith-Albee auspices. The remodelled house will be largely of steel and concrete and new features include a mezzanine floor, retiring and cloak rooms, large new pipe organ and a new balcony with rows of loge boxes.

Now Is the Time to Make Preparations For Appeals to Hold Summer Business

APRIL first is none too early to give a thought to Summer. Right now is the time to see that all of the electric fans or whatever cooling system you use is in good working order. Don't delay. Even May may bring a few oppressively hot days. They seem all the warmer because they are in such sharp contrast with the preceding days. Don't let your patrons suffer because you figure that it will last only a day or two. Those days may be fatal to Summer business. The patron will remember how hot and stuffy your theatre was in those days and will have the belief that your house is always hot in Summer. He won't come around to discover that the fans are running. He'll stay away—perhaps for a long time.

Don't let them get the idea and, above all, don't let them get the habit of staying away. If they stay away one hot day, they will stay away the next and perhaps get out of the idea of coming around at all. Habit is slowly formed and easily broken in the matter of theatre attendance, wherein it differs from most habits, which are easy to form and hard to get rid of.

This is particularly important the first few days of a hot spell lasting that long. If it is a week or two before you can get the fans in and working, you'll lose, for the entire summer, a patronage that would pay for fixing a few hundred fans. Put on your overcoat, pull down the ear tabs on your cap and start the fans right away, before the house opens. If they don't work, get them over to the repair man so fast that the soles of your shoes smoke.

And start in on your summer campaign before it gets really hot. Start to create the impression that this summer in your theatre it is going to be cooler than ever. Tell of the improved plans for cooling. Don't talk in such a way as to suggest that you are afraid they won't come. Rather take the attitude that Summer is nothing to worry about so long as it always is possible to cool off in your theatre. Word your advertising to get over this idea. Use such lines as "Summer is here, but why worry so long as the cool Rialto is here to comfort you?" Much more can be done through suggestion than with downright argument.

Be ready with the Summer schemes, with the cool drapes to replace the heavy velvet and with cool lights instead of the fiery reds that are so attractive in Winter. You don't have to install a conditioning plant to get a comfortable house. Just do the best you can if that is too expensive.

Get out the house slugs with the ice-fringed borders. Get the ice suggestion into your lobby work. Book in some ice scenics now and then, and play them up in your ads. It all helps to create the general suggestion, and it will mean real money to you.

Keep your cashier cool. 'Don't argue that it is a waste of current to give her a fan in the box office. Argue that she'll sell more than enough extra tickets to repay the cost if she looks so cool that the patron feels he would like to look as cool as she does. You can teach the cashier to smile, but you can't teach her not to perspire.

Get a running start on the hot weather and you'll be delighted with the results. You can even convince a lot of automobile owners that it is much cooler in your theatre than on the hot and dusty roads. If you can do that you'll win them.

And fire the first man, boy or girl on your staff who even says "Yes" when a patron says "Ain't it hot!" Teach them to say "Yes, it is outside. We don't notice it in here." And the patron will feel the same way about it.

Ticket Premiums

When Charles S. Morrison offered The Marriage Clause at the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, he got the County Clerk to display a sign and some stills on the picture in the license bureau. The sign offered a pair of tickets to the picture to every couple taking out a license to get married, provided they presented the clerk's card at the box office.

Only six out of 37 couples took up the offer, but Morrison got a big story in the papers, which is what he was after.

A Local Monster Was An Aid to Glyn Story

For a couple of weeks before C. B. Stiff got It at the Palace theatre, Memphis, the local papers were running stories about some strange monster that was seen in various spots. This was no creation of Mr. Stiff's fertile imagination but a local scare similar to the Jersey Devil that bobs up every little while in the state where they still make applejack that breeds monsters. For want of a better name, the reporters referred to the apparition as the What Is It.

Stiff broke in with a lot of teasers to the effect that hunters could find It at Loew's Palace, and since the animal was never caught, and seems to have died shortly after the playing, you can't make Memphis believe that Stiff was not both father and mother to the strange creature, whatever it was.

Stiff doesn't care what they think. It got the coin for him. He is willing to admit that he's the guy who plastered a vacant store right next an opposition house for the picture. It was a thorough job.

Stuck 'Em Twice

Most managers only got one hook-in to Liberty Magazine on Love's Greatest Mistake, but G. R. Stewart, of the Sterling theatre, Greeley, Col., got a double bump. He stuck the first issue with a "coming" and put a "now" on the issue containing the second instalment. The second shot drove a lot of stragglers in. He posted every copy in town.

Addison Wanted to Mix Aimee and Pugilists

Twenty-three Windows Cost Only 27 Tickets

Roy L. Smart has a stunt for getting windows that worked so well the first time that merchants are asking for an encore and want it soon. The reason is that he gave them their share of the advertising without losing any for the house.

When The Sorrows of Satan came to the Rivoli theatre, Greenville, S. C., he arranged with twenty-three merchants to place a card for the picture in one of their windows. Each card had one word not related to the sentence in which it appeared. All the contestants had to do was to visit these windows, pick out these extra words and group them into two sentences.

To make it a little more simple, Mr. Smart's advertisement announced that the first word was "Greenville," the sixth was "service" and the sentence ended with "prices," which was the thirteenth word. The second sentence started with "Your" and ended with "now." Contestants were expected to place the other words. As a safeguard neatness was made one of the considerations, but few had the correct answer. The sentence read: "Greenville merchants offer you excellent service and quality merchandise at record low prices. Your dollar will now do double duty in local stores."

Few correct replies were turned in, but hundreds looked into the windows, which was what the merchants wanted, and they got Sorrows of Satan twenty-three times, which was what Smart wanted. The prizes were ten, five and twelve single tickets. This is a great small town stunt.

Second Hand—But

A new angle was given the Cinderella contest by the Alhambra theatre, Canton, Ohio.

A slightly worn pair of slippers was advertised as a pair worn by Colleen Moore in Twinkletoes. They were promised to the girl who could best fill them. About 250 girls tried them on and the store was so pleased with the result that a second pair was offered the next day—also from Miss Moore. Probably she telegraphed the second pair.

WINDOW DUMMIES HELP STROGOFF BOOK SALES IN CHICAGO
Playing at the Randolph and Castle theatres, the double run gave the film unusual interest and this was centered on the book sale through the window display of the Boston Store. There was a total of 150 book windows on this film.

FIREMEN POST THEIR HOUSES IN A CLEVELAND CAMPAIGN

Looked Like Laura

Getting hold of a High School girl who looked like Laura LaPlante gave the Empire theatre, Birmingham, Ala., an exploitation stunt and a companion for Her Big Night at the same time. Jack Cunningham, manager; Sam Fox, publicity man, and Earle Griggs, Universal exploiter, worked together on the stunt.

The girl was taken to a number of stores, given a complete outfit for Her Big Night, including a facial massage and a permanent wave, and all the time Fox was grinding away at a camera. The merchants advertised their contributions and the picture made by Fox was shown in connection with the feature while the girl herself appeared the opening night. It cost only the film but it packed the house through local interest.

Got Good Publicity on Aimee McPherson Stunt

When Aimee McPherson campaigned New York State, an effort was made to get her to come to Binghamton and the town was all excitement.

H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton theatres, saw a chance to get some pure reading matter for nothing, so he wired the evangelist a proposition to stage "gentlemanly boxing bouts" as a side attraction to pull in the sinners she most desired to reach.

Mrs. McPherson did not reply to the telegram. Probably "Addie" did not expect she would, but he saved a copy of the telegram to show the local papers and they wolfed it up like a tough kid hornning in on a Sunday school treat.

That's press work. Addison got plenty of mention for the theatre without even having the attraction. Of course it had to be done in a nice way, but that, equally of course, was the way he did it.

Transported a Print Under Marine Guard

Films by airplane being a bit stale, the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., arranged to have Tell It to the Marines shipped from Omaha in an official Navy car, with a mounted machine gun and a lot of lettering.

When it arrived in Lincoln it was received by Boy Scouts, who escorted it to the State Capitol where the Governor was waiting to superintend the placing of the cans in the treasury vaults until they were needed at the Lincoln.

A stopover was made at Beatrice, and the Lincoln split the cost of a special negative with the Beatrice management, the film showing the departure from Omaha and the reception in Beatrice.

This was patterned after the original bally of transporting The Fire Brigade to New Orleans in a chief's car, but Lincoln didn't know that and it was all very impressive.

Marines Put Over Bally and Dared the Police

A SLANTING BANNER IN THE BLACKSTONE, PITTSBURGH
This banner hangs inside the lobby at the Pittsburgh house instead of being displayed on the front. This is partly due to the fact that the 24-sheet would hang too low in front, and it shows better here.

A Marine Ballyhoo Was Bigger Than the Police

While they were putting over Tell It to the Marines at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, the Marine recruiting service sent its car out lettered in red, white and blue with the title of the Chaney feature. Pretty soon a policeman pinched the driver for ballyhooing, which is against the local ordinances.

The officer in charge hustled over to the station and as soon as the Marines landed they had the situation well in hand. He pointed out that the picture was intended to help enlistment, and while he did not threaten to bring on his battleships, he sounded sort of ominous and the desk sergeant decided he would not monkey with the Navy Department, so the car kept on going.

In addition to the usual posting, two thousand snipes with the title in red and blue on white were slapped all over town, and the forty recruiting boards were posted with the special paper provided for that purpose.

The Chaney telegram was wired from Culver City and reproduced in one of the opening ads, and the six-sheet cutout was made into a lobby shadow box.

That seemed to be about all that was needed to get the picture over.

Miller Remembered

Several years ago almost every theatre used an oil well model to advertise one of the numerous plays suggested by the then oil boom. It was almost a disease.

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., dug out the idea for The Potters and constructed a working novel of an oil derrick run by a fan motor from a cardboard power house.

Instead of anticipating the happy ending and spoiling it all, he used for copy: "Pa Potter thought his oil stock would leave him sitting on top of the world." That piqued curiosity better than telling the ending.

Get out the derricks, if you still have them. They'll pump money into the box office.

Plenty of Sites

When he came to play Hotel Imperial at the Sterling theatre, Greeley, Col., G. R. Stewart got a lot of old 11x14 cards and painted the announcement that "This will be the site of the new Hotel Imperial." These were tacked to laths and put on very vacant lot. People wondered why the sudden craze for building Imperial hotels and read about the Negri picture with additional interest when the ads came out.

Two days before the opening a boy in a bellhop's uniform handed out cards reading: "Meet me at the Hotel Imperial. Pola Negri will be there and we'll go to the Sterling."

If you use this stunt, borrow a silver tray and let the boy hand out the cards face down, only one card on the tray at a time.

First Posers Had It But the Latest Didn't

Making his own trailer was one of the stunts that helped W. S. Perutz get all the money there was to be had in It for the Lincoln theatre, Lincoln, Neb.

Perutz set up a camera on the university campus and took shots of the crowds as they passed. For local interest he added poses of three well-known people. These formed the trailer with the question, "Do they have 'It'?" and an explanation of what Mrs. Glynn thought it was.

Everyone came to see the pictures, and they beat the news reel for interest. For the three days before the showing the empty camera was taken around the streets and turned, and the crowds read the banners while they posed for what they supposed would be their pictures. No promise was made that the pictures would be run. Perutz just took them. Some of the curious even followed the camera from pitch to pitch, to get in more than once.

For a merchant co-op he got twenty advertisers. Contestants read the ads, then either called up the merchant or visited the stores to ask what "It" was. They had to embody this information in a letter to the paper. The most original replies got $20 and several donated prizes.

Many of the replies were so original that the exhibits made a neat display in themselves.

Three Records: Two Days

First the Rivoli Theatre, Greenville, S. C., broke its Monday record with It. Then it broke the Tuesday record, which gave the Monday-Tuesday record, or three records in two days.

The newspaper sold three advertisers on hooking in without any solicitation on the part of the theatre and then sold a double truck to the first eight solicited.

A banner in a sister house, the Carolina, was spotted several times each performance, and the Rivoli used "IT is inside" for its own marquee. This copy was on arrows, each pointing into the house. Naturally Roy L. Smart was pleased.

A PARAMBULATING CUTOUT FOR CHANEY IN MILWAUKEE
The always energetic Merrill theatre trimmed up a 24-sheet for a ride on a Ford and sent it around town with a chauffeur dressed as a marine at the wheel. The palm trees are thrown in for local color. They help along.

Gilbert in a Window Read a Trick Paper

Made The Fire Brigade A Detroit Celebration

Recently Balaban and Katz sent Oscar A. Doob and Louis P. Kramer to Detroit to help the Kunsky publicity, and these two space-robbers had easy pickings on The Fire Brigade, with the Fire Department pledged to its support.

They made the opening at the Madison Theatre a State-wide affair by inviting all the mayors and fire chiefs to come to the opening, and a lot of them were among those present. The Governor was invited, but he sent the State Fire Marshal as his deputy, and contributed a letter that was splashed all over the place.

With the Governor's example before him, the Mayor issued a proclamation declaring this the celebration of the Sixtieth Anniversary of the founding of the Detroit department, and calling all good men and true, their wives and families to attend the picture in honor of the firemen.

Most of the Chiefs brought their Mayors in the shiny red department cars, and they made a great parade to City Hall where they were made officially welcome and to the theatre where they were officially deadheaded.

It not only put the picture over in Detroit but all over the state.

Pinto Beauties

J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome theatre, Waco, Texas, had some plaster heads he had used for The Plastic Age. They had paid for themselves on that picture, but he had them in the store room, so he painted them up with one side of the head a blonde and the other brunette, and he had no trouble landing every one in the store windows with copy for Blonde or Brunette. The heads were striking so the merchants were glad to get them.

Generous Love

Kisses from The Night of Love gave Montague Salmon a chance to tell them about the play at the Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga. The theatre printed the tags but got the candy free, and possibly the patrons got the idea that there were thousands of kisses in The Night of Love. His newspaper work was preceded by four lessons in love. A "watch this space" was appended to each lesson to lead into the regular ads.

A Gilbert Impersonator Read Special Newspaper

Usually a man does not pick out a store window as the most convenient place to read his newspaper, and the sight of a man made up to resemble John Gilbert in The Show, reading a newspaper in a prominent store window in Anniston, Ala., brought most of the Saturday shoppers to a halt.

The newspaper was a special edition of one copy, edited by Manager T. Y. Walker, of the Noble theatre. The first page was heavily printed up "Extra—The Show—Extra." Two of the inside pages were given to advertising the store and the other three to the M.-G.-M. production.

The man was careful to hold the paper before him so that the page was displayed in full, and as he turned the pages of the eight page dummy frequently, the crowd could get the message and made room for more.

The window was decorated with a six sheet, some one sheet cutouts and a lot of photographs, which helped along, but the newspaper reader was the headliner and a girl rolling her stockings down could not have attracted much more attention.

Window workers always get attention, and the more different the window show is, the better the result. The newspaper idea is new.

All Red A's

Earl Holliman painted red A's wherever he dared when he had The Scarlet Letter at the Liberty theatre, Greenwood, S. C. He even painted a few automobile headlights. Each letter had a small question mark just beneath. Transparent paint was used, and the letters were put only where they showed by transmitted light, store and house windows included. They would not let him use the street lamps, but he did whatever else he could.

School pupils were sold by the teachers and if you had to read the book, you could see the play instead

CONTRAST MACHINES HELP FIRE BRIGADE IN FLORIDA

The Florida theatre, St. Peterburg, borrowed a steamer of fifty years ago to offer in contrast with the motor engine that represents the type of apparatus in use today. The two cards read "As it was" and "As it is today."

IF YOU WANTED TO TELL IT TO THE MARINES IN MILWAUKEE

You could do it right in front of the Merrill Theatre, where the recruiting service had a man on duty. You could ask questions, enlist or just look and then go ahead and purchase a ticket for the feature.

Too Many Fine Details Hurt Advertising Cuts

Excess of Detail Is Detriment to a Cut

This three fives from the Garden Theatre, Baltimore, is for Hoot Gibson in The Silent Rider. That's Hoot in the upper left hand corner, but just what the companion cut is seems to be a secret. You can barely discern a horse and a man and what seems to be a girl, but even a magnifying glass cannot pierce the details to the left of the cut. Perhaps the public will go to find out what the cut is all about. But again perhaps they won't. It probably would not have hurt the advertisement had the drawing been kept strong and clear.

A MYSTERY CUT

This is an excellent example of the way a painstaking artist can completely defeat the end he aims at. Probably he is working on a card several times the size of the cut. In the large space he does a really nice piece of work. It's really artistic—as it stands. But when it is cut down from six to ten diameters, this nice detail goes together and you can't tell what its all about. It's something to slip into a space, but it tells absolutely nothing.

Art work should be done with the eventual reduction in mind. It should be planned with that idea. If you make a sketch ten inches wide, and put your shading in in proportion to that width, when you reduce to two inches you have something that is just five times too fine. It is like taking a 50 screen half tone and reducing it until you get a 250 screen. The fifty screen stipples will print in a newspaper. The 250 barely come through, if they come at all.

There is something radically wrong with an art manager who will pass drawings, week after week, that he should know will not reduce properly. And yet there are half a dozen art departments that have precisely that sort of art manager. This is an exceptionally poor example, but far too large a proportion of scene sketches carry entirely too much fine detail.

A Little Too Much Space Crowds Up This Picture

There is a little too much type in this space on The Wrong Mr. Wright from the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, and to make matters worse, the printer has used the wrong type faces. In a three sixes there should be better display.

The chief fault is that the printer used too many capital lines. Two lines of eight point Roman, upper and lower, just below the house signature, would have conveyed the message just as well, and would have given more play-up to both the house plate and the star name. Between star and title the line "as a prince of the corset industry" would have been better in a light italic, and would have given more display to both star and title. An upper and lower "presented by Carl Laemmle" would have made it easier on the bold capitals just below, and an upper and lower for the matter just below would have been much more readable.

There is a much better display in the vaudeville box below, since here upper and lower is more intelligently used.

TOO MANY ROMAN CAPS

You have to keep after the printer about all capital lines. They will use them. Get your copy in early. Mark for upper and lower, and insist on correction if your instructions are not followed. If you leave it to the printer, you have no redress. You must take what he gives you. He'll do the best he can, but you can't expect much, because he probably never studied advertising display. That's not his job. It's yours.

Puts Over Kid Brother With Single Sales Bank

This display from Don Nihols, of Durham, N. C., sells Harold Lloyd in The Kid Brother with a modest back of sales talk to support the cut and title. He merely says that "it is as funny as any comedy Lloyd ever made."

A LLOYD TWO BY EIGHT

That means more than all the superlatives in the world." It does. Words ending in "est" are not always the most convincing. Statements, such as this, are far more likely to get the average reader, who has been fed up on exaggeration.

Except for the top line, this makes a good display, but the flattened hat should have risen to the top of the space and would have been better had it been set squarely against the rule at the top and left. It overshadows the top-line, which would have been better doubled up to the right. But apart from this it is a good space and certainly sold tickets.

Sells Barbara Worth To Great Advantage

In its two eights for The Winning of Barbara Worth, the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, merges the attractor cut into the reverse panel carrying stars and title in a fashion that sells the trio as a unit. It backs this up with some six point lines that are rather difficult to read, but which are not particularly essential to a sale.

A NEAT COMBINATION

With a story so well known, most of the sales value lies in star and title, and the layout might have done just as well without these added lines. We believe that two or three lines not smaller than ten point would have been better than these over-small sixes, but we imagine that neither is particularly needed.

Cut and Circle Form This Striking Layout

Combining the circle, best form of attractor, with a cut gives the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, a fine combination for a display on The Show, which appeals strongly on the fact that John Gilbert and Renee Adoree are seen together for the first time since The Big Parade.

A Good Toledo Layout on Flesh and the Devil

The circle does not interfere with the general display, but it does give particular distinction to the main announcement, and the simple line more than doubles the attraction value. The same type in precisely the same position, but without the circle, would lack the same appeal.

A CUT AND CIRCLE

The black background at the top also has a display value that gets attention without clouding the type talk. This seems to be a house drawing, and it probably is better than even the press book material, though most M-G-M. books have substantial value. The device would fail if used every week, for the value of the circle is that it is so opposed to the usual rectangular forms. If it were the regular thing, then a square outline would become a better attractor. It should not be used every week, but it can be employed where it is desired to gain more than usual emphasis.

Loew's Boston Adheres To Type Set Displays

While no other Boston theatres have gone over to the Loew theatres style of all-type displays, the State and Orpheum get so much the best of the dramatic page that it is probably only a question of time when the others will follow suit. No amount of hand lettering would give a result equal to this two fives. Few of the spaces as large or larger get half the display and most of them are not one-tenth as legible. The hand lettered tradition dies hard in Boston, but meanwhile Loew rules the roost. You can spot the spaces the moment you open the page, because it is the only inviting space.

It is not strictly accurate to say that no other theatre is following suit, for now and then some other house will use mostly type, but generally in so bold a face that the effect of contrast is lost. It is only a question of time when the others will come around, but the idea of the story, and since little sales talk is needed for a holdover, it works better than copy.

This is a longer drop than usual at the Loew Washington houses, where most spaces are much shorter, but the space was needed for the cut, and the sales value of the cut, plus the importance of the story, makes the extra space worth its cost. The sketch has small value as a portrait, for it does not suggest Miss Gish's delicate charm, but it suffices. The black has been very intelligently applied. More would have harmed. Less would have been insufficient. Just about enough has been used to get the text at the left.

Took Large Spaces For Toledo Flesh and Devil

Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, took a three tens for Flesh and the Devil, which is a little larger than the average space they use, but not too much for a big one. The best line is that to the right of the cut, which runs: "The star of The Big Parade and the Siren of The Temptress united in a revelation of two souls." That's all right as far as it goes, but the essence of the play is the triangle, and Lars Hansen is not to be overlooked. A chance was lost to capitalize his work in The Scarlet Letter. As it stands, the text does not sell the main angle of the story at all.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Presents

"Slide Kelly Slide"

Featuring William Haines

Directed by Edward Sedgwick

CAST:

Jim Kelly	William Haines
Mary Munson	Sally O'Neil
Tom Munson	Harry Carey
Mickey Martin	Junior Coghlan
Cliff Macklin	Warner Richmond
Swede Hansen	Karl Dane
Fresbie	Paul Kelly
McLean	Quinn Williams
Mike Donlin	Himself
Irish Meusel	Himself
Bob Meusel	Himself

Length—7,865 Feet

Jim a bush leaguer, lands on a big team and makes good but gets a swelled head. The team begins to go to pieces and an accident to the mascot makes matters worse. Finally, with the mascot to cheer him on, Jim not only wins the deciding game of the series but the pretty girl as well.

INEVITABLY "SLIDE KELLY SLIDE" will invite comparison with its predecessor, "Brown of Harvard," which served to put William Haines in the first division. Getting that question out of the way first, it's an even better audience picture by right of action, comedy and drama, not to mention that baseball is more understandable to the general public than the intricacies of football. It is about as compact a collection of "sure fire" stuff as can be compressed into the footage. That's one of the reasons why it satisfies. It's precisely what the audience expects and wants because it is expecting it.

Of course you know that with a title like that the hero is going to win the last game of the World Series in the last half of the last inning. You are not disappointed. And throughout the development of the story the action develops precisely as you feel that it should, because it always has gone that way. The bush rookie gets his contract with the big league nine. He gets swelled-headed over his victories and hi-hats the team, with the result that they fail to give him the necessary support, and the club commences to slip. But he comes back for the seventh game in the big series. His heart is not in his work, for the team has been shot to pieces by an accident that seems to peril the life of their mascot and the best they can do is to hold the opposing team. Then, in the last inning, the mascot is brought to the grounds, the winning runs are batted in and you can fairly smell the wedding cake as the picture fades.

It's all cut and dried material, but a super-excellent job of cinemacraft. It plays on the emotions with a positive and definite touch. It sways the feelings from grave to gay, and holds down too much sentiment with judiciously timed comedy relief. It holds the mounting interest to the end, and gives the spectator full value for every moment. It appeals even to many of the hard boiled and would-be hard boiled, and the average picture patron is going to literally eat it up. It's a box office picture, if ever there was one.

William Haines has gained greatly in poise since his "Brown," but the scenarist, for a fourth time, yields to the stupid passion for making a cad of him by making him kiss a girl against her will. Surely there should be some other means of indicating his dashing and impulsive character. Sally O'Neil is effective as the girl, the daughter of the veteran catcher, the latter role finely drawn by Harry Carey, who is so natural that you fail to realize that he is acting. Junior Coghlan provides much of the comedy and pathos and does it well, while Karl Dane is an admirable foil to Haines.

There is not too much ball game to cumber the plot advancement, and the local color is accurate to the last detail. This was looked after by Mike Donlin. Even the titles, by Joe Farnham, fit in well. It's about as close as anyone humanly can come to universal appeal.

ROUNDING OUT THE UNIQUE record of appearing simultaneously on the screen of three Broadway theatres, and marking his debut as a star for United Artists, John Barrymore is being offered in "The Beloved Rogue," the story of Francois Villon, a jolly adventurous poet-vagabond of France in the fifteenth century.

The story paints Villon as an ardent patriot and an excellent poet, despite his rollicking devil-may-care manner and strong proclivity toward the cup that cheers and boisterous companions of the lower classes, such as the beggars and street rabble. He is pictured early in the story as being selected by the mob as the king of fools for All Fool's Day, and his patriotism leads him to make a witty jest at the expense of the Duke of Burgundy which causes the King, Louis XI, to banish him from Paris. He steals a wagon loaded with food and distributes it to the poor, using a gigantic catapult and is accidentally thrown into the rooms of Charlotte, the king's ward, who is about to be forced into a marriage with one of Burgundy's men. This is meat for Villon and also marks the beginning of a romance. Eventually he plays on the king's superstition and becomes a court favorite and finally, when Charlotte is kidnapped by Burgundy he unmasks his schemes against the king, is subjected to torture and eventually, after being rescued by the king, wins his consent to wed Charlotte.

"The Beloved Rogue"

"The Beloved Rogue" is a big production with gorgeous and massive sets, which are especially notable from the fact that they are excellent examples of stylistic art in motion pictures, the sets and surrounding being designed to fit the mood of the action, grave or gay, as the case may be, and Art Director William Cameron Menzies has achieved excellent results along this line, which add considerably to the entertainment value of the picture and will win the praise of discriminating patrons and students of the cinema.

For example, there is a distinct note of sombreness in the reproduction of the French streets in the sequence showing the burning at the stake, while everything suggests jollity in some of the comedy scenes and in others there is a distinct note of grotesqueness, as in the construction of castles and towers, and the settings for the Cave of Miracles, where the fake beggars congregate.

Villon, poet, roisterer and vagabond, incurs the displeasure of the King of France and is banished from Paris. He accidentally meets Charlotte who unwillingly is to be married to a henchman of the Duke of Burgundy. Villon, captured, plays on the king's superstition and becomes a favorite at court. Charlotte, kidnapped by Burgundy's men, is followed by Villon who is tortured. The king with warriors in disguise finally rescues Villon and Charlotte and consents to their marriage.

SOME OF THE FUNNIEST GAGS ever seen in a feature comedy make Johnny Hines' latest, "All Aboard," a sure-fire box office success. This corking story, written by Matt Taylor, contains many exceedingly ludicrous situations. Foremost among them is the scene where Johnny bent on rescuing the heroine from a flock of Arabs who hold her prisoner in a desert dwelling, leaps over them, row on row, as they kneel to pray when deliberately they bow in unison, and as they prostrate themselves, the star leaps, pausing each time in his mad dash until they bow again.

Matt Taylor, the writer, ought to go far as the originator of snappy comedies, for in "All Aboard" he has provided Johnny Hines with an ideal vehicle. The chief character is a youth afflicted with a poor memory. This causes his discharge from employment in a shoe store, where he has met the heroine, and he gains a job as guide for her pa, who runs a tourist agency.

Johnny, still forgetting everything that should be remembered, somehow manages to get his charges into the desert. Amorous sheiks abound. One of them carries off the girl. Johnny dashes to the rescue in one of the strangest looking flivvers that ever negotiated a road. It has been adapted to desert travel by the usage of shoes instead of tires.

Melodrama enters the vehicle. A hundred times Johnny and the girl are in dire peril. But finally, with the unconscious aid of an escaped lion and a sandstorm, the heroine is rescued and all ends well.

Hines is great as the forgetful hero. Edna Murphy is charming as the heroine. Dot Farley is a scream as the funny aunt, and Babe London makes a life-sized riot as a desert princess. Other important players are Frank Hagney and Numa the lion.

Book "All Aboard" and turn off the theatre ventilating plant; there'll be gales of laughter.

"White Flannels"

Mother-Love and Ambition Plus Football Game
And Thrill Melodrama Make Pleasing Film Fare

Warner Bros. Present
"White Flannels"

With Louise Dresser and Jason Robards
Based on story by Lucian Cary
Directed by Lloyd Bacon

CAST:

Mrs. Politz	Louise Dresser
Frank Politz	Jason Robards
Anne	Virginia Brown Faire
Ed	Warner Richmond
Jacob Politz	George Nichols
Paul	Brooks Benedict
Bernice	Rose Blossom

Length—6,820 Feet

Mrs. Politz, ambitious for her son, a miner, lies to his sweetheart and sends the boy, Frank, off to college. He wins the football game but is expelled in a fight when someone disparages his mother. Back home he saves his pal, Ed, in a mine disaster and his mother withdraws her opposition to the girl of his choice. Good human interest story.

COVERING a wide expanse of dramatic territory, introducing three different angles of entertainment, mother-love and ambition, football, and a mine explosion, Warner Brothers is offering "White Flannels," an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story by Lucian Cary.

The opening reels of the picture are characterized by well-handled and finely acted human interest material in which the daily life of the miner-hero and the scheming of his ambitious, hard-working mother to get him away from the girl and send him to college are set forth. With the appearance of the boy at college, the type of story changes abruptly and built up to the situations where the lad of course wins for his college in the big football game, at the last minute. The mother angle again crops in, and when the chap is expelled for fighting when his mother is insulted, the scene shifts back to the mining country and ends with another change of entertainment style, centering around an explosion in a mine and a melodramatic rescue of his pal by the hero, and the withdrawal of the mother's opposition to his romance with the boarding house waitress.

Had the opening theme been adhered to, it bid fair to develop into a superior story of its type suitable for the most discriminating patronage, although the introduction of the familiar and sure-fire football angle and the thrill melodrama will probably make it more popular with the general public.

Louise Dresser does wonderful work as the mother, comparable with her role in "The Goose Woman" and Jason Robards is a likeable hero. The entire cast is fine, with Virginia Brown Faire handling the role of the girl.

With its diversity of entertainment angles, there should be something in "White Flannels" to appeal to all classes of patronage.

As to the story, it is a romantic fantasy of a by-gone period and while it does not develop any especial strength, succeeds in holding the interest and should prove good entertainment for all classes of patronage. It is rather episodic with the interest largely focussed on the high spots and there is a notable tendency for the action to lag in between.

Naturally, in a story as fantastic as this one is, while providing the star with an excellent opportunity for a pleasing characterization that shows his wonderful ability and versatility, the role of Villon, as screened, does not carry conviction even if it does make amusing entertainment. Barrymore's work is excellent and it will doubtless surprise some of his fans to see him as a screen buffoon engaged in action that in short modern subjects would be labelled as slapstick, such as being catapulted through the air into a lady's room, and climbing over roofs and does stunts suggestive of Fairbanks and Richard Talmadge. Another noticeable feature of Barrymore's work is his make-up as the King of Fools, and a novel stunt shows him removing this weird make-up when banished by the king.

The supporting cast is excellent. Marceline Day as the girl is exceptionally attractive and fits finely into the sumptuous surroundings. Conrad Veidt gives a convincing and excellent characterization of the crafty, superstitious monarch and Dick Sutherland capably portrays the role of the Executioner. Angelo Rositto, a tiny dwarf in swashbuckling costume adds an amusing and at the same time a weird touch to a number of the rollicking scenes.

The entire production of "The Beloved Rogue" has been made on a big scale and large number of persons appear in the mob scenes for which whole sections of the streets of Paris and Rouen and enormous castles have been reproduced. Another feature of the picture is the novel camera angling of some of the scenes.

The story runs the gamut of emotions from the burning of Villon's patriotic father at the stake to the rollicking buffoonry of the Parisian rabble, with interludes of romantic interest and pathos and weird scenes of the king's visit to the court astrologer, but the dominant note of the story is rollicking fantasy that for the most part proves interesting but only mildly amusing.

AN interesting western which has in addition to the usual quota of action of its type a plot which veers away from the established formulas and introduces a number of new and interesting twists, is the Pathe picture "The Fightin' Comeback" starring Buddy Roosevelt.

WRITTEN by Bayard Veiller, the author of several highly succesful detective-crime mystery plays which have scored big successes, Universal is offering a Jewel production, another of this type, "Held By the Law," which should prove excellent audience and box-office entertainment.

The picture catches the interest immediately by starting out where the usual film ends, with a romantic embrace. Soon thereafter, a murder is committed and the wrong man tried and sentenced to death on apparently conclusive circumstantial evidence. An unusual feature of the story is the fact that the spectators are thoroughly familiar with the details of the murder, know the guilty party and where the real evidence is hidden, but notwithstanding this fact, so smoothly and logically is the story built up and the solution brought about, a last minute one, of course; that the interest is held firmly and suspense and excitement kept at high pitch until the final fadeout.

Marguerite De LaMotte has the lion's share of the opportunities as it is she who ferrets out the murderer of her father and she gives a thoroughly competent performance. Johnny Walker is featured opposite her in the romantic angle but his part dramatically is a subordinate one.

"Held By the Law" looks like a box-office winner where patrons like exciting crime-detective melodramas.

Miss Daniels in a sort of "Kiki" role plays with spirit and finesse and is given ample support by Chester Conklin. Douglas Gilmore is a personable sweetheart and Henry Kolker and Richard Tucker play their roles well.

Artistically the farce is light, but it will please those who want broad laughs, though the story is a bit broad.

Tom hurls ignited power cans at the enemy, escapes in a barrel rolled off the roof, draws some of the gang away, disposes of them, and returns to finish the job, driving off the others, blowing up the tower and rescuing the girl by sliding down a rope.

AS HER NEWEST STARRING vehicle, in which she is assisted by Lew Cody in the opposite romantic role, Norma Shearer

SEVERAL years ago, a number of Edgar Rice Burrough's dealing with the adventures of Tarzan among his friends, the jungle animals, were transferred to the screen and enjoyed considerable success. Now F. B. O. is offering the newest of this series "Tarzan and the Golden Lion."

A wildly improbable yarn of a highly fantastic nature that goes far beyond the limits of credulity is unfolded, with monkeys that talk and act as messengers to the mystic rulers of a band of sun worshipping black is being offered by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in "The Demi-Bride," directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

This picture proves to be a light and quite sophisticated French farce which should provide amusing entertainment in the majority of houses. The idea of the story is that a young school girl falls desperately in love with a French dandy and, finding that he has an affair with her flirtatious stepmother, she uses this as a means of causing him to marry her.

The plot development is not new and follows along the general lines of farces of this type. The appearance of a former sweetheart of the groom, who gets tipsy and goes to sleep in his bed, brings in the familiar bedroom angle, and while slightly risqué, there is nothing that could be objected to. This gives opportunity for excellent comedy work on the part of Tenen Holtz as the valet who tries to get rid of this woman and then to secretly notify the husband of the predicament.

"The Demi-Bride" is directed and acted in a sprightly manner that more than makes up for the lightness of the story and it proves thoroughly amusing.

Norma Shearer is convincing both as the young school girl and the more mature looking bride and handles the role well. Lew Cody gives a good performance as the husband and Carmel Myers has a typical role as the flirtatious wife and shows to advantage. Dorothy Sebastian scores especially in the scene where she appears to be intoxicated.

men, with a pet lion that discovers his master's peril by gazing through a secret panel, with bag after bag of diamonds, some as big as walnuts, and one of the characters hurled over high cliffs and not being killed. Nor is the less fantastic portion smoothly or logically handled, for we see Tarzan familiar with the jungle, taking his whole force of natives to hunt for the renegades that threatened him, and leaving his home unguarded.

This picture with its weird and improbable sequences among the sun and lion worshippers of the spectacular city in the heart of Africa reared by the tribe that owns the diamond mine, may appeal to patrons who like highly imaginative stories, but it seems rather far fetched for the general public.

A Major Differs From a Sergeant

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

DON MIKE. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson, with Silver King. Boys, here's a good show—Don Mike, with these two short subjects, Educational's Peaceful Oscar and When a Man's a Fan with Cooke and Guard from F. B. O. It drew like wildfire and patrons were pleased. Ten reels of real entertainment in all. Don Mike with the above players means box office results. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

First National

DON JUAN'S 3 NIGHTS. Star, Lewis Stone. Just a program picture and not much of a story. Don't think it went over very good. Played one night to a very small house and didn't make film rental. No good for small towns such as mine. Tone fair, appeal 60 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

IT MUST BE LOVE. Star, Colleen Moore. Good. When she sniffed the limburger it would tickle a dog. Tone good, appeal fine. Sunday yes, special ditto. Draw small town class, town 896. Admission 10-20. Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre (200 seats), Neola, Iowa.

THE SAVAGE. Stars, Ben Lyon, May McAvoy. The best comedy we've run in some time. Patrons pleased 100 per cent. Tone O. K. Appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 3,500. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (350 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

Fox

BLUE EAGLE. (7 reels). Star, George O'Brien. A drama of courage, loyalty and strength, but it is mostly strength. Lots of fights and Big Bill Russell took his part as well as O'Brien. One fault in this picture was continuity poor. Poor paper. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

THREE BAD MEN. Star cast. Big picture, worth playing anywhere. I did not do the business I should have done, on account of unsettled weather, but the picture is good. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw town, farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. 15-35. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

Metro-Goldwyn

BEN HUR. Star cast. Colossal, stupendous, colorful, thrilling and filled with heart interest, the picturization of this great story holds unwavering attention from opening scene to the end. Fred Niblo has handled the mobs in a masterful way, while the chariot race is a screen epic. Francis Bushman's work alone would make this production noteworthy. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

EXIT SMILING. Stars, Beatrice Lillie and Jack Pickford. This picture is too long for the story. I can't say much for it; I would never have bought it had I seen it and would have sidestepped it. Big companies seem to have the habit of sticking in a lot of subjects not suitable for the small town man if he has to keep the price down. It would seem to be a poor policy for all concerned. Draw town, farm class, town 600. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

The Index to Reports from January to March appears this week. Together with the previous Index, in December issue, this gives you a complete index to every report on a galaxy of box office bets, some of which you may have missed. And, maybe, a few gentle warnings!

Here it is, preserve it, consult it.

FAUST. Different from common run of pictures but simply fine. Caused more talk than any picture we have played in a long time. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

LIGHTS OF OLD BROADWAY. Star, Marion Davies. Wonderful production; tone good. Marion played a double part, the Irish and the society girl. All parts well acted. Don't see how you can go wrong. Book it and boost it. Admission 10-15. E. P. Hosack, Community Theatre (200 seats), Ellston, Iowa.

LOVE'S BLINDNESS. A fine little picture that pleased my folks; in fact, all Metro-Goldwyn pictures take well here. This star is simply fine. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

WINNERS OF THE WILDERNESS. Star, Tim McCoy. A-No. 1. Good for any place, worth the money you pay for it, but owing to other causes I didn't make anything on it. No fault of picture. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre, Wire, Oklahoma.

Paramount

HOLD THAT LION. Star Douglas MacLean. A peach of a comedy, but I can't hand the female opposite Doug very much. Walter Hiers was great in this one. Tone good, appeal excellent. Special no. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. Carl A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

PALM BEACH GIRL. Star, Bebe Daniels. This is an excellent Bebe Daniels subject that will please everyone. Plenty of action and a good story. A snappy picture that should go good anywhere to any type audience. Appeal 90 per cent. Special yes. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SEA HORSES. Star, Jack Holt. A good program. Good tone, no as special. R. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Natoma, Kansas.

WE'RE IN THE NAVY NOW. Star team, Beery-Hatton. One that will please them all; many compliments. But as usual, bought too high to leave any profit. Small town draw. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

WE'RE IN THE NAVY NOW. (5,519 feet). Stars, Beery-Hatton. Broke house records with this picture and pleased them all. A comedy knockout. Appeal 100 per cent., special yes. Mitchell Conery, Columbia Theatre, Rensselaer, New York.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,154 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture. Will make you money. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 150. Admission 10-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (650 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

Producers Dist. Corp.

NERVOUS WRECK. Stood them up for two days. Everyone said it was a good show. Producers have the pictures. Gem Theatre, Jackson, Tennessee.

WILD OATS LANE. Star, Viola Dana. A very good program picture; best Viola Dana did for some time. Cast very good. Play and you won't be sorry. Tone fine, appeal 100 per cent. No special. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown Pennsylvania.

United Artists

THE BAT. Star cast. Spooky crook drama with many thrills. Gets your people excited unless they have seen the play. They'll enjoy it anyway, because it is not restricted to a few interiors, as was the play. Too much footage in this. Fair tone, Sunday or special no. Draw all classes, town 8,500. Admission 10-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Universal

COMBAT. Star, House Peters. This is the best picture with House Peters that we've had in a long time. Lots of action. Big forest fire. Beautiful mountain scenery. Tone fair, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw town and country class, town 420. Admission 10-25. H. V. Ritter, McDonald Theatre (300 seats), McDonald, Kansas.

ICE FLOOD. (6 reels). Star, Kenneth Harlan. Strictly program, with a good ice jam. Kenneth Harlan is fine and hope to see him in bigger stuff. Miss Dana does her little part well. Good paper. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

PRISONERS OF THE STORM. Star, House Peters. Fine production of the snow country. Splendid photography, with a thrilling climax, showing an avalanche covering the cabin in which the actors are sheltered. Would call this a great picture for warm weather, as the snow scenes give the audience a chilly feeling. Tone O. K. Appeal strong. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all species, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

STELLA MARIS. Star Mary Philbin. Great little picture. The star does some wonderful acting. If you have not played it, do so. It did not pull for me, but it is great anyway. If my people did not come it is their loss. Tone good, appeal should be good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30, 15-35. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

UNDER WESTERN SKIES. Star, Norman Kerry. A good program that pleased most all. Tone good, appeal 80 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

UNIVERSAL WESTERNS. Universal's westerns are all good program pictures that please my audiences. L. O. Davis Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

WILD HORSE STAMPEDE. Star, Jack Hoxie. A good snappy western that will please your Saturday crowds. Hoxie is a favorite in my houses with the western element of people, who compose a big majority in the smaller towns. Appeal 75 per cent. Special no. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, admission 10-30, Hazard, Kentucky.

Warner Bros.

DON'T TELL THE WIFE. Star, Irene Rich. Irene Rich is at her best as the neglected wife and Huntly Gordon's team work is excellent. Here's a pair that's hard to beat in this particular line. Lilyan Tashman had plenty of snap and go, but Otis Harlan hogged the laughs when his car got mired—some rain!—some mud! Mighty good picture. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

MY OFFICIAL WIFE. Stars, Irene Rich, Conway Tearle. While this in no way surpasses the old Vitagraph production of the same play, featuring Clara Kimball Young, yet it is built on the solid foundation of a real dramatic story and that always means entertainment. The work of the two stars is very good, as always, and Tearle holds his age remarkably. Irene Rich is not so fortunate in all scenes. She is a very beautiful and clever woman and if they let her act her age, has a long screen career ahead of her. My patrons liked this picture very much. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

A Moving Picture World Presentation Devised by O. T. Taylor

OBSERVANCE of a theatre anniversary may be turned into a noteworthy event as well as a profitable one. An exhibitor should not hesitate to go to some length in staging a presentation of merit for his theatre's anniversary.

Numerous ideas, fitting to the occasion, could be advanced. The two-part presentation offered herewith has been selected because of its flexibility and its entertainment value. Either one of the two parts may be used singly; either one may be simplified or elaborated upon, as may the entire presentation as outlined in two parts: THE ROUTINE.

The drapes part on a setting depicting the entrance gates to the city of the wooden soldiers. A wall in which is set eight gates; each gate guarded by a wooden soldier sentry. In front of the wall, to right and left of the gates, stands a big tree attended by a guard. The setting is backed by a fantastic, multi-colored sky drop. Canary flood on lower stage. Magenta spot from right on upper part of gates. Overhead spot on tree guards and sentries. Sentries open gates to admit performers. The singers, dancers, instrumentalists, acrobats or other performers introduced here should be of a whimsical or comedy character, such as clowns for acrobatics or tumbling offering, blackface for songs and music, animal characters in eccentric dances. Or mechanical such as doll dance.

The music should be in harmony with the character and action. Flood to white as performers exit. Music to "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" as sentries and guards line up for drill. The drill should be of the mechanical soldier variety. The company is divided in two as the soldiers finish the drill, each half taking up position right and left. Stage to blue. Soldiers point to the sky as anniversary line flashes on. The soldiers maintain position while letters on sky fade out and sky drop flies slowly and gates split in center, each half sliding off-stage right and left, simultaneously with raising of sky drop, revealing—

PART TWO, a huge, decorated birthday cake, revolving slowly between two giant candles. The backing is a cyc of dark colored plush. Music to "Humoreske" Dvorak. Stage in amber side flood. Green and canary glint on cyc. The two large candles as well as candles on the cake are lighted.

The cake stops revolving; soldiers march off. White overhead spot up gradually on cake. Large flower on top of the cake opens and posing figure is slowly elevated into view. Girls posinging on lower tier of the cake steps down to a classy dance routine. Various novelty, song or dance numbers of a refined and artistic character are introduced here. Burlesque and slap-stick should be avoided in this part of the presentation.

THE SETTINGS:

As mentioned before, either one of the two parts may be used as a presentation; each part being a complete unit.

Part one is simple to stage, yet effective. The number of gates used, and soldiers taking part, depends on stage room and to the length to which a producer wishes to go in staging the offering.

Note that the gates are in pairs; two, four, six and so on.

Part two requires more effort. Here the most difficult obstacle is the huge cake. This may be overcome and the staging simplified by making the cake stationary instead of revolving. It could then be made with a flat back, as if cut in two, with the rounded portion showing to the audience. And it may be reduced to one layer and the elevated central figure eliminated.

In part one, figures 1 and 2, the walls, C, and gates, B, are built of battens, wall board and paper, or muslin. Construction is shown in detail in figure 4. The gates are hinged to swing out, toward audience, and the wall board covering placed on the outside of the batten frame. Ordinary, inexpensive iron hinges are used and camouflaged with ornamental hinges cut from wall board, or merely painted on the gate. By placing each half section on a floor frame equipped with rollers, small wooden or fibre wheels bolted to the frame, as shown in b-c figure 4, the sections may be easily pushed or pulled off stage for part two opening. The trees are cut from wall board, nailed to batten and equipped with a foot. Metal gliders under the foot makes the tree easy to handle. The fantastic sky drop is desirable but not absolutely necessary; a plain sky drop will serve. The anniversary line is flashed on the sky drop from the projection booth. A special slide entirely blacked out, except the lettering, is used.

The grand drape E, shown as used in both part one and two, is optional and may be eliminated.

In part two the huge vases, H, as well as the candles, I, are cut from wall board, curved, and nailed to a batten frame with rounded cross pieces. The large size flowers can be constructed from paper or cloth on wire stems as described in a previous presentation. Construction of the cake is shown in detail in figure 5. A bearing pivot is fastened to the stage floor, the cake, rotating on rollers, is held in position by the pivot bolt, d, figure 5, shows side elevation, through the center, and e the frame view from above.

The decorations are made from heavy paper, cardboard or papier mache and coated to suggest the sugar flowers and decorations common on cakes. Textone, a plastic paint, is useful where a rough, uneven surface of any kind is desired. Large mailing tubes wired for electric connection and finished with textone or other plastic paint, make excellent candles for the cake.

PAINTING. Part one.

Do sky drop as indicated by color notes in figure 1. Falls, C, lower part buff, blend to white for upper part. Decorative stuff in orange and black. Gates, B, white and black checker pattern, as indicated. Spires silver. Doors silver with black hinges. Frame between doors in black and orange. Trees, D, medium green, detailed in bright light green with flowers in red, orange, light blue, etc.

Part two. Cyc in dark color. Vases, I, white, decorated in rich turquoise blue, orange and gold. Candles white and silver. Candlesticks in antique bronze with floral design in bright colors. Cake white or very pale pink. All decorative stuff on the cake in imitation of sugar coating.

Dressing a presentation is accomplished economically and satisfactorily by renting costumes from a reliable costume house. Suggestions for costumes appropriate for this presentation are shown in figure 6. These are more or less of a stock order.

Negro Fans

sufficient. When they do make more money with the better class of production, they figure it to be an accident.

There is, probably there always will be, a demand for the elemental play. There must be some provision of these to appeal to the crassly ignorant, but it would seem to be the part of wisdom to pause, now and then to appraise the house clientele; to discover whether or not the standards of taste has changed.

Mr. Francis did this and found greater profit in a better selection. There must be hundreds of other small houses in which a better financial return could be gained through the presentation of a better type of drama.

This does not mean an abrupt transition from the very poor to the ultra highbrow. It does suggest that directors abandon the old belief that eighty per cent. of picture patrons are unlettered morons. The pictures themselves have served to educate and elevate. It does not matter whether the patron be Nordic or African. All have advanced, the negro perhaps in an even greater degree, the negro white aliens, but all have made a more rapid advance than the pictures. Why not catch up?

Messrs. A. E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, with whom he formed the famous Vitagraph Company.

Another of the earliest film exchanges, operating along about 1902, was Alfred Harstn's at No. 138 East Fourteenth Street. Harstn is still active in the business and a young man still, for all the years he has been identified with the film industry. He began as an operator with the old Eidoloscope at Coney Island in 1894, so may justly lay claim to antedating all but possibly half a dozen living men who were in the motion picture business at its inception.

With Jean A. Leroy and Herbert L. Miles, Alf Harstn has seen a lot of changes in the "fillums," but the business of selling and distributing the film itself, possibly has changed most of all.

Theatre Equipment Association Will Improve Theatre Business

Wide interest is already being shown in the campaign now being launched by the Theatre Equipment Association.

Membership in this organization is composed of the leading manufacturers, distributors and dealers throughout the United States and Canada.

It is a thoroughly independent movement to offer to exhibitors the services of that Association and its members to improve business conditions in the Motion Picture Industry.

The Association has adopted the slogan that "BETTER EQUIPMENT MEANS BETTER BUSINESS." "This slogan," says Mr. Hertner, "was adopted as a result of considerable discussion and the unanimous opinion that larger patronage invariably follows better equipment in the theatre."

Exhibitors are invited to write to the offices of the Association. Questions or problems will be handled by the respective members, as every member of this Association is in position and eager to give constructive help in this way to the thousands of exhibitors throughout the country.

The officers and directors of the Association are as follows: J. H. Hertner, President; S. A. Louis, Vice-President; S. S. Behrends, Treasurer; S. S. Behrends, J. C. Brown, Walter Green, J. H. Hertner, S. A. Louis, J. E. McAuley, I. L. Nixon, Irving Samuels and C. D. Struble.

The manufacturer and dealer members of this Association have large trained forces who are experts in their respective lines. It is really astonishing the wealth of technical information that can be secured through this organization if the exhibitor will take advantage of this information.

The Association is desirous of adding to its membership as it is open to reliable manufacturers and dealers who wish to join in this movement.

Correspondence should be addressed to the Theatre Equipment Association, Old Colony Building, Chicago, Illinois.

Butterfield Theatre At Niles, Michigan

The W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., announces that work was started on Monday, March 21, on a new 1,200-seat house at Niles, Mich.

The project is being financed by Mr. T. W. Ready, well known citizen of Niles, and the Butterfield interests have taken a long-term lease on the building, which will cost in the neighborhood of $300,000 to construct.

Myrle Smith, of South Bend, and W. P. Whitney, of Chicago, are the architects.

Inventory Discloses $120,000.00 Invested in Relief Equipment

The National Theatre Supply Company has over $120,000 (actual replacement value) invested in such equipment as projectors, mechanisms, intermittent movements, lenses, motors, generators, etc., which are kept on hand in all of their 31 branch stores ready for relief and emergency cases that may develop in theatres which the Company serves.

At first thought this seems to be an unwarranted investment; but according to an official of the National organization, "it is one of the necessities of the business and by reason of it we are able to render a service that is needed in the theatre industry and we feel that this investment in emergency apparatus is completely justified."

Better Projection Pays

Disagrees With a Bluebook School Query

A LETTER signed "Bob," which I suspect comes from R. G. B., the Philadelphia man who asked the question, though maybe not, says: "I don't agree with the answer published to R. G. B.'s Bluebook school question. I would not have three motion picture projectors for the reason that a 70-foot projection distance with an 18-foot picture would set up side distortion. I would recommend two M. P. projectors and a spare projector mechanism.

"High intensity would be my selection of light source, as against the reflector arc, owing to the fact that it would be necessary to use a 3½-inch E. F. projection lens, which has a diameter limited, I think, to about 1¾ inches, and since the divergence of the high intensity beam is more gradual than is that from the reflector arc the light loss would not be so great with the former, and in that way the definition would be better. In selecting lenses I would try out lenses from various manufacturers, including an anastigmat lens."

A queer mixture of right and wrong, but it comes from no dumbbell, anyhow. "Bob," whoever he may be, evidently has studied, but has not yet gone quite far enough. What he says about distortion is true, but the projection room location was already presumed to be fixed, and it was a choice of evils. The 2-projector installation and a spare mechanism is, however, well worthy of consideration.

The fact that the projection lens does not admit all the light does not directly affect definition, I think, but it does make for light loss and unevenness of screen illumination. However, the high intensity would give better definition, not for the reasons stated, but because it would send a greater amount of the total light flux through the central zones of the lens, where it is the most highly corrected, or at least where the lens curvatures are much less with relation to the screen surface than in the other lens zones.

S. M. P. E. to Hold Spring Meet in Norfolk

The S. M. P. E. will hold its spring meeting in Norfolk, Va., April 25 to 28 inclusive. By addressing L. C. Porter, Secretary, Fifth and Sussex St., Harrison, N. J., you may obtain, without cost, a circular setting forth the various means of transportation to Norfolk and the rates; also the interesting things in and about that city.

A bulletin will soon be issued which will give details, or some of them, concerning the plans for the meeting. It will be sent to all members of the society, of course.

YOU should be there. Every concern which holds membership should, by all means, be represented. The work of the society is only best carried forward when there is a full attendance at its meetings, and that this work be carried forward in the best possible manner is to both the direct and indirect advantage of every one in the industry.

Help Asked by England in Locating Frank Garbutt

From George Garbutt, 55 Tennyson Avenue, Scarborough, England, comes a request that I aid a mother and brother in locating Frank Garbutt, who is supposed to be a motion picture projectionist. He has disappeared and his mother has had no news of him for more than two years.

Garbutt is, or was a bachelor, 38 years of age. He was with the South African Film Trust in Africa for eight years. Later he was with the Bioscope Improvements, Ltd., and The Way Non-rewind, both of New York City, but both, so far as I can find, out, are out of business.

If any one knows of Garbutt's whereabouts let them communicate with his brother or with this department. He may now be in this country, in Canada, Africa or in Australia or New Zealand. Men of those countries please take notice.

New Orleans Alliance Shows Fine Letter Head

International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of United States and Canada

Projectionists Local No. 293
Post Office Box 293
New Orleans,
Louisiana

Above is a most excellent letter head, if you ask this editor. It gives full recognition to the official name of the organization, and at the same time gives recognition to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers by recognizing its nomenclature.

Personally I would prefer merely the initials of the organization, because keeping the name "machine operator" before the exhibitor and others is harmful from the monstrosity and all other view points, but until the organization sees fit, in its infinite wisdom, to change its name, and stop asserting that its members are merely machine operators—well, there certainly is a legitimate excuse for its use, harmful or not.

Big Things in Mazda

I have it on excellent authority that the near future will see Mazda which will be able to place upon the screen results fully equal to the reflector arc lamp. I have not yet seen a demonstration and am a bit skeptical, but the information is from a source in which I cannot but have confidence, hence I'm waiting.

Revolutionary Lens Revelation Is Coming

I have long ago stopped saying anything is impossible. There are, however, certain things in motion picture projection which we have been taught for many years to regard as beyond the realms of possibility.

What would you say if I were to tell you that a perfectly sharp, entirely undistorted, highly illuminated 18-foot wide motion picture could be projected, using a projection lens (don't laugh) of one inch equivalent focus?

And yet, gentlemen, a very responsible corporation is proposing to do that very thing and, as a matter of fact, in the new Roxy Theatre already have done something very close to it. I say "very close to it" because that particular installation was put in before the apparatus of the designers had been fully perfected, in order to accommodate the opening of that magnificent playhouse.

The sponsors of this proposition do not care to have me describe it in detail just yet, nor do they wish to take care of the deluge of mail which would probably result from the publication of their name. You may take it from me, however, that this thing is coming, and will be a commercial possibility within the next thirty to sixty days, though probably none of the apparatus will be available quite that soon. It will, of course, make rear projection practicable.

If this thing works out, as it apparently is going to work out, it is going to mean an entire revolution in matters projectional. You fellows who have in the past turned up your distinguished noses at technical projection matters had better pull them down in something of a hurry, because, believe you me, things are moving at high speed these days, and you are going to be called upon to take charge of apparatus so entirely different from anything you have ever known that unless you start studying it is going to put your hair in a very close curl—and I don't mean maybe either.

I think I will be able to give you the full data on this particular proposition within the next thirty days, accompanied by either photographic illustrations or drawings. You may polish up your spectacles and look for this with much interest, because much interest attaches thereto to YOU.

New Reel Strong and Light, But Efficient

The editor was shown the plans of what seemed to be a very excellent reel, designed by O. A. Ross, consulting engineer. It will be of the sheet metal type, but made light and very strongly reinforced by embossing. Its outer edge will carry a duraluminum or spring steel wire rolled into the metal. The method for attaching the film end is the most effective and simple I have ever looked at. The reel will appear in due time and will, I believe, be welcomed by exchange men.

Arthur Gray Discusses Projection Installations

PROJECTIONIST Arthur Gray, Boston, Mass., hands us the following which, as is the rule with things from his pen, is excellent. It is commended to your careful consideration, as well as to the consideration of the Buasch & Lomb Optical Company and other makers of projection lenses. Gray says:

"In the February 19th issue of the 'School' there appeared the answers to a question which is so broad in scope as to include a majority of the problems encountered by the projection engineer in designing the projection installation in a new theatre. I note that, at the end of the article, the editor has requested comment on the subject.

"First, I think that Mr. Hanover should be highly complimented upon the excellence and thoroughness of his answer. It seems to be as complete as it is possible to make it without going into untold detail. From my own personal point of view, it appeals to me as being, perhaps, the most comprehensive answer to any question yet published in the long series.

"What appealed to me as being especially logical was his statement that he would advise one of the large optical manufacturers of the condition with which he was confronted, as to projection distance, the size of the picture required, the type of the light source which he intended to use and, I think he might well have added, the screen intensity which he considered would be necessary for his purpose.

"It occurs to me, of course I am here stating only my own opinion, that the projectionist, in selecting the different units of the optical train for use in a stated case, has rather generally neglected the opportunity to avail himself of the valuable advice which a concern, such as the one Mr. Hanover had named, is in a position to give. An organization which is in a position to manufacture, and does manufacture, the complete optical train for a moving picture projector must certainly have a comprehensive knowledge of all the problems involved throughout the entire system. They realize, and understand, the influence which one factor of the system will exert upon another one and will act and advise accordingly.

"I think the time is not far distant when the complete projector optical system will be predetermined, and designed, for each particular installation, varying with the varying conditions. Furthermore, I think it will then be deemed necessary to have more than one set of lenses for the projectors. I mean sets having the same focal lengths, but of different free diameters.

"In the case of the reflector arc type of light source, which is the system that has been recommended for adoption in the case we are discussing, the specifications would designate a certain type of reflector, both as to curve characteristics, focal length and diameter; all working distances; the speed and focal length of the projection lens; and the embodying in the lens of such peculiar and distinctive characteristics as would be best adapted to the particular condition.

"Without going into the subject in too much detail, I am of the opinion that generally speaking the practical standardization of lenses of two speeds only, the so called quarter, and half size, lenses, does not make available the lens of particular speed which might give the best all around results in a particular case. We have practically only two extremes from which to make a selection.

Handbook Ready

Well, boys, at long and at last here is the new book—two volumes, a limp leather-bound, almost twelve hundred pages. When I told you the book would be out about the middle of January, I believed it, but—the printer man! that chap has almost driven us insane. Anyhow, here it is already and orders will be promptly filled.

However, I suppose the tempo of the exhibitor-buyer is best understood by the folks who make and sell the goods, and when there is a sufficient demand for more latitude in the diameters of lenses they undoubtedly will become available.

"The selection of the best lens to use in any particular case is becoming increasingly difficult with the development of new types of light source. Some of these units, which, by the way, are a very substantial contribution to the development of projection, set up well defined optical problems heretofore of negligible importance, but which must now be recognized and treated accordingly. I may state my own problem in this respect, as an example.

"In connection with a reflector arc light source, a type which is now both popular, and efficient, I have been using fast, imported, high-grade lenses. These particular lenses were selected because of the excellent definition which they provide with a light source of this type, even when working at the relatively large aperture of F/3.

"Because of this large free diameter, however, the focal point is very critical, and any slight displacement of the film at the aperture, caused by any appreciable varying density of the film, must be compensated for by a corresponding adjustment of the working distance of the lens; otherwise the picture will appear distinctly out of focus.

"When projecting film in a buckled condition, the critical characteristic of this lens causes the in-and-out-of-focus effect on the screen to be very pronounced, and highly objectionable. With perfect film the definition is excellent; with poor film the effect is terrible.

"I cannot control the condition of the film given me to project. Consequently I must select a lens which will give me the best average results from the general 'run' of film, month in and month out. I think the thing which eventually will be done, will be to use lenses of a smaller relative free diameter, even though it will entail some added loss in light transmission. I do not care now to go to the extreme of using a so called quarter-size lens, and may finally be able to obtain the desired lens in a compromise free diameter. I don't know.

"The eventual solution may be to have two different sets of lenses, of the same focal lengths but with different free diameters. Thus a slow lens could be used with film that varied considerably in density, or was in a buckled condition; and the fast lens could be used under conditions where it would be more advantageous to do so.

"I am not certain but what we have overstepped ourselves a bit in this almost constant urge for larger, and still larger, relative free diameter of lenses. The 'more light' appeal is a strong one, I will grant, but there are lots of things to consider other than just illumination. I think the whole thing is worthy of a bit of thought anyway."

McLill Comes in With Radio Interference Dope

STANLEY H. McLILL, Manager and Projectionist, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ontario, says: "Note that a correspondent of the department says radio fans for two blocks around his theatre complain that when he is projecting their reception is interfered with, and that he blames it to his Wagner Rotary Converter.

"We have the same type converter here, had the same trouble and the same idea at first. Having been a radio fan myself for years, naturally I've delved somewhat into its problems of interference, and with a super-hetrodyne have been able to locate and remedy considerable of it.

"I assure Mr. Sage that if the brushes on the commutator end of his converter do not spark excessively, the trouble does not lie in that machine, but is due to surge caused by the projection arc. He may verify this by shutting down the converter and running with A C for a while. He will then find the same interference on the air. We have tried condensers and chokes, but cannot stop this surge. I understand that as yet no way has been found of controlling it."

Well, I dunno. I am not quite sure what friend McLill has in mind when he says "surge," but it must be a magnetic action. Anyhow I thank him for the suggestion, which is hereby passed along to Mr. Sage and others.

Just Resentment Voiced by Jones

IT is encouraging to note that a constantly increasing number of projectionists voice resentment at being classed as merely the attendant upon or operator of a machine.

From John M. Jones, Charlotte, N. C., comes a letter to which is attached a clipping from the Charlotte Observer, a daily paper, in which attention is called to the fact that the paper had arranged to project the election returns. It reads, in part, as follows:

"As fast as the returns come in they will be flashed upon the screen through a motion picture projecting machine, one of the best made, operated by one of the best operators available in Charlotte."

Aside from the fact that the returns could not possibly be projected through a motion picture projecting or projection "machine" (would not motion picture projector sound as well) except after hours of delay, why affront the projectionists of Charlotte, Mr. Observer editor?

Of course, I know you did not mean it as an affront, but why not have your writers at least learn the names of things before they write about them? For your information, a motion picture projector IS a "machine." So are a camera, a locomotive, an organ and a piano. But you call them an organ, a piano, a camera or a locomotive, not an organ machine, a locomotive machine, a camera machine, etc.

You don't call the organist an "operator," do you? You would insult him or her if you did. Well, you also offer an affront to the real men engaged in the profession of motion picture projection, upon whose skill Charlotte folks must depend for the excellence of the entertainment they pay for. The exhibitor "operates" the theatre, does he not? You don't call him an operator, do you? So why single out the projectionist for affront?

Preordained

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

“Something Just As Good”

Try and Get the Public to Believe It!

You can't fool the public!

It has many times heard the words “Something Just As Good.” It knows that it is the cloak used to hide an imitation,—that the imitation is the best evidence of the success of the original and its popularity.

Business on the Pathe News has never been better than right now.

Contracts are pouring in. The many warm exhibitor friends that Pathe News has made during the sixteen years in which it has created motion picture history, by signed contracts, word of mouth, by letter, are telling the story of a devotion and a loyalty such as the business has never seen. These exhibitors know, their public knows, that there can only be one best, and that is the first of all news reels, the one that today represents the accumulated experience of sixteen years, the expenditure of vast sums of money, the united labors of an incomparable staff that is intact, loyal and world wide in its scope.

Competition is nothing new to the Pathe News. It has met it again and again in the past, and is still the best. That others now seek to try their hand does not alter the situation. Pathe pledges that the Pathe News will continue to be the best.

Box office values, news reels and popularity with the public are not created overnight. Just try and get the public to believe that something else is "just as good" as the Pathe News!

DeForest Back Full of Fight Returning Home After Visiting the King of Spain

Lee DeForest, returning from a trip to Europe during which he had as a Phonofilm star so distinguished personage as the King of Spain, is expected to arrive home this week and it is possible that he may start legal action to establish his patent rights, which his associates claim, have been infringed by concerns already successfully in the field. His laboratory has been concentrating on the perfection of a new loud speaker, and, now that it has been satisfactorily demonstrated, the sales organization, under Ben. Morgenroth, has started an active canvass of the country for business.

Installations will be made at a cost of from $2,500 to $4,000. The first results are coming in from New England, where six houses have to date agreed to take the service, the first to sign contracts being the Allyn, of Hartford, a new theatre, and the Lyceum, of New Britain, Conn. These houses will open with Phonofilm on April 18. No hint of the production plans is made at present, pending the arrival of the inventor; but, in view of what has been done and is being planned by the others. It is evident that this will be the greatest problem. The Fox-Case folk are preparing a full length tonal feature and the Warners have rounded up a most imposing and expensive list of singers and stage celebrities.

It was the expressed intention of DeForest, on his departure, to study the talking film situation and prospects in Europe; and he probably will cite the recent exhibition of the Tri-Ergon film by Ufa to show just how far America is in the lead with this new mechanical magic.

Two weeks ago, Ufa gave a demonstration of the corrected method in its Kurferstandamm Theatre, Berlin, presenting the orchestral overture from "The Marriage of Figaro."

A qualified authority declares that a faithful reproduction of the various instrumental tones was never attained and frequently there was clearly apparent lack of coordination between sound and action.

John J. Murdock likely to be Head of Pathe, P. D. C., Keith-Albee Combine

The Big Chief?

John J. Murdock, whose motion picture experience, knowledge of vaudeville and theatre management, through Keith-Albee, make him probable head of the gigantic association of film and stage interests.

John C. Eisele Dies Suddenly

John C. Eisele, treasurer of Fox Film Corporation for the past nine years and a backer and director in many trust companies, died Thursday while attending a meeting of the board of directors of the Washington Trust Company, Bond street, Newark. Death was due to heart failure.

Besides being treasurer of Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Eisele was a member of the brokerage firm of Eisele & King, president of the Norfolk and Lincoln Building and Loan Associations of Newark and a director of the West Side Trust Company, Fidelity Union Trust Company and Security Savings Bank, all of Newark, and of the Public National Bank, New York.

He lived at 591 Clinton avenue, Newark, N. J.

Mr. Eisele is survived by his widow, Mrs. Anna Eisele, and four sons, John, Frederick, Edward and Arthur.

Vaudeville and Picture Veteran May Bring Organized Interchange of Players of Stage and Screen

John J. Murdock, head of the Keith-Albee agency, a veteran in motion pictures, one of the highest authorities in vaudeville and adept in theatre management, may be the man to become the executive chief of the combination, soon finally to be perfected, of Pathe, Producers Distributors and vaudeville interests represented by Mr. Murdock. By intimate experience, it is indicated, he is qualified effectively to deal with any angle of the big proposition, and his name persists in the rumors concerning the deal.

Mr. Murdock, in the present stage of the negotiations, has nothing to say. He refers inquirers to the promise that, when the big financial, production and theatrical task finally is completed, with the approval of certain voting stockholders, due announcement concerning the whole project will be made.

In discussing the coming changes in picture distribution and exhibition a person connected with the Keith-Albee interests points to the fact that in time, screen stars, if they possess the dual ability, may be signed up for individual pictures and then, instead of making the popular "in person" appearances at the houses showing their attractions, they may be booked in specially written vaudeville acts—two a day—at a salary to make the arrangement more than satisfactory.

Add to this the possibility of the big interests securing stars from the stage for both the screen and vaudeville. Many big names have been annexed from the legitimate during the last year by Keith-Albee, and among them are these players familiar to the screen, Lowell Sherman, Hale Hamilton, Ethel Barrymore, Taylor Holmes, Eddie Cantor, Lou Tellegen, George Jessel, Robert Warwick, H. B. Warner, Catherine Calvert, Alice Brady, Florence Reed, Lupino Lane, Clara Kimball Young, and Laurette Taylor.

Many cinema stars are talking vaudeville, but negotiations have not reached a stage that warrants an announcement, says the Keith-Albee office. Among the celebrities of the silent drama who have already made their debut in vaudeville are Jean Acker, Betty Blythe, Mildred Harris, Louise Lovely, Theodore Roberts, Bert Lytell, Nazimova, Anita Stewart, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Mrs. Sydney Drew, Bessie Barriscale, Crane Wilbur, Sheldon Lewis and Virginia Pearson, Ruth Roland, Montague Love, Theodor Kosloff, Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Washburn, Henry B. Walthall, Vera Gordon, Lowell Sherman, Myrtle Steadman, Maurice Costello, Ben Turpin, Lillian Walker, Kitty Gordon, Lew Cody, "Freckles" Barry, Marc McDermott, John Davison, Frank Mayo and Dagmar Godowsky.

"Vaudeville," says a Keith-Albee announcement, "has the latching open for the fascinating folk from the studios who bring pleasant new ingredient into the potpourri of all the talents known as vaudeville."

Talking Films In Palace

De Forest Phonofilm has been installed in the Palace Theatre, where a private demonstration of its new amplifying and reproducing device was given the Keith-Albee officials last Saturday morning. Several subjects were shown, the best that Phonofilm has yet made, among them "A Trip To Long Island," "The Radio Franks" and others.

Upon J. J. Murdock's decision, it is said, depends whether the device will be installed in the K-A chain. He is said to be now considering the problem of production, for in this respect the De Forest company is reported to be far behind the Vitaphone and Movietone organizations and the difficulties of obtaining an adequate supply of "talking picture" acts suitable for Keith-Albee audiences, makes the adoption of the De Forest device still problematical.

Guest to Divide Time Between Stage and Film Foresees Otto Kahn Endowing the Cinema

"Henceforth I will divide my time between production of motion pictures and of stage plays," said Maurice Gest last week, returning from a four months sojourn in California. "My first photoplay will be made from 'The Darling of the Gods,' the David Belasco success. Preparatory work has already been started on this piece, which will have a truly international cast. Since it is to be made for United Artists, it must measure up to the standards not only of my ideals, but to the artistry of Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and John Barrymore as well, my associates in that organization."

Mr. Gest will sail for Europe soon to confer with Otto Kahn and Max Reinhardt, predicts that "within five years great millionaire philanthropists like Otto H. Kahn, than whom no man has done more for the American theatre, will dedicate huge sums for the use of the cinema."

For Greater Film Safety

The committee on ordinances and legislation of the Minneapolis city council this week recommended for passage an ordinance to regulate the handling and storage of motion picture films. The bill would impose additional restrictions to assure greater safety. It is the result of several conferences between city officials and persons engaged in handling films in the city.

Le Baron Leaves Paramount To Head F. B. O. Production Many Screen Successes, With Big Stars, to His Credit and President Kennedy Pays Tribute to His Ability

William Le Baron has transferred his talented activities from Paramount Long Island studios, where, for the last three years he has been production manager, to become the Vice President of Film Booking Offices. He will be in charge of production, with headquarters in Hollywood, whence he departs at the end of the present month.

He will work with Edwin King, vice-president in charge of the studio. The two are close friends, having worked together at Famous Players.

Mr. Le Baron's connection with Paramount, and formerly with Cosmopolitan Productions, together with long previous experience as editor and playwright, have given him a broad background for his new duties. As both production manager and associate producer in the Eastern studio he was responsible for the majority of box office triumphs that emanated from that company. Among the productions made under him were all the Swanson pictures, among them "Manhandled," "The Humming Bird" and "Wages of Virtue"; all the Richard Dix films, among them "Womanhandled," "Let's Get Married," "The Quarterback," "Knock-out Reilly"; all the W. C. Fields productions, "So's Your Old Man," "The Potters," "Running Wild"; the Gilda Grey pictures, "Aloma of the South Seas" and "Cabaret"; the Adolph Menjou films, "The Social Celebrity," "The King of Main Street" and "The Ace of Cads." Among the specials which Mr. Le Baron supervised were "Monsieur Beaucaire," "The Little French Girl," "The Street of Forgotten Men," "Dancing Mothers," "Sally of the Sawdust," "Beau Geste" and "Tin Gods."

Mr. Le Baron was identified with Cosmopolitan Productions before his affiliation with Paramount as production manager and director general for four years, where he supervised the making of "Humoresque," "The Inside of the Cup," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Enemies of Women," "Little Old New York" and "The Great White Way." Before his entry into motion pictures, he was well known as the editor of Collier's Magazine for three years. He is also a playwright of note, having authorized "The Echo," "The Very Idea," "Appleblossoms," "I Love You," "The Love Letter" and "Nobody's Money."

"In William Le Baron we have one of the keenest showmen in the industry, a man who has been in the motion picture business for years and knows every angle of production," said President Joseph P. Kennedy in making the announcement. "We feel that Mr. Le Baron will make his energy and

H. M. Walker, Hal Roach Aide, Visits New York Will Inspect Broadway's Big Stage Shows

Harley M. Walker, vice-president and production manager of the Hal Roach Studios, familiarly known as "Beanie" is in the city and his visit in the East will be in the nature of an indefinite vacation. He expects to witness all the leading Broadway shows.

"Beanie" Walker was popular sports writer of the Los Angeles Examiner, and was generally conceded a pre-eminent wise-cracking columnist. He has been under contract to Hal Roach for eleven years, the first three on a part-time arrangement to enable him to continue a newspaper column, and the last eight years devoting his full time to the embellishment of comedies with concise titles.

With thirteen hundred pictures titled to his credit, two-thirds of them two-reels in length and forty or fifty in multiple-reel lengths, giving him a total of over twenty-two hundred and fifty reels of subtitle credits, "Beanie" Walker stands alone on the ground of consistency in quantity.

Jackie's Kin Retires

After 55 years service with the New York Central Railroad, James Patrick Coogan, station-master at Syracuse and grand-uncle of Jackie, was retired on a pension last week. He wore a green tie during the farewell ceremony, the gift of the juvenile film star, who brought it from Paris and sent this message with it: "Here is something for you to wear on good old St. Patrick's Day." Which he did.

Laemmle Defies Blackmail By "Old Uncle Tom" Film

Universal Head Says Sponsoring Big Production Threatened With Cheap Reissues if He Doesn't Buy Up Negatives

Carl Laemmle says that, though he is spending about $2,000,000 on Uncle Tom, who is a black male, he will not give a fraction of a cent to the blackmail which is threatening him in his production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The president of Universal says he is faced by a reissue of old and out of date production of Harriet Beecher Stowe's famous story. And he styles the man the lowest and meanest in the industry who tries to ride in on the crest of the publicity and popularity which his organization has built up for the newest and biggest production of the classic.

Mr. Laemmle, who is pretty familiar with exhibitor psychology, is of the opinion that they, themselves, will spurn the resurrected films offered by the cinematic strong-arm men, who are characterized as worse than barnacles, leeches and bloodsuckers. So he challenges the old negative owners to find exhibitors "to do their dirty work for them." The Universal production, which has been in production for nearly two years, under the direction of Harry Polard, will be completed, it is estimated early this Summer. It is scheduled for its premiere showing in the Fall.

"We have, if anything, more than our share of grafters, copyists, and hangers-on who have contributed nothing to the industry and who think it is smarter to turn a dirty penny than a clean one," says Mr. Laemmle. "Of all the list, I think the smallest, the lowest and easily the meanest is the man who digs up a rotten old negative, slaps in a few new titles and then seeks to cash in on it because some company has produced a fine new version of the same story."

"The whole world knows Universal has been making a magnificent new version of this remarkable old classic. Certainly the whole trade knows that Universal has already spent well over a million dollars on this huge production and that it may cost even another million to finish it. It will be worth the cost, but that is not the point."

"Ever since these facts became known, I have been besieged with rumors to the effect that this man or that man owning an old, moth-eaten 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' intends to bring it onto the market again to benefit by the great publicity and advertising campaign which Universal must carry on for some time to come."

"I have seen some of these old pictures. They were made in the days when anything that moved was a moving picture. In their day, they answered their purpose. Today they would be a disgrace even to the lowest and cheapest theatre in the world. The threat is now held over my head that unless I buy up some of these old negatives, new prints will be made and distributed throughout the country."

"In other words, unless I lose my nerve and submit to blackmail, the exhibitors are to be used as the instrument by which a very obvious misrepresentation will be foisted on the public. The exhibitors are to do the dirty work for them. I'm not afraid the exhibitors will fall for it. I am certain they will not permit themselves to be used this way. Certainly, I'm not going to buy up useless negatives just for the purpose of keeping them off the market."

"Personally, I would like to be present and hear what most exhibitors will say to any man who tries to sell them his antique version of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.'"

The Universal chief would not make public the names of any of the persons concerned with the "Uncle Tom" reissue threats, preferring to let the matter rest until they actually make a definite move in the reissuance of their film.

Fine British Market For Columbia Film

Conclusion of negotiations between Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, and F. A. Enders, managing director of Film Booking Offices, Ltd., assures Columbia product of 100 per cent distribution in the British market and affords this enterprising American producing organization a strategic position in the coming battle for the inclusion of American films under the recent quota arrangement.

Mr. Enders, who made a special trip to the United States to confer with the head of Columbia Pictures, returned to England on the S. S. Aquitania, after renewing contracts for the continuation of the Columbia franchise in England and the maintenance of H. & W. Ltd., as Columbia's agents on the Continent. The arrangements entered into with the representatives of Film Booking Offices, Ltd., mean that Mr. Enders' concern will handle Columbia Pictures in the British market to the exclusion of the product of any other American film producer.

Jos. M. Schenck Elected To Head United Artists

By unanimous vote of the stockholders of United Artists Corporation in annual meeting on Tuesday last Joseph M. Schenck was elected president, succeeding to the post of president made vacant when Hiram Abrams died November 14, 1926, who had headed the organization since its formation in 1919. Mr. Schenck was also reelected chairman of the Board of Directors, composed of Harry D. Buckley, Dennis F. O'Brien, Albert H. T. Banzhaf, Thomas Moore and Nathan Burkan.

Alexander Lichtman, general manager of distribution in the United States and Canada, was elected a vice-president. Harry D. Buckley and Arthur W. Kelly, the other members of the Executive Committee of Three, are also vice-presidents, as is Dennis F. O'Brien, the attorney. Albert H. T. Banzhaf was elected secretary, and Arthur W. Kelly reelected treasurer. Miss Mary Rusk, who was executive assistant to Mr. Abrams during the seven years of his presidency, was elected assistant treasurer.

After the election of officers, Mr. Schenck outlined production and distribution plans for the fiscal year 1927. Then the new president of United Artists Corporation, who is also Chairman of the Board of Directors of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., discussed the progress of the Circuit to date.

Helped Jimmie Win

Business Manager M. J. O'Toole of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has received the thanks of Jimmie Leckie, a student in one of the Hamilton, Ontario, schools, for aid in winning a debate on "Resolved, That Moving Pictures as Now Presented Are More Harmful Than Beneficial to the People of Today." Young Leckie writes: "We were fortunate in winning the debate, your material being of great assistance. The vote was unanimous. We were complimented on our splendid material. A rather large audience was in attendance, some people claiming we had changed their opinions towards moving pictures from bad to favorable."

"Closed Gates" Next Sterling

The next full-length feature production from Sterling Pictures, it is announced by Henry Ginsberg, president of that company, will be "Closed Gates," an entirely novel presentation with a strong dramatic flavor. It will be directed by Phil Rosen, famous for his work on "Abraham Lincoln," 1924's prize-photoplay.

Unanimous!

Joseph M. Schenck was the logical successor of the late Hiram Abrams as head of the United Artists and there was not a single dissent in the voting of the stockholders at the annual meeting.

Leased by Four Exhibitors

The Gayety theatre, former Columbia burlesque house and later a 10-cent motion picture house, temporarily, leased by Kansas City exhibitors has just been re-opened as a combination vaudeville and motion picture theatre. The exhibitors are: William Flynn, Nugent Flynn, William W. Watkins and Edgar Barnett.

Virginia's Tribute to "Old Ironsides"

"Colonel Reginald Fairfax Poindexter, of the Virginia gentry, and known in New York as the Ambassador from the Old Dominion, is now, more than ever proud of the fact that his father was a cadet on the famous Constitution and a Lieutenant under Commodore Hull. He saw James Cruze's production of "Old Ironsides" last week and informs the Moving Picture World that it is "a stirring romance and a splendid patriotic inspiration." He suggests that, when Old Ironsides is refitted, as proposed, that she will naturally go on a Cruze, and, of course, Jimmy should be the guest of honor."

Billions of Film All Silver-lined

Enough motion picture film to wrap around the earth more than a thousand times—150,000,000,000 feet, is the figure—has been shipped by parcel post, express and truck during the last four years with only four fires with resultant loss of $450. Will H. Hays, besides citing this fact, points out that more silver is used in treating motion picture films than in the coining of silver money, while film base is largely composed of cotton.

Six Companies Incorporated Last Week A. J. Lubin Heads the Ambassador Films

Albany, Apr. 4—The last week brought the incorporation of six motion picture companies in New York State, the largest being the Ambassador Films, Inc., capitalized at $200,000, with Albert J. Vitaphone Contracts Increase; 100 Houses; 12 in One Week

Increasing new bookings for Vitaphone have increased up to date to about one hundred and fifty houses throughout the country. During the last week twelve more theatre contracted for the Vitaphone. Leading the list is the Stillman Theatre in Cleveland.

Although the new bookings cover states from coast to coast six of the most recent ones are for Pennsylvania. These include the Harris Theatre in Butler; the Harris State Theatre in Washington, Pa.; the State Theatre in Allentown; the Liberty Theatre in New Kensington; the Colonial Theatre in Harrisburg; and the State Theatre in Altoona, Pa.

Two more cities in Virginia are among the new recruits. These include Norfolk in which the Wells Theatre is located and Richmond in which is the Colonial Theatre which will use Vitaphone.

The Rivoli Theatre in La Crosse, Wisconsin, has been contracted with in place of the Majestic Theatre in that city. In Spokane, Washington, the Liberty Theatre, a large and prominent picture palace will use the Vitaphone attractions.

No Deputy Director Needed In Motion Picture Commission

Albany, Apr. 5—An item for $6,000 to meet the salary of a deputy director in the New York State Motion Picture commission which now functions as a bureau in the State Department of Education, was quickly vetoed last week by Governor Alfred E. Smith, who has repeatedly gone on record as being opposed to motion picture censorship. A bill had passed the legislature calling for this appropriation and had reached the Governor.

"This item is disapproved," says he. "There is no need for additional employees in this division of the Department of Education in view of the fact that other employees trained in the service, were discharged, apparently for lack of work."

"The Vision," the Romance production released by Educational, was voted winner of the Riesenfeld medal as the outstanding Short Feature of 1926 by a committee of leading motion picture exhibitors. From left to right are Mr. Riesenfeld, who gave the award; Mr. Hays and Mr. Hammons.

Libeled Vilma

Because Vilma Hanky, at Hollywood, did not hail Tibor Mudscenthy as "a potential Valentino," Sari Fedak, popular actress in her country, returned to Budapest, and, in an interview used "an opprobrious epithet" in referring to Miss Hanky's indifference to her protege and her project. Now Vilma's family is suing her because of the utterance. It is not stated what the equivalent of the epithet is in English.

Joseph Shaw's Color Process Goes to Trade

United Color Pictures, Inc., with offices, studios and laboratories at Irvington-on-Hudson, New York, announces that final arrangements have been made and plans completed for the operation of the most modern color motion picture plant in the industry.

According to Joseph Shaw, president of the corporation and inventor of the process, United is ready to submit plans and propositions to producers and distributors that will make color mean real money in the sales and exhibition value of every production, either in whole or in part.

Years have been spent by Mr. Shaw and his associates in perfecting the process, and today it is said to stand as he final word in motion pictures in color. The product of United is of a class that will startle the industry.

Clarence Schotenfels, recently appointed manager of sales, publicity and advertising, is authority for the statement that some of the biggest producers and distributors in the industry have evinced a keen interest in this color process.

The process is applicable to one print or a thousand prints, and is equally a boon to the little fellow with a few prints as to the big fellow with national releases.

M. G. M. Convention May 19-24

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer annual salesmen's convention will be held this year from May 19 to May 24 in Los Angeles.

Many important announcements about the new Short Subject Department and news reel will be made, and the product and policy for the coming year will be outlined.

Marcus Loew, Nicholas M. Schenck, Louis B. Mayer and Felix Feist will further discuss the extensive plans for the coming season.

Hail, Paramount!

"Millions of people throughout the world who are familiar with the sign, 'Paramount Pictures,' do not appreciate the fact that these pictures have always been made by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and, by making 'Paramount' part of the corporate title of the company, the relationship between the product of the company and the company itself is clearly established." So says Adolph Zukor with the announcement that a certificate had been filed with the Secretary of State at Albany changing the corporate name of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to Paramount-Famous Lasky Corporation. The change was ratified by stockholders at the annual meeting, March 29, 1927.

Grainger's 46 Weeks on the Great Film Way

Fox Sales Chief Back From Latest Big Trip

General Sales Manager James B. Grainger on his return this week from his third transcontinental trip since last April for Fox Films, announced that plans have been completed to hold the annual Fox sales convention at the Ambassador Hotel in Atlantic City beginning May 11. This will be followed by a series of regional conventions in various parts of the country, each to be presided over by Mr. Grainger.

On the way out to California, the Fox sales chief stopped for conferences with his staff and exhibitors in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. On the return trip he stopped briefly in San Francisco and Chicago. Since last April Mr. Grainger has spent forty-six weeks on the road. In the course of the year he has held personal conferences with between 2,000 and 3,000 first-run exhibitors throughout the country. He visited some branch offices two and three times. And he was in his New York office only six weeks out of the year!

Friend of the "Fan"

Fully qualified by his association with the Fox organization, George Rudolph vacates the Chair of Publicity to conduct a popular film periodical.

Rudolph Leaves Fox to Become Magazine Editor

Motion Picture Magazine is to have a new editor next week in the person of George K. Rudolph, who resigns as Publicity Manager of Fox Film Corporation to occupy the editorial chair. He is an experienced newspaper man and was managing editor of one of Buffalo's dailies for ten years. He knows practically every leading actor and actress on the stage and screen and has a wide acquaintance among newspaper and magazine writers all over the country.

Daniel Doherty, also an experienced newspaper man, has been assistant publicity manager for the last year, working with Rudolph and under the supervision of Vivian M. Mases, Director of Publicity.

Mr. Rudolph has been identified with Fox Film Corporation for the past five years in various capacities. He served as a salesman in the territory covered by the Buffalo branch office and later became branch manager, which position he held for more than a year. He came to New York two years ago and for a time was attached to the office of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager.

He has been a member of the editorial counsel of Fox News since that body began to function two years ago.

No "Peaches"

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, representing four hundred houses, has declared against "Peaches" Brown, either as an "in person" feature or a screen actress. It is the fixed policy of the organization to employ no performer "who has not earned, by hard work and ability the right to appear as a member of the theatrical profession."

Barrymore Urges Historic Record

John Barrymore long has had the idea of an historical screen record, in composition combining the actuality of a news reel with the character atmosphere of distinguished persons, and he made public the plan in an address before an audience of notables at the premier of "The Beloved Rogue," at Los Angeles. He suggested, for example, a "cross section of American life in 1927," with a cast of principals including General Pershing, Henry Ford, Thomas Edison, Jane Addams, Carrie Chapman Catt, "Babe" Ruth, Judge Gary and many others.

The records, if the plan should ever be put into operation, would be preserved in the governmental archives that our achieving present should live in the future.

Rah! Rah! Boys Aiding Buster

More than a dozen colleges and universities are represented by the athletes signed for Buster Keaton's new comedy and the University of Washington and the University of California have loaned racing shells. The United Artists feature deals with the humorous side of college life and crews of former athletes are at Balboa practicing under the direction of Ben Wallis, who coached the University of California oarsmen the year they defeated the University of Washington.

Morgan Heads Board

Howard Morgan, manager of Educational's exchange in Albany for the past several years, was elected president of the Albany Film Board of Trade at the annual meeting this week. Harry Weinberg, local manager for F. B.O., was elected vice-president and John Bulwinkel, First National, was chosen as treasurer.

Biggest School Film Year Predicted by Pathe Expert

Mrs. Dessez, Pathe Educational Director, Back After 7,000-Mile Tour of Middle West, South and South-West

Mrs. Elizabeth Richey Dessez, director of the Educational Department of Pathe, who has returned to New York after a 7,000-mile tour of the Middle West, South and Southwest, has made one of the most comprehensive surveys of the field of Visual Education. She found educators interested as they never have been before in the actual and practical use of motion pictures in the classroom as a pedagogical tool in teaching. Up until now, pictures have been used more for entertainment than for actual teaching in the schools, but the classroom and college demand will be, she said, increased six-fold within the next year.

The most far-reaching work accomplished anywhere in the country for school room films, is the recent action of the State Board of Education of Ohio, which makes it compulsory for every high school in the state to be equipped with motion picture projection equipment on Sept. 1, 1927. There are 1,200 high schools in the state. "This is the first time that a state has taken such a drastic action as that taken by the Ohio Board of Education, and the experiment will be watched closely by the educators of other states," says Mrs. Dessez. "As a matter of fact, Missouri, Iowa and Indiana are watching with a view to repeating Ohio's action if they think it practical."

"The Visual Education Department of the Detroit School Board has worked out the most complete and comprehensive motion picture department of the school authorities of any city which has been experimenting with this branch of visual aid to teaching. This department has a separate building all its own, with vaults for film, projection rooms and machines. It owns its own trucks which deliver and call for the film shown in the schools, all of which are equipped with machines."

Mrs. Elizabeth Dessez, of Pathe, who estimates that the educational demand for film will be increased six-fold in the next year.

Everywhere she went, Mrs. Dessez found that educators had heard of the introductions of the Pathe News Current Events course into forty Boston public schools, and that they are much impressed by this experiment because of the high standing of the Boston schools. Heads of the Visual Education Departments in several large cities agreed to sign up for the Pathe News Current Events Course.

Harvard Archive of Films

In the belief that the achievements in motion pictures deserve recognition as part of the cultural development of the country and must be considered in any serious historical and technical study of art, the Department of Fine Arts of Harvard University, in association with the Fogg Museum and the University Library, plans to establish immediately a library and archive of films.

The collection will serve the dual purpose of recording the evolution of the moving picture from its beginning to the present day and of selecting annually those pictures that are deemed worthiest of preservation as works of art.

A committee of the Harvard faculty, acting as a Jury of Awards, after gathering from all available sources representative films of the highest quality of the past, will select in January of each year the films of the preceding twelve months which, in its judgment, should be included in a library of this character.

Our Stock Market

By Ervin L. Hall

There is nothing ahead, so far as our finite vision goes, to cause any sort of a business slump. But there may be a depression of some degree sooner or later. It is possible of course. For example, our export trade may fall off to the extent of obliging us to consume a larger part of what we produce. If such a situation should settle upon us to a marked degree, it would mean competition in all lines so severe as to force down prices and profits. This would mean decline in earnings of corporations and a corresponding decline in the level of security prices. In other words, a bear market.

All this is preliminary to the statement that while such a condition is not imminent yet the cautious investor is apt to place his money in issues that may be called depression proof. Only the soundest and best established companies can be considered in this class for the reason that if a depression actually comes only those companies with a real surplus can hope to continue dividend payments. This is the real test as the market value of even the best securities would be forced down. At the present time moving picture stocks can hardly be considered in this class. It is true that the American public wants to be entertained even when times are bad, but the earnings of picture companies whose stocks are traded actively on the exchanges, depend not only on theater earnings but on the quality of the pictures produced.

A new issue of First Lien 6% bonds was recently offered by Loew's Theater and Realty Corp. amounting to $10,500,000. The price is 100 and the bonds are due in 1947. The corporation is a wholly owned subsidiary of Loew's Inc.

The total assets pledged as security are valued at $15,976,535, and the net annual earnings applicable to interest and sinking fund are 3.2 times the annual interest charges. These bonds bear a high rating and the return is liberal for this sort of a security.

Fox Film Corp. and Subsidiary Companies. Statement for year ended December 25, 1926 was recently released. Actual profits from December 27, 1925 to December 25, 1926, amounted to only $1,288,773.53 which gives a very low earning on the 500,000 shares of Class A and Class B no par value stocks outstanding. There were other items included in profits which can hardly be expected to occur in future years. These items were $1,956,533.53 credited in respect of excess amortization previously written off and $232,603.58 arising through the sale of leasehold. The stock has since declined to a new low price for the last two years.

Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. The companies financial statement for the year 1926 has been released and shows a decline in earnings over the year before. This decline may be attributed to an expansion program which was undertaken. Upon release of the statement the stock of the company declined on the exchange.

"Wings" to Open In San Antonio

San Antonio, Texas, gets the world premier of Paramount's "Wings" instead of New York, according to announcement from the studio here. The exact date has not been set, as yet. However, it will only be a one night showing and shortly later will open in New York as a road show.

Posterity Film For Future

If the Federal Government sponsors a suggestion made by John Barrymore, then Joseph M. Schenck will set the wheels in motion for "A Motion Picture for Posterity." This, the World learned at the United Artists Hollywood headquarters following the emanation of a story credited as being a proposal by Barrymore that a Cinema record of a "Cross section of American life in 1927" should be preserved in the United States Governmental archives for the "benefit of civilization hundreds of years hence."

Lasky Barn Memento

The small barn in which Jesse L. Lasky produced his first picture in Hollywood thirteen years ago has been moved in its entirety to the Paramount studios and placed in one corner of the lot. It will be preserved as a memento of the initial Lasky venture that grew to its present huge proportions.

Gilda Gray May Have A London Premiere

Gilda Gray's first picture for Samuel Goldwyn under her new contract may have its world premier in London if Goldwyn accepts an offer of $100,000 for the premier rights, he is said to have received from Charles B. Cochran, English producer and theatre owners. The offer is now under consideration by Goldwyn.

Merger Rumors Buzz On Coast

The world's largest lunatic asylum will soon find a well appreciated home here unless some producer, or at least his deputy, takes some of the color out of the crazy patchwork of mergers worked together by rumor mongers.

Never was the market for wags stronger or more frenzied along the Hollywood Boulevard than since the beginning of this week. The boys with the imaginations work "them up" faster than they can spread them. The most surprising thing of it all is that the wags are converting to their sidewalk, office front and cafeteria mode of thinking many individuals who, under less extraordinary conditions, pass on only a word that carries at least a semblance of creditability.

Leatrice Joy Renews Contract

Leatrice Joy has signed a new contract with C. B. De Mille and will be starred in a new series of stories that will be among the most pretentious to be released on the 1927-28 program of the Producers Distributing Corp. "Vanity" was her last vehicle preliminary to signing her new contract.

Juvenile Returns

Frankie Myers, little four year old screen juvenile, is feeling fit again after a short illness and will be back at the studio again, shortly. Frankie's last pictures was "The Fire Brigade" for M-G-M, directed by William Nigh, and in which May McAvoy and Charles Ray had the leads.

IN the course of investigating one of the more persistent of countless reports which have been springing up in Hollywood every day since the big merger talk started, Moving Picture World learned officially that United Artists headquarters within a year will be moved from Hollywood to Culver City. The recent announcement that United Artists had purchased sixty-five acres in that city gave rise to the report, now denied, that the property purchased was directly adjacent the de Mille studios and that this could be automatically taken as a verification of other reports that de Mille was not going to tie-up with Pathe and Keith-Albee and the others about whom some statistician figures a combined valuation of $500,000,000.

The United Artists property and future headquarters in Culver City is, as a matter of fact, over one-half mile away from the De Mille studios. Since its purchase, we learned that United Artists has already expended about $500,000 in installing on the new acreage a power and water plant besides other equipment; also that several sets are being completed upon it for the "Topsy and Eva" company, featuring the Duncan sisters.

The report that United Artists has been distributing through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, since the death of the corporation's president, Hiram Abrams, was tabooed this week by local officials.

Joseph Schenck's presence in New York City at the present time was also attributed by them to be concerned solely with the establishing of the national chain of United Artists theatres which was announced in this department several months ago.

In the course of the query we found that Gloria Swanson has, since her arrival from New York, opened offices on the Hollywood lot and within a month's time will start work on a production. This will be based upon one of two stories which Miss Swanson is now deliberating upon.

About the same time Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks who are now out of town putting the finishing touches on their own stories, will return to jump into actual production.

The tentative title for Miss Pickford's story is "Cash and Carry," we were informed.

Fairbanks' theme will be known as the "Gaucha," or a romantic story of an Argentina cow-boy.

Marital Friction

The romance of Osmund Mark Fitzgerald, son of Cissy Fitzgerald, screen actress, and his bride of a short time, Florence Vera Walker of San Francisco, was of short tenure. Their brief spell of married life was ended abruptly on their honeymoon tour when, it is said, Mrs. Fitzgerald returned to the home of her mother and the bridegroom started consulting time tables for New York and steamers for Europe.

His Success as Director*

*A Cameraman Who Won His Megaphone
Through His Directorial
Acumen and Brilliance*

WHEN Byron Haskin got his megaphone a few months ago local lino-type machines imprinted on hot slugs something to the effect: "Those bright Warner boys have done it again!" As a matter of fact, it was just another case of a well merited elevation. There was nothing particularly bright about it. The Warners as brothers are excellent business men. They knew that Haskin's time had arrived. That instead of being in the rear of a camera receiving orders he should be to the side giving them. But about the cameraman who can convince his employers when he is entitled to the canvas-back chair with his name on it—that's our idea of brilliance!"

There are cameramen and cameramen. Some always are and never want to be anything else. Their right hand gets so accustomed to the momentum of the crank and their ear so attuned to the command "Camera!" that they never seem to visualize the little Napoleon job just a few steps away and directly in line with their camera.

Then there are men who enter the industry with their mind set upon a directorship. Today in Hollywood there are such aspirants beyond compilation. The writer has talked to a few of them of which three-fourths are actors. And there are no few successful directors today who started out in the same way.

Whether or not the aspirant for directorial honors grooms himself by cranking or performing, the element of self-sales seems to many as being practically a leading essential for achievement, despite native ability. The most effective handshake in the Hollywood resort where it is most liable to make the most impression would seem by many of these aspirants as the most profitable past time in-between working hours, despite the fact that the "passing" may necessitate sleep being found in a furnished room instead of the comfortable bungalow apartment.

Haskin did not consider it necessary to drink coffee that he could get just as good and at far less than half the price elsewhere. That self-sales ever entered into his mind in connection with the acquiring of his present megaphone, we doubt very much. Haskin impressed us as possessing far too much reticence to make a good Hollywood salesman.

From sizing him up on a Warner set we would say that Haskin availed himself of every opportunity to learn and once having learned he was not the least bit pedantic. His brief visit with us the other day in a little Hungarian restaurant near the studio was spent mostly in consuming goulash. But between forks and a rush that did not even permit coffee this time our esteem for the business acumen of the Warners was further rounded.

With Haskin it wasn't the idea of coming to Hollywood and commanding a set. During the vacation periods of his attendance at the University of California he had earned pin money in a friend's film laboratory in San Francisco. It was just for the pin money because Haskin then had in mind becoming a sculptor and an artist. In fact, he devoted five long years to the study of sculpturing and painting.

But life before an easel, at least the kind that could be moved by the touch of a finger, was not designed for Haskin. He found himself drifting toward Hollywood after several summers in his 'Frisco friend's workshop. No particular goal in view when he arrived here except to do some camera work.

His 'Frisco experience enabled him, just about seven years ago, to get his first job in the movies. This was as an assistant cameraman on the old Selznick lot. For two years he was an assistant when finally one day he awoke with a full-fledged cameraman's certificate under his pillow. With Micky Neilan, First National, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and several others Haskin finally set his tripod on the Warner lot two years ago. There he photographed such specials as "The Sea Beast," "Don Juan" and "Manon Lescaut."

On these John Barrymore pictures he was subconsciously studying the great stage actor—watching for the little traits born of the footlights which were bound to assert themselves before his camera's eye. He was a cameraman. He had resigned a career of brushes and chisels for a crank handle. And he found it to be far more than just a handle and taking orders. He found that it also was a creative art—a great deal more than just obeying orders, than being an automaton.

Even the other day when his megaphone on a street set was allowing him only a half hour for lunch Haskin recalled how he had spent days in advance of actual shooting on "Don Juan" figuring on certain light and shade effects.

"Yet," he reminisced, "no one seemed to have noticed this study in the picture; not even members of the profession."

Yet, Haskin the cameraman of two months ago is Haskins, the director today.

No sales talk or cafeteria palava is responsible for the change in titles. Jack Warner, or whichever one of the Warner brothers is on the Coast, does not spend all of his time cooped up in the executive sanctum. It is moving and looking from the time things start on a set to the rough print, the finished print and the sales distribution.

A college man, theoretically trained for art with seven years' practical experience behind a camera. A keen mind recording satisfactorily the orders of others with the opportunity of noting all of the time how they were given.

It was just one and one and Warners made another director. Nothing particularly bright. Just good judgment and knowing the man.

Haskin had all the material. There was just one thing more. Executive ability. With the background he has and the capability which he has evidenced he was worth the trial. Warners made him a director—for one picture.

Captaining "Matinee Ladies" was the first picture. Haskin finished it. It met with executive approval in the projection room. The critics had their say. While we were talking with Haskin in the Hungarian restaurant his mind was not on the food. He was anxious to get back to resume work on "Irish Hearts," because—it's the first picture of the five-year contract he has tucked away in an inside pocket.

A Cameraman Gets His Megaphone

DORIS LLOYD

*Doris Lloyd Is An Individual—With Just a Tint of Billie Burke and Laurette
Taylor*

By Tom Waller
West Coast Representative

EXCEPT for the gorgeous tints of Billie Burke and a dog of the breed that shares the still camera with Laurette Taylor, Doris Lloyd is distinctly individualistic. Decidedly young and exceptionally attractive in her quiet, deep English way Miss Lloyd likes new mother roles; needs no glycerine to make the tears come; and considers the electricians perched in the scaffolding over the set where the picture is being made as critics par excellence and the kind that all the newspaper and theoretical training in the world could never even hope to develop as competitors.

Began as Featured Player

Topping it all Miss Lloyd did not get into pictures in the three, five and ten-dollar-a-day way of some of our biggest stars. She stepped from the spotlight of a London legitimate stage before the camera of a big London independent producer as a featured lady.

But Miss Lloyd did not take pictures seriously then. When she left for America less than six years ago she retained the impression that the legitimate stage was her forte so long as films seemed such a negative quantity in her own country. On this side of the Atlantic, however, she underwent the metamorphosis which has resulted in her being pledged to pictures while in pictures. She is too frank not to add that there is nothing equaling the thrill of appearing in life before a live audience, and that she is tempted repeatedly to abandon the kleigs for the footlights. In fact just a year ago she did leave Hollywood for asbestos atmosphere in San Francisco but she had to return because the offers here were too goodly numerous.

Has Evaded Contracts

Even since her re-appearance

Miss Lloyd has managed to evade contractual bonds; retaining her freedom and by so doing being able to further her individuality by selecting and discarding important roles which come her way from the four points of Hollywood.

Being able to take and turn away, Miss Lloyd's independence glows with her hair. She does not gloat over the fact that she does not have to phrase each sentence to execute taste. She is not exultant over the fact that she can shoot straight and hit the bull's eye without consulting the dictionary of edicts to be observed while being interviewed by the press. What's her's is her's. She knows it. Everyone knows it.

Delightfully Frank

Miss Lloyd's delightful frankness prevailed upon her to admit that one of these days she may succumb to a long dotted line. She will sign that the way she has signed everything else. The only "dog" about Miss Lloyd is the little long animal at her feet. She has it—the experience and the ability. No perfume. Nothing. The record will speak for itself when she picks up the pen.

One thing about Hollywood which Miss Lloyd admits is beyond her comprehension is why sets, where bedroom scenes and love episodes are being shot, are carefully screened from the view of passersby in the studio. How visitors—at least the kind that stand by and are not over-eager to be photographed with the cast—can be of such great nuisance and financial loss to the producer, as has been broadcast by several studios in local papers recently, is another situation which Miss Lloyd, in her frankness, fails to grasp. Her observations in both of these respects are purely personal. From her own standpoint she enjoys an audience in a studio. It gives a set the touch of the legitimate stage. With onlookers she can work better. Even then she cannot understand how anyone with or without a stage background could take exception to visitors. The lights on the set are so dazzling that while working an actor or actress cannot see beyond the edge of the set.

Stagehands Great Critics

About the lights brought to mind the electricians. The boys who are over, to the side, and sometimes below, getting every angle on every movement made by everyone on the set while the camera is grinding. She likens the electricians to the stage hands. And she thinks stage hands are the greatest critics from the standpoint of truth and actuality in the world.

Whether they read or write as a side line makes no difference in their ability to sense the right and wrong—the good and bad—on the stage and set, she told us. They instinctively put two and two together—instinctively match one against the other. They need not necessarily thank this to any particular intelligence. Like an engineer instinctively slows down at the grade crossing so the electrician and stage hand after years of watching, waiting and listening know, in the opinion of this blue-eyed English actress, when an audience is going to applaud and when a movement or an entire sequence is going over particularly big or small at the box-office.

Values Electrician's Views

"On the set I think more of the electricians' approbation than anything else." And with this Miss Lloyd automatically puts thumbs down on everything else in first class.

The "smooch" or fine-sounding flow of taffy words means nothing to Miss Lloyd. The simple "You done it." from the electrician means everything to her because she knows her game without adulteration. She knows that the "You done it" of the electrician is straight and founded upon fact because the electrician well knows his linguistic capabilities, especially so in this Hollywood environment where is collected no mean percentage of the world's past masters in the art of suavity.

It was the "You done it" that Miss Lloyd got from six election of her work as the sister of tricians following the complete drunkard in Fox's "Is Zat So?"

Lon Chaney's wife in the "The Blackbird" and the mother in "The Midnight Kiss" from the play "Pigs" are others of a few of Miss Lloyd's most noted recent releases through the bigger producers.

About crying, Miss Lloyd had what she described as "Two full days of it" in "The Auctioneer." It was then that we learn that she tenses herself to that emotional pitch which makes real tears a necessity. She loses herself in her part. But she pays for it with a headache after the lights have been turned off on the set.

Ten Years' Experience

Ten years' experience in London, Hollywood and San Francisco have taught her that real tears get the "You Done its!"

Doris Lloyd, incidentally, was Josef Von Sternberg's fairy god-mother. It was her final $250 which made the completion of "The Salvation Hunters" possible. She invested after all others had turned it down. To date she has already realized 200 per cent. on the principal. Miss Lloyd holds other stock in things which other people frowned upon. After all, it's—her's!

Writer Deposits $50,000 In Prizes For Meritorious Work

William Dudley Pelley Says Offer Was Made to Spur Workers on His Stories to Greater Activity—To Be Evenly Divided on Next Ten Stories

IN addition to their regular pay envelopes, everyone from the scenarist to the photographer on the picture and from the salesman to the exhibitor on the box office end will get a slice of $5,000. It is the first known donation of its kind by a writer. The writer, William Dudley Pelley, as was included in a wire dispatch to the last issue of Moving Picture World, has deposited in a local bank not $5,000 but $50,000 for this purpose. The total amount is to be evenly divided among the workers and sellers on the next ten of Pelley's stories which will be adapted to the screen.

Moving Picture World in a talk with Pelley learned that one of the motives which prompted him to make this offer was due to his desire to spur the people producing his stories to expend their best efforts. It is unquestionably the first time that a writer for the screen has taken such an interest in his own work as to dig down into his own pocket to augment regular salary checks.

Pelley showed us a clause which he had inserted in his regular sales contract prior to the announcement of this philanthropy.

The offer started on stories sold on and after March 31st. A brief resumé of the size of the awards and those who are eligible is as follows:

"One thousand dollars to be given outright to the accredited scenarist who does a reasonably commendable job on the script.

"One thousand dollars to the director as a token of appreciation for the care and artistry expended in transcribing the story into celluloid form.

"Five hundred dollars to the accredited assistant director for giving his director one hundred per cent co-operation, ingenuity and industry while the film was being shot.

"Five hundred to the accredited photographer for his skill in the exercise of the cinematographic art displayed in the finished product.

"Fifteen hundred dollars to the sales force of the distributor releasing the picture when completed divided into four prizes of $500 for the branch manager whose organization shows the most bookings of the film in proportion to the theatres in his territory, $500 for the star salesman who signs up the most exhibitors to play the picture irrespective of territory, $300 for the salesman who signs up the second largest number of theatre owners, and $200 for the salesman who signs up the third largest number of exhibitors, in proportion to the number of exhibitors in his territory.

"Lastly, a prize of $500 shall be awarded to the individual theatre owner who puts on the best publicity campaign for the film and its production crew in the newspapers of his territory.

"In the case of the scenarists, directors and cinematographers a committee of their own craftsmen will be asked to pass on their work and approve it as creditable. In event that such committee decided the work is not worthy of such award, the money posted does not revert to Pelley, but shall be ordered into the Motion Picture Relief Fund, to aid them to carry on their excellent charity work among the film profession.

"In the case of the assistant directors, the directors employing them as helpers during the shooting of the work shall specify whether or not $500 bonus shall be paid to such assistants, and in case the directors do not so specify, the money will also be paid into the Motion Picture Relief Fund. In the case of the film salesmen, the money will be paid at the specification of the distributor, attesting to the bank which of its salesmen are entitled to the award. In the case of the individual theatre owners, the award will be made at the recommending of a committee made up of the editors of the leading trade journals."

Newcomer Is Lead

The company of Paramount players headed by Warner Baxter have left for location at Tuba City, Ariz., where "Drums of the Desert" will be filmed. Marietta Millner, a newcomer from Europe, has been cast as the feminine lead. Ford Sterling, Chester Conklin, Wallace McDonald, George Irving, Guy Oliver and Bernard Siegel are also featured in the William Dudley Pelley.

Corrine Griffith Stage Rumor Denied

Following Corinne Griffith's return to Hollywood after a protracted trip through Europe, a report was circulated that she was seriously contemplating engaging in working on the legitimate stage. This was denied by an official at the United Artists studio to which company she is under contract.

As a matter of fact we were told that Miss Griffith will commence working shortly on the first production under this contract title "The Garden of Allah."

Bradbury to Head F. B. O.'s Coast Unit

Robert North Bradbury has been appointed supervisor of western units at F. B. O. Edwin King, vice-president of Film Booking Offices of America, in making the announcement of Bradbury's addition to the organization, also declared that an ambitious program of expansion will be initiated at once in the division of western pictures.

"The expansion of our program of western pictures is in keeping with the increasing activities in F. B. O. production in every branch," declared King. "Six productions are now at work and preparations for four added productions are now in the final stages.

"This program initiates the heaviest production schedule thus far launched at F. B. O. but is entirely in line with plans under way for the future."

Coast Film Publications Inaccurate

In the mad scramble of local film publications to beat each other's time in the matter of being on the spot with "hot" news, the important item of authenticity, in many cases, seems to be lost sight of completely.

After noting in one publication where Elmer Pearson, Pathe executive, was in town for the purpose of instigating a number of changes, including the leasing of additional space at either the Tec-Art or Metropolitan plants, Moving Picture World got in touch with the Pathe office here to check up on the story. From this source it was learned that Pearson had not even arrived in town as far as the studio officials were aware here.

"If Mr. Pearson is in town his whereabouts are a mystery to me," declared one Pathe official. "You are very safe in saying that he is not here. Had he arrived on the scene I am sure I would be one of the first to know it as there are a number of important matters I must take up with him immediately on his arrival." So much for Mr. Pearson's advertised entry into Hollywood.

Colleen Moore Does 1000-Mile Marathon

There is no doubt about Colleen Moore being one of the screen's foremost attractions, but a publicity story that found its way to the Hollywood Department of Moving Picture World would also make Colleen the world's champion cross-country runner.

Here's what they try to tell us:

"Doing a Paul Revere in a park at midnight, minus a horse and attired in silk pajamas and a pink blanket, may develop the lungs and leg muscles, but it is uncommonly hard on dignity.

"Colleen Moore, First National star, estimates that she ran a thousand miles during the three nights the filming of these scenes for her new picture "Naughty but Nice" was in progress, although it may have been only two or three. With kleigs, arcs and spot lights bearing down on her from all angles she scampered up and down paths, dodged behind trees, and eluded the police until she felt she had been through an Olympic Games Marathon."

Rowland Confirms Report Of McGuirk's Heading Merger

Robert Lieber May Resign As President of First National at Atlantic City Convention—Probable McGuirk Will Get Post

RICHARD ROWLAND this week substantiated the report appearing in this Department over a month ago that John McGuirk will assume the command of the First National-Stanley Company West Coast merger. This substantiation was in the nature of an interview with Mr. Rowland published in one of the largest and most reliable Los Angeles dailies.

Mr. Rowland is quoted as stating:

"It is quite possible that Mr. Lieber may resign as president of First National and if he does he will probably do so at the organization's annual convention at Atlantic City on the 15th inst.

"It is widely known that now that he has brought the organization from a co-operative concern to its present position as a result of the merger which changed its entire make-up, he feels he has done his duty by it, and he has expressed a wish to be relieved from the activities that the office of chief executive carries with it.

"The other executives are extremely anxious for him to continue as president, but if he does decide to resign it is very probable that Mr. McGuirk will be offered the post. It is also very possible that if Mr. Lieber tenders his resignation he will be urged to accept the chairmanship of the board of directors of the organization."

Repeated efforts by the World to reach Mr. Rowland and have him personally verify the above quotation were futile.

In Burbank another executive, however, conceded that Mr. Lieber's resignation was logical. As a possible forerunner that Mr. Lieber is already preparing to tender the presidential reins at the First National convention we were told that he has sold 25% of his interest in his new 4,000 seat Indianapolis theatre to Publix.

The report reaching here from New York that Sidney Kent was about to take over the management of First National had been branded in Manhattan as false by Mr. Kent even before it had time to reach the Coast. Mr. Kent's reported denial was also enhanced personally is concerned, is set for big things under the First National banner.

In our talk with the little actress, who now looks as if she had never been out of grease paint, we understand her to say that she had "turned down" a long term offer from B. P. Schulberg because she wants to be Alice White and not a second Clara Bow.

by a statement at the Burbank studios that "this is great rumor weather."

So far as the general management of the West Coast studios of First National is concerned we are in a position to know that John McCormick's stronghold is stronger than ever.

HENRY B. WALTHALL has received a letter from Miss Florence Henry, president of the Motion Picture Club of Detroit, advising him of his selection by the club, as the greatest dramatic star of the screen.

Research Worker Dies

The film colony learned with regret of the death of LeRoy Armstrong, one of the leading authorities on research work in motion pictures. He was 73 years of age at the time of his death.

Previous to retiring from active work a year ago, he was head of the library and research department at Universal City. Armstrong was born in Plymouth, Ind., May 13, 1854. A former newspaperman, he was one of the pioneers in research work in the movies.

He leaves a widow and family.

Phoney Acting Schools Up Against It

The so-called schools of motion picture acting that magnanimously guarantee to take a truck driver or a ribbon clerk and transform them into famous movie stars are finding the climate rather warm at the present time. The insistent demands of those legitimately interested in the welfare of the industry that something be done to curb the pernicious activities of these schools are beginning to bear fruit.

With the announcement that the Los Angeles Police Department, under the direction of Commissioner Foss, had launched a drive to clean up these shady institutions their operations should be satisfactorily checked.

The closing of these schools will prove a blessing to the gullible that come to Hollywood bent on a picture career after a course of acting in one of these institutions. In many instances it has been shown that the "pupils" get little or no instruction and subsist entirely on promises of big things in the movies.

A detective has been assigned by Commissioner Foss to co-operate with the Motion Picture Producers' Association to investigate reports of illegal operations. According to Foss, a number of arrests will be made and all violations will be vigorously prosecuted.

Rork to Begin With Rogers Next June

Sam Rork who is one of film-dome's true pioneers told us in his office in Burbank this week that in June he will commence work on what he hopes will be the greatest success of his thirty years' experience in the theatrical and film worlds.

This success centers around Will Rogers and that noted weary traveler's first starring vehicle titled "The Texas Steer." Rork has signed Rogers for the stellar role in the stage story of the Texas cattle man who was elected to Congress against his wishes which Rork will commence bringing to the screen early in June. At that time Rork plans the first camera shots to be made on the grounds of the capitol in Washington, D. C.

In addition to being a star, Rogers, Rork told us, will have to work on his typewriter in aiding in the preparation of the continuity and later writing titles for the picture.

John Francis Dillon will direct.

Alice White

Alice White Has Meteoric Rise in Films

Up to date Alice White's rise in filmdom has been what can be described as phenomenally meteoric even in blase Hollywood.

We met her one day this week prancing about on one of Mrs. Wallace Reid's "The Satin Woman" sets in the Fine Arts Studio. She told us then that she was trying to make up her mind whether or not she would sign a five year contract with First National. The next day we learned, officially, that she had favored the Burbank dotted line which will realize for her a cumbersome bank roll out of the First National till for a long time to come.

Little Alice, who looks like a school girl but who has all the rhetoric of an old time film salesman, was a script girl for two years. Only two months ago Hollywood was blasted by the announcement that over night she had been taken away from her long sheets of paper for a featured role opposite Milton Sills.

Upon the completion of the picture which placed Alice on celluloid record in a way that would not make a veteran actress look askance, this little girl seemed to drop off the Hollywood horizon so far as publicity went.

We had inquired for her several times at Burbank since her completion of her role with Sills but could get little information. Accidentally bumping into her at the Fine Arts Studio resulted in our discovery that a little of this and that has been "smooched" over and that now Alice, so far as she

ANNOUNCEMENT

With This Issue of the Moving Picture World a New Department Has Been Inaugurated---The Hollywood Photographic Section

HOLLYWOOD minus hokum. Hollywood as it actually is. With no double chins or wrinkles etched out by an artist. With none of the bunk about stars doing the impossible. Moving Picture World's own camera and cameraman shooting straight. Better yet, Moving Picture World's West Coast staff groomed in Metropolitan newspaper work and seasoned in the inside nooks of the motion picture industry. Writing about what they know—not what they hear or get in the mail. Getting the individual actor and actress, cameraman, director, scenarist, writer, producer, studio executive—all of them in Hollywood—to say it face to face.

MOVING Picture World's Hollywood department has during the past six months become the indisputable leader. First in authentic news. First in service to the exhibitor and first in a square deal to Hollywood. It is the only paper of local, regional and national circulation and trade, fan or daily policy that gives the real inside dope on a picture. Not how the picture should go over. Not an opinion rendered upon just seeing it on the screen. But the material facts gathered while watching the star perform on the set, the director direct, the cameraman and all the rest of them function. Then finding the kind of material put into the set—the cost. And finally seeing the rough print in the studio projection room.

Lastly, all of this observation and investigation carefully worked into an unbiased account of 100 per cent facts that can be found only on these pages of Moving Picture World.

Moving Picture World is the only national trade paper devoting an entire page each week to a most intimate study of Hollywood celebrities. Nothing smoochy. Just facts. But things about people in Hollywood that make other people—friends—realize that they find on this page things about a friend that many nights at that friend's fireside failed to divulge.

Then the big happenings in the Hollywood news. Not just hearsay. Facts gathered at their sources. Authentic. Ahead. Moving Picture World that goes to press once a week, but with information that the newspaper going to press every day cannot get until after Moving Picture World's press day.

Now the debut of a real photographic section. Not just picking up photos in a studio and bunching them together. Photographs taken by Moving Picture World. Photographs that tell a story. Different. And with each photograph not just a line of type identifying "John Doe—" but a half column of solid type telling why John Doe is John Doe, what John Doe is doing and what John Doe intends to do. Photographs and stories of people and things in all walks and sections of the Film Capital.

JACK RAYMOND—A new-comer from the East, but an old-timer as far as pictures are concerned. He has just finished with Edward Everett Horton.

Fresh From Bond Street

Jack Raymond has made a specialty of English comedy parts and quite naturally, as he is an Englishman of parts.

Jack is one of the latest arrivals in Hollywood from the Far East (meaning Gotham, Broadway, or what have you?).

While he has only been on the coast a few months he is finding things very much to his liking. His first picture for work after taking up his residence here was in "Fashions for Women," the first directorial effort of Dorothy Arzner, the screen's first woman director.

In the East he did several pictures for First National and one for Lasky, after switching his allegiance from the legitimate to the so-called silent drama.

Because of a strong resemblance to Edward Everett Horton he was given an important part in one of that comedian's recent releases.

Raymond has a pronounced English accent but does not wear spats or carry a cane.

His experience comes as the result of years of hard labor behind the footlights and his work has the polish and finesse of a real artist.

We expect to hear a great deal from Raymond in the near future. Now that he has decided to remain on the coast and leave the East cold just when its getting hot, it will be interesting to note the strides he takes.

GEORGE DAVIS—Gets his biggest chance in "The Small Bachelor" for Universal. He plays a poetic cop.

Opportunity Knocks

An actor or actress may go along for years doing good work without crashing into the spotlight. Then from a clear sky comes the "break" that spells opportunity.

George Davis stands as a typical example of this theory.

For the past five years Davis has been appearing regularly on the screen during late years playing featured comedy parts for Educational.

When William Seiter began casting for his current Universal production, "The Small Bachelor," he hit upon Davis as the exact type for the cop with poetic tendencies called for in the script.

With Educational completing their program about this time, it was a simple matter for Davis to make arrangements to accept the offer. It is a sympathetic role and one of the outstanding featured parts in the story. With the release of the picture Davis' future as a comedian looks pretty safe.

For seven years he was with Charles Dillingham in a stage comedy before entering the pictures. The call of the profession, as he told us, was the most natural thing in the world, having been, what you say, born in the profession. His family has been doing its turn behind the footlights for four generations.

Incidentally, Davis speaks seven different languages.

It is quite possible that his next move will be from Universal to DeMille's studio.

A NICE PAIR—Edward Everett Horton, left, in feminine attire, and his director, "Nick" Barrows. Horton is now making a series of two-reelers.

Clever Female Impersonator

When Edward Everett Horton did "Taxi, Taxi," and "Poker Face" for Universal, he established himself as a comedian of the first water. Now he is being starred in a series of two-reelers being produced by Harold Lloyd for release through Paramount.

The first few short reel comedies were so enthusiastically accepted that the success of the idea is practically assured. Horton, we find, is the quiet type of individual, unassuming and enamored of his work.

Horton was well known as a comedian on the stage before casting his lot with pictures and the drollness he injected into his stage characterizations is also evident on the screen. When we visited him on the "set," Horton was doing a part that savored somewhat on the line of "Charley's Aunt." In it he does a female impersonation that is a knockout. While he does not make the striking figure of a Julian Eltinge, he does succeed in getting plenty of laughs even from the electricians and other case-hardened individuals that have become blasé through constant association with picture making.

With the completion of the series of two-reelers it would not be at all surprising to hear that Lloyd will star Horton in feature length comedies.

Horton is destined to take his place with the front rank comedians of the screen before many moons have passed over. He has the technique and the "poker pan" to put himself at the top.

ARTHUR HOYT—One of the veterans of the comedy field now in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary."

Hoyt Kept Busy In Comedy Roles

Distinctive types are always in demand by producers and that is one of the reasons Arthur Hoyt is kept busy as a portrayal of comedy roles.

Hoyt did such excellent work in support of Marie Prevost in "For Wives Only" that executives of the Metropolitan Pictures Corp. made sure to line him up for an important role in their current production, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary."

For many years now Hoyt has been getting a substantial weekly check from one producing company or another. Previous to that he was prominent in theatrical circles.

He is a product of Georgetown, Colo., and was educated in Butte, Montana. In his youth he had a decided leaning towards things dramatic, so that it was not surprising that he should turn to the stage as a means for earning a livelihood.

An unfortunate financial disaster suffered by his father just about the time he was scheduled to enter college resulted in Hoyt becoming actively interested in dramatics.

He later turned his hand to managing stage productions. He directed for Henry W. Savage for six years and for George Tyler for five years. He came to Hollywood in 1916 and started his picture career with Universal, where he soon graduated to featured parts.

A taste of screen life decided him upon his future.

In Legitimate Forty-three Years

The lure of the pictures seems to get them all in time.

May Robson answered the call of the footlights for forty-three years before finally affixing her signature to a contract for C. B. DeMille and became a full-fledged screen actress.

At present Miss Robson is making her headquarters at the Metropolitan studio, where she is appearing in the role of Aunt Mary in the pictorial version of her famous stage success, "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary." For twenty years she was famous in this role, both in this country and abroad. During this period she was starred at the head of her own country.

With her advent into the pictures her first screen work was in "Pals in Paradise," which was also a Metropolitan production. In this she played one of the outstanding parts opposite Rudolph Schildkraut, the grand old man of stage and screen. This picture satisfied the public that she was equally an artist of the screen as well as the legitimate.

"The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary" should be one of the best comedies of the year, judging by the cast assigned to the various roles. Harrison Ford, Phyllis Haver and Franklin Pangborn, all three stellar artists of subtle comedy, are appearing with Miss Robson.

Should Miss Robson ever tire of the silent drama she may be certain that she will always find ready audiences for another tour in the vehicles she has made her name in on the stage.

After "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," what next?

M. P. World Staff Photo

Punctual For Twenty Years

Interviewing Josephine Crowell might well be termed one of the real pleasures of life. This noted character woman has been on the stage and screen in the neighborhood of a quarter of a century and her philosophy of life and screen lore in particular is mighty interesting.

Miss Crowell boasts a distinction that is nothing if not unique. She has not been late for a rehearsal or a scene at a studio in more than twenty years. Her record for dependability and punctuality, coupled with the artistry gained by years of experience offer a conclusive answer as to why she is constantly in demand by directors and producers.

She is now engaged in a series of pictures with Edward Everett Horton, being produced as two-reelers by Harold Lloyd. With the completion of this contract she insists that she is going to take a much needed rest somewhere in the country far from casting directors, who seem obsessed with the supreme purpose of keeping her constantly before the camera.

In the Horton comedies she is given plenty of scope and her work is bound to help materially in the finished pictures. It is characteristic of Miss Crowell to want to tell of the virtues of others in preference to her own. While we were talking with her on the set at the Metropolitan studio she insisted on calling Ruth Dwyer, Horton's leading lady over, so that we might get acquainted with the young lady, whom Miss Crowell declares is one of the coming stars.

With such a staunch supporter and booster, how can Ruth be other than a star some day?

Stardom In the Offing

When Emil Jannings' initial American picture is released, there will be a double interest in viewing the screen play. The performance of Jannings, of course, will be scrutinized keenly—and so will that of "the other woman" in "The Way of All Flesh." Phyllis Haver, who scored such a tremendous success as the bone of contention between Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen in "What Price Glory," is "the other woman," and is said to turn in some of the best work of her career in the role.

Phyllis is another of Mack

PHYLLIS HAVER—One of the most beautiful blondes on the screen and destined to attain stardom.

Sennett's former bathing beauties to streak towards stardom. At the Metropolitan studio they think so well of the golden-haired Phyllis that she has been put under a long-term contract.

Times have changed for "Phil," as she is known by everyone on the lot, from the executives to the electricians and "prop" men. Between "shots" in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," in which she is now playing opposite Harrison Ford, she admitted that it has been a long, hard climb from the $12 a week she once received from Sennett to her present berth with stardom in the offing.

After seeing her in "What Price Glory," we have always harbored a desire to see her on the screen as Sadie Thompson in "Rain." What she would do with the part would be nobody's business!

On with the dance!

BILL CODY—Has taken his place as one of the big western stars. He is now doing "Gold From Weepah."

Cody Started As Stunt Man

This seems to be the hey-day for western screen stars.

Take Bill Cody, for instance. Bill is not only a star by his own right, but a producer as well and the particularly interesting feature is that he is one of the youngest, if not the youngest producer, receiving his mail in Hollywood. His productions are now released through Pathe and are paying first rate dividends.

The youthful producer-star started his career in pictures as a stunt-man for Cosmopolitan productions in the East. He then obtained his chance in a series of two-reelers, and from then on his services were much in demand.

Cody not only does western parts, but also straights, and wears a tuxedo with the same grace that has made famous his eminent namesake, Lew.

Being an up and coming young man with a keen sense of the opportune, he quite naturally decided to do "Gold from Weepah," his current picture, right away. With Weepah, Nevada, crashing the headlines throughout the country with the discovery of gold there, his selection of a screen story might be termed a stroke of genius.

RAMON NOVARRO will next be starred in "Romance" by M.-G.-M., to be directed by John S. Robertson. The screen play will be adapted from the famous novel by Joseph Conrad. Novarro is now busy in "Old Heidelberg," which Ernst Lubitsch is directing.

JACOB D. PETERS, Paramount studio artist, has won the $1,250 first prize in the national contest of the Art Alliance of America for designs for living room furniture. Peters designed the house interiors for Emil Jannings' "The Way of All Flesh."

WILLIAM ORLAMOND, noted character actor, has been added to the cast of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Wind," starring Lillian Gish. He has been in three of the latest releases from the M.-G.-M. plan, "Flesh and the Devil," "The Red Mill" and "The Trail of '98."

RICHARD TUCKER has the doctor role in "The World at Her Feet," starring Florence Vidor. Luther Reed is directing Miss Vidor's latest Paramount production, with Arnold Kent in the featured male lead.

VICTOR HEERMAN directs Ed Wynn in the latter's first starring picture for Paramount, "Rubber Heels." The story is an original by Sam Mintz, Ray Harris and Tom Crizer.

JOHNSTON McCULLY, former Los Angeles newspaperman, is the most recent addition to the M.-G.-M. writing staff. McCully was the author of "The Mark of Zorro," considered one of Douglas Fairbanks' greatest efforts.

TOM LEWIS, veteran of the vaudeville, has harkened to the call of the screen. He has signed at M.-G.-M. for the role of Mr. Murphy in "The Callahans and the Kellys," adapted from Kathleen Norris' famous short stories.

CLARA BOW has finished in "Rough House Rosie," her newest picture for Paramount. Reed Howe's, Douglas Gilmore, Doris Hill, Arthur Houseman, John Miljan and Henry Walker are also in the cast and Frank Strayer directed the production.

JOHN KRAFFT, title writer, has been signed to a new long-term contract by the DeMille studio. Krafft is a former newspaperman and was recently termed one of the seven best columnists in America by Bruce Barton.

GRETA GARBO has settled her differences with M.-G.-M. and will now be cast in the name role in "Anna Karenina," according to information obtained at the Culver City studio. Dimitri Buchowetski will direct.

"HARD-BOILED HARRIGAN" has been selected as Milton Sills' next starring production for First National. It will be an adaptation of "Belated Evidence," a short story by Elliot Spring. At present Sills is engaged in making "Diamonds in the Rough."

DOLORES DEL RIO has been given the feminine lead in "Romona," according to Edwin Carewe, who will produce the picture for release through United Artists. "Romona" is doubly interesting in that Carewe also announces that it will be Miss Del Rio's first starring venture.

MARCEL DE SANO, a recent addition to Samuel Goldwyn's organization, will direct Gilda Gray in "The Passionate Island," a story written especially for Miss Gray by Arthur Hornblow. This will be Gilda's initial picture for Goldwyn under her new contract.

PRODUCTION will start about April 11 on "The Road to Romance," co-featuring Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill for First National, according to an announcement by John McCormick, First National chief.

MONTAGUE LOVE has the heavy role in "Wind," Lillian Gish's next starring vehicle for M.-G.-M. Victor Seastrom will again direct Miss Gish in this production.

LOUISE FAZENDA will play the feminine lead in "Simple Sis" for Warner Brothers. Herman Raymaker will direct.

JOHNNY DOWNS is back on the Hal Roach lot again and will rejoin his former mates in the "Our Gang" comedies. He has just finished a featured part in "The Trail of '98" for M.-G.-M.

FORTY-TWO ranking beauties headed by Lupe Velez and Viola Richards are appearing in the current Hal Roach comedy starring Charlie Chase. Eric Mayne and Gale Henry are also in the cast.

JESS SMITH has completed "The Poor Nut," a college farce made at the Tec-Art studios, with Richard Wallace directing.

WALTER PERCIVAL has been assigned an important role in "The Underworld," a Paramount production.

BETTY BAKER has a strong supporting role in "Say It With Diamonds," starring Betty Compson for Chadwick Pictures.

DOROTHY SEBASTIAN has the feminine lead in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Frontiersman."

MALCOLM STUART BOYLAN, title writer, is now on his way to New York via the Panama Canal.

ALEC FRANCIS is taking his first vacation in a long time. He is making a motor tour of northern California, but will soon be back in front of the grinding Mitchells.

RICARDO CORTEZ has the leading male role in "Anna Karenina," in which Greta Garbo is to be starred by M.-G.-M. Zasu Pitts is also in the cast.

LENORE COFFEE is one of the screen's busiest scenarists. She is now doing "The Night of Love" for Samuel Goldwyn, and, according to reports, First National will produce her "Bread and Board."

DIRECTOR GRED GUIOL is now finishing his latest comedy for Roach, featuring Stan Laurel, Jimmy Finlayson and Oliver Hardy.

RUTH TODD, comedy title writer, will title "Ladies, Beware," starring George O'Hara for F. B. O.

JULIA FAYE is co-featured with Rudolph Schildkraut in "Turkish Delight," DeMille production, directed by Paul Sloane.

EMIL JANNINGS' first American picture for Paramount, "The Way of All Flesh," is now in the cutting room.

DONALD DAVIS, son of Owen Davis, has been signed by Jesse L. Lasky and becomes a member of the writing staff at the Paramount studio.

RICHARD ARLEN'S next assignment with the completion of "Wings" for Paramount will be a featured part in "Rolled Stockings." James Hall and Louise Brooks have the leads.

JOHN GRIFFITH WRAY will next direct Lon Chaney in "The Ordeal" for M.-G.-M. Chaney has just finished "The Unknown" with Tod Browning directing.

"ODDITIES," a series of one-reel novelties produced by UFA in Germany, will be released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the United States, according to Irving C. Thalberg.

ESTHER RALSTON'S next starring vehicle for Paramount will be "Slightly Damaged."

NIGEL BARRIE will next be seen in a featured role in "The Climbers" for Warner Brothers.

EXTERIORS for "The Devil's Saddle," starring Ken Maynard, will be filmed near Alberquerque, N. M.

VICTORIA MIX, wife of Tom Mix, western star, is now recuperating from a serious operation.

Words Without Music

Obtrusive Sub-titles

FIFTEEN years ago, when the director was regarded as all-important, and literally lord of the roost, it was as necessary as puttees are today to glance over a script and remark: "There ain't much to it, but it will be all right when I fix it up."

Frequently his "fixing" was the reverse of helpful; often he completely spoiled the product.

In recent months certain sub-title writers in Hollywood seem to have come into the same frame of mind. Everything is hopeless, but they will fix it up, and they proceed to load the unfortunate film with hundreds of feet of more or less unnecessary titling, much of which really is hurtful to the continuity of the picture.

It may be only a passing fancy, but while it continues it is an irritant. If a picture is so poor that it cannot be saved by any other means than an overdose of excerpts from Joe Miller and Ayer's Almanacs, it might be well to shelve it. Certainly these ancient wheezes cannot put into the story what the author and director have omitted.

In an unfortunate moment some unhumorous picture was saved by a liberal gagging. Others sought similarly to save their doubtful product, until today not only comedies but more or less dramatic stories have become nothing more than the illustrations to a badly edited edition of "Drummers' Yarns."

Even granting that audiences laugh, the fact remains that the laughers are a bit ashamed of themselves afterward, just as the vaudeville audience will rock with laughter at the introduction of profanity and yet reprehend the action on second thought.

The thing is being overdone, and if the title writers are permitted to hold their sway, they presently will crowd the picture almost entirely off the screen in their belief that they, and they alone, can put over a hit.

These title writing stars seem no longer to come into the projection room with the idea of being helpful where possible. They now assume the attitude that the more subtitles they can crowd into a given footage, the better the resultant product will be. If it gets much worse, the pictorial part will be represented by the main title and the tailpiece. Something should be done before then.

The TREND of PRODUCTION

By John McCormick

Editor's Note—As General Manager of West Coast Production of First National Pictures, this youthful executive has demonstrated his remarkable ability by his speedy rise to the top and by his share in building up First National's producing organization to its present lofty position in the industry. The centralization of 95% of First National's picture-making at its West Coast Studios makes McCormick's duties greater than ever before. His increased responsibilities will mean an even greater opportunity to demonstrate his unquestioned ability and efficiency.

I BELIEVE firmly that the greatest advances within the next couple of years will be seen, not in production or in exhibition, but in distribution—because that is the best place and the most expedient department of the motion picture industry in which to save money, over and above our current practice. Comparatively, the advance made to date in this department does not compare with the advances made in production and in exhibition.

As I see it, the road show should be confined to a few principal cities and should not be sent to the smaller towns, which are the main-stay of our industry. Even so, I feel that—although the road show may pinch the shoe, so to speak, on the few exhibitors who may lose a little business through the local first-run as a road show in their own territory—the fact remains that the majority of exhibitors benefit by the establishment of any film as a road show production. Therein lies the benefit of the road show—namely; it demonstrates to the public the relative audience value of a certain picture and is a tangible means of recognizing the over-average merit of any given film. In other words, when a picture is established as a road show in New York and certain other big cities, it inevitably means much more to the audience in the small town when it is played there.

To my mind, the big pictures, the road show films, should be considered, not as a means of getting more money from the existent fan public, but rather as an instrument to make new friends for our industry. It is the road shows that will bring new customers to the theatre's box office windows; and, in that way, they benefit the entire business.

Regarding production proper, I can see a return to elemental drama and elemental comedy to a large degree, because there is hardly anything left still undone in the field of refinement of variation of the basic plots; and certainly the eye and the brain can no longer be staggered by large spectacles, per se. Tricks and largeness will no longer sell pictures—they have to tell good elemental stories to get over. And the men who make pictures have come to realize this.

John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National Pictures, looks to "big, special" pictures of the "road show class," to bring new friends into the motion picture fold.

The two most important problems of the immediate future in the field of production are (1) the reduction of negative cost; (2) the necessity of a campaign to educate the public as to the contribution made to the welfare of the world by the motion picture.

In reducing negative cost, which is absolutely imperative, there is not thought of taking away from real star magnets the large sums of money which they are earning by reason of their drawing power. The screen has been the only art wherein the artist could amass large sums for his services and for his talents. This fact betokens a fundamentally healthy state of affairs; but it has been converted to a vicious state through the fact that there were so many problems confronting the producers in the early days, and so few men and women with experience who could meet those problems, that the producer was forced to over-pay for services of those people who were skilled in the various departments necessary to motion picture production. Because of the under-capitalization which permeated the entire industry, the great concern of the producer was to meet his release date, because of the necessity of a quick turn-over so that he could keep on producing! Under these circumstances, he had to take experience and pay big money for it, because he could never afford to take a chance or to experiment. Consequently, his pictures have been costing too much money; and the excessive cost of production has been forced on to the distribution departments and thence absorbed by the exhibitors and the public. This problem is being met by producers; and it must be treated with even more firmness, or the industry will find itself the creator of a Frankenstein which will destroy its maker!

The second big problem for the future—the campaign of education as to the screen's contribution to the world's welfare—has, of course, been stated before, but is worthy of repetition. This contribution ranges over a wide field and includes the dissemination of all possible scientific information. It also includes the spread of civilization, and of the customs and manners of the more enlightened peoples, into the most remote corners of the earth.

Today, some of us are still a little reticent—or sheepish, if you will—about admitting our connection with the picture business. But twenty years from now we shall all be very proud of our participation in its growth.

The establishment of motion picture courses in several universities within the last couple of years indicates that, by the end of 1930, almost all colleges will include practical motion picture courses. From these courses we shall get recruits who will have youth, ability and enthusiasm, with backgrounds to carry them far.

Even more than the printing press, the motion picture is the greatest weapon for good or evil that the world has ever known. Fortunately, it has been used for good far more consistently in the main than the stage or even the press. It is a privilege to be a member of the motion picture army.

The Critic Bends

An English Reviewer Who Finds
Good in the Movies—
Even American

By Epes W. Sargent

GENERALLY when the American film critic of the daily newspapers is moved to write words, he divides his time between expressing his contempt of all things pertaining to the business which provides his bread and butter and proving his superiority. Nothing is good; unless it be a handful of UFA's, and he proves his critical ability by finding fault with everything. It is refreshing to turn to criticism of the films by an English writer. Inez Barry, motion picture critic of the Spectator, the Daily Mail and the Weekly Dispatch, who writes interestingly of her viewpoint in "Let's Go to the Movies," recently issued by Payson and Clarke in an American edition.

Miss Barry is a film critic. That's bad. She is a woman critic. That's worse. She is English, which would seem to put the American picture out of the running. She is appreciative—and that's truly remarkable.

You may not be wholly in agreement with Miss Barry. We confess we are not, for she condemns "Our Gang" with "away with them into the utter darkness of the cellars where junk film lies forgotten." If Miss Barry does not like "Our Gang" she is one material point short of clear vision, but she writes with remarkable clarity on many things, and her views always are of interest. She may not like Hal Roach's clever youngsters, but, on the other hand, she does not consign all comedies to the same oblivion. She understands.

"That really is dreadful stuff," she writes after detailing the story of a comedy, "yet it was saved, as farces generally are, by the great talent of the hard-working people who appear in that type of stuff—for they are not ordinary film stars but acrobats. That, really, makes all the difference between intolerable vulgarity and entertainment."

Evidently Miss Barry has a keener slant on the comedies than our own overlords of public opinion who seldom or never condescend to notice anything under five reels. She finds even Felix the Cat interesting as appealing to our anthropomorphic proclivities, but Felix, nor yet Pat Sullivan, will not mind that since Felix is bracketed with Aesop, Swift and Lewis Carroll. To be in such good company is worth even being called a totem.

In the matter of art, she finds the cinema no poor second to painting when expertly done. This is somewhat negative since she argues that the cinema should not be decried merely because it is photography and not painting, but the argument is sound, and she advances many examples to prove that pictures may possess the artistic quality, though many lack the saving grace.

It is evident from the chapter on subtitles that Miss Barry has not yet suffered from the recent accession of wisecracking leaders, else she would have been more emphatic in her statement that titles should be terse, informative and characteristic. She does, however, take a deserved crack at a couple of horrible examples. A book might be written on this topic alone.

In the matter of players, she finds that personality counts for more than mere acting ability, and cites Norma Talmadge, Dix, Meighan and Sills as among those who are popular because they are themselves, while Raymond Hatton, Louise Fazenda, Donald Crisp, Zazu Pitts and the late Willard Louis are brought forward as examples of those who can act. She draws the conclusion that many films permit only the expression of personality rather than demonstration of acting ability. This is a phase of which other writers have spoken little or nothing, but the argument is sound. It's only another way of saying that types are better than players who can assume types; a condition the pictures have carried to the speaking stage. In a later chapter she makes more specific mention of Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin as sellers of personality rather than as players of parts. Miss Pickford she visions as presently retiring from the screen to assume production, to reappear "in another ten or fifteen years," when the little girl roles shall have been forgotten, to make a new appeal in more mature parts. The speculation is at least interesting.

Just what the Russian player will think when she reads the indignant 'think of Nazimova, a real actress being compelled to play bad girl parts at fifty or more," is not for us to say. Several pages are taken in cataloguing the players and their abilities. There will be some riots and a few swelled heads when the book gets out to Hollywood.

Her chapter on comedians is largely given to Chaplin, with passing mention of Lloyd, Keaton and a neat little bouquet for W. C. Fields. Her plea for more of Will Rogers, "one of the few people no intelligent film goer could afford ever to miss," has been answered by the new Pathe series. She mentions a new name to Americans in Nicholas Koline, of the French stage.

Naturally she takes her slam at the hard-boiled conventions of production and lists seven of the most outstanding, the first three of which are that a woman can make a man out of any cad, even if she had to get cast away on a desert island with him. The other four are equally trite, and, not mentioned by number, are some others, including the actress who gets pi-eyed on a single modest drink, though Miss Barry should remember to make allowance for the devastating effects of our modern bootleg. Sometimes one drink will do even that.

Evidently the saw-it-in-the-movies flourishes in England as well as here for she writes that "every three months journalists spring up to attack the cinema on the grounds of morality," attributing to the picture almost every evil. She holds that the child in the cinema is better off than roaming

Harvard and the Newest Art

Recognition by Three Hundred Year Old University of Art Which Has Developed In Three Decades Tremendously Significant of Film's Future Growth

By Merritt Crawford

HARVARD UNIVERSITY'S recognition of the motion picture as the newest of arts marks another milestone in the film's marvelous development. Its possibilities and ramifications are so multi-sided as to be all but bewildering.

Henceforth the motion picture will fill an increasingly important place in the Harvard Research Department and in the Harvard Graduate schools whose curricula link the industrial and the artistic in the activities of the modern world. How importantly this will influence and accelerate the future progress of the motion picture only those who are most familiar with the results accomplished by the Cambridge scholars in other fields can now estimate. That they will be very great, indeed, there can be no doubt.

The announcement is made this week that Professors E. C. Forbes and Paul Sachs, of the Fogg Museum, Harvard University, have appointed a committee on Motion Picture Archives, which will select the most artistic films produced each year since the beginning of the art. This committee will act in conjunction with the Harvard College of Fine Arts and consists of Professors Chandler R. Post, Ralph B. Perry, John Tucker Murray, Meyric R. Rogers and Messrs. Martin Mower and J. W. D. Seymour.

All of these gentlemen have made a considerable study of motion pictures, Professor Post for fifteen years past having kept a careful record of the artistic development of the films during this period.

Studios to Cooperate

It is further announced that the Harvard Research department will study the industry at first hand, its experts going into the studios with the co-operation of all the important companies for this purpose. Motion pictures, selling, distributing, exhibiting, etc., will also be a part of the Harvard graduate courses on business policy.

Two important facts the Harvard investigations have already developed, which, perhaps, have accentuated the interest with which the officials have undertaken the study of all the complex angles of the subject. One is the conclusion that the "big" picture is not made by design. It is, generally, more or less an accident. (To this "The King of Kings," Cecil B. DeMille's forthcoming important production may prove to be an exception.)

The other is, that in studying all other industries the Harvard research authorities found that the motion picture formed an important element at some point or another which affected all. It was, for example, a silent salesman, which sold goods of every description all over the world, and the most potent propagandist which has ever existed in the history of mankind by reason of its universal language.

The linking up of the great resources of the three hundred year old University with the thirty year old art followed the series of lectures recently given by eminent executives of the film business, which included Adolph Zukor, William Fox, Marcus Loew, Jesse L. Lasky, R. H. Cochrane, H. M. Warner, Will H. Hays, Sidney R. Kent, Dr. Giannini and Joseph P. Kennedy. The latter, who is himself a Harvard man, was responsible for inaugurating the series of lectures, which have resulted in Harvard University's official recognition of the motion picture as the newest of all arts, adding it to poetry, music, painting, sculpture, architecture, and all the varied list of modes and media of idealistic expression known to our civilization.

In the Boston Evening Transcript of April 2, 1927, most conservative of the Hub City's newspapers, Mr. W. A. MacDonald gives a detailed and chronological account of the steps leading to the linking up of the motion picture to Harvard University, with its tremendous educational and historical background and accumulated data on modern and ancient industry and art.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD presents it here in full, in view of its importance in reference to the future of the motion picture and as a permanent record for the industry. Mr. MacDonald's article follows:

"Today at Harvard Business School Joseph P. Kennedy closed a course of lectures that has brought the newest of the arts into the oldest of the universities. Ten leaders of the motion picture industry have spoken before the students who are in their second and final years at the school. Fourteen hundred applications to attend the lectures have been refused.

Class of Four Hundred

"The class that has heard them as part of the regular course of business policy is composed of about four hundred young men. They have heard the story of the movies told by the men who have seen, in a few years, the processes of organization, financing and improvement of methods that normally require several generations. They have had a chance to ask questions of Lasky and Zukor and Fox and Loewe and Warner and Kent and Giannini and Cochrane and Hays.

"While Harvard Business School has been thus engaged in examining an industry that entertains ninety millions of people a week, an announcement has come from Harvard that motion pictures deserve recognition as part of the cultural development of the country and must be considered in any serious historical and technical study of art. Therefore, the department of fine arts at Harvard, in association with the Fogg Museum and the University Library, plans to establish immediately a library and archive of films which will record the evolution of the motion picture and select annually those films which are considered worthy of preservation as works of art.

"In order to constitute and operate this archive a committee of the Harvard faculty, after gathering films of the highest quality of the past, will select each January the films of the preceding twelve months that, in its judgment, should be included in a library of this character. The announcement of its selections will be made public on March 1 of each year and the first announcement is expected on March 1, 1928.

"The fine arts department has been unofficially interested in motion pictures for a long time; the business school only recently. In the fine arts department Chandler R. Post, professor of Greek and fine arts, had, for one, kept his own record of the artistic progress of the movies. The story of the events that resulted in the announcements of the business school course and the fine arts program is interesting and has not been told.

Origin of Idea

"Last December Mr. Kennedy, whose lecture today on the future of the motion picture industry closed the business school course, met Wallace B. Donham, dean of the Harvard Business School. Mr. Kennedy is president of the Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., and a graduate of Harvard, class of 1912. Dean Donham asked him how the motion picture business was and Mr. Kennedy said something about its importance and they talked for awhile. A month later, in a note, the dean asked Mr. Kennedy to see him when next in Boston from his headquarters in New York, and Kennedy, in a few days, paid a visit to Harvard where Dean Donham asked him if he would consider giving a series of lectures on the industry before the business school.

"Kennedy, modest, alert and thoughtful, said that he would be glad to do it, but that he thought it would be better to get the leaders of the industry—it would be possible to find the men who had seen the business through from its beginnings. He would be glad to make the arrangements. 'Line it up' may have been his phrase.

"The dean was glad, he said, to leave it in Mr. Kennedy's hands and back to New York went Mr. Kennedy, there to talk on the telephone to the Pacific coast with Will H. Hays, with Jesse Lasky, Cecil de Mille, Milton Sills, Marcus Loew, and, in New York, with Zukor, Fox, Dr. Giannini, and Warner. He told them what he wanted and they were all unwillingly willing to come.

"They had their notions about Harvard; they had done their share of public speaking, perhaps, but Harvard was something out of their experience. Harvard was an old and dignified university; they were the newest of the great industries. Anyway, there was talk from coast to coast, for the movies use the telephone in the grand manner without thinking much about it.

"In the meantime, James Seymour, who is secretary for publicity and alumni affairs, and who had met Kennedy through Dean Donham, proposed to Professor Paul Sachs, one of the directors of the Fogg Art Museum, the notion that if films, past and present, could be got, they might be of value to the museum and the fine arts department. Dr. Sachs thought there were great possibilities, also that the plan ought to be put up to a group potentially interested which included beside himself, Edward W. Forbes, co-director of the Fogg; Dean

by E. W. SARGENT

WHEN Billy Fairbanks announced a cat matinee at the Grand Theatre no one gave much heed. The town was used to seeing Billy trail the stunts Pete Henderson pulled over at the Bijou, just as they expected Pete to try and copper any bet that Fairbanks might make. Exploitation was a lively affair in Bayville, for Fairbanks and Henderson were nimble-witted fighters, and each could be counted on to follow the other's lead.

When Henderson had offered a prize of a rooster and seven hens in an essay contest, Fairbanks had come back with a display that began, "Why bother with the Biddies?" and ran on to offer a new laid egg to each patron "without the annoyance of keeping hens." That started things, five or six years back. The next week Fairbanks had staged a public speaking contest and Henderson had offered a prize to the boy or girl who could keep still the longest. After that it seemed up to each to match the other's ideas.

Fairbanks' cat matinee was only the natural reply to Henderson's offer of prizes at a Rin-Tin-Tin matinee for the largest and smallest, the handsomest and ugliest and the most accomplished canines. Each kid who brought his dog to the matinee was to be admitted free, and five of them would walk off with prizes.

It was the most natural thing in the world, to the Bayville public that Fairbanks should promptly offer a free admission to every child bringing a cat to the matinee that same day. If you had a dog, you went to the Bijou. If a cat was your pet, it was the Grand.

Dogs were mostly a matter of ownership, but cats were something else, and timid old maids wisely kept their toms and tabbies under lock and key the week before the event.

Even at that, Fairbanks' receipts were $9.40 in cash and 181 cats, which was not doing so badly. Most of the town turned out to stand on the other side of the street to watch the fun, for the Grand and Bijou were in the same block, and the early afternoon was a constant succession of encounters between small boys going to the Grand with cats and the young gentlemen who were en route to the Bijou with dogs. Skirmishes were frequent and little Hendrix Pettibone had to retrieve his cat from the top of the Banker Block following a meeting with Richard Prichard and his pet bulldog. That was the high point in the series of events, but only one of half a hundred such meetings. Bayville voted it the best free show the rival managers had ever staged. They lingered until the last dog had been safely parked beside its master's seat and the final cat had been deposited in the crates Fairbanks had borrowed from the butcher.

Even then it was difficult for the policeman to get the crowd to move on. It was Saturday afternoon, with nothing else to do, so they hung around and speculated as to what Fairbanks was going to do with the cats.

Joe Prague, the local cut-up, affected to find some sinister suggestion in the fact that the butcher had loaned the crates for cat cages and openly rejoiced that the rabbit season was closed. As a matter of fact, hassenpfeffer would have been a suspicious delicacy in any home in Bayville that evening.

Inside the two theatres the reels clicked merrily off and the children cheered the hero and hissed the villain with a gusto that comes only with the knowledge that seats cost nothing.

Both were good shows, but Henderson's small guests were impatient for the show to be over. They wanted the judging to commence. Each was positive that his dog was certain to win one of the prizes.

Henderson got the reception of his managerial career when he came to the wings, as the comedy faded from the screen and the lights went up. Briefly he sketched the scheme of judging. There were five awards. The contestants in each class were to be brought to the rather large stage and there eliminated by the applause of the audience. He called for the largest dogs first.

There was a stir all over the house, and some two dozen proud youngsters escorted their charges to the stage and lined them up. Henderson went up and down the line, but found his work difficult, for the children applauded impartially.

For ten minutes he sought a decision without being able to eliminate more than half a dozen of the dogs, and he was beginning to wonder if he would be able to wind up the five contests before the night show, when there was a commotion in the line and one of the largest of the entries suddenly shot into the wings, carrying his young master with him. An instant later the rest of the dogs dashed after the leader, only to reappear a moment later in full cry after cats, a stream, a river, a flood of cats. Black cats, whites and brindles. Timid cats, pugnacious cats, and cats undecided whether to fight or run. Some were in full flight, some were backing up, disputing every inch of the ground. There were nearly two hundred of them, but to the dazed Henderson it seemed as though there were a million as he stood with the fight milling about him.

Of course the dogs in the auditorium were not standing passively by. They hurried to the support of their fellows on the stage, not pausing to use the runways on either side of the stage. They took the most direct line between two given points, no matter what intervened.

One bulldog, reserved for the ugliest dog contest, went over the low orchestra rail into the bass drum, knocking it on its side and crashing through the head. A collie came down the middle aisle and scratched the bald head of the astonished leader, while the other musicians jammed in the narrow door leading back stage from the pit.

Reinforcements were needed—and badly—for the heroes of a hundred alley fights were spitting and clawing with their backs against the drops, while the more timid scampered up the scenery, only to strike a rotted patch and fall back to the stage.

The din was indescribable. Every dog was in full voice and every cat was vocal with indignation or anguish. Had it not been that the rules had required that all dogs be muzzled, the slaughter would have been terrific, but the muzzles made the battle more even.

It was only a moment before the street crowd had crashed through the doors to shout encouragement to the battlers and advice to Henderson, who was vainly striving to pick a dozen clawing demons off his back with two futile hands.

Someone turned in a call for the fire department, and while this further added to the excitement, it proved the salvation of the day, for the firemen in their rubber coats and helmets were able to fight their way to the stage and open the scenery door, while others ran a line of hose down the aisle and turned it impartially on cats, dogs and Henderson.

It was over almost as quickly as it started. The animals had selected their exit and had been propelled thereto by the streams of COMMENTS on the function at the Astor last Saturday evening of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, originally billed as the annual "Naked Truth" Dinner of the organization, and later as the Seventh Annual and First International Dinner and Dance, have been many and various, but there is no denying the fact that much real disappointment in the conduct of the affair has been expressed.

THE "Naked Truth" dinners of the A. M. P. A., originally conceived as the film industry's counterpart of the famous Gridiron Club dinners, given annually by the Washington, D. C. newspaper correspondents, justly gained much popularity and distinction for several years.

LATTERLY, however, it seems to have been forgotten that the chief excuse for the annual function is the opportunity which it affords for much good humored fun by means of travesty and caricature at the expense of the industry's leading figures, pet delusions and favorite vanities, all of which make the occasion a means of developing a better understanding all around and at the same time produce an evening's entertainment that have made T. N. T. night the outstanding social event of the year among film folk in the East.

HAD the dinner last Saturday night been a formal, official affair under the auspices of the M. P. P. D. A., for instance, as apparently most of the honored guests seemed to believe it was, doubtless it might be regarded as a signal success (had such been its purpose), in promoting international amity and in stressing the importance and responsibilities of the motion picture in furthering mutual good will and commerce between nations.

AS the annual event of the A. M. P. A., however, the "Naked Truth" dinner, to which the great majority of those present had looked forward with keen anticipation, it can hardly be said to have struck thirteen.

CAN it be that all of us are beginning to take ourselves so seriously that such functions as the "Naked Truth" dinner was originally, are no longer possible for fear of offending some sacro-sanct personality or destroying some pompous platitude which may be current in our midst?

FOR one, we do not believe it, and in this conviction we feel assured the majority of those present at the affair last week will concur.

LET us have by all means our formal gatherings, with their set speeches and dignified expressions, dealing with the problems and responsibilities of the motion picture, but let us have also our occasions of merrymaking and relaxation, each under their own proper auspices.

MIXING the two cannot be said to be conducive either to pleasure or progress for most of those who participate.

ANOTHER thought which occurs is that there is too much of the buyer and the seller at gatherings of this kind, too much of the impress of our daily business at these affairs, where all ranks of the industry come together, to make them as social and sociable as they ought to be or to permit the relaxation which properly all should be permitted to enjoy out of business hours.

HERE is a theme, which might be susceptible of development at the "Naked Truth" dinner next year, should the A. M. P. A. decide to restore the event to its pristine glories.

THE importance of the coming convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at Columbus, Ohio, on June 7, 8 and 9, cannot be stressed too much, for there is far more than the question of buying and selling film or the possible encroachment on some individual exhibitor's rights by one or another of the producing-distributing companies for the delegates to consider.

A. M. P. A. "Naked Truth" Dinner at Astor Lacking In Original "Gridiron" Features

Suggests Inquiry Whether We Are Not Coming to Take Ourselves Too Seriously

Convention of M.P.T.O.A. at Columbus in June Will Have Many Unique Characteristics

Death of John C. Eisele, a Shock

Harvard's Foremost Linguist, Enthusiastic Motion Picture Fan For Fifteen Years

THE necessity for a fully organized, efficiently functioning National exhibitor body, with active representation in every State, is as essential to the welfare of the industry as a whole, as it is to that of the exhibitors themselves.

EXHIBITORS are home town folks and it is the home town folks alone who count with the average legislator, be he national, state or local, so it is upon them, in the final analysis, that the rest of the industry must depend to combat the injurious moves, which are continually being initiated to restrict and limit the development of the motion picture.

AND the exhibitors can act effectively for their own protection and that of the rest of the industry, only through having their State unit completely coordinated and smoothly cooperating with the national organization, sufficient reason for the biggest kind of a turn-out when the convention roll is called at Columbus a few weeks hence.

IT is reported that President Woodhull will have the most eminent experts in the industry on projection, presentation, theatre management or the like, address the exhibitors on their respective specialties on different days of the convention and answer questions which may be addressed to them by the delegates, a procedure never before carried out at any theatre-owners' convention, which we can recall.

PRACTICAL helps of this kind to the exhibitor-delegates will not be of service to the individual alone, but should result in making the representation at Columbus far larger than it otherwise might be, a fact of the utmost importance to all the industry at this time.

THE sudden death of John C. Eisele, for many years treasurer of Fox Film Corporation and an authority in banking circles, will be a shock to many in the financial world, as well as to his numerous friends in the film industry.

MR. EISELE was a man of keen and expert judgment in all matters pertaining to finance and an officer and director in many important banks and trust companies, besides his active connection with motion pictures, where his authoritative knowledge of financial matters again and again has proved invaluable to his friend and associate, William Fox.

COMING at this time, just as the Fox organization is on the eve of the greatest expansion and possibly the biggest battle in this company's eventful and colorful history, Mr. Eisele's passing will be deeply felt as a personal loss by his associates.

PROFESSOR CHANDLER R. POST, head of the Harvard Fine Arts Committee of the Fogg Museum, which it is planned will assemble a library of films recording the history of the motion picture's development as an art, is disclosed as a student of the movie for the past fifteen years.

AS Harvard's foremost linguist (Professor Post speaks and writes at least twenty languages) no one suspected that he was keeping a careful record of the film's artistic advance through the years, which will now prove all but invaluable.

COUNT one movie-goer of the long ago, who cannot be said to have been a "lowbrow."

THE Naked Truth Dinner, famous annual event of the A. M. P. A. for the past seven years, passed into history last Saturday night. Hereafter, the International Dinner will be the occasion de luxe to which the industry may look forward—if it wants to look forward—every year. Edifying as it undoubtedly was, however, to listen to the speeches of the distinguished diplomatic guests and the Secretary of Commerce, Herbert Hoover, on international amity and good-will and the furtherance of our trade relations with the Central and South American Republics, there were those who expressed disappointment, that the original idea of the Naked Truth dinners seemed to have been lost in the larger importance of the function at the Astor.

Those who came to frivol remained to play, but they had to remain until 2 A. M. before the dancing started and even then there was no grand march, Mayor Jimmie Walker and Gilda Gray, scheduled to do the honors, having long since silently slipped away, when that time arrived. Major Edward Bowes and his Capitol Orchestra furnished most of the entertainment, after the speechmakings while the Naked Truth Films, by Rose Pelswick and Victor M. Shapiro, to which everyone had looked forward as the big item in the evening's entertainment and which were quite as clever and mirthsome as anticipated, were for some unexplained reason used to close the show.

As an international affair the dinner was unquestionably a big success, both from the viewpoint of the industry and of the diplomats whose radioed and published speeches will doubtless do much to bring about a better understanding between the respective countries represented. But it was the general opinion that formal affairs of this kind should be held under the auspices of the M. P. P. D. A. rather than the A. M. P. A. and next year this more than likely will be the case. Then no one will be disappointed.

Ring Lardner's wire, read by Toastmaster Will H. Hays, at the Astor last Saturday evening, was one of the bright spots in the program.

"Sorry can't be with you," telegraphed Ring from his home in Great Neck," but it's the children's night out and I must stay home to take care of the nurse."

Gerald K. Rudolph, veteran newspaperman and erstwhile publicity manager for Fox Films, where he gained much eminence and many new friends, goes to take editorial charge of Motion Picture Magazine, one of the leading film fan publications. With him will go the good wishes of many, who have come to know him since his association with the Fox organization and of all his legion of friends in his previous newspaper days. Under his direction Motion Picture Magazine will surely progress greatly.

Dan Doherty, who has been with Fox for the past two years, will succeed him as publicity manager under Vivian Moses.

Dick Weil, who purveys publicity for W. Ray Johnston of Rayart, often in his plus fours, has been disappearing these week-ends "without trace," and coming back Monday mornings with a somewhat guilty expression. It has just leaked out that Dick has possessed himself of a chicken farm down Long Island way, and spends his Saturdays and Sundays hunting eggs. Make a noise like an angry or jubilant hen, when you see Dick at the Astor these noontimes, and watch him jump.

Where David Wark Griffith is going to produce his next picture, and under whose auspices, has been a subject of speculation for some time. This week it is currently reported that he has made his decision and that an announcement may be speedily expected, which will settle the matter. This will be welcome news to all in the industry, for recent years have seen all too few productions from the hands of this master of screencraft, who has given the cinema so much that will endure, and whose name will be remembered when most of those whose reputations shine brightest today, will have long been forgotten.

Julius Singer was seen reading "Veracity," official organ of T. N. T. dinner at the Astor last Saturday night. When discovered, he alibied by saying that he thought it was a copy of a well known theatrical newspaper he was reading, having been misled by the headline across the first page, which was, "AMPA'S GALA DINNER, '27." He thought he'd got into the wrong place and was trying to locate the address of the dinner he had bought tickets for.

As the marshal of the A. M. P. A. ceremonies at the Astor last Saturday, John C. Flinn found the job to be the first sinecure he has held in many years. He had expected to lead Mayor Jimmie Walker and the lustrous Gilda Gray by the hand at the head of the widely advertised Grand March, but by the time the floor was cleared at two o'clock (the Naked Truth must be told) he found that his star attractions had walked out on him.

Next year the event possibly will be presented serially, by chapters as it were, with the dinner and speech-making on one Saturday night, the entertainment on the next, and the Grand March and the dance numbers the following week. In this way everybody will be sure then to get exactly what they want when they want it.

George Bradley, once of the Morning Telegraph but latterly of Hollywood, has started a new four page sheet called "The Tip-Off." At present its chief bid for notice is that it is another of the $10. a year publications which make this industry distinctive. Convenient to take on location to read during lunch-hour, if you use the Vitaphone attractions.

MORRIS GEST'S prediction, that one of these days some discerning millionaire or billionaire will encourage the production of artistic, but non-commercial motion pictures, by underwriting the costs of their making in the noble cause of art, will bring back to many a director poignant memories.

Checking back through the years recalls many photoplays which must have been made in just this way, for they surely possessed no box office appeal, nor any remote possibility of commercial success. In days ago every director, with an artistic urge and a desire to uplift the photodrama, seemed to be able to find a philanthropist willing to spend the money necessary to put into perishable cellu-loid the brain-children of the struggling young idealist.

Can the supply of these generous souls be already exhausted? Or has the cost of philanthropic effort in the domain of the film grown so great that only a Rockefeller or a Ford can afford to stand the gaff?

Whatever the reason may be for the present dearth of art-lovers, with bank rolls big enough to play the patron of the bigger, better movie, without an eye to the box office, it is a fair bet that Morris Gest will find one of them, if the genus is not completely extinct.

Ned E. Depinet's designation as general sales manager for First National will be a popular one, not only in his own organization, who to a man swear by him, but among hosts of exhibitors as well. He has a faculty for making friends wherever he goes and a reputation for making good on his promises that holds his friends after he makes them. Two qualities of prime importance for a sales manager, who wishes to enjoy exhibitor prestige and Ned has them both in the fullest measure. He ought to be a big success.

William Fox calls S. L. Rothafel the "Reinhardt of America." Great as the gifted German, doubtless is, however, he can hardly have a greater following than our own Roxy, nor can his artistic achievements be said to be vastly superior, if, indeed, any contrast can be made between them. The comparison therefore, in the opinion of many, will be esteemed rather more complimentary to Reinhardt than to Roxy.

A Trio Of Beloved Rogues

CLAIRE WINDSOR, who plays the beautiful garrison belle in the same cast, an M-G-M opus starring Jackie Coogan.

MARCELINE DAY, registering "sweet and old-fashioned" in M-G-M's "Captain Salvation."

PAULINE STARK also comes in for her share of honors in "Captain Salvation," an M-G-M picture.

JOAN CRAWFORD, who has to endure Lon Chaney's frowns in M-G-M's "The Unknown."

JOHN BARRYMORE looks as if he heard father coming in this patch from U-A's "The Beloved Rogue." Marceline Day is the sweet morsel.

NEIL HAMILTON and Olive Borden in a touching moment from "The Joy Girl," a Fox production.

LEW CODY has his hands full with a fainting Norma Shearer, in M-G-M's "The Demi-Bride."

Easter Approaches

GWEN LEE poses with an Easter bunny. Miss Lee has an important part in M-G-M's "His Brother from Brazil."

ESTHER RALSTON trying to avoid sunstroke and incidentally display the mode in Paramount's "Fashions for Women."

Form and Precision

OLIVE BORDEN trying to look like a polar bear. She is appearing in Fox's "The Joy Girl".

SATURDAY at the Universal studios. Laura LaPlante goes in for deep sea diving. This is the great bathtub scene from "The Love Thrill" her latest Universal-Jewel.

MARCELINE DAY, featured in "Captain Salvation", an M-G-M. picture, John S. Robertson, the director and Alice Day, Marceline's sister who came to visit sister at the M-G-M. studios.

ALMA RUBENS who is appearing in William Fox's "The Heart of Salome."

KITCHEN POLICE was Jackie Coogan's lot for disobeying director Edward Sedgwick on the sets of Jackie's latest for M-G-M, "The Bugle Call".

A Submerged Bathing Beauty

LOOT GIBSON telling Kathleen Key how well he can toss a lariat in "Hey! Hey! Cowboy" a Universal-Gibson production.

GERTRUDE OLMSTED as she appears in "Becky" which John McCarthy is directing for M-G-M.

Madonnas and Hula Girls in This Easter Basket

JOAN CRAWFORD is really not looking sour but bawling out Lon Chaney in "The Unknown".

ETHLYNE CLAIR, known to the screen world as Mrs. Newlywed, in an Hawaiian mood. She is now playing in support of Hoot Gibson in "The Prairie King," a forthcoming Universal-Jewel. But not in that costume!

AILEEN PRINGLE as "Joan" in M.-G.-M.'s "The Branding Iron", a story of the Swiss Alps.

BUCK JONES giving somebody a dirty look in Fox's "Whispering Sage".

EDWARD EVERETT HORTON with "Dad's Choice," a Hollywood Production released by Paramount.

GEORGE LEWIS making sure that nobody is looking in a scene from the first of Universal's new "Collegians" series. Dorothy Gulliver is the girl.

THE spirit of Eastertide is embodied in this camera study of Dolores Costello, Warner Brothers star, in which she characterizes the Madonna.

SEDUCTIVE Madge Belamy in Fox's "Ankles Preferred". She certainly was not miscast.

RAINBOW'S end for Norman Kerry and Clair Windsor, co-featured in "The Claw", a Universal-Jewel now in production.

New Kane Star Scheduled For "Dance Magic"

Adrienne Truex, who two months ago was standing in line in front of Hollywood casting offices hoping for a chance to play an extra role, has arrived in New York. Robert Kane, who is to put "Dance Magic," Clarence Buddington Kelland's recent serial, into production at the Cosmopolitan Studio early in April, is giving the beautiful brunette her first chance to feature in filmdom.

Undaunted by New York's characteristic March weather, Miss Truex declared herself tickled to death to trade the much balmy-hooded California climate for New York when a contract was involved.

Leland Hayward, production manager for Kane, met the fledgling film star. She is staying at the Biltmore.

"Dance Magic," which is to be made by Kane in conjunction with Victor and Edward Halperin, will feature Miss Truex with Ben Lyon and a supporting cast headed by Barbara Stanwick, Louis John Bartels and Joyce Collyer, another of Kane's recent "finds."

Billie Dove Gets New Assignment

Billie Dove is going to become a star a month sooner than she expected. Instead of her first starring vehicle being "The American Beauty," Miss Dove has just been tendered the stellar honors in the "Stolen Bride," which will also be Alexander Korda's first directorial effort since signing a First National contract over three months ago.

"The Stolen Bride" will go into production next week without Mary Astor, who was scheduled for a prominent part. We learn that Miss Astor, at the last moment, was loaned by First National to United Artists for a part of similar importance.

"The Big Parade" Passes Its 1000th Consecutive Showing

Check-Up "Third Longest Continuous Run" Record at the Astor Theatre, With $1,300,000 At the Box Office

"THE BIG PARADE" passed its 1,000th consecutive performance at the Astor Theatre, Saturday afternoon, April 2. With capacity audiences reported for each showing, this unusual photoplay will continue indefinitely.

Mix Company On Location

Tom Mix took a company of fifty-two actors, cowboys, cameramen and others to Victorville, Cal., last week. He will screen scenes for "The Circus Ace," his new starring picture for Fox Films.

The cast includes Natalie Joyce, Duke R. Lee, Jack Baston and James Bradbury, Jr. Ben Stoloff is directing from a scenario by Jack Jungmeyer.

"The Big Parade" now has the distinction of the third longest continuous run known to the American theatre. This Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production outstripped all other motion picture competitors last month and now is exceeded only by "Abie's Irish Rose" and "Lightnin'."

While these two dramatic productions have been shown for more continuous performances the attendance at the Astor continues at capacity, so that in all probability "The Big Parade" will be in second place before the close of the current engagement.

The most unusual fact about this engagement is that "The Big Parade" will have registered more gross business at the box office than either of its competitors before the end of the present season. At the present time the box office total for the seventy-one weeks at the Astor Theatre is a trifle over $1,300,000.

Not more than a score of plays were presented more than 600 times in the history of the American stage since the first small production on Cruger's Wharf one hundred and sixty years ago. In the short space of thirty-one years the screen has produced an artistic and commercial success of the calibre of "The Big Parade." It is a swift and interesting transition from the first showing of the Edison Vitascope in Koster and Bial's Music Hall in 1896 and the first feature picture in 1903, "The Great Train Robbery," to the epic production of "The Big Parade."

The long run movies in the order named are "The Big Parade," "Ten Commandments," "The Covered Wagon," "Ben-Hur," "Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East," "The Big Parade," which passes its 1,000th performance next Saturday was the first of the war pictures of which there are thirty now being shown or still in production.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer officials report that to date 1,110,234 New York theatregoers have seen "The Big Parade" at the Astor Theatre. During this run 38,576 persons have paid for the privilege of standing throughout the performance.

Philbin-Hersholt To Co-Star At "U"

Two of Universal's leading stars will be seen in a single colorful European picture soon to go into production at Universal City, according to an announcement just received from Carl Laemmle, president.

Mary Philbin and Jean Hersholt will share stellar honors in "Viennese Lovers." This will be Miss Philbin's first role since the completion of "Love Me and the World Is Mine" and will be Hersholt's first Universal role since he recently completed "Alias the Deacon" under Edward S. Selwyn's direction.

"Viennese Lovers" is the screen title given to "Cabaret," an original story by Adam H. Seltzer, which is laid in the Ringstrasse on Vienna. Universal acquired this story less than a week ago.

Niblo Returns To M-G-M Studio

Fred Niblo, who made "Ben-Hur," will return to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios after an absence of several months to direct "The Enemy," according to an announcement last week by Irving Thalberg.

"The Enemy," planned as a Lillian Gish vehicle following completion of "The Wind," in which Miss Gish is now working under Victor Seastrom's direction, is a picturization of Channing Pollock's stage success dealing with the "backstage" effects of the late war.

"Newsclaffs" On F.B.O. Program; Nolan Process

Joseph P. Kennedy, president of Film Booking Offices, announces that a series of 26 one-reel "Newsclaffs" has been added to F. B. O.'s array of short subject releases for the coming season.

The "Newsclaffs," travesties on the news events of day, will be made by "Bill" Nolan, creator of the Krazy Kat cartoons, and produced by a new cartoon photographic process on which Nolan has been working for the past year, and which has now been perfected.

Heretofore it has been necessary in photographing animated cartoons to either overlay the scenic background with transparent celluloids upon which the characters in action have been drawn, or lay celluloid backgrounds over paper upon which the characters in action have been drawn.

By the Nolan process, all overlaying is eliminated, the background and action being made composite by a mirror and prism arrangement. A patent for the process has been applied for.

"Beloved Rogue" Hats for Newsies

In the exploitation for John Barrymore in "The Beloved Rogue" by the Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles, effective cooperation was obtained from the Los Angeles Express, a thousand of whose newsboys wore attractive blue felt costume hats such as the star wears as Francois Villon in the production. Each had had imprinted on it in yellow process stencil the name of the theatre and the name of the United Artists Picture.

Another feature of the exploitation was a doll dressing contest conducted for girls by the Express.

Lillian Gish in M-G-M Picture

Victor Seastrom began direction last week on "The Wind," Lillian Gish's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, in which she is again supported by Lars Hanson, the Swedish actor who made his American debut opposite her in "The Scarlet Letter."

The new story is different from any romance in which Miss Gish has appeared.

Montagu Love will play the "heavy."

From London to Hollywood

George Carlin, of Warner's exploitation department, and not long ago one of the American correspondents in London, has written a play which received first honors in a recent competition; and it is proposed to give it a Broadway production. Its locale is London, New York and Hollywood.

Beery-Hatton Combination Tied Up Again In a Ripping Comedy

THE MOST FAMOUS comedy team in the history of motion pictures has been reunited. Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton will once more appear together in "Firemen, Save My Child." Announcement to this effect was made this week by B. P. Schulberg.

The circumstances which arose some four months ago and resulted in the separation of the team have now ceased to exist, Schulberg stated. To make the reunion complete the entire production line-up which scored so

Universal Announces Twelve "Supers" For 1927-28 Season

UNIVERSAL PICTURES CORPORATION, in announcing plans for 1927-28 production, costing $15,500,000, discloses a list of super-features of exceptional value at the box office.

The list of super-productions is headed by "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Universal's great adaptation of the famous book and play, which will reach the screen next fall as a $2,000,000 picture, that amount actually having been spent during the two years this super has been in production. It has a cast of 45 principals, in addition to thousands of extras. Harry Pollard directed.

Then, too, there will be "The Cat and the Canary," hailed as the screen's greatest mystery melodrama, directed by Paul Leni from John Willard's famous stage success, and starring Laura La Plante. This is Leni's first American-made picture. It is a revelation, according to all Universal sources.

A third Universal super for next fall will be "Les Miserables," the Universal Film de France production made from Victor Hugo's immortal story. It already has been tried out in many centers and has won great praise.

In "Big Guns," another of the supers, Universal has "The Big Parade" of the U. S. Navy. Irving Willat is directing it, from a story by Richard Barry. The U. S. Navy is cooperating. George Lewis is the star.

"Love Me and the World Is Mine," the next super listed by Universal, is a colorful Viennese romance from a well-known story by Hans Bartsch. A. E. Dupont, who made "Variety," is the director. Norman Kerry and Mary Philbin, co-stars of "Merry Go Round" and "The Phantom of the Opera," are the stars.

"Show Boat," adapted from Edna Ferber's best seller, also is on Universal's Super list for 1927-1928.

"The Man Who Laughs," Victor Hugo's great novel, will be screened as a Universal Super for next year. Conrad Veidt, noted German screen star, was especially engaged by Laemmle to play the principal role in this picture. Production will be started this summer. It is expected that Mary Philbin also will be in the film.

As another super, Universal will make a sequel to "The Cohens and Kellys," the big box-office picture of a season or so ago. It will be called "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris."

Universal's super-productions also will include four Reginald Denny Pictures, "Out All Night," "Painting the Town," "Good Morning, Judge," and "Watch My Speed." William Seiter and Fred Newmeyer probably will alternate in directing the new Denny pictures.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Big Parade" joined the exclusive group of America's record long runs when it played its 1000th performance last Saturday. Left: John Gilbert in a dugout. Center: An afternoon tea. Right: John Gilbert and Renee Adoree listen to some grave words.

Virginia Valli in "Flames," Pathe Feature Film

Virginia Valli, charming star of many successful screen vehicles is co-starred with Eugene O'Brien, in the new thrilling Pathe feature "Flames," produced and directed by Lewis H. Moomaw.

"Flames" is a melodrama of the Oregon timber lands, and is climaxed with one of the greatest forest fires in film history. In addition to producing this offering, Moomaw also personally supervised direction. The story and scenario were written by Alfred A. Cohn.

The cast is an elaborate one, with Miss Valli co-starring with Eugene O'Brien. The support includes Bryant Washburn, Jean Hersholt, Cissie Fitzgerald, George Nichols and Boris Karloff.

Olive Borden to Hollywood, Via Panama Canal

Olive Borden, charming Fox Films star who has been in New York and Florida for the past two months, has returned to the West Coast Studio. She has just completed the starring role in "The Joy Girl," under direction of Allan Dwan in New York.

Miss Borden, accompanied by her mother, maid and attendants, returned by steamship by way of the Panama Canal.

"Stark Love" Praised

"Stark Love," Karl Brown's Paramount production which depicts the life of the Southern mountaineer, has been selected by the National Board of Review for the Photoplay Guide, and has been recommended to the critique committee as an exceptional picture. The selections, according to the Board, were based on "the fine acting of native characters and the true picture of Southern mountaineer conditions."

Casting "Poor Nut"

Casting has been completed for "The Poor Nut," the Jess Smith production for First National Pictures. Jack Mulhall is featured with Charlie Murray and Jane Winton. Others in the cast include Jean Arthur, Glenn Tryon, Maurice Ryan, Henry Vibart, Cornelius Keefe. Richard Wallace is directing.

Record For P. D. C.

"Nobody's Widow," the sophisticated comedy-drama starring Leatrice Joy, broke the six-day house record at Wilmer and Vincent's State Theatre, Altoona, Pa.

Schenck Signs Brenon For U. A.; "Sorrell and Son" First Opus

HERBERT BRENON, director of "Peter Pan," "Beau Geste," and other distinguished pictures, last week signed a contract with Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors of United Artists Corporation, whereby he will henceforth produce and direct his films independently for release through United Artists.

Mr. Brenon's first independent production will be "Sorrell and Son," based on Warwick Deeping's current best-selling novel. Mr. Schenck has purchased the screen rights to "Sorrell and Son."

Mr. Brenon sailed for England last Saturday to meet Mr. Deeping in London and collaborate with him on the scenario for "Sorrell and Son," a practice which Mr. Brenon found eminently successful in bringing Sir James M. Barrie's plays to the screen.

Mr. Brenon said that some of the scenes of "Sorrell and Son" will be filmed in England, where the story is laid, and the remainder in the United Artists Studio in Hollywood, where Mr. Brenon will arrive about May 1, after his return from England.

Mr. Schenck, who arrived in New York from Palm Beach March 21, welcomed Mr. Brenon to United Artists in a brief statement in which he declared that the high purpose behind the formation of United Artists in 1919, by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith, was to provide free expression to the creative genius of such artists as Herbert Brenon.

"The man who made 'Peter Pan' and 'Beau Geste' for somebody else, will be able to do bigger and finer things with 'Sorrell and Son,' producing it himself," Mr. Schenck said.

Leni Print On The Way East

"The Cat and the Canary," the mystery melodrama made from the John Willard stage mystery as Paul Leni's first American picture, has been shipped East.

Laura La Plante is the star of the production, backed by an unusually strong cast numbering such popular players as Creighton Hale, Forrest Stanley, Tully Marshall, Gertrude Astor, Flora Finch, Arthur Edmund Carewe, Martha Mattox and George Siegmann.

Writers Busy

Ray Doyle and Edward T. Loew are working on original stories and adaptations of stories, for M-G-M as yet unannounced, but planned for production this year.

Edmund Burns and Blanche Mehaffy engaged in some intriguing eye-play in Tiffany's "The Princess From Hoboken."

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

—Best, by Your Verdict

In 1925 the Hugo Riesenfeld Gold Medal was established as an annual award for the outstanding Short Subject of the year. The selection was left entirely to a committee of exhibitors—a committee including some of the country's wisest showmen.

The first award was won by an Educational Picture, "The Voice of the Nightingale." The second award, for 1926, has just been made. This medal also goes to an Educational Picture, "The Vision," one of the beautiful Romance Productions in Technicolor. And every subject mentioned by a member of the committee as a candidate for the award was an Educational release.

By the showman's verdict—your verdict—Educational Pictures are the best short features you can play. And that is the verdict of 13,000 exhibitors who are playing them regularly.

Roxy Holds "Wolf's Clothing" Second Week At His Theatre

A NEW WORLD'S RECORD has been rung up by Warner Bros.' picture, "Wolf's Clothing," starring Monte Blue.

As the main feature on the screen at the Roxy Theatre it drew the largest week-end attendance ever recorded at a motion picture box-office, with the result in the picture being held a second week.

Roxy's showmanship in choosing this production as the second attraction for his film cathedral has been emphatically substantiated by the public's verdict of approval that demanded an extension of its run.

Its first Saturday and Sunday, "Wolf's Clothing" was viewed by 55,562 persons—or 5,000 more than came to the Roxy the first week-end the house was opened to the public. The drawing power of the picture continued to be remarkable throughout the week, the lines of customers daily taking their places before Roxy's six box-offices an hour and a half before the opening show started each morning.

The crowds flocking to see the Warner comedy drama necessitated S. L. Rothafel adjusting his policy to five de luxe shows instead of four.

"Wolf's Clothing," written by Arthur Somers Roche, was directed by Roy Del Ruth. It presents Monte Blue in a story of Broadway night life, supported by Patsy Ruth Miller and a cast including John Miljan, Douglas Gerrard and Lee Moran.

Monty Banks In "Horse Shoes," Merry Comedy

In "Horse Shoes," Monty Banks' newest feature comedy picture, to be released by Pathe on April 17, the popular comedy star is said to have surpassed the high standard of comedy production set for himself in "Atta Boy" and "Play Safe," his previous successes.

The story is an original, written by Monty Banks and Charles Horan. A corps of comedy constructionists have injected a wealth of laugh gags into the continuity. As a result, this feature comedy, while a riot of mirth, also contains a strong vein of good drama.

As leading lady there is winsome Jean Arthur, one of the cleverest comediennes on the screen. Ernie Wood, a former musical comedy favorite, who played a prominent role in Monty Banks' previous offering, "Atta Boy," is cast as "heavy." Agostino Borgato, who appeared for twelve years with Eleanora Duse, does some commendable character work. And Florence Lee, Ida Darling, Alfred Fisher, John Elliot, Henry Barrows and Bert Apling are seen.

Indian Campaign In McCoy Film

General Andrew Jackson's campaign against the Creek Indians has been chosen as the background of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer next historical Western starring Tim McCoy, according to announcement last week by Hunt Stromberg.

Reginald Barker will handle the megaphone on this picture, tentatively entitled "The Frontiersman."

M-G-M Picture Has New Title

"Body and Soul" has been selected as the definite title for Reginald Barker's new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, tentatively titled, "The Branding Iron."

This is a screen version of Katharine Newlin Burt's widely popular and intensely dramatic novel, "The Branding Iron."

Aileen Pringle, Lionel Barrymore, Norman Kerry and T. Roy Barnes are included in the cast.

Added to Cast

Marie Shotwell has been added to the cast of W. C. Fields' newest Paramount starring picture, now in production at the Long Island studio under the direction of Gregory La Cava. Others in the new Fields comedy are Mary Brian, Claud Buchanan, Barney Raskle, Frederick Burton and J. Roy Bennett.

One of the 16 ancient automobiles used in Paramount's "Casey at the Bat." In the car (?) are Ford Sterling and Zasu Pitts.

A. P. YOUNGER, author and scenarist, who wrote and scenarized "Slide, Kelly, Slide," the M.-G.-M. baseball epic, now playing at the New York Embassy.

Jules Levy's Sales Drive Going Over

Jules Levy's anniversary sales drive, commemorating the first year's service of Mr. Levy as manager of First National's New York exchange, is going over big, it is announced.

Thus far, according to Mr. Levy and his cohorts at the exchange in this city, exhibitors in the five boroughs have signed contracts which guarantee two or more showings per week during May of First National feature attractions. May has been set aside as the period during which Mr. Levy's anniversary is to be celebrated.

Plans Changed For Gilda Gray, Says Hornblow

Arthur Hornblow, Jr., production assistant to Samuel Goldwyn, arrived in New York City from Los Angeles last Thursday and spent the entire day in conference with Gilda Gray, newest Samuel Goldwyn star, and her husband-manager, Gil Boag.

As a result of the conference, Mr. Hornblow announced that "Marie Odile," the Belasco play, upon the screen rights of which Mr. Boag has an option, and in which it was originally announced Miss Gray would make her first appearance for Samuel Goldwyn in the role of a nun, will be deferred in favor of "Passionate Island," another story.

Mr. Hornblow described "Passionate Island" as "a transition from the public conception of Gilda Gray to the Gilda Gray which Samuel Goldwyn holds to be 'one of the screen's potentially great dramatic actresses.'"

Mr. Hornblow said that he had convinced Mr. Goldwyn, and the two of them had been able to convince Mr. Boag that such a picture as "Passionate Island" is a necessary transitional step in presenting to the public the many-sidedness of Gilda Gray's art.

Jack Lait Story

Dorothy Arzner, the first woman director ever employed by Paramount, is to handle the megaphone on "Ten Modern Commandments," Esther Ralston's next starring vehicle. Production is scheduled to start March 7. Miss Ralston has just completed "Fashions For Women," which was Miss Arzner's first assignment. "Ten Modern Commandments" was written by Jack Lait. The screen play comes from the pen of Robert N. Lee.

Tom Goes to Work

Tom J. Geraghty has been assigned to prepare the screen adaptation of Percival Christopher Wren's "Beau Sabreur," which James Cruze will direct for Paramount. "Beau Sabreur" is a story of the French Foreign Legion in North Africa and the sheik life of the Sahara. It brings back, as its principal characters, Hank and Buddy, who supplied comedy relief in "Beau Geste."

"Lark" Retitled

Mary Robert Rinehart's story, "The Lark," is coming to the screen as an F. B. O. production and will be called "The City of Shadows."

Exceptional Cast Designated For M-G-M Comedy

With a cast that includes one of the most famous stage comediennes in addition to a notable list of screen players, production has been started on "The Callahans and the Murphys," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's long-heralded filmization of Kathleen Norris' famous novel.

George Hill is directing, from a scenario by Frances Marion. The cast includes Sally O'Neil, Lawrence Grey, Marie Dressler, famous stage comedienne who launched Charlie Chaplin to fame in "Tillie's Punctured Romance," Gertrude Olmstead, Frank Currier, Polly Moran, Eddie Gribbon and Tom Lewis.

Vidor's "Crowd"

King Vidor's new production for M-G-M, "The Crowd" is an epic of everyday life, written by Vidor in collaboration with Harry Behn. Eleanor Boardman, James Murray and Bert Roach head the cast of this picture.

Chaney's "Unknown"

"The Unknown," a Lon Chaney starring film for M-G-M, is being directed by its author, Tod Browning, after a continuity by Waldemar Young. Joan Crawford and Norman Kerry are featured in the romantic leads. This film is said to provide Chaney with one of his most sensational roles, that of an armless circus freak.

Meet Eileen King!

Elinor King, chosen by Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F. B. O., to play in pictures, has changed her name to Eileen King. On the stage she was Goldie Flynn.

Mack Swain, surrounded by a bevy of beauties, takes his ease in the M-G-M studios. He thinks he's Solomon.

"Rookies" a "Laugh Sensation;" Patrons "Rolled Off the Seats"

"ROOKIES," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's latest comedy, directed by Sam Wood, is "a knock-out laugh panic," according to reports from a preview showing last week on the Coast.

J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel of M-G-M, now conferring with company officials at the studio, was one of the guests at the preview, and sent an enthusiastic wire to the eastern offices.

"Audience all but tore house down," was the telegraphic report from Joe Buell, manager of the Westlake Theatre. Buell praised the film as without question the funniest picture he had ever shown.

"Greatest comedy ever made. It panicked them and they rolled off their seats laughing. It's some picture, believe me," he asserted.

"Rookies" introduces a new comedy team to the screen in the persons of Karl Dane, the famous "Slim" of "The Big Parade," and George K. Arthur, who has played humorous parts in many M-G-M features in the past three years. The story is an original by Byron Morgan.

The cast includes Marceline Day, Tom O'Brien, Lincoln Stedman, Gene Stone, Frank Currier, Louise Lorraine, Charles Sullivan and E. H. Calvert.

Boylan Chosen To Title Fox's "The Joy Girl"

Malcolm Stuart Boylan, Fox Films title editor, will report to Allan Dwan in New York within the next few days. Boylan, who has titled more than thirty pictures for Fox, established a world reputation with his titles for "What Price Glory." He will title "The Joy Girl," Dwan's latest production starring Olive Borden. Later, he will take a vacation. Boylan will return to Los Angeles via the Panama Canal.

Johnny Hines to Start This Week On New Comedy

From the Hollywood Offices of C. C. Burr, comes the announcement that Johnny Hines' forthcoming First National Picture, "White Pants Willie," will go into production this week at the Tec Art Studio in Hollywood.

All preliminary work has been completed, the laugh sequences having been injected into this film version of Elmer Davis' well-known Liberty Magazine serial by such comedy constructionists as Peter Milne, Howard Green, Kerrie Clark, Horace Woodmansee and George Amy.

The offering is being produced under the personal supervision of C. C. Burr, with the direction in the hands of Charles Hines, assisted by Frank Crane and Paul Wilkins. The photography is in charge of Jim Diamond, with Al Wilson assisting.

Warner Bros. Retain Oland

Warner Oland, veteran character actor, will hereafter be seen exclusively in Warner Pictures. The Warner Bros. this week secured Oland's signature to a contract extending over a long period of time.

This contract was awarded the actor as a result of the splendid work he contributed to "Don Juan" and "When A Man Loves," both specials starring John Barrymore. This he supplemented with an outstanding piece of characterization in "A Million Bid," just completed with Dolores Costello in the star part.

Oland hereafter will play roles of featured importance, the first of which will be in Miss Costello's next vehicle.

Helene Costello, Warner player, believes in props for the proper occasion.

Raymond Hatton as an old-time press agent in Paramount's "Fashions For Women."

Madge Bellamy Signed As Fox Star Last Week

Madge Bellamy, who appears in "Ankles Preferred" at the Roxy Theatre next week, has signed a new long term contract to appear exclusively in Fox pictures, it was announced last week by W. R. Sheehan, vice president in charge of production for Fox Films. After free lancing for a few months, Miss Bellamy will resume work at once on the Fox lot in the title role of "Colleen," a breezy Irish comedy.

Including Miss Bellamy, all of the principals in "Colleen" except Sammy Cohen boast of Irish ancestry. Charles Morton, the son of Frank Morton, will play the leading male role opposite Miss Bellamy. Tom MacGuire appears as her father and J. Farrell MacDonald has an important Irish character role. Marjorie Beebe and Ted McNamara have comedy roles. Sammy Cohen was included as the son of a pawn broker to keep the "What Price Glory" comedy team of Cohen and McNamara intact.

Colman-Banky Plans

Arthur Hornblow, Jr., is in New York, conferring with playwrights and novelists regarding the Roland Colman-Vilma Banky story to follow "The Magic Flame," which Henry King is now making for Samuel Goldwyn at Culver City, and which United Artists will release.

This winsome lady is putting on Edward Everett Horton's sleeve band. The scene is from "Taxi Taxi" a Universal-Jewel.

May McAvoy is evidently having a hard time convincing Malcolm McGregor in "Matinee Ladies," a Warner production.

"Dearie" Will be Irene Rich's Next Picture For the Warners

"DEARIE" is announced as the title of the next story in which Irene Rich will star for Warner Bros. Anthony Coldey is now busy preparing the scenario and Archie Mayo, a recent acquisition to the Warner directorial staff, has been chosen to give megaphone instructions.

Before camera work starts on her next picture, Miss Rich will leave Hollywood for a brief vacation. The star is just completing her latest vehicle, "The Climbers," with a strong cast in the support. Forrest Stanley, Flobelle Fairbanks, Anders Randolph, Clyde Cook, Nigel Barrie, Martha Franklin and Max Barwin are a few of the box-office names included in it.

Another production unit at the Warner Studio has turned its efforts to the making of an exciting railroad melodrama, "The Black Diamond Express." Monte Blue is its star, with Edna Murphy playing opposite him and Claire McDowell, Myrtle Stedman, Carroll Nye and J. W. Johnson also appearing in the cast. The company has left for an extended stay in a remote corner of Mexico.

Dolores Costello's forthcoming picture, as yet untitled, is now in its third week of production. William Demarest, Douglas Gerard and Grace Gordon are recent additions to its cast.

Janet Gaynor to Florida; Later To Metropolis

Janet Gaynor, Fox Films featured player who has just completed "Sunrise" and "7th Heaven," two of the most pretentious pictures made in Hollywood in recent years, will leave Los Angeles for the East within the next few days.

Miss Gaynor, who is enjoying her first vacation in two years, will visit her old home in Florida.

Youngest Cast Enacts Picture

What is declared to be the youngest cast of experienced motion picture players in the film ferment portrays the principal roles in "The Whirlwind of Youth," Paramount's screen translation of A. Hamilton Gibb's "Soundings."

Lois Moran, the heroine, is not yet out of her 'teens. Donald Keith, who appears opposite her, has just passed the voting age. Vera Voronina, Paramount's beautiful new Russian player, is just past the one-score mark in years. Larry Kent, who also plays an important part, is about the same age as Keith.

Despite their youth, however, all four have had long experience before the camera, each having won the right to featured prominence in any cast in which they appear. Rowland V. Lee directed.

Loew Signs Jean Acker

Jean Acker, first wife of the late Rudolph Valentino, has been signed by Marcus Loew to open in his vaudeville theatres at the Brooklyn Orpheum, April 18. She will offer a sketch entitled "Smoke," by Guy Moyson.

Monte at Work

Monte Blue is at work on "The Black Diamond Express," his next starring vehicle for Warner Bros.

Marion Davies toiling in "Tillie The Toiler" a M-G-M picture.

Phil Rosen To Direct One Of Gotham's "12"

Phil Rosen has been signed by Gotham to direct the screen version of "The Woman Who Did Not Care," adapted by Marion Orth from the novel by Rida Johnson Young.

Sam Sax advises that he is going to "shoot the works" on this picture, scheduled to come as the climax to a series of twelve Gotham Productions to wind up the 1926-7 season.

Prison Ship In M.-G.-M. Picture

One of the most important sequences in "Captain Salvation," the sea story from the pen of Frederick William Wallace, now being filmed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, under the direction of John S. Robertson, shows a notorious convict ship in full operation. The floating prison depicts a varied assortment of 200 criminals bound for lonely exile out of England.

"Captain Salvation" is a Cosmopolitan Production, with Lars Hanson in the leading role. It will be presented here late in the spring.

Cortez Signed

Ricardo Cortez has been engaged for the leading male role in "Anna Karenina," in which Greta Garbo will make her starring debut for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Warner's Elated With Newest Star

May McAvoy's initial work as a Warner Bros. star lent special interest to the first screening of "Matinee Ladies," the master print of which was received at the company's New York office this week.

Following the preview the Warner executives in the east expressed enthusiasm over the excellent performance given by Miss McAvoy.

It is anticipated that the young actress will be one of the outstanding box-office personalities on the roster of Warner Bros. during the coming year and the production force has big plans for her future stories.

Her first vehicle, "Matinee Ladies," gives promise of unusual audience appeal. Directed by Byron Haskins from a story by Albert Howson and Sydney R. Buchman, the production features in Miss McAvoy's supporting cast Malcolm McGregor, Hedda Hopper, Cissy Fitzgerald, Richard Rucker and Margaret Seddon.

"Matinee Ladies" is listed for release by Warner on April 9th.

Columbia's "The Perfect Thirty" Announced For 1927-28 Season

ONE of the most pretentious statements to come from the producing end of the industry was issued by Columbia Pictures this week.

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, announces that for the season of 1927-28 this company will increase the number of its releases from twenty-four to thirty.

Mr. Brandt said: "Our new product will be known as 'The Perfect Thirty' and will transcend by far anything ever before attempted by Columbia. No expense will be spared to have the quality and entertainment value of the productions live up to the slogan 'perfect'.

"Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production, has options and has closed contracts on an unusual array of specially selected stories from the pens of popular authors and playwrights."

The first of these vehicles to be announced is "The Blood Ship" from the novel by Norman Springer. This is a story of the sea featuring Hobart Bosworth and will be directed by George Seitz from Fred Mynton's adaptation.

Because of the unprecedented success of "The Lone Wolf Returns" another novel by Louis Joseph Vance, "Alias the Lone Wolf," has been secured for a superspecial. It is the best story Vance has written around this lovable crook character.

The remainder of "The Perfect Thirty" include:

"The College Hero," adapted from a story by Willard Mack.

"By Whose Hand?" a powerful drama by Channing Pollock.

"Stage Kisses," a comedy with a Parisian flavor, adapted from a story by George Bronson Howard.

"Sally In Our Alley," a romantic comedy, replete with pathos and irresistible humor.

"The Sporting Age," from a story by Charles K. Tennant, a fast moving drama of men and women who take life lightly and spend money seriously.

"Beware of Blondes," an adaptation of Pierre Dumond's "peppy" story.

"Nothing to Wear," a story of crying women who keep their husbands busy buying clothes and yet have nothing to wear.

"Lady Raffles," a drama of diplomatic intrigue and adventure from a story by Alfred Henry Lewis will probably have Priscilla Dean as the star.

"The Way of the Strong," by Octavus Roy Cohen.

"That Certain Thing," a sex-appeal story with a well-known star.

"Virgin Lips," by Jack Lait, nationally known because of his newspaper stories and plays.

"Come Back to Aaron," a delightful inter-racial melange served up in a new style.

"Broadway Daddies," a surprisingly different story of present day Cinderellas and fairy "godfathers," by Grace Atkinson.

"A Woman's Way," by Thomas Buchanan, adapted from the stage success presented on Broadway.

"San Francisco," one of the greatest stories of society in conflict with the forces of the underworld ever brought to the screen.

"The Tigress," the drama of a woman who was as restless and as cruel as the tawny cat after whom she was named, adapted from an Alfred Henry Lewis story.

"After the Storm," a surging drama which will be given an elaborate production.

"Say It With Sables," by Dorothy Howell, the story of a gold-digger who was in a class by herself when it came to asking things from admirers.

"So this is Love," from story by Gertrude Atherton tells the story of a woman who gave nothing and demanded everything.

"Bridge" a story of the humor, tragedy, vices and virtue of the game that has taken the classes and the masses by storm.

"Golf Widows" by Henry Clayton Cooper a dramatic comedy tidbit of sporting husbands and their no less sporty wives.

"The Opening Night," from a story by Owen Davis, is a gripping romance with an occult twist that will mystify and entertain all types of audiences.

"My Wife's Relations," a comedy of marital complications with an all star cast.

"The Adventuress," by Frances Marion. A drama of a scheming woman who stopped at nothing so

Globe Theatre For "Camille" Premiere

The Globe Theatre, at Broadway and Forty-sixth street, New York City, has been leased by Joseph M. Schenck for the premiere of Norman Talmadge in "Camille," a First National release, to take place on Thursday evening, April 21.

Playing opposite the star is Gilbert Roland, the young Spanish actor, who plays the part of Armand. Fred Niblo directed. Others in the cast are Alee B. Francis, Helen Jerome Eddy, Lilyan Tashman, Rose Dione, Oscar Beregi, Harvey Clark, Albert Conti, Michael Visaroff, Evelyn Selbie and Etta Lee.

The Broadway run of "Camille" is in the nature of a pre-release, it was announced at the First National offices. The production will be generally distributed next fall.

Mix Returns

Tom Mix, Fox Films star, has returned from Palm Springs, where exterior scenes for "Outlaws of Red River" were filmed. Interior scenes are now being made by Director Lewis Seiler at the West Coast Studios.

Jean Steps Up

Jean Dupont, chief reader in the scenario department of F. B. O. for more than a year, has been promoted to a position as scenarist.

long as she gained her object.

"Forgotten Women," by Louella Parsons who has gained an imposing following of fan readers through her motion picture column.

"The Siren," a story of the witcheries of a girl who never knew a real emotion until she met a man who despised her.

"Modern Mothers" adapted from "Perils of Divorce" by Rachel Crothers.

"The Warning," adapted from a story by Edgar Rice Burroughs.

Besides Hobart Bosworth, Harry Cohn has contracted for the services of Bert Lytell, Betty Compson, Shirley Mason, Priscilla Dean, Eugene O'Brien, Helen Chadwick, Ralph Graves, Johnny Walker, William V. Mong, Malcolm McGregor, John Miljan, George Fawcett, Stanley Forrest, Ann Pennington and Eugenie Gilbert.

These players will be part of the superior casts selected for Columbia's forthcoming productions. Other stars with box-office following have been signed, and their names will be made public shortly.

Columbia, during the past season, had on its roster some of the best directors in the business. For the coming season the company has signed George B. Seitz, Frank Strayer and Ralph Ince, and negotiations are pending for the acquisition of several directors who have made surefire box-office successes.

Tiffany Adds Three More Exchanges

WITH the announcement that Tiffany Productions, Inc., has added three new exchanges to their nation-wide producing and distributing organization, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of the company, states that Tiffany now has a world-wide organization with Twenty-six exchanges in the key cities of the United States, four in Canada, seven in the United Kingdom and Berlin, Germany, Paris, France, and Havana, Cuba.

With every distributing center represented by a Tiffany exchange, Mr. Hoffman who is now in California, has made plans for the season of 1927-1928 for the production and the distribution of Twenty Gems From Tiffany with from three to six special productions intended for extended runs.

The titles announced for Tiffany's next year's schedule include: "The Grain of Dust," "Bachelor Apartments," "Grass Widows," "Their Hour," "Ladies of the Night Club," "Dixie," "Confessions of a Model," "Shanghai," "Beautiful But Dumb," "Pleasure," "Sex Appeal" (a farce), "The Albany Night Boat," "The Scarlet Dove," "Lingerie," "Tia Juana Rose," "Night Life," "Women's Wares," "Scandal," "The Girl from Gay Paree" and "The Adventuress."

Mr. Hoffman further announces in his plans for the coming year that the standard of quality maintained by his organization in his production of twenty gems this year and hailed by both exhibitors and public alike is in every way comparable with the best on the market and in many instances, better. For the coming year's output, no expense is to be spared by Tiffany to make each and every one of the pictures of the highest quality with casts of players known the world over for their histrionic ability and to be directed by men who have proven their worth in turning out pictures of entertainment and box office value.

A nation-wide advertising and exploitation campaign is to be inaugurated within a short time in the leading trade papers of the industry and in magazines and newspapers of national importance.

Sales Manager Ed. J. Smith is now engaged in perfecting one of the strongest sales organizations in the industry and is at the present time making a tour of all Tiffany exchanges holding conferences with exchange managers and field men, discussing and outlining the plans for the coming year.

BETWEEN THE THREE OF THEM THEY OUGHT TO GET A GOOD ONE—This famous group, Douglas Fairbanks, Kathleen Norris and Mary Pickford, are shown in consultation regarding Miss Pickford's next photoplay, which Mrs. Norris is now preparing for United Artists.

Albert Parker Will Direct Gloria Swanson's Second Opus

BECAUSE of the excellent directorial work which characterized the filming of "The Love of Sunya," her first independently-produced offering for United Artists, Gloria Swanson and her associates have re-signed Albert Parker to direct Gloria's second United Artists release, to be made in California.

Mr. Parker is with Gloria Swanson and her company in Hollywood. While en route to the Coast, production details of Miss Swanson's next release were discussed. No definite title has been selected, but it is known that the story is a dramatic one, and will give Miss Swanson wide scope for her manifold talents.

Parker's work in connection with the filming of "The Love of Sunya" has won unstinted praise from the press and public alike. He first attracted attention as the director of "Eyes of Youth," the Max Marcin play, with Clara Kimball Young as the star. He later directed Sherlock Holmes.

"His Son" Started

Lewis Stone will have the leading role in "His Son," the tentatitle title for the photoplay production.

Langdon's Next

Harry Langdon is to star in "The Yes Man," following completion of "Long Pants," an early First National release.

Albert Parker

starring John Barrymore for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and his next big assignment was the direction of "The Black Pirate"; Douglas Fairbanks' picture for United Artists.

Miss Sebastian Cast

Dorothy Sebastian will play opposite Tim McCoy in "California," his third M-G-M starring vehicle.

Clawson's Work

Elliott Clawson has completed the scenario of "The Branding Iron," and will contribute more scenarios for this year's M-G-M schedule.

Abdullah's Titles F. P.-L.'s "Chang"

Achmed Abdullah, novelist and short story writer, has been engaged by Jesse L. Lasky to write the titles for "Chang," the sensational motion picture of jungle life produced by Major Merian C. Cooper and Ernest B. Schoedsack, who spent a year and nine months in the remote interior of Siam making the film.

"Chang," described by Paramount as one of the finest things yet recorded by the cinema, is scheduled for an early opening in one of the Broadway theatres, where it will have a lengthy run.

Mr. Abdullah, who has written many colorful adventure tales of Oriental life, is regarded as an authority upon jungle life. He is a Mohamedan, although he has spent most of his life in Europe and America.

The motif theme of "Chang" is the elemental conflict between man and the fierce beasts of the jungle.

Columbia Aids Exhibitors By Ad Co-operation

An interesting example of the sort of cooperation given by Columbia's franchise holders and exchanges to the theaters playing the company's pictures, is offered by a half-page advertisement of "Stolen Pleasures" which appeared in the Denver Rocky Mountain News of March 6.

Most motion picture houses content themselves with taking a number of lines to herald their attractions. The America, Denver's most popular first-run theater devoted to screen entertainment, arranged with J. T. Sheffield, of the Denver Columbia Exchanges, to join resources, and a smashing display was the result.

The half page ad was equally divided, one half being used by the theater to play up "Stolen Pleasures" while the other half listed Columbia's "big 24" and several well known authors responsible for some of this season's product.

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, and an old advertising man, knows better than most the effect of large space advertising on the public consciousness. His plans for the coming year embody not only large space in the trade papers and fan magazines, but also in the regionals and newspapers, the latter to be placed through the exchanges, which will be authorized to handle such advertising locally.

Rex, Equine Star, In "No Man's Law"

"No man's Law," the new Hal Roach feature starring Rex, the wild horse, which Pathe will release on May 1, unfolds a most dramatic story of happenings in Death Valley.

Barbara Kent heads the human cast, with Theodore Von Eltz, James Finlayson and Oliver Hardy in support. Fred Wood Jackson, famous for his guiding of Rex in "The Devil Horse" and his other Pathe features, again held the megaphone for "No Man's Law."

Don Hancock, In Brooklyn, Talks On "Joke" Stuff

Don Hancock, Editor of Topics of the Day, is obtaining national publicity for this Pathe subject through lectures in and around New York City.

Recently he talked before the Kiwanis Club of Brooklyn at the St. George Hotel on "Joke-smithing."

The Brooklyn Sunday Eagle carried a full page story, "Do Humorists Ever Smile," founded on an interview with Mr. Hancock. The article went into detail regarding the editorial work in connection with getting out "Topics of the Day" and Mr. Hancock traced the history of jokes down through the ages.

Among the noted humorists referred to in the story is Will Rogers, now a Pathe star in the series "Will Rogers, Our Unofficial Ambassador Abroad."

St. John's Comedy

Clem Beauchamp, who has developed into one of the outstanding comedy favorites at Educational Studios this season, assists Al St. John in the laugh-making in "Jungle Heat," the new Mermaid Comedy.

Burns' New Lead

Edna Marion has been chosen as leading lady for Neal Burns in the next Educational-Christie Comedy in which he will be featured.

The Week's Rumor

Sorry to repeat a rumor—in this business there ought to be a fresher one—but this week's whispered contribution to the hectic scheme of things is that the M-G-M-United Artists merger is definitely "off" because of opposition by Mary and Doug. We hope next week not to have to say it's reported "on again."

Harry Langdon Feature Comedy, "His First Flame," Ready May 7

Mack Sennett Explains Great Popularity of Moon-Faced Fun-Maker, As Pathe Star; Two-Reel Start

Snookums is vacation-bound, following the completion of the first series of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedies by the Stern Brothers, to be Universal Junior Jewel releases, next season.

Water Scenes

Water from ten lines of fire hose kept one stage of the Christie Studios almost constantly under water for several days during the production of "Dumb Belles," the new Educational-Billy Dooley Comedy starring the "goofy gob" comic.

Pathe Lists "Our Gang" Comedy On Program For Week, April 17

"LOVE MY DOG," a new "Our Gang" comedy from the Hal Roach Studios, and "Cured in the Excitement," featuring Madeline Hurlock and Billy Bevan, a Mack Sennett film, both two-reel comedies, head the short feature program for the week of April 17th.

"Melting Millions," the current Pathe serial, reaches its second chapter and the program is further supplemented by "Anti-Fat," an Aesop Film Fable; Pathe Review No. 16; "The Agile Age," a Grantland Rice Sportlight; Topics of the Day No. 16, and two issues of Pathe News, Nos. 34 and 35.

"The Agile Age" as portrayed by Grantland Rice Sportlight reel, is the age of youth, and in this

HARRY LANGDON'S feature comedy, "His First Flame," is announced for May 7 release by Pathe. The droll little comedian plays a fire-fighter in this feature and "His First Flame" has a double meaning, for not only is he called upon to fight a fire—but he meets his first sweetheart.

The moon-faced comedian heads a cast of players who have been closely associated with him in his two-reel Pathe comedies. Ruth Hiatt and Natalie Kingston have the feminine leads and Vernon Dent has the role of Harry's uncle; others in the cast include Bud Jamieson and Dot Farley. Harry Edwards directed, from a story by Frank Capra and Arthur Ripley.

Mack Sennett promises that "His First Flame" will be one of the strongest comedy features ever produced by him, even including the popular "Mickey" and "Molly O," both of which added laurels to his genius as a producer.

Discussing the elevation of Langdon to feature length laugh vehicles, Sennett stated: "I realized from the outset that in Harry Langdon were greater possibilities than in any other artist with whom I had previously worked. I felt that, with one of his marvelous versatility, it would not require years of painstaking effort before he could be presented in feature-length stories.

"Almost from the very beginning of his picture career I have been asked to present Langdon in longer pictures, and it might have taken place sooner if Harry had not suggested that he continue in two-reelers, until he felt more certain of himself, a certainty which he knew would only come with plenty of camera experience.

"Mr. Langdon is not only an artist whose full value is as yet to be realized, but he is also an author of no mean ability. His is unquestionably one of the keenest minds I have ever encountered. For subtle plotting of genuine humor, he could be pitted against the best writers and gag men in the business today."

Miss Gulliver's Western Roles For Universal

Dorothy Gulliver, the winsome little brunette remembered for her outstanding work in Universal's "Collegians" series of two-reel comedies, has cast aside her campus togs for the more mannish attire of a rough-riding cow-girl and will be seen in the feminine lead opposite Fred Humes in a series of western films for Universal under the direction of Edgar Lewis.

In her previous role of a modern college co-ed she was gliding about in a luxurious little roadster, but in preparation for her latest part in "One Glorious Scrap," she has been seen astride a high-spirited mount taking her daily dozen along the Beverly Hills bridle path.

Oriental in Comedy

Anna May Wong and K. So-jin, two of the best known Oriental players in pictures, add an unusual flavor to "Hon. Mr. Buggs," a new Hal Roach Star Pathe comedy.

Great Star Cast

Ethel Clayton, popular favorite, who has grown up with the cinema, is prominently cast in "The Princess on Broadway," a new Pathe feature, starring Pauline Garon.

Emma Dunn in a Barrie Film

Emma Dunn, well known actress of the stage and screen, has been cast for a prominent role in "Quality Street," Marion Davies' new starring vehicle adapted from Sir James Barrie's famous play, which Sidney Franklin will direct.

Mrs. Dunn's outstanding stage triumph was "Old Lady 31." She also starred in a screen version of this play. Conrad Nagel will play the leading masculine role in "Quality Street."

1917 War Shots In International News Release

Ten years ago, on April 6, 1917, President Woodrow Wilson signed the declaration of war against Imperial Germany. Commemorating this event, International Newsreel released April 2 a special as part of the current news reel, showing the stirring, thrilling scenes of that momentous occasion, and of the ones that followed.

Although it was only a decade ago, the motion picture industry was then truly in its infancy. International Newsreel even then was several years old, and was one of the very few motion picture concerns in a position to properly record these historical events.

The picture opens with the signing of the Declaration of War. It shows Major General John J. Pershing, fresh from his Mexican adventures, being chosen to lead America's forces "over there." There are scenes of the drafting of America's man power, with Secretary of War Baker drawing the first number—258

Diana Comes East!

Diana Kane, the charming sister of Lois Wilson, is leaving Hollywood this week and will do a picture in the East before returning to the Coast.

Jap. Earthquake "Shots" Hurried Here to Pathe

Pathe News scored a beat in the news field by showing motion pictures of the latest Japanese earthquake throughout the United States just a little more than a week after the occurrence of this calamity many thousands of miles away. Broadway audiences saw these scenes at the early shows last Wednesday evening and Chicago audiences saw them at the opening performances Wednesday.

In this disaster the papers reported 3,300 people killed and 7,000 injured. At Mineyama, alone, 1,500 lost their lives. The Pathe News man was in the immediate vicinity of the turmoil and rushed to the scene, ground his camera, and shortly after placed the films aboard a Pacific liner leaving Yokohama for Seattle.

These first Japanese earthquake negatives arrived at the Pathe laboratory in Seattle where they were quickly developed, and a few hours later positive prints were rushed to Los Angeles, San Francisco and eastern cities.

Spring and Depinet Return

Following a very successful business trip to key cities in the Midwest, Samuel Spring, secretary-treasurer of First National Pictures, and Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager, have returned to the home office. In Omaha, they assisted at the formal opening of Abe's Blank's Riviera Theatre, and were likewise guests of honor at a luncheon given by the Omaha Chamber of Commerce.

"Poodles" Hanneford Noted Circus Star With Educational

"POODLES" HANNEFORD, famous circus bareback rider and clown, who is being featured in several new Educational-Mermaid Comedies, is already well known to motion picture comedy fans. He made a series of four Tuxedo Comedies for Educational several years ago that scored an instant hit. He appeared first in "Front" and then in "No Loafing." In "No Loafing," he did some of the cleverest pantomime to be seen on the comedy screen, as a piano mover. In "The New Sheriff," his third comedy, he went into the wild and woolly West and attempted to play cowboy and, of course, performed several of his daring riding stunts. He concluded this series with "The Bonehead," a typical circus picture, in which he duplicated many of the feats for which he was famous in circuses.

Hanneford has completed his first Mermaid, "Circus Capers," under his new contract with Educational. In this comedy, the circus funster is pictured as a roustabout in a circus, and executes many daring horseback tricks. Educational has surrounded him with a splendid supporting cast, and the entire production was supervised by Jack White, veteran fast-action comedy director.

He will soon appear in New York in "The Circus Princess," a spectacular musical production.

The circus star has been practically brought up under the "Big Top." He has been appearing as a featured member of the Hanneford Family in many circuses for years. This act was featured for one whole season by Sells-Floto's circus.

"Poodles" Hanneford in "Circus Capers," which will be released by Educational; Glen Cavender is the man in the net.

Stern Bros. Have Five Comedies For the Showmen This Month

THE STERN BROTHERS, through Universal, announce the release of five strong two-reel comedies this month. They include a Buster Brown Comedy, a two-reeler of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" series, a new "What Happened to Jane" Comedy, a "Let George Do It" Comedy and a new "Excuse Maker" two-reeler. These comedies present popular Stern Brothers stars and were made by directors of national prominence.

The Buster Brown Comedy, released as a Universal Junior Jewel, which indicates the high entertainment value for which it is rated by the Universal sales force, is "Lookout Buster." It was directed by Gus Meins, with the famous Buster Brown trio, Arthur Trimble as Buster, Doren Turner as Mary Jane and Pete, the dog comedian, as Tige. The comedy reached the screens April 4th.

Of the regular Stern Brothers

Comedy release, the first to reach the screen this month was "Fishing Snookums," a new "Newlywed" Comedy, released April 6th. Sunny McKeen, the remarkable baby, as Snookums, Sid Saylor as Mr. Newlywed, and Ethlyne Clair as Mrs. Newlywed, are the featured players.

"She's My Cousin," the "Excuse Maker" Comedy for release April 13th, stars Charles King, supported by Constance Darling, Roli Roxi and Al Ford. It was directed by Francis Corby.

"Jane's Hubby" is the next Stern Brothers release, due April 20th. It co-features Thelma Daniels and Charles King, with Max Asher in a supporting role. Scott Pembroke directed.

The final Stern Brothers release for the month, scheduled for April 27th, will be "George Leaves Home," a new "Let George Do It" Comedy, starring Sid Saylor, and directed by Francis Corby.

An Irishman's Jewish Films

An Irish director making a series of Jewish comedies is the latest development at the rapid-fire Hal Roach Studios, where things have a habit of happening.

Leo McCarey, a true-blue son of old Erin, is poring over Hebraic folklore and historical data, to give to the world a series of real laugh-makers featuring Max Davidson, the diminutive character actor.

Work has now been started by McCarey on his third offering, as yet untitled, in which Davidson is supported by a notable cast, including Martha Sleeper, Jesse Devorska, Spec O'Donnell, James Finlayson and Lillian Elliott.

Marion Nixon, Universal star, now playing in "The Chinese Parrot."

Maria Corda protesting in William Fox's "Madame Wants No Children."

Chandlee Gorilla Titling

Harry Chandlee, whose clever titles were a feature of The Gorilla Hunt, is editing and titling the film record of the Sterling New Guinea Expedition, which, under the auspices of the National Museum and, with the collaboration of the Dutch Government, spent ten months in unexplored New Guinea jungles, where they found a hitherto unknown race of pygmies.

Technician of Titles

William Park, talented titler of the Pathe Review and News, has joined the staff of Emanuel Cohen, editor of Paramount News.

Horton Completes "King of Spades"

Edward Everett Horton this week finished "The King of Spades," as the second in a series of two-reel comedies in which he is being starred by Hollywood Productions for release by Paramount.

The story is set in a Western locale, involving several of the biggest sets ever constructed at the Metropolitan studio.

J. A. Howe, who directed the first Horton, "Dad's Choice," handled the megaphone on "The King of Spades."

All-Comedy Is Success, Due To Garfinkle

Harold Garfinkle, energetic manager of the Midwood Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., formerly a Publix Theatre man, realized the value of the All-Comedy Circus programs, and recently ran one with complete success.

In addition to a feature, the bill included three Pathe subjects, an "Our Gang" comedy "Telling Whoppers," an Aesop Film Fable, "Taking the Air," and a current issue of Pathe News.

The Our Gang rascals are big favorites of the juvenile as well as the adult audiences of the Midwood, so the theatre management concentrated its exploitation on the "Telling Whoppers" comedy.

The theatre in newspaper and house program advertising played up the "gang" fun-film, and also featured it in a trailer, which was run three weeks in advance.

In Cutting Room

Donald Crisp, who is directing Leatrice Joy's current starring picture, "Vanity," has moved his base of operations from the set to the cutting room. Charles Ray and Alan Hale play the featured supporting roles.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"A Dozen Socks"

Pathe—Two Reels

In this issue of the series of Mack Sennett Comedies starring Alice Day, she is shown as very much in love with a champion prizefighter, played by Danny O'Shea, pictured here, who kids her along. One of his assistants is in love with Alice and takes all sorts of punishment in the ring for her sake. Marjorie Zier is cast as the girl that the champ favors, and who snubs poor Alice, but Alice, of course, wins out in the end, getting the man she wants. It is a good number of the series and should prove amusing to the Alice Day fans and the public in general. Early Rodney directed, and Barney Hellum appears as the fighter's assistant. There are a number of good gags in this two-reeler.

"Roped In"

Educational—Two Reels

Theory versus experience when it comes to wrestling, furnishes the idea behind this Al St. John comedy with theory getting all of the lucky breaks and winnings out in the end. The result is an amusing slapstick comedy with a lot of gags that should be good for laughs. Al appears as the author of a book on wrestling and the girl's father for publicity purposes arranges for him to fight a regular wrestler, excellently portrayed by Bull Montana, who of course looks the part. Al is getting the worst of it when with the aid of his assistants and a couple of lucky accidents he manages to win both the bout and the girl.

"The Rival Sex"

Pathe—One Reel

PRESENTING THE WORLD of sport from still another angle, Grantland Rice in this Spotlight takes up the so-called weaker sex and shows what women are doing in all lines of sport and how in many they are giving the men a hard run for supremacy. Among these are hockey, golf, archery, field day events and rowing. Several of the leaders in the different fields are shown. It is well up to the standard of this interesting series and should appeal to the fans in particular and the public in general.

"Pete's Pow Wow"

Bray—One Reel

IN this Hot Dog cartoon Walter Lantz appears as a boob prize fighter with Pete the Pup as the manager. Walter is pictured as being so dumb that finally Pete has to go in and fight the other pugilist and he does so well that he, Pete becomes the new champion. It is a clever and amusing number, well up to the standard of the previous numbers in this series.

"Jane's Hubby"

Universal—Two Reels

In this number of the "What Happened to Jane" series Jane is shown as having married without her father's consent, and as a result, her husband, played by Charles King, pictured here, has to resort to a disguise to be near her. This results in amusing complications and on the whole the offering averages up to the others in this series. Charlie uses the disguise of a colored maid and gets a job in Jane's home, of course Dad catches them making love. A black hand letter complicates the rumpus already started as an imprint of Charlie's hand is seen by Dad on Jane's back. The final outcome of the series of mix-ups is that the whole bunch land in jail.

"Here Comes Precious"

Educational—Two Reels

The familiar angle of rivalry between two chaps for a girl's love serves as the basis for the Jimmie Adams comedy, but it has been snappily handled with several sure-fire and a number of new gags so that it affords peppy and amusing entertainment. The idea hinges on the decision of the girl to marry Jimmie if he shows up at a certain hour. Of course the rival, played by Eddie Baker, does everything he can to keep Jimmie away even adopting a disguise and pulling the bolshevik stuff. This results in some especially good gags in a scene where a parrot, electric light globes and a gaspipe all combine to make Jimmie think he is being trailed by gangsters. Of course he wins out in the end.

"Below the Equator"

Fox—One Reel

RIO De Janeiro, the Brazilian metropolis is shown in this issue of Fox Variety to be not only a thoroughly modern city in every respect, but a veritable fairyland when it comes to scenic beauty. The towering mountains and hills in and around the city offer vistas of unusual magnificence. In fact this is a regular dream city that is unique among the world capitals.

"The Speed Hound"

Bray—Two Reels

Here is one of the second series of Bray Comedies featuring Lew Sargent, which is now being released under the general title "Fiz-zical Culture Comedies." It is a fairly peppy and amusing number dealing with the rivalry between hero and villain in scholastic events. Henry Rocquomore does good work in an important role as Lew's father. The action revolves around a running race in which the girl accidentally shoots Lew with an arrow which causes him to win. This gag is repeated later when she deliberately shoots him during the big race. An initiation allows for the introduction of other gags in which Lew has to dress as a girl and do other amusing things.

"Cash and Carry"

Educational—Two Reels

This amusing Christie Comedy might be aptly called "Fun in a Department Store," for the laughs are built up around the rivalry in business in love between Neal Burns, pictured here, who is the hero, Bill Irving the villainous floor walker and Edna Marian cast as a pretty clerk. There are a number of good gags, the action moves at a snappy pace and it should prove a pleasing offering for the majority of audiences. The main idea of the comedy is the fact that Neal needs a dress suit to attend the store dance and no matter what ingenious scheme he used the floor-walker manages to checkmate him. This results in several good gags including an especially good one where Neal swipes the clothes from a dummy and when caught poses as the dummy.

"Smith's New Home"

Pathe—Two Reels

Raymond McKee, pictured here, who appears in the role of Smith, Ruth Hiatt as his wife and little Mary Ann Jackson as their mischievous little daughter, in this issue of Mack Sennett Smith Family series, have so much trouble with landlords that they buy a new home and, of course, everything that the skill of experienced directors and gag men can devise happens to them. Much of the material is familiar but some of it is new, and it is all amusing, with plenty of slapstick and situations. There is the inevitable rain and the wrecking of the place from the flooding of the attic, and, of course, little Mary Ann Jackson contributes largely to the fun.

"The Courage of Collins"

Universal—Two Reels

Edmund Cobb appears in his familiar role as a member of the Northwest Mounted Police in this Universal Western with Helen Foster in the role of a girl who with her little brother are orphans. The melodramatic complications are of the usual type in stories of this kind and the subject proves of average entertainment value for those who like Northwestern stories. The action deals with the attempt of claim jumpers to get hold of the girl's claim, and Cobb disguises as a stranger and finally after considerable action including a snappy fight, manages to trap the gang and of course wins the girl.

"Odd Jobs"

Educational—One Reel

WALTER Futter, in this issue of his "Curiosities" has assembled a wide variety of scenes showing the unusual occupations and the hazardous ones in which men make their livelihood, and it proves an interesting and instructive reel. He pictures the occupations of an aviator, a deep-sea diver, an engineer, a coal miner, a fireman, bridge painter, human spider, a waiter who rides a bike with a tray of food on his head, a totem pole carver and trick bike rider and elevator operator in the Washington monument.

NOTES ABOUT WIDE-AWAKE EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGE MEN FROM ALL POINTS

New York

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Albany, N. Y., Apr. 7.*

THERE never has been a Lenten business in Albany's motion picture theatres that has measured up to the present one. Practically every theatre in the city is running ahead of a year ago and at the Mark Ritz last week the combination of the Vitaphone and "It" established a new house record. In Troy, business also was running exceptionally good, but in Schenectady it is said that Lenten effects are making themselves felt to a considerable extent.

Comings and goings of the past week include Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Stanley houses in Albany and Troy, journeying down to Philadelphia. Alex Sayles of the Leland was in New York City, and so was Jake Golden of the Griswold in Troy. Sam Eckman of the Metro-Goldwyn forces, was up from New York. Julius Byck was along Film Row from Tannersville, and so was Mrs. Dennis Regan of Greenwich. Ed Urschel and Bernard Goetz of the local Pathe exchange were in New York City on Sunday.

At the Happy Hour in Schenectady, which is now run by Frank Shay and John J. Curry, there have been some improvements that have resulted in far better projection than in the past. The new owners have installed a projection machine as well as a new screen and are now advertising "The brightest pictures in the city." Morris Silverman, who formerly owned the theatre, but who has two other houses, has just redecorated the Pearl.

Although the local Pro-Dis-Co exchange dropped into third place last week in the national sales contest, Alec Herman, local manager, is far from disheartened, and his sales force is now working seven days to the week in an effort not only to get back into second place but to lead the entire country.

Ed Hayes was all smiles last week by reason of the fact that the local Pathe exchange had received a 100 per cent. rating from the Film Board of Trade as the result of a recent fire inspection. Andrew Bustonably, of New York, inspector booker, was at the Pathe branch last week.

There was one exchange manager on Film Row in Albany last week who was all smiles. That person was Harry Weinberg, manager of the F. B. O. exchange, who opened his mail one morning and found a fat bonus check inside.

The Wedgeway, which formerly sheltered Proctor's in Schenectady, has now been taken over by the Farash company, but its policy has not yet been definitely decided. At the State Theatre, which is next door, it is planned to resume presentation acts after Easter, and to use these well into the summer. Meanwhile the Albany theatre will remain closed. The Farash lease on the Van-Curler expires on September 1.

Frankfort

George Loomis, who owns the theatre in Frankfort, was in town during the past week. Mr. Loomis admits that he doesn't make many trips to Albany for, between working daytimes at the typewriter works and running the theatres nights, he has no time for a trip to Albany and a visit to Film Row.

Chestertown

Dr. Swan, who runs the Plaza at Chestertown three nights a week, has decided to reduce admission prices from 50 to 30 cents. Lewis Benton, of Ballston, a well-known exhibitor, is seriously ill.

Roach Sighs For Hat Tho It Wasn't So High

James Roach, general manager of the Farash Theatres in Schenectady, N. Y., is now sporting a light gray fedora that cost in the neighborhood of ten dollars, while the advance man for George White's Scandals is working somewhere in the United States, and probably still wearing Mr. Roach's five dollar dicer. The exchange occurred the other night when the advance man hurriedly left Mr. Roach's office to catch a midnight train and grabbed the first hat that came to his attention.

Schenectady

Claude Fish, of Schenectady, who belongs to about every organization under the sun, is now praying that the next national Shrine convention will be held in San Francisco. You see, it's this way. Mr. Fish will be the delegate from the Schenectady fez-wearers and naturally he doesn't want to see the convention slated for Troy or some place nearby. Mr. Fish, meanwhile, is considering the erection of a new marquee and sign at his theatre.

Utica

Utica news notes include the fact that W. H. Linton and son will observe their first anniversary at the Olympic during the week of May 14, and a bill replete with features will be given. It will be remembered that Mr. Linton built a theatre in Utica two or three years ago that was to become a monument to his life's work, and that the house burned down after being open less than two weeks. Undaunted, Mr. Linton, who is about 60 years of age, sought the capital that brought about the present theatre.

Luzerne

A new theatre is to be erected in Luzerne. Dayton LaPoint is using vaudeville along with his pictures one night a week in Chatham. Mrs. G. Harry Brown is running a theatre at Old Forge. Jack Krause, local manager for Tiffany, has been given added territory and will now include Rome, Oneida and Canastota. The Empire, in Glens Falls, is now playing stock. O. R. Reiffel, local film salesman, has a new car.

Convene in St. Paul

The annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the Northwest will be held in St. Paul instead of Minneapolis this year, if a recommendation of the executive committee materializes. The dates will be May 3, 4 and 5.

Ohio

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Cincinnati, Ohio, Apr. 7.*

FIRE, believed to have been the result of defective wiring, caused damage of considerable proportions at the Ohio Theatre, Cleveland. The blaze, however, was confined to the locker room.

Dr. I. Brody, executive head of a chain of theatres, Cleveland, has appointed John Price general manager of the Kinman, New Broadway and Imperial.

Castro Theatre, owned by Mike Shea, and managed by Paul Mueller, Ashtabula, has closed temporarily. Rumor has it that the house will remain dark until fall.

Akron

H. H. Fieber and Maurice A. Shea are interested in the building of a new house at Akron, Ohio, for the Loew interests.

Toledo

Joseph Perlstein, manager, Keith's, Toledo, is authority for the statement that the Keith-Albee organization will build a $1,000,000 theatre in that city.

Mansfield

The Opera House, Mansfield, Ohio, has inaugurated a "bargain hour" in admissions from 1:30 to 2:30 p. m., when the scale is lowered to ten cents for all parts of the house.

The Pythian Building, Mansfield, for which negotiations have been pending for more than two years, will now be built, according to an announcement recently made. Jake Greenbaum, erstwhile manager of the Opera House and Majestic Theatre in that city, is to have charge of the theatre, which will be one of the outstanding features of the building.

Dayton

Victory Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, legitimate house, of which Elmer Reidell is manager, is playing a week's engagement of "The Big Parade."

Dayton theatres enjoyed increased attendance as a result of showing moving pictures of Main street, which were contrasted on the screens with "stills" of buildings occupying the same sites several year ago.

Manager Levy of the Forest Theatre, a suburban house, Cincinnati, is elated over the fact that through the efforts of a local society of artists, the picture, "The Last Laugh," was recently given a special showing at his house. Strange as it may seem, this picture has never been shown at any of the first-run downtown houses. In fact, the only time it has ever been exhibited in Cincinnati was about a year ago at the Orpheum, likewise a neighborhood house.

FFIFTH Anniversary Week was celebrated late in March at the Golden Gate Theatre with a special bill. Anniversary week is always made a gala event at the Golden Gate Theatre under the direction of Manager Clifford Work.

S. F. Doyle, one of the leading moving picture exhibitors of Australia, was a recent arrival at San Francisco on the liner Ventura. While he took occasion to explain that moving picture censorship as worked out in Australia is proving very satisfactory. It applies only to moral standards, sectarian or political issues being ignored.

Mrs. Walter McGinn, director of public relations for the Allied Amusement Industries of Northern California, recently addressed members of the San Francisco Round Table on "A Closer Understanding Between Service Clubs and the Moving Picture Industry."

A. L. Gore, president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., was a recent visitor at San Francisco, accompanied by a group of the principals in the recent merger between West Coast and the Stanley Company of America, including John McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company; Walter Hayes, treasurer of the Stanley Mark Company, of New York, and Harry Schwalbe, treasurer of the Stanley Company.

Ground has been broken for two large theatres in the Sunset District, one for the Golden State Theatre & Realty Co. and the other for Max Blumenfeld. Both are in sections rather sparsely settled at present, but which promise to shortly become populous districts.

Carol Nathan, manager of the San Francisco Universal Exchange, recently went to Sacramento to assist in celebrating the seventy-seventh birthday of his mother.

Sidney Goldman has resigned as manager of the San Francisco branch of the Supreme Film Company and has been made manager of the local Good-will Exchange.

Sacramento

The Patio Theatre is to be opened shortly by Max Blumenfeld as a part of his Northern California chain. This exhibitor is also preparing to reopen the old Rose Theatre at Roseville, near Sacramento.

Santa Clara

The Kinema Theatre Company has leased the theatre to be erected by V. A. Schellar. This concern will also operate the house being erected at Sunnyvale.

Gridley

Some extensive improvements are being made in Fink's Theatre, including the installation of one thousand new opera chairs.

Crockett

C. J. Stanley has installed a large organ and is making other improvements in his house.

Santa Cruz

J. A. Harvey, Jr., who has been conducting the Cameo Theatre at Santa Cruz, has brought a damage suit for $100,000 against Frank Macauley, proprietor of the Unique Theatre; Louis R. Greenfield, of the Louis R. Greenfield Theatres, and several film distributing corporations, charging a violation of the State Cartwright Act, and an improper control of films for release in that city. The film exchanges listed as defendants are: Film Booking Offices of America, Inc.; Fox Film Corp.; Educational Film Exchange, First National, Producers Distributing Corp., Warner Bros., Metro-Goldwyn, Universal Film Exchange and Famous Players-Lasky.

WIDE publicity was given the feature picture shown this week at the Apollo Theatre, when the local fire department staged a parade through the downtown district. Through arrangements made with Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of the producing company, twenty-five per cent. of the net profits of the picture are to be turned over to the International Association of Fire Chiefs, of which James A. Hutsell, chief of the local department, is a member.

Ace Berry of the Circle Theatre was host to 2,500 newsboys one morning this week. The picture, "McFadden's Flats," an approved comedy of the year, was shown through the courtesy of Floyd Brown, manager of the Indianapolis exchange of First National Pictures.

Irvington

The Irving Theatre, in Irvington, has undergone extensive repairs and has been enlarged to seat 800 persons. C. M. Walker is owner and proprietor of the building.

Union City

Although the building was afire and filled with smoke, the patrons of the Grand Theatre, Union City, filed out in an orderly manner a few days ago during one of the performances. The theatre was destroyed with a loss of approximately $5,000. Kenneth Sink is the manager.

AFEDERATION for the Province of Quebec, the Association of Cinemas and Theatres of Quebec, which is more or less the successor to the Quebec branch of the M. P. T. O., has been formed for the coming year, the general meeting being held at the Mount Royal Hotel, Montreal. Officers were elected as follows: President, D. Bouchard of St. Hyacinthe; first vice-president, H. W. Conover, Imperial Theatre, Montreal; second vice-president, Joseph Cardinal, Ouimetoscope, Montreal; secretary, A. Moisan, Victoria Theatre, Quebec City; treasurer, B. M. Garfield, Rialto, Montreal.

The directors are: B. A. Burpee, Imperial, Saint Johns, Que.; Donat Paquin, Eden and Laurier Theatres, Hull; A. J. Robert, Gayety, Three Rivers; J. A. Paquet, Canadian Theatre, Quebec City; R. L. Vallee, Casino, Sherbrooke; Harry S. Dahn, Capitol, Montreal; F. J. Shields, Montreal; Dr. Guiboard, Grand Mere; M. Dunning, Verdun; C. N. Lalonde, Drummondville.

Glance Bay, N. S.

The New Savoy Theatre, Glance Bay, N. S., was completely destroyed by fire, which swept a business block of the city on March 30, the theatre loss being estimated at $90,000, with only $25,000 insurance. James Connor was owner and manager of the theatre. The old Savoy Theatre structure, used for commercial purposes, was also burned, the loss here being $25,000. The fire, which started in a tailor shop, caused a total loss of $300,000. Considerable damage was also done to a large church next to the Savoy when the chimney fell through the roof of the edifice.

Montreal

The recommendation has been made by the Public Buildings Safety Commission of Montreal that no less than eight local moving picture theatres of neighborhood type be closed for failure to comply with civic building regulations. The proposal for the cancellation of licenses of the eight theatres has been presented to the executive committee of the City Council.

Toronto

Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, now has 15 neighborhood houses scattered throughout the city of Toronto, following the opening of the Belsize Theatre on Mount Pleasant Road, Harold Hutchinson being the manager of the new house. The Belsize has 1,200 seats and cost $160,000 to construct. Famous Players also operates the Uptown, Regent and Tivoli, three large central theatres of Toronto, and is also substantially identified with the Pantages.

Practically all of the leading cities of Eastern Canada have adopted Daylight Saving for 1927. This year they have decided upon the same dates for clock changes, May 1 and September 25, thus avoiding considerable confusion of previous seasons when differing dates were selected by local councils. Western Canada has no "summer time" because daylight is experienced until 10 P. M. or later in many of the Prairie Cities during several months. Exhibitors have raised no outcry against summer time this year, though there was considerable agitation previously.

St. John, B. C.

The F. G. Spencer Amusement Co., St. John, N. B., is building a new theatre in Charlottetown, P. E. I., to seat 600, the opening take place September 1. The frontage is 51 feet and the building is of brick. H. S. Brennan of St. John N. B., is the architect. F. G. Spencer, head of the company which has more than 20 theatres in the Maritime Provinces, is spending a three months' vacation with Mrs. Spencer in the Southern States.

Detroit Panic Averted by Woman Manager

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Detroit, Mich., Apr. 7.

A PANIC of serious proportions was narrowly averted last Saturday evening at the Arcade Theatre, a large house on Gratiot avenue, when a small fire in the projection room caused a small boy in a front seat to stand up and cry "fire." The theatre was packed and a general rush to the exits began, with many children packed in the aisles and dangerously near injury from trampling. The house manager, Mrs. J. Lundon, saved the situation by forcing her way to the front of the theatre through a side aisle, standing upon a seat and shouting, "The fire has been put out." Her calm reassurance steadied the crowd and before long the stampede not only stopped, but the patrons filed back to their seats in an orderly manner. Mrs. Lundon is being credited with saving a situation that easily might have cost many lives.

An epidemic of robberies has beset Detroit theatres similar to the one that aroused the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan one year ago this spring. Most of them are of a petty nature, but the light hauls are not the fault of the bandits, but due to the shrewdness of the theatre men in keeping their large sums out of the box office. The Roosevelt was robbed for the second time within two months, but only $60 was obtained. The Strand, at Pontiac, was taken for $300; the Woodward Grand for $150; the Iris Theatre for $225 and several smaller theatres for amounts ranging under $50. In the case of the Iris Theatre, the manager, Ben Weisman, was bound hand and foot and left on the floor of the theatre office while the robbers went about the work.

T. P. McLaughlin, most recently connected with the United Artists sale force here and a veteran Pittsburgh salesman, has gone to Philadelphia to join the M.-G.-M. force.

Roger C. Bowen, a newcomer to the Pittsburgh film field, has joined the Pathe sales force here.

"The Pittsburgher," popular weekly magazine sponsored by Harry Davis, pioneer local showman, and edited by Milton D. Crandall, has taken over "The Film Forecast," which for twelve years has been the official program of the Rowland and Clark Theatres in this city.

William G. Smith is the new manager of the Capitol Film Exchange, succeeding S. A. Gerson, whose resignation became effective the past week, and who has returned to the scene of his former film activities in Cleveland.

Charles A. Feinler, dean of theatrical men in Wheeling, W. Va., and owner of the Virginia and Colonial Theatres, has announced himself a candidate for city council from the Second Ward. Mr. Feinler's entrance in the Second Ward contest is regarded as an important factor.

Tarentum

Louis Stein, head of the Palace Theatre Corporation, Tarentum, has just purchased the Liberty Theatre, Natrona, having taken charge of the house on April 1. The house is now closed for redecorating, and will be reopened on April 18. Charles Truran, formerly manager of the Academy Theatre, Meadville, is taking personal charge of the Natrona house, as well as Mr. Stein's interests in Tarentum.

Derry

Harry Rachiel is adding to his theatre holdings, this week having purchased the Gem Theatre, Derry, which has been conducted by G. B. Meyers for more than a decade. Harry purchased the entire theatre building, but the purchase price was not divulged. His other theatres include the Comfort in Sharnsburg and the Brookline in Brookline. The Derry house is now being redecorated, and a Reproduco Player Pipe Organ, with the Duplex Roll feature, is to be installed.

Illinois

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Chicago, Ill., Apr. 7.

SEVERAL changes will be made by the Lubliner and Trinz circuit in the policies of the various houses of the big circuit, the Belmont Theatre, which opened last fall as a de luxe house, will go from weekly bills to semi-weekly changes and changes will be made in the musical programs to conform to the new policy. The circuit will also open Orchestral Hall on Michigan avenue for pictures in the near future; this house during the winter months is the home of the Symphony Orchestra.

Louis Samuels, B. Cohen and S. Schmeiterer have organized Richard Enterprises with offices at 38 South Dearborn street to engage in theatrical and movie enterprises.

Both Lubliner and Trinz and the Balaban and Katz circuit deny they are to build movie houses in the Irving Park district as was rumored recently along film row. Mitchell Brothers recently opened a fine new theatre in that territory and report good business for the house.

Jay A. McDonnell, H. G. Roth and Eugene L. Frum have organized the Chicago Suburban Theatres Corporation, with offices at 160 North LaSalle street. The new company has a capital of $60,000 and will start work on a fine new theatre in Villa Park, Ill., at an early date.

If the plans go through as projected, the northwest corner of State and Lake street will be the site of a large theatre. This will give theatres on three corners of this busy intersection, as the State-Lake of the Orpheum circuit and Chicago Theatre of the B. and K. circuit occupy opposite corners.

Springfield

The Orpheum circuit will open the new Orpheum Theatre at Springfield, Ill., built by them and the Balaban and Katz interests on April 21. The house seats 2,500 and B. F. Moore, from Evansville, will be the house manager. The Majestic Theatre, at Springfield, now showing vaudeville for the Orpheum circuit, will be turned over to pictures exclusively after the new theatre opening. Several of the executives from the Chicago offices will be on hand for the opening.

The new Orpheum Theatre at Madison, Wis., is also to be opened in April, according to word from that city.

The policy of the North Center Theatre of the Karzas circuit will be changed to Vitaphone and split week picture changes. This theatre is one of the largest and newest on the northwest side of the city and trouble has been found in making it pay.

Two new and super movie theatres are under construction for the Madison and Crawford district on the far west side of the city. The new Marbro Theatre of the Marks circuit is booked for opening the last of April and represents an expenditure of a million and a half dollars and will seat about five thousand people. The Paradise Theatre of the Cooney National Theatres circuit, seating 3,500, is under construction two blocks away, and it is expected to be ready for an early fall opening. With the opening of the two new theatres, a battle for patronage will ensue in that district with the older established houses and there will be plenty of publicity for the movies in that part of the city during the summer and fall months.

Pittsfield

The movie folks at Pittsfield, Ill., have finally persuaded the church people in that hustling little city that showing movies in the church on Sunday evenings is poor policy and the church people have voted to discontinue the practice, which has been in vogue since 1921.

Kansas City, Mo.

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Kansas City, Mo., Apr. 7.

THE first "official" sign of spring was observed on Kansas City's movie row this week when several exhibitors and exchange representatives were seen playing catch with an assortment of mitts and a baseball furnished by Jack Langan, film veteran.

The Mystic Theatre at Cedarville, Kas., a new 700-seat motion picture, said to be among the best for its size in Kansas, was opened last week by William Leonard. The decorating scheme of the house is said to be splendid.

Lew Brent, F. B. O. salesman, was pulled out of the mud nineteen times on a trip through Northwest Missouri and Western Illinois in his motor car last week. D. Sydney, National Screen Service representative, made a hurried trip to Omaha this week. E. C. Rhoden, Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., manager, was out in the territory. Max Stahl, Educational home office representative, who has been in Kansas City a week, left Monday for a swing around the other branch offices. Adolph Eisner, former president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas City, has accepted a position as representative of the Arctic N-Air Company and has gone to Omaha, Neb. Thomas J. Walsh has been transferred from Butte, Mont., Pathe branch to Kansas City and is covering Northern Kansas. The personnel of the Educational branch lined up in front of the office this week for an exterior photographic "shot."

R. S. Ballentyne, former Pathe district manager in Kansas City, who has been visiting in Kansas City, returned to his Los Angeles headquarters this week. Max Meyer now is covering Northern Kansas for Warner Bros., while J. F. Baker has been transferred to Southern Missouri for that company. J. N. Naulty, P. D. C. home office representative, was a Kansas City visitor.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Spyros Skouras, president of the St. Louis Amusement Company, St. Louis; S. E. Wilhoit, Electric Theatre, Springfield, Mo.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.

It was a costly motor car ride which C. A. Rogers, Kansas City exhibitor, enjoyed this week. Rogers was fined $100 in a Kansas City police court and ordered by the court to refrain from driving his car for six months, he being charged with drunkenness and careless driving.

HE Bagdad Theatre, Jensen & Von Herberg's new theatre in the Ballard district, will open about May 15. The house will be Arabian in type, as suggested by the name, and will be one of the finest theatres in suburban Seattle.

Vitaphone made its northwest premiere here at John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre, Seattle. The house was closed for one day to complete installation. Hundreds could not gain entrance on opening night and long lines stood for hours.

Spokane

Spokane's Vitaphone installation is now being made at Grombacher's Liberty Theatre, which will feature the new service with a grand opening April 8. Mr. Grombacher attended the Seattle premiere this week.

Frank J. Zeorlin, who has been general manager of Spokane Theatres, Inc., during the past year, has resigned to become manager of the Spokane Athletic Club, which he has been identified with for the past eighteen years. The club has been recently reorganized. President Ray Grombacher has not yet announced Mr. Zeorlin's successor.

Roy Cooper, manager of John Danz' Capitol Theatre, Seattle, reports that both Mother and brand new Paula Lou are doing splendidly. Roy is learning to answer the call of "Daddy."

Hoquiam

The Arcade, Hoquiam, Wash., was robbed of Friday's and Saturday's receipts, when an unmasked bandit forced Manager F. S. Barcus, at the point of a gun, to open the safe and unlock its compartments. Barcus was about to leave the theatre at 12:30 Sunday morning, when he was held up. The robber had evidently familiarized himself with his movements.

Proving there is a friendly feeling existing between competing Spokane theatres, Miss Isabel Cady of the Rex and Mr. Charles Novak of the Clemmer were married in Coeur d'Alene last night. They told their friends after it was too late to throw rice and old shoes.

Waldo C. Ives of Seattle has associated with O. O. Ruth of Mount Vernon, Stanwood and Anacortes, in the purchase of the new Lincoln Theatre, Mount Vernon. This splendid house was opened about a year ago by Ed Halberg of Port Townsend. Ruth is remodeling the Rex, Mount Vernon. The Anacortes Empire has just reopened, following extensive remodeling and installation of a Wurlitzer organ.

Anaconda, Mont.

Albert Nadeau has remodeled and renamed the Margareth Theatre, Anaconda, Montana. The new name is the Dial M. Nadeau also operates the Bluebird.

Alaska

A SURPRISE banquet was tendered by employees of the First National exchange force, in honor of their new manager, R. H. Haines, at the Hotel Henry, Pittsburgh, Tuesday evening, March 29. The affair was attended only by F. N. employees with the addition of Fred J. Herrington, secretary of the M. P. T. O. of W. Pa. and W. Va., and O. J. Harden, secretary of the Film Board of Trade. This pair made addresses of welcome to Mr. Haines, expressing their wishes that his regime here be a long and successful one. Russell S. Wehrle, retiring manager, who sailed on April 2 for Paris, to become assistant director general for F. N. on the Continent, was present at the banquet.

West Virginia

George Allender has been awarded the contract for the rebuilding of the Philippi Theatre, Elkins, W. Va., for Mrs. Charles Teter. The theatre had been destroyed by fire last spring. The new building will be 57x145 feet and will seat 800.

William O'Brien, until recently assistant manager of the Cameo Theatre in downtown Pittsburgh, has been transferred to Universal's Broadway Strand in Detroit.

M. J. Gorman, of the Grandview Theatre, Duquesne Heights, is again back on the job, after having been confined to his bed for several days suffering from the grip.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors on Film Row the past few days were: William Dye, Hundred; Michael Rosenbloom, Charleroi; G. B. Meyers, Derry; Miss McGinley, Elizabeth; James Rafter and Joseph Saell, California; B. E. Cupler, Washington; Bart Dattola, New Kensington; Mr. Kane, Pitcairn; Russell King, Knox; J. H. Fought Usual Lenten Depression With An Increase in Exploitation Appeal

WHEN a manager feels that his house is getting cold he goes downstairs and jazes up the furnace. That generally does the trick. He does not figure out that a drop in his temperature is something he cannot overcome with more coal. He knows to the contrary. And yet, often that same manager will regard the pre-Christmas and Lenten slumps as inevitable and do nothing to offset the drop he feels must come. Edgar Hart, of the Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., writes that he is holding off the slump with more exploitation. It may not help him to make new records, but he does hold to average receipts instead of wading in the red ink.

And don't get the idea that Edgar spends fifty dollars to draw in ten. He knows that the test of a stunt is not the money it costs, but the money it makes. He knows, too, that a clever idea with a smile back of it will make more money than the imposing stunt that has only its bigness to commend it. To that end he works for the smiles.

For Harold Lloyd, for example, he did just what lots of others have done. He gave the 24-sheet cutout a real bamboo fishing pole, with an equally real line. But the line terminated about twelve feet from the sidewalk in a disc which read "Come. Just a little bite." That does not sound like much, but it became a local by-word for the next few days, and each time someone said "Just a little bite" he was advertising The Kid Brother in particular and the Colonial in general.

For A Kiss In A Taxi he made a cutout from the three sheet and set into this one of the window cards showing the back of the auto. The window was pasted over with thin fabric and the kissing couple were pasted back of this curtain. A shadow box was built back of this with a flasher lamp dropped from one of the ceiling sockets. When the light was off the curtain showed. When it went on the pair came into strong silhouette. It got the laugh that sold the tickets.

For It he made a house front banner from a 24-sheet and then hooked the merchants to a full page co-op. He also gave out miniatures of the star, to men patrons only, three days in advance of the picture.

Every week Edgar gives a special morning matinee for the kids, and varies the small gift presented each child, though the lollipop idea was so popular that he took an encore on that.

Edgar is doing nothing more than following Carl Laemmle's advice to "Use the brains God gave you," but he uses them right along, and he makes brain work save Bill Gray a whole heap of dollars in the cost of a year. Using his brains tells him to hustle a little more intensively during Lent instead of regarding it as an enforced vacation time, and you need a calendar and not the house records to know when Lent comes.

Sold Collegians In Non-College Town

It's the simplest thing in the world to sell the Universal Collegians series in a college town. The name alone will do that. But Winchester, Va., is not a college town, and L. Marshall Baker, of the Colonial and Empire theatres had them booked for both houses because he knew they would be liked.

To get them over properly, he got Bob Wood, a Universal exploiteer, to help out, and Wood started a contest for the most popular school athlete, with a cup for the winner.

Buying the cup locally gave a window display, and Rotary was glad to get a preview of the first story to use for a luncheon attraction. Each member was asked to bring a working boy to the lunch, which provided still more jazz. The members liked the sample and went out and got back of the set in regular Rotary fashion.

Meanwhile Wood had sold the school principals the idea and the balloting started off with a rush. The better it got, the more space Mr. Baker gave it in his ads, and now he has a weekly feature that is not a serial and that is always sure to play to better than unusual business.

Brief Praise

If you could put your admiration for John Gilbert into fifty words, you stood a chance of getting a photograph in a contest conducted by the Star-Journal in connection with the showing of Flesh and the Devil at the Colorado Theatre, Pueblo. There were daily awards for the best expressed opinions, and fifty words took a lot of polishing.

A devil was used to pass out throwaways and a co-op page carried the cross word puzzle, with some of the definitions in the merchant ads. It all helped, and the picture rolled in a nice looking box sheet.

Nyman Kessler Turns Up Still Clicking Winners

Perhaps you remember Nyman Kessler, who used to kick in from Atlantic, Mass., with a lot of ideas. He dropped out of sight some time ago, and we were unable to locate him.

The other day he bobbed up from Lynn, Mass., to explain that he is in the wholesale shoe business now, but he's still a showman, and the reason for his letter was a two-column story of the observance of Lincoln's Birthday by the Y. M. H. A. of Lynn.

He put on the show and then he put it over, and he did it up in his good old-fashioned way.

He opened with "Our Gang," because he wanted to get the crowd in good humor, then he let them talk a little, jazed them up with a Lincoln sketch, followed with a picture on the life of Lincoln sent them out with America still ringing in their ears.

Kessler is a showman still, and he isn't going to stay in the shoe business if he can find a house either as lessee or manager. You can't keep that sort of a boy out of the show business. It's in his blood.

A WINDOW FOR STROGOFF ON ITS LOS ANGELES OPENING

This was laid out by the Western Costume Company, and we don't believe that's Mike in the centre, but the disposition of the pictorial material is suggestive and the general effect is capital. It ran at the Uptown theatre.

Putting the Pathe Will Rogers Series Over

A Novel Lobby Dress Doubled the Receipts

J. B. Sams, of the Amuzu Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C., sends in an unusually good lobby front on Man of the Forest and adds that it not only got him capacity on the morning shows, but gave him three turnaway nights. They played to more business in the three days than they usually get in a full week, and this in the Lenten period, at that.

The slabs shown on the front, also used to enclose the box office and frame the stills, cost him $6 at a local woodyard. Half a dozen crosscut saws, three circular saws and a couple of peavies were borrowed for a couple of passes and the result was a distinctive display that sold most of the town the idea of seeing the picture.

If you want to get a sound attractor, remove the gong from an electric bell, hitch it to a transformer and place it so that the hammer will strike one of the saws.

Don't let them tell you that lobby fronts are passe when Mr. Sams can double them up with a stunt like this. Note particularly the box office construction. It is just as effective as a log cabin and is much less trouble to make.

A LOBBY THAT DOUBLED BUSINESS ON MAN OF THE FOREST

J. B. Sams, of the Amuzu Theatre, Winston-Salem, paid six dollars for the slabs and a pair of passes for the saws and played to a three-day stand-out, doing more business than in the average week. It was Lent, too.

Getting Vitaphone Over Was a Big Stunt

Getting Vitaphone over in Denver was a sixteen week's job. This doesn't mean that it will take that long everywhere, it merely shows that the management of the Aladdin Theatre looks a long way ahead.

Sixteen weeks ago it began to feed the newspapers stories about Vitaphone as an invention and as the latest cinematic novelty. This was straight news stuff and nothing was said about the Denver booking. The papers were glad to give space to the novelty and ran full stories; much fuller stories than they would have run with the theatre mentioned. This material was judiciously fed in during subsequent weeks, always as news stuff. Naturally people began to wonder when they would see the invention at a local house, particularly as it was told that the device was being distributed.

That was timed to bring interest to the demand point about four weeks in advance of the opening, and the theatre came out with a splash to tell where it would be seen.

When the machines arrived, they were tricked to the theatre with banners telling what the cargo was, and 500 one sheets with "Vitaphone is thrilling the world" were posted. Another 500 were posted in all nearby towns. Busses to these towns were bannered for the attraction, and even the bus to Colorado Springs carried the announcement.

Just before the opening a bus load of 25 costumed girls was sent around town with an eleven-piece band on a truck following.

Two Catholic schools were closed earlier than usual in order that the children might see the new marvel. The Sisters who accompanied their charges were admitted free. The students in the Boulder University division of electricity were given a special rate, but the local Society of Electrical Engineers paid full price at a designated matinee, in order to see a special demonstration reel following the regular performance.

All of these events were duly exploited in the newspapers, and put Vitaphone and Don Juan over to exceptional business.

A Dutch dance, staged by a local dancing school, was the big noise for The Red Mill at the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas. J. P. Harrison provided a special set, and the school contributed six ensemble and two solo dancers and costumed the octet.

HOW JOSEPH PLUNKETT PLAYED UP WILL ROGERS AT THE NEW YORK STRAND

Plunkett knows values about as well as any manager in the game, and his liberal display on the Will Rogers series naturally brought contentment to the Pathe exploiters, who know that the smaller exhibitors follow the leaders. Three examples are given here, showing three different styles of appeal. We particularly like the straight frame.

Walker Walked a Walker to See Jackie Coogan

HELPING THE EXHIBITOR TO HELP HIMSELF

The Chicago exchange developed this display for the Will Rogers releases, but in trying to sell the exhibitor, they hand him an idea which he can use in his own house to sell the public. This is one reason why Pathe clicks.

Addison's Wedding Was Knockout Money-Maker

Two or three years ago H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton Theatres, staged a wedding that was a cleanup, and he decided to put another one over for a Lenten attraction. He writes that he played to 3,125 persons, about 1,400 standing up for two hours.

Mr. Addison employed a man who has staged seven of these events, and it was put over in an imposing fashion. The wedding party came down the main stairway from the mezzanine to the tones of the organ, with trumpeters and a cupid instead of flower girls.

The ceremony was conducted with the utmost dignity, and we don't believe that "Addie" booked in Lauro La Plante in Her Big Night to make a joke out of it. That just happened.

He offers the sapient suggestion that a minister be engaged from out of town. He encountered this difficulty at the last wedding, none of the local ministers being willing to lend their names. This time he engaged the minister before he obtained the bride and groom. He went through the formality of asking the local ministers and got two extra stories, one telling of his difficulty and one, the following day, announcing that a minister from Schenectady would officiate.

The theatre donated the minister and the ring, and the promoter got the usual gifts from merchants who wanted to share in the advertisement.

The happy pair were employed in a local factory and were glad enough to get such an auspicious start. It made money for Addie, too.

Biked 'Em

Putting an old-fashioned couple on an old-fashioned tandem was the way W. S. Perutz put over Casey at the Bat at the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb. They wore costumes of the 'nineties, and got no end of attention wherever they stopped to peddle bills.

Backing this up was a boy in an ill-fitting baseball uniform and a collection of crepe hair where his face should have been. He was back-signed for the picture.

Scanlon's Brother Is Newest Contributor

John J. Scanlon, of the Alhambra Theatre, Torrington, Conn., has contributed a bunch of big ideas in the last year or two. Now meet his brother, first name unknown. It seems that this other Scanlon is the projectionist of the Alhambra, and he has ideas, too.

A couple of his latest are apt to be useful. One is the spotting of a soloist for illustrated songs. He used two spots, one a dark blue for the figure and a smaller white for the face, only. Possibly the same effect might be had by making the proper sized hole in a colored medium, but this will take much more careful planning, and Scanlon has two spots.

The other wrinkle is a lobby idea. The house has a portable projector. The usual shutter was replaced with a small color-wheel, the mechanism was geared down to very slow speed and the result was a constant play of color on a lithograph of Colleen Moore that worked just as well as a more expensive color wheel. If you have a portable, try it on.

Walk Would Win More Than Pack of Camels

The man who would walk a mile for a Camel was a mere piker alongside the man who wrote T. Y. Walker, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., that he was going to walk 26 miles to see Jackie Coogan in Johnnie Get Your Hair Cut.

Walker immediately sold the story to the newspapers and offered prizes to those who most closely approached the time it took the man to cover the ground. He also arranged with local merchants to supply the walker with shoes, milk, cake, chocolate and other training materials, and sent the newspaper men along in an automobile to report the trip. Of course the walk wound up in front of the theatre, where the waiting crowd had plenty of time to study the posters and other advertising material.

The stunt cost only $15, which included the hire of the man who did the hoofing, for of course the idea was a plant, but so good a one that it got over.

HOW O. L. MEISTER DRESSED THE WHITEHOUSE THEATRE, MILWAUKEE, FOR FLAMING FRONTIER

He had plenty of material to work with and something to work for, so he made a display that was elaborate even for this persistent exploiteer. Naturally he got plenty of business in return. There is suggestion here for both lobby front and window display. If you can get it in the lobby, it's a good idea, but if you can't, get a window.

Gets A Good Idea For Cafeteria Exploiting

Found an Improvement Over Printed Napkins

Printing up the napkins used by the cheaper restaurants had long been a standard stunt, but Robert Bender, of the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, found something that is cheaper and in many ways better.

Cafeterias supply their patrons with the necessary silver wrapped in a napkin, a set being handed each patron. Mr. Bender arranged with one of the largest places, serving about 1,400 persons daily, to wrap a Michael Strogoff herald with each table service, and to make it more interesting, he gave fifty passes to be included with some of the wraps. Word of this got around and did not hurt business any. This gives the advantage of color and also permits more sales argument, while the herald is more apt to be taken away than the napkin. It has the additional advantage of being practical where cloth napkins are supplied, which naturally cannot be printed up.

Mr. Bender also agreed to distribute 5,000 samples of a new cigarette then being put over. The cigarette concern gave him the cigarettes, each in an envelope printed up for the tag and the engagement of Strogoff.

A novelty idea was a private showing for the French Consul and his official family and friends, which was the basis of a special news story, and a drive was made on the foreign language papers for this engagement.

With a flashy front in barbaric colors, the picture was put over to big receipts.

Stuck Up

In addition to sticking pasters on 7,500 copies of Liberty intended for local circulation, the Liberty magazine agent at Birmingham, Ala., got authority to take a full page in the newspapers announcing the showing of Love's Greatest Mistake at the Strand theatre and the start of the novel in the magazine. He went 50-50 on the cost of a drive-your-own truck and supplied the banners while the house furnished the driver. He got one of the best Liberty breaks to be reported.

THE ENTIRE FIRE DEPARTMENT PARADED FOR A SERIAL
Here it is, all ready to go out and put over Universal's serial. The fire fighters at the New Theatre, Mifflinburg, Pa. H. M. Ralston asked them to leave the engine in front of the theatre to help the opening.

Let's Join the Marines

It's pretty soft for the Marines—sometimes.

In Chicago, when Tell It to the Marines played McVickers, a pretty girl was secured to lead a bannered bulldog through the streets, in emulation of the late and still lamented "Jiggs."

And a Marine was detailed to go along with her. There are about 300 Marines on various details in Chicago and even the postal guard wanted to lay off guarding the mails and protect the female, but not all got a chance.

Saw It in Red

Robert Blair had a large red electric It made when he came to show the picture at the Texas theatre, San Antonio, and he put it into the window of a furniture store right next door to the opposition house. He also got out a tag reading "Chase me. I have It," which were given to the high school girls and boys to play with.

Circulation Hook-Up With a College Paper

Newspaper hook-ups are nothing new, but pinning a circulation stunt on a college paper is something else again. Credit what seems to be the first to the Olympia Theatre, New Haven. Manager Pinkus, aided by a Universal man, offered a loving cup to the most popular man in Yale, to be determined by the votes printed in the Yale Daily News. Three shops were hooked in for prizes of a dressing gown, a tennis racquet and a ten dollar credit, but the cup was supposedly donated by Carl Laemmle, Jr., author and creator of The Collegians series.

Naturally the paper had much to say about the series in offering the prizes, but the student body was not required to see the pictures in order to cast their votes. The voting was entirely by the newspaper ballot and was based on "athletic accomplishment, social celebrity or campus prominence."

The most popular collegian idea has been worked in many college towns, and always with success, but this is the first instance of a circulation hook-up with a college paper that has been recorded.

It worked exceptionally well with so large a student body.

Ministers and Books

Two of the best bets Stanley Chamners used to put over The Scarlet Letter at the Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kans., were the endorsement of the Federated Council of Churches, mailed to all ministers as well as school teachers, and cooperation with the library, which permitted a display card. It emphasized the class of the picture.

Sold by Sample

Because a local realtor had a complete model house that was very attractive, Sidney Dannenberg decided that it was a paradise for two and borrowed it for his lobby on the Dix picture.

In the real estate office it was just ordinary, but in the lobby it got plenty of attention, and the "loaned by—" card well repaid the agent.

A LOBBY SIDEWALL DISPLAY ON SENOR DAREDEVIL

This was used by the Strand Theatre, Nashville, for Ken Maynard, and made a fine display in the inner lobby, later being moved outside for a "Now." It was worked out by E. E. McDaniel, assistant manager and staff artist.

The Windmill Box Office Grinds Money In

ANOTHER ATTRACTIVE STROGOFF BOOK WINDOW FROM UTICA

The inserts and other material on this picture work nicely in window displays and help the book over to unusually good sales. This display was done by the Majestic Theatre, Utica, N. Y., for the local showing of a feature.

Offered Prizes for New Super-Super Substitute

Professing an inability to find a word adequately to describe the unusual excellence of Hotel Imperial, Ernest Morrison, of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga., offered a month's pass to the person who could hand him what he wanted. Nothing very definite came of the contest, for even the home office press agents have run out of words, but the contest got the idea over that there must be something in Hotel Imperial that was worth while.

Guests of a large hotel were warned that they would be protected from such happenings as disturbed the rest of the guests of the Hotel Imperial. This is a good line where there is no Imperial hotel in your town, but it's a libel otherwise.

And for a kicker Morrison put out 3,000 keys each tagged: "Rescue me from the Hotel Imperial. Maybe this key will unlock the door. Please help.—Anna Sedlak." This was not tied to the usual lock contest. You just got the message and threw the key away again. It could, however, be used for an adaptation of the treasure chest idea.

Morrison got enough without that.

Well, They Laughed

It's old enough to have great-grandchildren, but when G. R. Stewart, of the Sterling theatre, Greeley, Col., advertised Paradise for two with a pair of huge dice on a truck they all laughed. Then most of them brought tickets to see Richard Dix. The dice were about three feet square and were laid so as to show sevens on either side facing the street.

Beat New York

Edgar Hart was a particularly soft place in his heart for Douglas MacLean, for Doug was one of his proteges in his old dramatic days. They let him have a print ahead of the New York opening and Edgar got a half column telling how Portsmouth, N. H., was getting the picture in advance of the rest of the world. It was an appeal to local pride that packed the Colonial.

He's a Candy Kid

Any of the things used to put over Michael Strogoff in the Northwest is a "Michael Strogoff Mighty Bar" put out by a concern in Portland, Oregon. All salesmen have been instructed to co-operate with the picture, and retail dealers have been supplied with cards with blank spaces for the insertion of the theatre name and playing dates when the picture comes to their town. The candy is attractively packed and has been helped to a large sale.

The Postal Telegraph in this section has also been instructed to work with the theatres and all telegrams delivered before the local showing of the picture in any town are stamped with an advertisement for the showing.

Names in a Window Clever Sales Sensation

Edward Harrison, of the Rialto Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., got the entire town stirred up when he played The Waltz Dream. He got most of his advertising at a cost of fifty tickets.

A large store made a special window display of stills and colored material for the picture, along with its own goods. Scattered through the display were fifty cards containing the names of as many residents. Anyone who found their name in the display could go into the store for a pass. The store advertised the stunt heavily in the newspapers as well as around the store, and when the display was made almost everyone went to the store to see if they could find their names. Few were fortunate, but most of them were sold on the picture.

The stunt is not new. It has been worked in a variety of ways, with the names displayed on the counters or the shelving and in one instance a fresh set of names was posted every hour through one entire store day. It is not new in some places, but it was a novelty in Lincoln, and it sold tickets by the yard.

Whatisits

E. R. Rogers used the phrase "What Is It" for his sales on the Clara Bow picture at the Tivoli theatre, Chattanooga. He had orange tags printed in black to hang on automobiles, and sniped 200 half sheets with the same phrase, with the result that the citizens advertised the picture by making the words a temporary addition to the slang of the day.

It was all he needed to do to get the crowd.

For a Laugh

W. S. Perutz gave out samples of "genuine hard tack" when he played "Tell It to the Marines" at the Lincoln theatre, Lincoln, Neb.

Each sample was in an envelope telling what it was, and you did not have to open the envelope to tell that this hard tack was of the carpet variety. He used the very smallest size rather than the large ones.

PUTTING OVER THE RED MILL IN ASHEVILLE, N. C.

H. M. King, Jr., masked his box office with a Red Mill cutout for the Marion Davies picture, the wings carrying red lights. Two small wings on the sides did not revolve. These carried cutouts from the paper. All lights were red.

Four Layouts that May Suggest New Ideas

Cartoon Attractor Is Help to Lloyd Comedy

This cartoon sketch of Harold Lloyd, used by the Cameo Theatre, Cleveland, is better than the halftone from which the pose is derived. The spectacle effect of the double o in "look" helps to get a smile and to convey the suggestion that The Kid Brother must be funny.

This is a third week announcement, and the big sales idea is that the picture is being held on, but the general effect of the display is suggestive of humor, and this is as much a part of the sales propaganda as the statement of fact.

Simple Art Work Gives A Very Strong Display

For The Fire Brigade, the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, dropped its usual art work and sold more on type talk. The house name and title are lettered in white against a dark ground crossed by streams of water apparently thrown by the firemen shown at the bottom of the space, and this provides strong contrast with the panel inset.

There are four type appeals on the big fire stuff, with a cross space quoting a local writer who saw the picture in New York, and three lines at the bottom to tell of the cast. There is a lot to talk about in The Fire Brigade, and we think that this appeal carried many more sales than the best of fancy art work would have done. M. A. Maloney is a good judge of pace, and knows when to change over. Here the change means more coin at the box office. Knowing what to do and when to do it is what marks the advertising man from the tyro.

Anyone can write advertising. The trick is to write advertising that sells tickets.

Gets Cut and Everything In This Three Inch Drop

This cut may suggest the reduction of larger space, but it is an actual size clip of the Diversey Theatre in Chicago, dropping little more than three inches and yet including a cut, a display for the title, some sales talk and a five-act vaudeville program. And yet some managers have trouble packing their facts into a two fives!

JUST AS IT WAS

This looks as though it had been set up in larger size and then reduced to column width. Certainly this would be the best way to get such a small space properly proportioned, and the trouble of getting the copy together will be more than paid for in the resultant effect, and effect must be considered

Twenty-five Lines Is Large Chicago Space

Space is largely a matter of geography—and price. If small spaces are in general use, then a small space is ample. The Castle Theatre, Chicago, put over Tom Mix in twenty-five lines where some small towns might take as many inches, and yet the effect was about the same—and probably the cost, as well.

IN ACTUAL SIZE

Twenty-five lines is not quite two inches, and yet there are four facts put over here, the house, the star, the title and the author, all of which are selling points. More space might have sold in greater detail each of these points, but there was no more to sell, and the Castle needed no greater lineage.

"Long Pants"

Hilarious Gag Comedy Pictures Harry Langdon
As Romantic Lad Infatuated by a Bandit-Vamp

First National Pictures, Inc., Present
Harry Langdon in
"Long Pants"
Directed by Frank Capra
CAST:

The Boy.....Harry Langdon
The Lady.....Alma Bennett
The Girl.....Priscilla Bonner
Harry's Mother.....Gladys Brockwell
Harry's Father.....Alan Roscoe
Length—5,550 Feet

With his first long pants, romance comes to the boy in the shape of a city vamp, and he leaves his country sweetheart to follow her. He aids the vamp in escaping the police, but when she fights another woman and shoots her own husband, the boy awakens to the truth and returns to his sweetheart. Hilarious gag comedy with pathos and human interest.

dame has a flat tire near the humble Langdon homestead and it is easy to guess what happens to the impressionable boy. The vamp goes away and Harry dreams of her and as he is about to marry a sweet young country girl he sees in the paper that his idol is in jail. Like a knight of old he goes to her rescue and aids in getting her to a cafe where she proceeds to show her true colors by beating up another girl and then shooting her husband. Harry, disillusioned, returns home and marries the other girl.

Possibly the story reads like straight drama and this gives Harry opportunities to play upon pathos and human interest as well as comedy, but of course it is the comedy that is predominant. The story in truth is slight and wavers, at times being halted for long periods while innumerable gags are worked out. In fact, it is a typical example of a gag comedy, episodic in nature, with the laughs clustered around four scenes, his meeting with the vamp, his attempt to get up courage to shoot his sweetheart to get rid of her, his aiding the vamp to escape by putting her in a box and carrying it through the streets and his part as a surprised witness to her outburst against husband and double-crossing rival. Each of these sequences has been held for considerable periods and between them the continuity is at times jumpy, being bridged by subtitles. There is also a noticeable tendency to repetition in some of the gags which weakens them and the result is that while "Long Pants" is screamingly funny it is not as fast or snappy as "The Strong Man."

Langdon appears in his familiar type of make-up and has a congenial role, he is the Langdon that the fans have learned to laugh at, although there is the novelty of seeing him as a kid in short pants and, what is more striking, as a romantic lover in uniform in a brief technicolor sequence when he dreams of his amorous conquests which are to come.

Alma Bennett is dashing and satisfying as the vamping female bandit and all-around crook, and Priscilla Bonner is well cast as the demure country girl. Gladys Brockwell and Alan Roscoe are satisfactory in the minor roles of the boy's mother and father.

There are a lot of original gags in this picture, such as his stunts on a bicycle while trying to attract the vamp's attention. Although held rather too long, the sequences where he carries the vamp through the streets is a scream, especially when he mistakes a dummy cop for a real one and vice versa, hitting the real policeman with a brick and starting a chase.

BEFORE MUCH OF THE footage of the P. D. C. production "White Gold" has sped through the projector one is apt to feel that here is "big stuff." A simple story, fine acting and direction, a minimum of brief captions and an unexpected and intensely dramatic ending.

"White Gold" is a story of sheep raising, the wool being the "gold" of the title. Alec Carson, son of a sheep rancher, slips over the border, marries Dolores, an entertainer in a dance hall, and brings her to the home he shares alone with his father, who resents the intrusion. Randall, a herder, appears on the scene, and the jealous, crafty father sees in him "the other man," brings Dolores and Randall together and magnifies an innocent incident until it portends tragedy.

Just at that time, rain is badly needed and the sand and heat puts everyone's nerves on edge. Dolores senses a change in her husband. Dolores has utterly failed to win over her father-in-law. The son is divided in his allegiance between father and wife.

Dolores retires. Her husband, unable to sleep, decides to watch Randall, but falls asleep. Randall, who has been playing solitaire for hours, seeks the girl's room and the scene fades out on a holster and revolver hanging on a closed door. Then comes a downpour of rain.

Morning comes. Randall is dead, the old man says he shot him, the girl is silent, her husband does not know what to think. Then the final threads are woven into a solution that marks "White Gold" as an A-1 box office attraction crowded with the essentials of a powerful advertising and exploitation campaign.

George Nichols dominates the players. His acting touches the apex of screen artistry. His work is flawless. He passes from concealed anger to crafty deceit, shattering the girl and wrecking the romance. In the end, he lies and lies and you hate him, but proclaim him a great actor.

Jetta Goudal is excellent. She never misses a movement of the hands, a twitch of the lips or the possibility of tragedy with her beautiful eyes. The story has revealed her as one of the principal feminine stars as possibly no other story could.

Kenneth Thompson gives a fine performance of a difficult role, leaving nothing to be desired. George Bancroft adds further to the laurels he has gained in recent pictures. Clyde Cook furnishes exceptionally good comedy to break the drab story. Mr. Howard's direction is somewhat suggestive of the work of the German directors. It is a rarely fine piece of work in which he leaves much to the imagination and immeasurably strengthens the dramatic effect thereby.

Length—6,298 Feet

Lulu Duffy, American chorus girl, stranded in Paris, becomes enamored of Raoul and is persuaded to impersonate Celeste, a famous beauty, largely because Raoul, bankrupt, has been hired as Celeste's aviator. Both stunts are schemes of Celeste's press agent, who wins her idol. A gentle little comedy of dress and dressmakers.

THERE IS LITTLE TO THE story of "Fashions for Women." Whatever the original may have been, the adaptation is largely clothes and lingerie, with considerable comedy supplied by the American press agent of Parisian star, known as "the best dressed woman in Paris." This woman, Celeste de Givray, has just had her face lifted and the press agent conceives the brilliant idea of having her disappear, ostensibly because the operation has been a failure, only to reappear more radiant than ever. The cigarette girl in a restaurant is hired to impersonate her. This gives Miss Ralston, who plays the dual roles, ample opportunity to display her charms all the way from a milk bath to elaborate costumes.

The comedy is supplied by Raymond Hatton, as the American press agent; a role which stands out better than that of the star because it has more meat on its bones. The complications are furnished by Einar Hanson, as a French ace, who hires out as the private aviator of Celeste because he believes his fortune has been swept away in the stock market. The other characters are all background for this trio, but as carefully cast as though their parts were important.

The production is the first offering of Dorothy Arzner, Paramount's new woman director. She seems to have been over-eager to direct, and some of the screens show this in their lack of spontaneity. The action is directed, rather than natural, but as a whole the novice has done very well. She has produced a colorful background and introduced bales of charming frocks. Between dress and undress the play should please both sexes.

Length—4,930 Feet

"Spuds," American private in the world war, harassed by his top sergeant eventually gets mixed up with spies, who have stolen an armored tank loaded with money, and captured by the Germans he succeeds in escaping with the tank and money. Amusing war comedy.

LARRY SEMON'S NEWEST production, "Spuds," written and directed by himself and which is being distributed by Pathe, is a farce comedy of the battle area during the World War, with the star in the role of a boob private, whose job is to peel potatoes for his company, hence his nickname.

Characteristic of this type of farce, there is only a bare thread of a story which concerns Larry's troubles with the familiar hard-boiled top sergeant, which leads him into an adventure with spies and eventually to the recapture of an armored car filled with money which has been stolen from the Americans.

Around this outline there has been built up a succession of gags, some new and some old, with slapstick galore, chases, etc., and the result is a comedy that should prove fairly amusing for the average audience. One of the most amusing sequences shows the antics of a lot of colored soldiers who mistake Larry for a ghost. There is some good stuff in the spy scenes and a clever bit shows Larry drawing cartoons of Chaplin and the top sergeant and giving imitations of them by using his own fingers as the legs of the cartoon figures.

This is a typical Semon comedy with the stars doing the same sort of things he usually does and the stunts and gags have been considerably drawn out to make it a comedy of feature length.

Length—6,303 Feet

Deciding to move to California, Mary Ellen's family buy a dilapidated auto, and Bill, her sweetheart, follows them. The company has offered a big reward for the return of this their first car and after many adventures they cash in on the prize. Entertaining comedy.

OBVIOUSLY an automobile story, "Rubber tires" the Producer Distributing Corporation production, with Bessie Love and Harrison Ford in the leading roles, is a light comedy-drama of a family's trip across the continent in an old dilapidated car, with the girl's sweetheart continuously camping on their trail.

There are several amusing moments, and the crux of the story, the fact that the company has offered a fortune for the return of their first car is a novel idea, but it is too slight to keep the interest from wavering in the long intervals between the high-spots and it could be drastically trimmed to excellent advantage.

In attempting to build up the intervening footage gags have been introduced that are very farfetched such as the hero succeeding in going a good portion of the distance in a car without an engine, by using ruses to get passing motorists to tow him, and finally swapping this engineless car, sight unseen for one with an engine.

Bessie Love gives a vivacious and spirited performance and Harrison Ford is satisfactory as the hero. The remainder of the cast are entirely capable, Junior Coghlan being especially good as the mischievous younger brother.

BILLED as a Western Special, Universal is offering Jack Hoxie as the star of "Men of Daring" a story of the Dakotas in the pioneering days of the early 70's directed by Albert Rogell.

Produced on a much bigger scale than the average western, the director has made use of a large cast including a big wagon train of settlers, scores of Indians and a troop of U. S. cavalry which rides to the rescue of the settlers when they are attacked by the red-skins. These scenes are well handled and are exceedingly exciting and thrilling and a feature that will especially delight the younger generation although it stretches the credulity of the grown-ups shows Jack's magnificent horse going alone to the fort and bringing the troops.

Jack Hoxie gives a thoroughly satisfactory performance as an ex-scout who volunteers to protect a small wagon train and as the leader of the defense of the big train during the attack. Ena Gregory is attractive as the girl and Francis Ford capably supplies the necessary villainy as a bandit leader who cheats the Indians and then incites them against the whites.

Although the story follows along rather familiar lines there is a lot of sure-fire stuff for the western fans handled on a big scale and while there are few situations of big dramatic strength, director Albert Rogell has handled the script so that the interest is held at a good pitch and the result is good western entertainment of the better sort.

With audiences that like westerns you will make no mistake by showing them "Men of Daring."

Length—6,155 Feet

Jack, attracted by Nancy's beauty, volunteers with his pals, Ace and King, to guard their little caravan across the desert to join a wagon train. Black Roger inflames the Indians, but Jack's horse brings soldiers to the rescue. Spectacular and exciting western.

BUCK JONES HAS another excellent Western in "Whispering Sage," and in this offering he again comes through with some rapid-fire, fast-riding, double-fisted stuff.

As "Buck" Kildare, a Montana cowman, seeking the assassin of his brother, Buck rides into "Paradise Valley," Government land legally turned over to a band of Basque immigrants, who brought much of the picturesque of their Spanish mountains. Hugh Acklin, owner of an adjoining ranch, wants the property, and gun-play between the Basques and Acklin threatens as Buck rides in.

Buck takes a job with Acklin, but discovers Acklin's duplicity. Later he proves a strong ally of the Basques, due to the presence of Mercedes, daughter of the leader.

A tender love story unfolds with the unraveling of the tense drama, and in the final fight between Acklin's men and the Basques, Buck does a great "clean-up" job almost single-handed, and discovers in Acklin's right hand man the dum-dum bullet assassin of Tom Kildare. In a gripping fight, Buck kills his man and wins the girl.

Buck Jones will uphold his reputation with the public for the spirited manner in which he handled this role and Natalie Joyce scores as an exceedingly attractive and capable Mercedes. Emile Chautard gives an excellent characterization of Jose and Joseph Girard is all that could be desired as the villain.

"Evening Clothes"

Adolphe Menjou's Latest Starring Vehicle Is Amusing Light Comedy Based On a French Play

Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky present
Adolphe Menjou in
"Evening Clothes"

with Virginia Valli and Noah Beery
Based on play "The Man in Dress Clothes" by Andre Picard and Yves Mirande

Directed by Lutner Reed

A Paramount Picture

CAST:

Lucien Adolphe Menjou
Germaine Virginia Valli
Lazarre Noah Beery
Fox Trot Louise Brooks
Henri Lido Manetti

Length—6,287 Feet

Germaine leaves her husband Count Lucien because he is too fond of horses and farming. He goes to Paris and becomes a polished gentleman but loses his fortune, finally Germaine repents and comes back to him. Amusing light comedy with good heart interest.

ADAPTED FROM A FRENCH stage play "The Man in Dress Clothes" and with the action taking place in Paris and the provinces, Paramount is offering Adolph Menjou as the star of "Evening Clothes"

The story concerns a French count whose wife left him because of his neglecting her in favor of his horses and dogs. He goes to Paris determined to become a "gentleman" and succeeds in acquiring polish but loses his fortune and is left with only a suit of evening clothes. His wife repents her action and there is a reconciliation.

While the outline of this story is capable of straight dramatic treatment, in developing it as a suitable vehicle for Menjou the sophisticated comedy angle has been stressed and the result is a picture that is amusing light entertainment with a lot of situations that will cause audiences to smile and chuckle and with some good heart interest bits.

As the fashionable Parisian boulevardier, Menjou is in his element and gives an enjoyable performance with Virginia Valli giving him fine support as his wife. Noah Beery as the representative of the law who delights in seizing the star's belongings, gives an excellent characterization and Louise Brooks makes a minor role stand out.

"Evening Clothes" should especially please Menjou fans and audiences of the better class, with its bright comedy, skillful direction and effective touches of pathos and human interest.

"Moulders of Men"

Frankie Darro Dominates Cast of Melodrama Dealing With Elks, Slums and Drug Traffic

Joseph P. Kennedy presents

"Moulders of Men"

Directed by Ralph Ince

An F. B. O. Picture

CAST:

Dr. Matthews Conway Tearle
Anc Grey Margaret Morris
Sandy Barry Frankie Darro
Jim Barry Rex Lease
Barney Eugene Pallette

Length—6,413 Feet

To aid his crippled brother, Jim takes a job with a dope smuggler and is caught and jailed. Dr. Matthews, head of the narcotic squad learns of the crippled boy and has him operated on successfully. Jim finding his boss has double-crossed him, gives facts that lead to the arrest of the gang. Heart-interest melodrama involving the lodge of Elks.

A MELODRAMATIC STORY of the traffic in the slums and government activities in breaking it up is unfolded in "Moulders of Men," an F. B. O. production in which, despite the presence of Conway Tearle, little Frankie Darro is really the bright star.

The lodge of Elks is brought into the story in a mild way, the point being brought out that the doctor who befriends the little cripple lad is a member of this order and wears the lodge emblem, and the lad is taken for an operation to a hospital maintained by the Elks.

The story itself is stirring melodrama with good human interest and plenty of action and offering entertainment that should please the average fans. The love between the cripple and his brother, a crooked gangster, is stressed to such a point that it is overplayed and this is also true of the scenes of squalor in the forlorn tenement.

Little Frankie Darro is exceptionally fine and convincing as the cripple and makes every scene register strongly. Conway Tearle gives a dignified and capable portrayal of the doctor who is in charge of the narcotic squad and Eugene Pallette as his assistant supplies comedy. Margaret Morris is capital as a newspaper reporter who wins the doctor. Ralph Ince has handled the direction so that the picture is good audience material for the average house.

A Major Differs From a Sergeant

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

F. B. O.

BORDER WHIRLWIND. Star, Bob Custer. A nice western with oodles of action when the fun finally began, but F. B. O. is putting Bob into too many love making scenes. Let's let the society "he-men" do that, Bob, and the fans will continue to shout when we announce that a Bob Custer picture will soon be shown. Good paper, good picture, fine photography. Tone O.K. Strong appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials, H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

BORN TO BATTLE. Star, Tom Tyler. A very good western which went over with a bang, but I did not give the star or the picture credit for the business done—the big draw here was the Graham Stock Company producing the show, "Some Baby." Tone none, appeal 60 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

BORN TO BATTLE. Star, Tom Tyler. A little better than his former releases. Very good for Saturday night. Tone good, appeal 70 per cent. Special no. R. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Natoma, Kansas.

COLLEGE BOOB. Star, Lefty Flynn. An entertaining picture of college life. The football game was a little tame and lacked the snap of the one in the Red Grange picture, One Minute to Play, but all-in-all The College Boob was entertaining and worth while playing. Tone O.K. Appeal general. Sunday yes, special no. Draw rural class, town 300. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (250 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

MAGIC GARDEN. (6,807 feet). Gene Stratton Porter novel. All star cast. A dandy little love story; tone O.K. Appeal 100 per cent. Have played Porter's Keeper of the Bees and Laddie. All good. Here in her home state we tear the roof off; her stories are the best money makers in the whole list for my place. Draw farming class, town 550. Merchants don't attend as I have a religious neighborhood that won't stand for Sunday shows. Merchants all drive over to neighboring towns for Sunday shows. Admission 10-25. Robert Anderson, Black Cat Theatre, Sandborn, Indiana.

A REGULAR SCOUT. Star, Fred Thomson. After starving all winter, due to local conditions and bad weather, I was extremely gratified to find, after this show, that I could go to the bank the next day with my head up. A bang-up good show with wonderful exploitation possibilities in a larger town than ours. Silver King was very prominent in his part. If it is true, as I have heard, that Thomson has signed up with another company, which might contemplate a 50 per cent. increase in rental, and expect the exhibitor to buy a raft of other pictures to get Thomson, I would have to develop another western star, so we have signed up for some Ken Maynard pictures which, we predict, will, in time, fill the void to be left by Thomson. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 15-30, special 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (300 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

WILD TO GO. Star, Tom Tyler. Very good western, although the Tylers follow pretty near the same formula. Frankie Darro and Beans very good and Tom's leading lady an improvement over the last one. Quite a few fights, but evidently not so rough, as our minister commented very favorably on this picture. Tone O. K. Appeal general. Sunday, special no. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (300 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

H. H. Hedberg, one of us, named us Our Gang to typify the fraternal, good-will, stick-together spirit that governs our sending of dependable reports on pictures we have played.

Playing fair by picture and producer, aiming to help each other and you, we will be very glad to have your tips as an earnest of your wish to help us and be one of us.

OUR GANG.

First National

IT MUST BE LOVE. Star, Colleen Moore. Colleen Moore is a good bet. She does her part fine. A good entertainment. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Admission 10-25. Ira Stonebraker, Allen Theatre (350 seats), Allen, Kansas.

LUNATIC AT LARGE. Star, Leon Errol. A fair program picture that failed to draw. Tone O.K. Appeal 60 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 3,500. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (350 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

LUNATIC AT LARGE. Star, Leon Errol. A very good picture with quite a lot of comedy and pleased a small Saturday night crowd; however, made a little money on it. Play it as it should please in most places. Tone fair, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

MEN OF STEEL. Star, Milton Sills. This is a fine picture and, I believe, pleased all who saw it. Played two nights to fair houses and made a little above expenses. Picture did not draw for some reason. Tone fine, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special yes. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

MISS NOBODY. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. A very good comedy drama as all First Nationals are good here. Appeal 90 per cent. No as special. Draw farming class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre (150 seats), Stark, Kansas.

PARADISE. Star, Milton Sills. This is a good program picture and pleased all of the Sills fans; however it was not a picture to draw much favorable comment. Business was also only fair. It is not up to some of his previous pictures but as a star attraction will get by. Plenty of action and a big fight near the end. Typically Sills. Appeal 80 per cent. Special no. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SEÑOR DAREDEVIL. Star, Ken Maynard. This is a good western and somewhat different from the usual class of westerns. Tone good, appeal 95 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Admission 10-25. Ira Stonebraker, Allen Theatre (350 seats), Allen, Kansas.

STEPPING ALONG. Lively number with plenty of good comedy but not as good as The Brown Derby. Small patronage but not fault of picture. Times hard here at present. Surely would like to see Johnny in a good feature length haunted house story and I hope he takes this hint and makes one. Photography clear 100 per cent. Johnny always a peppy number. Paper not so good. Tone O.K. Appeal fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all species, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SUBWAY SADIE. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. A very good picture but nothing to rave about. Think it pleased the majority. Some said good and others didn't like it. Played two nights and didn't make expenses. Tone fair, appeal 75 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

SUBWAY SADIE. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Nice little story of the Big Town that seemed to please the few who saw it. Can't blame the picture for the small crowd as a religious revival was the center of attraction on this as well as on a few succeeding nights. Photography not quite up to First National's standard. Paper O.K. Tone O.K. here. Appeal fair. Sunday, yes, here. Special no. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-30. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

UNKNOWN CAVALIER. Star, Ken Maynard. One of the best. This fellow Maynard has them all beat when it comes to real riding, and he is sure to top them all in drawing power as soon as the public gets on to him. First National is not making enough off this star to get them to talking Maynard. Draw small town class. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Fox

COUNTRY BEYOND. (6 reels). Star, Olive Borden. If we could pick the weather we certainly would pick the right pictures for snow storms. Had excellent weather for The Gay Decelver but snow storms for this one. This is too good a picture for mean weather. R. A. Preuss, Arveda Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DIXIE MERCHANT. Splendid picture and pleased. Failed to get the business however. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Draw general class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

THE LILY. Star, Belle Bennett. Slow moving picture, with some very fine acting by Miss Bennett. Tone, appeal fair. Sunday maybe, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

ROAD TO GLORY. Star, May McAvoy. Not a special but near to it. As good a comedy drama as we have shown. Situations are thrilling and well made without excess footage—in fact, the big scene in the storm sequence was missing. Tone good. Sunday no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 10-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SUMMER BACHELORS. Star, Madge Bellamy. Snappy entertainment but not the wonder picture Fox says it is. While this picture is full of pep and dash there is nothing really objectionable in it and patrons seemed to enjoy every inch of the production. Fine photography. Tone, appeal fair. Sunday yes, here, special yes. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

THREE BAD MEN. Star, J. Farrell McDonald. The Iron Horse was great and Three Bad Men is better. More human, with more thrills, more comedy and not so much of the "onward, ever onward go the covered wagons" stuff. Every theatre should show it. Tone fair, appeal 95 per cent. Sunday no, special yes. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Gotham

WINGS OF THE STORM. (6 reels). Star, Thunder (dog). A dog picture with a different twist to it. Told by Thunder himself as we are supposed to believe. This proved good entertainment to my patrons, as it drew good for two nights. Good paper. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Metro-Goldwyn

BARRIER. (7 reels). Rex Beach story, star cast. Small crowd; could not get them out in the rain, but it is a wonderful picture in every way. Starts off with a bang—plenty of action—and ends with beautiful scenery of the boat caught in the icebergs. Should go any place. Plenty of action and romance. I would say, yes—book it, and boost it to the limit. E. P. Hosack, Community Theatre (200 seats, admission 10-15), Ellston, Iowa.

BOY FRIEND. A good, clean entertainment and had several good comments for the picture. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Admission 15-25. Ira Stonebraker, Allen Theatre (350 seats), Allen, Kansas.

GAY RECEIVER. (7 reels). Star, Lew Cody. A slim story with a good bunch of stars. Played one day to our regular movie friends. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

GREAT LOVE. Novelty comedy drama centering about the love of an elephant for a young doctor who cures a pain for her. Well developed drama of typical Neilan type with many chuckles, and should bring trade. Tone fair. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

HIS SECRETARY. Star, Norma Shearer. Another good one from Metro-Goldwyn. Very clean and entertaining. Norma very beautiful. Paper just a little weak. E. P. Hosack, Community Theatre (200 seats, admission 10-15), Ellston, Iowa.

JOHNNY GET YOUR HAIR CUT. Star, Jackie Coogan. Horse racing drama of more than ordinary interest, particularly for children. Ran on Saturday and drew about six hundred for two shows. Comedy from Educational, a Big Boy Juvenile, didn't help the feature any. Tone fair. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 10-30. Henry W. Numan, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LA BOHEME. Stars, Lillian Gish, John Gilbert. A long drawn out picture; not so good for small towns. If it had been in six reels it would have passed, but nine reels was too much for that kind of stuff; well acted, to be sure, but the sad ending and all was too much. Had more walkouts than on any other picture I ever ran. Tone good, appeal poor. Sunday yes, special not for me. Draw town and country class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MERRY WIDOW. Stars, John Gilbert, Mae Murray. A big picture for a big town. But not so good for a small town. Acting of Mae Murray was far better than usual. That of John Gilbert not so good. Some beautiful scenes. I call it a big picture. Sunday no, special yes. Appeal 90 per cent. George Pictures that bring them out in the rainy weather, pictures that get out the S.R.O. sign—these are worth knowing about, and dependable exhibitor tips in this department give you the low-down on which ones they are, as well as when to step heavy and when to bear light on the advertising. It's simply a question of choosing as your guide the exhibitor who agrees in his reports with your experience on pictures you both have run.

It's only fair to return the favor by sending tips to help the other fellow as he helps you.

Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

NAVIGATOR. Star, Buster Keaton. Extremely funny. One of the best Keaton pictures we ever played. I would not ask for a better comedy. Enjoyed by our entire audience. Sunday yes, special almost. Appeal 100 per cent. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

TIN HATS. (7 reels). Special cast. A little Big Parade, and a good drawing attraction. One day to a fair house. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WANING SEX. Star, Norma Shearer. A great picture, still better than His Secretary. Norma is there and over. Admission 10-15. Seat 200. E. P. Hosack, Community Theatre, Ellston, Iowa.

WANING SEX. Star, Norma Shearer. More than pleased. It's a dandy comedy. Better than His Secretary. Tone O.K. Appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 3,500. Admission 10-20. J. H. Long, Opera House (350 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

WINNERS OF THE WILDERNESS. Star, Tim McCoy. Very good historical picture, full of action but rather dark. Its historical scenes made it worth playing. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town, country class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

Paramount

CAT'S PAJAMAS. Stars, Betty Bronson, Ricardo Cortez. Just a fair program picture; however, pleased about 75 per cent. Tone O.K. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 3,500. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (350 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

FOR HEAVEN'S SAKE. Star, Harold Lloyd. Good show, but not up to standard of Lloyd's specials and only six reels. Had to build up the show considerably with short subjects and then our price of admission at fifty cents was too high for this burg. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday or any day, and special, but not at too high admission. Draw all classes, town less than 1,000. G. H. Perry, people's Theatre (240 seats), Cloverdale, California.

FORLORN RIVER. Star, Jack Holt. A fine Zane Grey story. Jack Holt does his part in this one. Book it and you won't go wrong with your western audience. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

GREAT GATSBY. (7 reels). Showed this to a very small crowd and wasn't sorry, as this type of picture is no boost to Paramount: would have shelved it had not rental been so high. But I took a bigger loss by running it. Played one day only. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HOLD THAT LION. Star, Douglas MacLean. Fair picture: it takes a long time to get started, but the last two reels are very good. Draw town class, town 2,500. Admission 10-25. S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre (450 seats), Montpelier, Idaho.

LOVE'S GREATEST MISTAKE. (6 reels). Star, Evelyn Brent. Miss Josephine Dunn is really the star in this one and she plays her part very well: but Miss Brent had a terrible part; she was the sister to Miss Dunn, and what a "fast" one. Not suited to her and we heard a lot of comments, "Wasn't Evelyn Brent Awful?"—which she was! Good print. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MAN OF THE FOREST. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. A good house in good weather and it's a good picture. Patrons said, picture does not follow book closely. Good paper. Appeal good. Sunday maybe, special questioned. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MAN OF THE FOREST. Star, Jack Holt. Best Zane Grey picture to date. Book and boost it. Business good. You can't go wrong. Tone O.K. Appeal 80 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 3,500. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (350 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

SO'S YOUR OLD MAN. Star, W. C. Fields. A dandy comedy that will please any audience. Paramount here most certainly delivers the goods. Tone O.K. Appeal 85 per cent. Draw mixed class, town 3,500. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (350 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

WE'RE IN THE NAVY NOW. (5,519 feet). Stars, Beery-Hatton. This is just about the best comedy picture we have ever shown here. Is so far ahead of the Lloyds for entertainment purposes that there can be no real comparison. My crowd were wild about it. They talked it on the street and sent their friends to see it. Some even came back to see it again. Don't forget, Mr. Zukor, that we have the Aviation Corps, the Marines and the militia, as well as student officer training camps. Appeal good, Tone, Sunday, special O. K. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

WET PAINT. Star, Raymond Griffith. Very good comedy. Tone good. Special no. R. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Natoma, Kansas.

Pathe

DEVIL HORSE. Star, Rex. Very good picture in every respect. Pleased the patrons. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Draw farming, merchant class, town 1,650 widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Producers Dist. Corp.

BACHELORS' BRIDES. Star, Rod La Rocque. This is another good program picture that will please your average audience. Appeal 80 per cent. No as special. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

DICE WOMAN. Star, Priscilla Dean. This star has no following here and the picture is not worth any more than program service. Business slumped below normal. Tone none, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

MADE FOR LOVE. Star, Leatrice Joy. An excellent program attraction that will please your regular fans. It is not a big picture nor did it do a big business; but a very pleasing little program picture. Appeal 80 per cent. Special no. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

WITHOUT MERCY. Only a fair program attraction that flopped from every standpoint. Has no drawing power; however not the worst picture ever made. Barely will get by as a program attraction. Appeal 60. Special no. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

United Artists

A TAILOR MADE MAN. Star, Charles Ray. This is old but you can buy it cheap and it is good. All the people who haven't seen it and some who have already seen it will enjoy it as I did. Tone fair. Sunday no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 10-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

TUMBLEWEEDS. (8 reels). Star, W. S. Hart. This is one of the best pictures we have played this season. Appeal 100 per cent. Special no. Draw farming class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre (150 seats), Stark, Kansas.

WILD JUSTICE. Star, Peter the Great. This is an old picture but I believe it is the best dog picture that I ever saw. His acting was almost human. If you haven't played it, don't pass it up as it should please anywhere. Tone fine, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

Universal

CALL OF COURAGE. (5 reels). Just a fair western. Nothing exciting, not very much action, though the horse and dog were very interesting and their acting good. A fairly good picture for small country town. Appeal 70 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

LITTLE GIANT. (7 reels). This picture would have been a good one if the first two or three reels had been omitted. They were tiresome. After that there was comedy and good acting. Sunday yes, special no. Appeal 70 per cent.

RED HOT LEATHER. (5 reels). Star, Jack Hoxie. Five reels of good entertainment that we usually put on with a weak society feature. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

RIDIN' RASCAL. Star, Art Acord. These Universal westerns are all good, clean, snappy program pictures that are just what the western element of our audience want. Hokus, but will please the rougher classes. These are better than the average western independents. Appeal 70 per cent. Specials, no. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

RUNAWAY EXPRESS. This is a good Saturday picture that pleased here and in Railroad towns it will go over fine. A good picture that will stand advertising big where you have this class of people. Will not appeal to the highbrows, however. Appeal 80 per cent. Special no. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SPORTING LIFE. Start, Bert Lytell, Marian Nixon. A little bit too sporty for a quiet country town. Probably true to fast sporting English life but did not especially appeal to country patronage. Sunday or special no. Appeal 60 per cent. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

TRIPLE ACTION. Star, Pete Morrison. Fair picture with some comedy and enough action to interest a small town patronage. Sunday yes, special no. Appeal 70 per cent. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

TWO FISTED JONES. Star, Jack Hoxie. This picture has been generally rated as a poor one but I consider it good for a small town. Not enough action but the comedy is good, and the acting fair. Sunday yes,

Special Delivery

The following report arrived special delivery from our good "Gang" member, James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana:

FIRE BRIGADE (Metro-Goldwyn). Stars, Charles Ray, May McAvoy. Here is a spectacular picture with an excellent cast: it is splendid entertainment. This movie really glorifies the firemen of America and at the same time it drives home a powerful lesson. Some of the picture is in Technicolor and oh, what a wonderful sight to see the flames and smoke belching from the engines' stacks. There are some wonderful opportunities to exploit this picture through the Fire Department. Don't be uncertain about this, it's a great picture and it will make everyone hold onto the arms of their chairs.

special no. Appeal 75 per cent. Draw suburban class. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

WHAT HAPPENED TO JONES. Star, Reginald Denny. A comedy that is better than the ordinary. Entirely satisfied the average patronage. Amusing situations that will appeal to any audience. Sunday yes, special no. Appeal 90 per cent. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

Warner Bros.

MY OFFICIAL WIFE. (8 reels). Star, Irene Rich. Wouldn't want to run one of these very often. Good picture for its type. Title, and paper, hurt business. It just drew the better class. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

OH, WHAT A NURSE. Star, Syd Chaplin. Not the draw that his other picture was, The Man on the Box. Did a fair business. I think the picture, alone, would do a little better—I used it with a radio broadcasting station and played to less than ordinary business. Tone none, appeal 60 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

WOLF'S CLOTHING. (6 reels). Stars, Monte Blue, Patsy Ruth Miller. A splendid picture that is packed with action. Entire cast sure does work in this one. My bunch got a surprise on the ending. Cold weather hurt business. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Miscellaneous

MAN FROM TEXAS. Star, Tom Mix. An old picture, but a very good one. Played one night, to a fair house. Attendance not good on account of cold weather. Tone fair, appeal 75 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 500. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

PERILS OF THE COAST GUARD. Star, Cullen Landis. Wholesome and clean program picture, but action slow. Dorothy Dwan again very good and easy to look at. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

Short Subjects

BRUISERS AND LOSERS. (F. B. O.-series). This chapter, Bill Grimm's Progress, 2 reels, is not so laugh-packed but it is entertaining and they never walk out on these. Say, Cooke and Guard, I'll give you till the 4th of July to send me your pictures. We've played all your stuff and glad to get it. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

BUSTER'S HUNTING PARTY. (Universal-Buster Brown). The best one of the Buster Browns so far. Lots of outdoor action. Pleased both young and old. H. V. Ritter, McDonald Theatre, McDonald, Kansas.

DESPERATE DAN. (Universal-western). Here is a two reel western that is as funny as most comedies. Good for either short western or as a comedy. H. V. Ritter, McDonald Theatre, McDonald, Kansas.

DON KEY, Son OF BURRO. (Pathe-all star). Judging from remarks made by departing patrons, Pathe's efforts were not very highly appreciated here. It's the old gag of picturizing a story told by one of the actors in the film. Tone fair enough, appeal weak. Sunday yes. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DRAMA DE LUXE. (Educational-Lupino Lane). Another burlesque on little town theatricals and, as usual, a tame laugh producer. Lupino deserves better vehicles than stories such as this as he is a real comedian. He ought to be in fast action slapstick stuff. Tone O. K., appeal none. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FATAL FOOTSTEPS. F. B. O.-Whirlwind comedy. This is the second of the Whirlwind comedies and a very good one; but not as good as the first one. Better buy these as I believe they will go over in fine shape. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre, Lamont, Oklahoma.

FIGURES OF FANCY. (Educational-Hodge Podge). A novelty reel that's always good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

FOX COMEDIES. I consider Fox a real factor in the two reel comedy field. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre, Kinsman, Ohio.

HERE COMES CHARLIE. (Educational-Lloyd Hamilton). An extra good comedy. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HOLD YOUR HAT. This is a real one and it makes them all roar. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

HOOT MON. (Educational-Bobby Vernon). Hardly a laugh that Vernon got. Jack Duffy seemed to get the laughs, but this comedy can only be classed as fair. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

THE LIGHTNING SLIDER. (F. B. O.-series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. The seventh chapter of Fighting Hearts and a very good one. This series is holding up in fine shape. Play them as they are really better than most of the comedies. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre, Lamont, Oklahoma.

LITTLE MISS BLUFFIT. (F. B. O.-series). Stars, Cooke and Guard. One of Bill Grimm's Progress series that wasn't as good as the others. First reel taken up in a "treasure hunt" but second reel has a good deal of action in it. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

NOBODY'S BUSINESS. Money wasted here—not worth showing. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

RADIO DETECTIVE. (Universal-serial). This is a very good serial. A great drawing card for the Boy Scouts. Plenty of action. This is a serial that is really different. Tone very good, Sunday yes. H. V. Ritter, McDonald Theatre (275 seats), McDonald, Kansas.

UKELELE SHEIKS. (Pathe-Gleen Tryon). Tryon shown as the star but Jimmie Findlayson deserves just as much credit for making this the fine comedy that it was. Here's a little subject that will make anybody laugh. If this one doesn't send them out in good humor, it is because they are blind. One look at Findlayson's antics will make them grab their sides and holler "nuff!" Tone O. K. Appeal strong. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WHAT'LL YOU HAVE? (Excuse Makers-Universal). Some parts good; some fair. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

An Easter Fantasia

A Moving Picture World Presentation Devised by O. T. Taylor

A NUMBER of presentation ideas could be advanced as suitable and appropriate for Easter. A setting depicting the door of a cathedral, barely discernible in the dim light, with a singer attired as a nun, rendering vocal selections. Or more elaborately staged; showing the inside of a cathedral, stained glass windows in the background, with fitting renditions by choir boys, or by a mixed chorus of nuns and choristers.

Then there is the lighter, joyous vein; perhaps not quite so artistic, not so classical, yet pleasing and entertain; a fantasy introducing the beloved Easter characters,—chicks and bunnies.

A combination of the classical and fantastic should prove ideal for presentation purposes, with routine suggested as follows:

THE ROUTINE—Part One.

Organ prelude, "Ave Maria," Gounod. Organist in soft white overhead spot. Chimes. Spot on organist dimming out as drapes part to a dim stage showing a cathedral art glass window, softly illuminated from behind, set in a dark colored plush, split cyc. A soft white spot reveals the head and bust of soloist, in nun's garments, singing "The Rosary," Nevin. Light behind window dims, spot out on singer who exit. Stage almost dark; music to "Cherry Blossoms," Friml, as window and cyc flies, revealing a woodland scene.

Part Two

The scene is in blue light. A full moon hangs high in the sky; fantastic trees and flower-strewn hills in the distance; and in the foreground, big trees with low hanging foliage.

Under one of the trees is a nest of eggs of enormous size; under another tree the dark mouth of a burrow. The moon is gliding slowly to the left and down. A rose glow appears on right horizon.

A bunny appears in the burrow, peeks out, then disappears again. The moon pales as it glides, now low on the sky, behind the trees at the left. The light at right is increasing; dawn breaks. Red, then amber up gradually in front, canary up back. Birds begin to sing, frogs croak, etc.

A little girl romps on from left, stopping to pick flowers as she performs a light airy dance. (Number choice of ballet master.) She discovers the nest of eggs, approaches and stops in a listening attitude, an expression of surprise on her face; then a startled exclamation as the eggs break open and several chicks appear.

Introduce barnyard dance, suggested music, "A Rustic Festival," Zamecnik, with a hen or rooster, or both, furnishing comedy. The bunnies, as many as consistent, now emerge from the burrow, popping out and in again before they remain out. Tumbling or acrobatic dance by the bunnies. Finish with ensemble number.

This presentation can be made very effective, whether staged with professional or local talent. When using local talent, tie up with a dancing school. Give the dancing instructor an outline of the action and he will work up the numbers, adding the finesse so difficult to obtain by a producer more or less unversed in the fine points of dancing.

THE SETTINGS

Part one is very simple to stage, yet it is effective, consisting of a tab on which is painted the replica of a cathedral window. The set should be large and imposing with panes of translucent material and painted in imitation of stained glass. The cyc masking can be a stock hanging, preferably of dark colored material.

Part two, figures 1 and 2, is composed of the sky drop, A, which is semi-transparent dye, for use with moon effect; and a number of rows and profiles.

The ground row, B, of wall board, paper and frame construction, is set in front of the sky drop, with enough space between the two for a bank of lights for effects. This row is painted in distance colors, purple, blues, lavender; with a touch of orange and red on the high spots. The slender tree trunks in front of ground row, B, right, can be a leg, or cut from wall board and suspended from batten.

The egg row, C, is cut from wall board and nailed to a batten frame as shown in A, figure 3. Openings, heavy line, e, are cut in the eggs. The openings are covered with paper and the eggs decorated in approved Easter style. The paper covering, broken to admit the chicks, must be replaced for each performance and a number of decorated sheets of paper should therefore be kept on hand for this use. A backing, with top cover, as shown in ground plan B, fig. 3, is advisable, as the inside may be hung with dark colored material to aid in creating an illusion of the chicks coming from the inside of, rather than merely through, the shell.

This is also true of the raking piece, D, picturing the mouth of a burrow, E, (fig. 1). This piece, shown in detail in fig. 3, D, is also wall board on a batten frame; or a combination of wall board and paper, for economy; with an opening to lead to the burrow. Top and backing are necessary to create the appearance of a deep, dark, cave-like burrow. Paint to suggest earth bank, brown, buff and green predominating.

Do tree, rooted on top of earth bank, bright green foliage, olive green trunk and branches.

Big trees in front, F, figures 1 and 2 are cut from wall board, batted and painted in dark blue and purple, black shading, red and orange highlights. Foliage in dark green detailed in bright light green and blue.

"Bolshevik," Another Novelty Suggestion From Tex Howards Orchestra.

The drapes open to an impromptu cabaret scene on a dim stage. Left upstage a boy and girl are seated at a table with a bottle and glasses. A big, burly, bewhiskered bolshevik walks in, pipes the girl, knocks her boy friend into a trance and carries off the girl. Lights up to band, hidden behind big beards, playing "Oui oui, Oui oui, Bolshevik," going to singing on the chorus. Band repeats on number as the big bolshevik re-enters and begins to interfere with the band by talking to the musicians.

Novelty Suggestion

He continues until a barber, with a huge razor and dragging along a barber-pole, enters. The bolshevik, seeing the barber, strokes his beard and beats it; the barber, flourishing his razor, hot on the bolshevik's heels.

The band introduces a Russian dance strain with one of the members burlesquing the dance, then swing into "Oui oui, Bolshevik" again. The big bolshevik again appears, this time breaking in on the band with a clarinet, doing a sob burlesque on "Miserere" (Il Trovatore). The interference does not please the boys; they try to argue with him and finally, in desperation, pull out pistols and shoot him. (The pistols are of the toy variety that rings a little bell when the trigger is pulled). The bolshevik, supposedly hit, exits doing a burlesque dance step. The band joined by bolshevik repeat chorus and close hot. The parts, except that taken by the girl, were played by members of the band.

The bolshevik number was the comedy stunt used to lend variety to an excellent program consisting of a short standard Overture, Ballad, Song hit and popular number as presented by this popular Pacific Northwest Orchestra at the D. & R. Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash.

A handy way of cutting circles is contributed by Jim Emery. As shown in the diagram, a yardstick, or other thin flat strip of wood, is used as a compass. Cut a slit across the strip, about an inch from one end. Drive a small nail as far from the slit as the radius of the circle to be cut measures. Fasten nail in card or wall board to be cut; place the knife in the slit and draw the circle. A perfect cut as well as a true circle is the result.

By slanting the slit, and thereby the cutting knife, various degrees of bevels may be cut.

Knife blades, called in the shoe trade upper-cutters blades, have been found to be of superior steel, taking a keen sharp edge and holding it. Adjustable hollow handles for use with this sort of blades are obtainable.

around the streets or lingering near the drinking resorts. She also hits the nail on the head when she remarks that "our elders—magistrates, editors, and busybodies—who see so much harm in certain kinds of films and plays and books, perhaps enjoy being unpaid censors." Human nature is the same the world around.

In the matter of film handicaps, she finds the lack of good film stories and the meddling of many minds the chief objections. That too many cooks spoil the artistic broth is apparent far east of Hollywood.

She further objects to the overemphasis given to character drawing, and does not feel that cruelty is fully characterized by kicking at a dog any more than scant and luxurious robes should be the hallmark of easy virtue. She would have the character more carefully built up, but finds a strong movement in the right direction here.

Her appraisals of the producers are as interesting as her estimation of the players. It is well worth reading.

It is impossible to more than skim the cream in a review. It would be unfair to the author to try and do more. She is entitled to full reading, for she has sought earnestly and intelligently to appraise the pictures, finding more good than bad, more hope than discontent; an example our own daily press writers might well follow were they less intent upon demonstrating their own superiority. Miss Barry understands and appreciates the movies. She is neither ashamed of nor above her profession. In the language of the day, she knows her onions, and therefore she is interesting.

water, to continue their chases along the streets. Weeping children emerged from the doors, in search of their lost pets and Henderson, dripping with water turned to face Fairbanks.

Two hours later, from adjoining cells, they patched up the truce. Henderson has the first and third weeks of each month. Fairbanks gets the second and fourth. The race had been run to a tie.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912.

of Moving Picture World, published weekly at New York, N. Y., for April 1, 1927.
State of New York
County of New York—ss.

Before me, a notary in and for the State and County aforesaid, personally appeared A. J. Chalmers, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the vice-president of the Chalmers Publishing Co., publishers of Moving Picture World and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section, 411, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are Publisher, Chalmers Publishing Co., 516 5th Ave., New York City; editorial director, F. G. Ortega, 516 5th Ave., New York City; managing editor, Epes W. Sargent, 516 5th Ave., New York City; business manager, Ervin L. Hall, 516 5th Ave., New York City.

2. That the owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding one per cent. or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a firm, company, or other unincorporated concern, its name and address, as well as those of each individual member, must be given.) Chalmers Publishing Co., 516 5th Ave., New York City; J. P. Chalmers, 516 5th Ave., New York City; J. F. Chalmers, 516 5th Ave., New York City; E. J. Chalmers, 516 5th Ave., New York City.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or hold 1 per cent. or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

George H. Chase, of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences and professor of fine arts; A. C. Coolidge, professor of history and director of the library, and Chandler Post.

"Here was something that deserved to be chronicled to the world: the professors of fine arts, of Greek and of history proposed a meeting to discuss the movies which are a matter of international concern and business importance and general criticism. No one who ever knew the Yard at Harvard has ever subscribed to Harvard's fictitious failure to subscribe to the currents of the time; but this was a demonstration.

"The luncheon was given on January 14 to the group proposed and, in the same week, George H. Edgell, professor of fine arts and dean of the faculty of architecture, was consulted, and the opinion of the whole group was one of unqualified enthusiasm and they wanted to know what the president would think, so Professor Sachs for the fine arts saw him in a few days and he said all right.

"Then Sachs, Forbes and Chase invited Kennedy to luncheon that being the nationally accepted moment for discussing almost anything, and the luncheon was at the home of Professor Sachs four or five days later. At that luncheon they formulated a plan and drew up a letter to Will Hays to submit to the motion picture industry. It was signed by three men and posted to Hays in New York, and he wasn't in New York, but Kennedy telephoned to him in California, and Hays took the matter of the fine arts interest up with the movie men then on the coast. Here was the old red brick college at one end of the line and the magnificence of the industry in California at the other.

"The movie men who were talking were the upgrowth of an industry that has been accused of everything uncomplimentary in sensationalism; the Cambridge men who were interested have been charged insitutionally with most of the terrors of a proudly lowbrow nation. They were getting together. It was very strange. It was even sensational.

Plan Drawn Up

"Some telegraph correspondence followed, and Mr. Hays suggested the drawing up of a plan by Harvard for the producers to conform to. Then, on Friday, Feb. 11, Professor Sachs and Mr. Seymour happened to be in New York and Mr. Hays, informed of their presence, asked them to an informal discussion. The detailed plan in which Mr. Hays was interested was in the meantime being drawn up at Harvard, largely by Mr. Post, and in time Harvard gave the plan to Mr. Kennedy, who forwarded it to the motion picture organization. Then, on the fine arts, the thing waited for Hays to come to Boston, and on March 15, at Mr. Forbes's, after a meeting of the fine arts and business groups, the story of the archive was given briefly to the public.

"Kennedy had completed the arrangements for the business lectures in the meantime and on March 14 lectured at the business school himself, his subject being an introduction to the discussions that were to come.

"The course was to meet on Mondays and Wednesdays at 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon and on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, at ten o'clock in the morning, and was required of all students in their second and final year in the Business School. One of the purposes was to develop the point of view of the executive in dealing with problems as they arise in specific trades and industries.

"Since the case system is being used, several cases were secured for the students to study while the lectures were being given. The students were to be presented with cases by the speakers so that the students would have sufficient information to write reports upon them.

"Mr. Kennedy outlined the plan of the lectures and the lives of the men who would speak. Those men had planned speeches in conformity with the problems of the school, but they sometimes changed their lectures when they went to the platform. They were human men who met human audiences, practical minded, minded according to their experience and their liking.

"After Mr. Kennedy's introduction Mr. Hays was to speak on the industry; Mr. Lasky on production management problems; Mr. Zukor on executive management; Mr. Kent of Famous Players-Lasky on distribution; Mr. Cochrane of Universal on advertising and exploitation; Dr. Giannini, who has real reason to know his subject, on finance; Mr. Fox on foreign development—although he took another text, as it happened—Mr. Loew on theatre management; and Mr. Warner on the developments in motion pictures. Mr. Kennedy wound it up this morning with a word about the future.

Lectures Crowded

"The lectures were crowded; the questions from the floor were intelligent. It became clear to the students that there was a field for them in the industry of the motion picture. It became clear to the motion picture men that here was human material with which to freshen their business.

"In the mornings they talked at the business school, in the afternoon they went to Fogg. They were getting a tremendous reaction from all of it. They found themselves treated as human beings with courtesy. They were the guests of Harvard and Harvard did not advertise their arrivals.

"They came to Back Bay station, one by one, and walked to their hotel unmet by photographers and reporters. That was new to them. They lunched with intelligent men who found out that they were lunching with intelligent men. It was something that stirred up a certain excitement on both sides.

"And in the business school they had their experiences. It was Sidney Kent who told the class that the motion picture business had unique problems; never had those problems been met before; and he was answered chapter and verse from the lessons of the school that problems just like his had been a part of the course.

"Such ground as this is justly a common meeting place; it stimulated interest on both sides; it made the students keen, it suggested to Mr. Kent that there was room for such students in the remarkable industry of which he is a part.

"Mr. Hays was tremendously interested in what he saw and heard. Mr. Lasky, visiting the Fogg Museum, observed the system of lighting and exclaimed that if the movies had understood that years ago they would have saved millions. He was seeing art in terms of business.

"Mr. Zukor was affected by his experience; he felt his responsibility, he said, more than he had at the moment when he once borrowed ten millions. And so it went. Both sides developed the immediate respect that was due each other.

"The lecturers told their stories without hindrance. They told them the more freely because the press was not allowed at the meetings. They were talking pretty nearly from their business and artistic hearts. Zukor, for instance, told his real story for the first time before a gathering. Fox, who started with a sixteen hundred dollar theater, and within a week or so bought Roxy's theater for fifteen millions, intended to talk about the foreign problem and ended by telling what had happened to him as a pioneer.

Fox Tells Story

"He sat for a moment in his seat before he walked up to the platform, a round headed, thin haired, swarthy man, with a small moustache. He took his stand, a little portly, quite calm, observant of the big room. He began in the smoothest voice possible; he showed fight when two youngsters in the back of the hall did something to bother him.

"He would not be so rude if he were in their position and they in his, he said. He would sit down or they would change their conduct. And he went on with his speech as if nothing had happened. But he remembered—he has a turn of humor—and when he was amusing and the pair in the back laughed responsively half an hour later, he told them openly that he knew he could get them if they gave him a chance.

"Both the Business School and the fine arts department have profited by their acquaintance with the lecturers from the industry that Harvard invited to itself. As for the industry, it had the intelligence to send its top line men; they appreciated their opportunity and were frank enough to express their pride in it. Harvard's recognition meant a great deal to them; Harvard's approbation of their intelligence did them no harm.

The university plan to judge their pictures at the end of each year is something that one needs not to belong to either industry or university to appreciate the value of. The judgment will come too late to be used for advertising propaganda; it will at the same time offer something valuable for directors to shoot at. That the directors will do it no executive has any doubt. Mr. Fox remarked that a picture called "The Last Laugh" was the greatest picture he knew, although it had not been a financial success.

"He talked before his class like an emotionalist whose emotions all passed through his head. In one kind and another his conferees made similar impression. The story of the juncture of the newest of the arts with the oldest of the universities speaks something of praise for the sensitiveness to the times of both."

Set April 25-28 For S. M. P. E. Spring Meeting at Norfolk, Va.

THE good-will accorded the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in recognition of their growing importance as a factor in the motion picture industry at their last gathering, bids fair to be eclipsed by the interest already displayed in the announcement that the S. M. P. E. will hold its Spring meeting April 25 to 28, inclusive. The Hotel Monticello, Norfolk, Virginia, is stated as the place arranged for the meeting.

Combining, as it does, the best engineering skill and the most forward-looking thinkers and workers for better motion picture engineering, it is natural that widespread interest attaches to each assemblage of the Society, at which constructive papers are read and constructive steps disclosed that give an entire industry food for thought and discussion of an advancing nature.

Both the time and the place selected for the Spring meeting are especially attractive. Norfolk can be reached by rail, by boat and by motor car, and it is at its most charming aspect in late April. Folders giving full particulars of routes, hotel rates, railway and boat accommodations and arrangements are at the disposal of those who will write to L. C. Porter, secretary, Fifth and Sussex streets, Harrison, New Jersey.

The boat trip is a very fine one, says Mr. J. C. Kroesen, who can be reached at the Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, New Jersey. Mr. Kroesen urges that communications be sent to him making arrangements for that method of travel so that sailing can be taken on the Old Dominion Line boat leaving New York at noon, Saturday, April 23, as any other sailing must be arranged directly with the Old Dominion Line.

The chairman of the Arrangements Committee, William C. Kunzmann, is displaying energy and enthusiasm equal to that with which he and his committee made such a success of the last meeting: a splendid program of instructively interesting papers and a list of entertaining features both for the gentlemen and for the ladies, is provided. J. I. Crabtree is in charge of paper, Lester Isaac is in charge of projection, and J. C. Kroesen will arrange the outdoor sports, golf, and the ladies' card and tea party.

Meeting Offers Strong Program

The program of events and papers follows:
MONDAY, APRIL 25:

9:30—Registration.

10:30—Presidential Address by W. B. Cook, Kodascope Libraries, Inc., New York, N. Y. New Business. Report of Arrangements, Publications, Papers, Publicity and Advertising, and Membership Committees. "Report on Progress in the Motion Picture Industry," by Carl E. Egeler, National Lamp Works, Cleveland, Ohio. "Hollywood and the Motion Picture Engineers," by K. C. D. Hickman, Research Laboratory, Eastman Kodak Company.

COMPETENT — RELIABLE COUNSEL

The Exhibitor is confronted today with a very serious problem of how to make his theatre PAY.

There are many angles in the situation, not the least of which is the proper equipping of the theatre itself.

Consult the members of this Association in all such matters.

Your requests for counsel and suggestions will receive prompt and competent attention, as practically every manufacturer and dealer member in this Association has special facilities for such service.

You can depend upon the reliability and unquestionable value of their suggestions.

Many Perfectly Equipped Theatres Planned for The Coming Season

Louisville, Ky., March 30.—Rumors heard in Louisville a week or more ago regarding the plans of the Keith-Albee interests, to remodel the Majestic Theatre, and turn it into a two-a-day, or reserved seat vaudeville house, were confirmed in New York yesterday, in announcement by E. F. Albee, of plans for a chain of such houses, or "Band Box Theatres." East of the Mississippi, operating under entirely different policy from the present continuous vaudeville houses, in which there are no reservations, while the Orpheum will inaugurate the same policy west of Chicago.

Louisville, Ky., March 30.—The Broadway Amusement Enterprises started operation of its fifteenth link in its chain of local theatres on March 4, with the opening of the new Oak Theatre, at Eighteenth and Oak streets, in the suburbs. The company now has a widely scattered chain over the city, with several downtown theatres, and others in the heart of various community districts. The new theatre occupies a site 90x175 feet. The building is fireproof, well equipped with exits, and ventilated with machinery with a capacity of changing the air every two minutes. It seats 1,400 people, seats being large and comfortable, and the incline sufficient to give every seat a good view of the screen.

A silver screen and modern new projection machines have been installed. There is also a large organ. Lighting is of the indirect type.

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 30.—Visualizing the most beautiful theatre in the Charleroi district, according to Pittsburgh's standards of "the theatre beautiful," Robert S. Coyle, manager of the Coyle theatre, last week announced that the contract has been awarded for the complete remodeling and improving of the present playhouse. The improvement will cost $100,000, and will require seven months to complete. Work will be planned and carried on so that there will be no interference with present daily programs. The plans have been approved by the Department of Labor and Industry at Harrisburg. Walter S. Rockwell, Charleroi contractor, has been awarded the contract. The theatre is to be enlarged to cover the entire Coyle lot, in McKean avenue, on a portion of which the theatre now stands. The new building will cover a section 66 by 100 feet, with a huge balcony and a modern stage, amply large to care for large production. The New Coyle will provide seating capacity for 1,200 people with four foot aisles terminating in fire exits at convenient locations.

GIBSONBURG, O.—Moelkenbur Construction Company, Woodville, O., has general contract for converting store building into two-story brick moving picture theatre and office building, 25 by 80 feet, for D. B. Follet. Estimated cost, $30,000.

FALLS CITY, NEB.—Busboom Brothers have general contract for one-story theatre, 120 by 50 feet, to be erected for Blaine Corporation, Beatrice, Neb. Estimate cost, $75,000.

HADDONFIELD, N. J.—William Freihofer, 20th and Indiana avenue, Philadelphia, has plans by Hodgins & Hill, 130 South 15th street, Philadelphia, for theatre, store and apartment building. Estimated cost, $200,000.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Morris Dengasch, 32 Court street, has plans by A. Weiser, 518 Madison avenue, New York, for one-story theatre and store building, 153 by 249 feet, to be located at 9702-18 Kings Highway. Estimated cost, $300,000.

FLUSHING, N. Y.—105 Northern Boulevard Corporation & 24 Main Street Flushing Corporation, J. B. Fuss, president, has plans by C. A. Sandblom, 145 West 45th street, New York, for one-story theatre and store building, 82 by 232 feet, on Northern Boulevard. Estimated cost, $350,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Alexander L. Pincus, 565 Fifth avenue, has plans by H. J. Krapp, 1 West 47th street, for two-story theatre, 123 by 100 feet, to be located at 244-54 West 52nd street. Estimated cost, $300,000.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—241 West 42nd Street, Inc., Isidore Zimmer, president, 285 Madison avenue, has plans by Thomas W. Lamb, 644 Eighth avenue, for one and three-story theatre, 89 by 111 feet, at 241 West 42nd street. Estimated cost, $300,000.

ROME, N. Y.—Comerford Amusement Company, Scranton, Pa., and Kallet Theatres, Inc., J. S. Kallet, care Strand Theatre, 116 East Dominick street, this city, have plans by Leon Lempert & Son, Rochester, N. Y., for theatre, store and apartment building on East Dominick street.

ASHTABULA, O.—Palace Theatre, Paul Mueller, manager, Main street, has plans by Victor A. Rigamont, State Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., for new theatre, store and office building, to be located on Main street.

Transverter

Experience Counts

THE TRANSVERTER is so fundamentally correct in design, so sturdy in construction, so quiet and efficient in operation that with merely normal care and cleanliness, it will continue to operate year after year. Transverters have been in use since 1915—over twelve years—and these earliest installations are giving the same faithful service today as when first installed.

The Transverter produces steady, direct current and hence the arc is quiet and constant.

It is by far the best known and most popular Motor Generator on the market.

Hallberg Is Compiling Data On Efficiency of Rectifiers

The laboratory of J. H. Hallberg is now busy compiling important data concerning the efficiency of all kinds of rectifying and current controlling devices.

These tests not only include the ordinary electrical tests, which disclose the efficiency, but they also go into the matter of power factor so that when ultimate efficiency figures are obtained they will represent a true state of affairs.

There has never been submitted a real series of comparative figures—somehow or another the theatre owners and projectionists have taken for granted what was told them, and it is hoped that the figures which will be submitted by the Hallberg laboratory in the near future will be complete in every respect.

Mr. Hallberg also states that he is investigating and testing several important additions to the projection in modern theatres, and that he is developing a line of new "effect" apparatuses which are claimed to produce startling results on the stage and screen. It is possible that one of the large makers of stage lighting appliances may become interested in this branch with Mr. Hallberg, in case he should decide not to distribute the new apparatus himself.

National Supply Company Issues Comprehensive House Organ

THE "National Pink Sheet," a combination house organ and catalog, issued by the National Theatre Supply Company, has become quite popular with exhibitors throughout the country. The publication, embodying 48 pages and cover, is published on the tenth of each month and is sent to every exhibitor in the United States as well as all purchasing agents and officials of theatre circuits.

Sixteen pages of the book are devoted to the catalog section, in which all supplies and accessories handled by the National Company are illustrated, described and priced and a list of used and rebuilt equipment is also given. The remainder of the book is devoted to equipment news and doings throughout the country, display advertising and special articles on the subject of equipment by manufacturers and their engineers.

The Pink Sheet is devoted strictly to equipment as a subject matter and many instructive and constructive articles and news of interest appear in each issue. George E. De-Kruik and J. Harry Toler are editors of the publication and both are peculiarly fitted by experience in the equipment industry to treat the subject in a most interesting and comprehensive manner.

BRICELYN, MINN.—Unique Theatre, recently damaged by fire, will be repaired and other improvements made so as to make the house more up-to-date.

MONETT, MO.—Gem Theatre is being re-decorated.

GOLD HILL, ORE.—Improvements will be made to Beaver Theatre, including refurnishing and increasing seating capacity.

Better Projection Pays

Wants to Know Why No Vitaphone Dope Is In

PROJECTIONIST Thomas L. Schultz, St. Louis, Mo., writes in and I am printing his letter because it is representative of some hundreds of letters received within the past few months. Friend Schultz says:

"Dear Brother Richardson: What is the matter with the Vitaphone people? They supply us with no information at all through our department, and I, for one, am all "het up," not knowing at what moment it may be chucked into our projection room.

"I assume, of course, that they have supplied our department nothing for publication, because I know it would have appeared had they done so, and it would seem they ought to know there are established mediums to which we have for years looked for information and instruction, chief of which is our projection department and your books.

"Suppose you tell them, for us, that we are not feeling so good about it. They will expect us to handle their stuff and get everything possible out of it, but calmly leave us up in the air until almost the last moment before we get it. I'm telling them and telling you that I'm not going to be very wild about getting maximum results out of the equipment when they treat us in such fashion. We have a projection department which we all, or about all of us, read every week. Why don't they tell us something about Vitaphone in it. I'm asking!

And you are not the only one who has been asking, by many hundreds, brother Schultz. You are, in my judgment, perfectly right in feeling resentment, but you must not fail to do your best with the equipment nevertheless.

As a matter of fact there is very little they could give you in the way of actual detailed instruction for the handling of Vitaphone, because it has been being changed and altered too rapidly. After a conference with Chief Engineer Watkins, of Vitaphone, I decided to leave it out of the new Bluebook for that very reason. Instructions which would be O. K. now might be largely worthless in a month; also the technique of operation had not yet been worked out satisfactorily.

Engineers Install It

However, the company might have and should long ago have told you, through this department and such other sources as projectionists are accustomed to look for projection information, that when Vitaphone is installed in a theatre, the installation is made by Vitaphone engineers, who remain on the job until the projectionist has received all necessary instructions.

They did not do so and as a result thousands of men have been confronted with very genuine anxiety, not knowing when apparatus concerning which they knew just exactly nothing at all would be thrust into their hands, and they expected to handle it. This has built up a feeling of resentment which is very fully justified.

This department is YOUR department and you have the RIGHT to expect that manufacturers of projection equipment will advise you through it of new things, especially apparatus they know very well you can have no knowledge of, because they know, or should know it is the place you have looked for such information for many, many years.

Question No. 571—Why is the neutral of an Edison three-wire system grounded and where.

Question No. 572—If both positive and negative be connected to earth would there necessarily be current leakage?

It was not, however, an intentional slight, but rather an oversight and a failure by very busy men to realize how you would feel about it.

LATER: Since writing the foregoing I have a letter from Mr. H. M. Wilcox, Operating Manager of Vitaphone. In part he says: 'We fully realize the interest Vitaphone has aroused, and the natural desire of motion picture projectionists to secure information with regard to its operation. However, since the maximum number of equipments we can obtain for installation during this year will not exceed 300, you will see that relatively only a few projectionists will require instruction within that time.

"It has been necessary to develop a very great deal of the technique in the operation of Vitaphone equipment from actual field operation, and thus far we have only been able to equip about fifty theatres, so that up to this time we have not felt we have had sufficiently reliable data to justify the formulation of written instructions.

"We hope, however, within a very short time to have something we can offer to you along those lines, and assure you we will be only too glad to co-operate with you in any practicable way."

That is both enlightening and satisfying. It shows a spirit of co-operation and fairness.

Too Much Grease Bad In Transverter's Cup

THE Hertner Electric Company advises us of a great deal of trouble caused by over-greasing the ball bearings of Hertner Transverters. Some projectionists even give the grease cup a twist every day, which not only is entirely unnecessary, but very harmful, in that it grounds parts of the machine with a mixture of grease and carbon dust which forms a current carrying bridge between the live parts of opposite polarity.

I would strongly advise all projectionists having Hertner Transverters to write the Hertner Electric Company, 1905 West 114th street, Cleveland, O., asking for explicit instructions concerning greasing the ball bearings, and FOLLOW THOSE INSTRUCTIONS IMPLICITLY. Over-greasing is ABUSING THE MACHINE, not giving it real care, however well intentioned your action may be.

So serious has this trouble been that the company has discontinued putting on grease cups of any sort. All Hertner Transverters will, in future, have merely a pipe and plug. You will be instructed to remove the plug and inject a SMALL quantity of grease ONCE EVERY SIX MONTHS, which will be ample to keep the bearing in good condition.

ANOTHER THING: The Hertner Company has for some while been sending with each new Transverter an information card, upon which it is noted that UNLESS THE CARD BE RETURNED TO THE COMPANY IMMEDIATELY AFTER INSTALLATION OF THE MACHINE, THE GUARANTEE UPON THE MACHINE WILL BE VOIDED.

And that is no idle bluff either. THESE CARDS ARE FOR THE INFORMATION OF THE COMPANY, and it is FOR YOUR BENEFIT that they be returned. There are many types and sizes of Transverter. The cards are designed to inform the company just what machine YOU have, so that in ordering brushes etc., when you forget to give machine name plate data, as OFTEN HAPPENS, the Hertner Company has only to refer to its files to know exactly what size and type of machine you have.

UNLESS THE COMPANY HAS THE THEATRE LISTED, TOGETHER WITH THE SERIAL NUMBER OF THE TRANSVERTER AND THE DATE OF ITS INSTALLATION, IT WILL BE IMPOSSIBLE FOR IT TO SUPPLY THE THEATRE WITH THE BEST POSSIBLE SERVICE.

Now, gentlemen, get busy fill out the card and SEND IT IN. If you have lost it, write the company at once, GIVING THEM ALL DATA CONTAINED ON THE NAME PLATE OF THE MACHINE, and the DATE OF ITS INSTALLATION.

Bluebook School Answers 558 and 559

Note:—This "School" is designed to arouse interest in the study of those many problems which constantly arise in motion picture projection, AND to cause men to really study the Bluebook and assimilate the vast amount of knowledge contained within its covers.

An apology: Brothers Charles Curle, Chattanooga, Tenn., and W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, N. Y., sent acceptable replies to the Philadelphia question, but numbered them 557, which was really correct, but as the make-up man had omitted the number, all other answers referred to it as R. G. B., and in selecting the answers from the file I did not realize that the "557" answers were to the R. G. B. question until too late. This is especially unfortunate in the case of Brother Curle, because he had made a most excellent drawing to take care of the angle matter, and that takes a lot of work and time. Apologies.

Question 558—What would be the amperage flow from one 25 ampere, 110 volt, and one 106 ampere, 110 volt rheostat connected in series, assuming the resistance of the arc to be one ohm? Show how you make your calculation.

Charles Curle, Chattanooga, Tenn.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Ia.; S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H.; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Ill.; "Bill" Doe, Chicago, Ill.; John Doe, Chicago, Ill.; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, N. Y.; John Tomlinson, Biloxi, Miss.; T. R. Bankerton, Wentzville, Mo.; G. R. Hahn, Memphis, Tenn.; Thomas MacNamara, Waltham, Mass.; T. R. Rand, St. Louis, Mo.; G. E. Lawrence, Jr., Sackville, Nova Scotia (Look who is here); Thomas Billings, London, England; Albert Hancock, Dallas, Texas; J. B. Shirley, Ashland, Oregon, Gilbert Atkinson, Cleveland, Ohio; A. D. Henley, Seattle, Wash.; P. Chatley, Toronto, Ont. (What has become of our old friend Dobson?); A. T. Bolyeson, Halifax, Ontario; T. Gregison, Indianapolis, Ohio, and F. D. Orenbacher, Truesdale, Mo., all sent in answers which I have passed, though some are not really correct, because they fail to remember that a 25 ampere projection rheostat is not a 25 ampere one except in series with a projection arc. But the answers I have passed were otherwise so carefully prepared that I just had not the heart to reject them entirely. Don't make such an important error again, though. I'm telling you!

It is suggested that they carefully examine the answer published and come to an understanding of their error. The answers of John Doe, Hanover, Gengenbeck and Cooley were pretty nearly identical, but I think Doe puts the thing a bit the best. I shall therefore publish his reply. He says: "In considering this problem we must assume that the rheostat is designed for projection purposes, else we shall be far afield and very much wrong in the results. The 25 ampere, 110 volt rheostat is not really that kind of an animal at all, but is designed to deliver 25 amperes (I assume the current to be D.C.) against (pages 395 and 400 of Bluebook) about 50 volts. Its resistance is in accordance with that value. It therefore follows that its resistance would be $(110 - 50) \div 25 = 2.4$ ohms.

But the 106 ampere rheostat would be planned to operate in series with a 106 ampere arc, which would be (I have no exact figures available for arcs of that amperage) about a 65 volts, I think, and the rheostat, by the same process above set forth, would have only $.42 \div$ ohms resistance.

We therefore have two resistances, one 2.4 ohms and the other .42 ohms, which added together (since rheostats in series become, insofar as concerns total resistance, one rheostat) make $2.4 \div .42 = 2.82$ ohms rheostatic resistance, which we must add the arc resistance of one ohm, which, while all very well for an illustrative problem, but won't do for actual practice, we now have a total of $2.82 \div 1 = 3.28$ ohms opposed to 110 volts.

$$\text{Applying Ohms law } \frac{E}{R} = C, \text{ or}$$

$110 \div 3.28 = 28.8$ amperes of current as the answer.

Note: If the current be A.C. the problem would be complicated by a slight choking effect present in the coils, if it be a coil rheostat, and I think also in a grid rheostat, though as to that I am not entirely certain. Moreover the arc voltage would be much less."

Question No. 559—Draw diagram of a multiple rheostat connection, tell us the result of such a connection and why that result obtains.

To the foregoing list of correct answers (Is that correct?) must be added the following: George Einzinger, New York City, W. R. Gwynn, Longmont, Colorado and T. Y. Fullerton, Des Moines, Iowa.

Several answers contained very carefully made drawings and I wish I might publish them all.

Curle says: "The definition of a multiple, or parallel circuit, as set forth in Hawkin's

Electrical Dictionary is: "An electrical circuit so connected that the current in the circuit divides, a part of it flowing through each of the two (or more. Ed.) portions of the circuit."

This definition gives us some idea of the action, but in order that the matter be made clear to the non-technical man, let us consider the manner in which Brother Richardson explains it in the Bluebook, figures 135 and 137.

In the upper drawing we see water main A carrying water at say 110 pounds pressure. Below it is pipe B which supplies a large water motor. Pipe B connects to pipe A by means of two other pipes controlled by valves C and D. Even a schoolboy can readily understand that if valve C be open and valve D closed, then pipe B and the motor will get only the amount of water, or the "flow," which pipe C will carry, whereas if both valves be wide open, then the motor will be driven by the full capacity of both pipes C and D. In other words, with both C and D open, pipe B will receive just double the quantity of water it would with only one of them open, assuming, of course, that the capacity of both pipes is not sufficient to effect a reduction in the 110 pound pressure of pipe A.

Examining the lower drawing carefully, you will see that the connection electrically is precisely the same as between pipe A and B above, except that we must understand that wire X replaces pipe A and wire Y pipe B, the lower wire being merely the return wire. The analogy would be heightened did we imagine the motor waste pipe as being connected, through a pump, to pipe A, so that the waste is again pumped back into pipe A and its pressure again raised to 110 pounds, which is precisely what it presumed to take place in an electric circuit.

Here Is Curle's Workmanlike Drawing.

Preordained

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

 At the Strand, New York, week March 6.
 Running time, 10 mins.

Looks as though these Will Rogers tid-bits will be able to play and click anywhere. This is the first in the series, with 11 more to come. No doubt about how the Strand received it on Sunday's first show, and every one was pretty much in favor of it.

Rogers is constantly in front of the camera pointing out historic or important high lights. The idea is that Bill, with his gum, takes the audience on a tour. Plenty of kidding in the titles and action, the conclusion to be drawn being that the series will flash Rogers chuckling various nations under the chin, including his own.

Confined to Dublin in this reel for multiple "types" being talked to by Rogers up to and including the President and Vice-President of Ireland. A military review, of brief footage, but titled for laughs, finished.

Breezy and easy to look at. Holding to 10 minutes, it should be a valuable link on any program, big or small.

The Champion!

Which would you rather have for a personal appearance in your house, the Champion himself or his challengers? The conqueror with a record or the Tom, Dick and Harrys who brag that they can lick him?

If mere claims brought championships, a flyweight could have Tunney's crown.

A champion doesn't just happen.

He becomes one on performance.

It's the champion that draws the big gates at fabulous prices. It's the champion's name that is on everyone's lips. It's the champion that people want, that multitudes fight to see.

Pathe News didn't get the championship by claiming it but by earning it.

For sixteen years it has been on the very top of the motion picture heap, and by the grace of God, hard work and brain power it's going to stay there.

It's easy to claim; but to expect something bigger and better in news reels over night is akin to expecting babies to be born 16 years old, equipped with a college education.

When you book the Pathe News you're getting a news reel, with a name that's worth millions of dollars to the exhibitors of the United States.

Good morning!
Jealousy is the whip that makes the mare go in this picture.

Two husbands entertain the green-eyed monster and let it roar. As a result much happens to teach the boys a needed lesson.

"Stolen Pleasures" is sensational but reasonable. The fairs the characters find themselves in are just the sort you read about in the papers every day or so. Primitive passions unleashed make an exhibition of themselves. It's all most exciting and convincing, really.

The picture is well produced. The cast is splendid. It seemed so nice to see Helen Chadwick again! I can't understand why she doesn't appear more often, for besides being an able actress she has a most delightful and appealing personality.

ANOTHER WORTHY COLUMBIA PICTURE IN 'PRICE OF HONOR'

B. S. MOSS' BROADWAY—"The Price of Honor," adapted to the screen from the story by Dorothy Howell; a Columbia production, directed by Edward H. Griffith.

THE CAST:

Carolyn McLane.....Dorothy Revier
Anthony Fielding.....Malcolm McGregor
Daniel B. Hoyt.....William V. Moon
Peter Fielding.....Gustav Von Seyffertitz

By REGINA CANNON.

"THE Prince of Honor," according to the picture unrolling at B. S. Moss' Broadway this week, is twenty years in prison or death. The story by Dorothy Howell is an intriguing murder yarn which reveals in detail the havoc circumstantial evidence can wreak on an innocent person.

The heroine's father has been convicted of murder and sentenced by the hero's father, who is a judge, to twenty years in the penitentiary. The old man is paroled because of good conduct and bad health, and comes home to die. He finds his daughter engaged to the son of the man who sent him up, and then the same judge turns vindictive and will not allow his son to marry the daughter of a murderer, the girl's father determines it is time to act.

Lays Trap for Hero

Since he cannot live long, anyway, he decides to pull the big self-sacrifice stunt and commit suicide after arranging a series of incidents that will convict the judge's son of slaying him. However, that the boy may be vindicated before he suffers too much, the older man leaves a note to be delivered to the father, confessing that his death has been self-inflicted.

Still, the best-laid plans of mice and men often go astray, and so the fateful note becomes lost in the rubbish heap and the young man is brought to trial. He is convicted on circumstantial evidence. It is indeed thrilling to see that by asking the wrong or the right (whichever the case may be) questions, a man is forced to answer in a way that will put him in bad with a jury. Fate intervenes, however, for it is, after all, a movie, and so the boy is saved at the eleventh hour.

Convincing Story

Columbia Pictures, an independent concern, made this film. It is the fourth good production this company has turned out in succession. Independent companies usually have little money to spend on high-priced stories, directors and talent. Yet often they get results that put the big organizations with plenty of wealth at their command to shame.

There is nothing cheap about "The Price of Honor" except its title. The story is well thought out, interesting and convincing. The direction is good, the continuity smooth and the camera work effective.

"The General" Wins Second Berlin Week

(Special Cablegram to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Berlin, April 14.—"The General," with Buster Keaton, has all Berlin laughing and holds over for the second week at the Capitol.

"The Film Journal," the trade publication of the industry, has opened a foreign department for cooperation with the American film press and the American industry.

The German division of United Artists has informed Phoebus—producer and theatre chain operator—that they will not take any kontigent from Phoebus for the season of 1927-1928. (Kontigent is a proportional permit in the distribution of film.) It is not made clear just what the agreement has been between the two concerns, but Phoebus threatens to take the matter to the courts.

Chaplin May Complete His "Circus" Here

Charlie Chaplin, who is cutting and titling the first half of "The Circus" at the Metropolitan Studios, this city, may produce the other half on that "lot." Carpenters and designers are at work on the settings and it is said that the comedian only awaits the season of clear weather to start building of an outdoor circus lot.

Unrecognized by the crowd, Charlie occupied a box at the opening of the real, big circus at the Madison Square Garden—defying the hoodoo by occupying Box 13—and seemed especially interested in the tumbling acts, though he was unquestionably impressed by the exhibition of the Flying Cadonas, whose daring trapeze act was a feature of "Variety."

Josef von Sternberg has been definitely assigned as the director for "Underworld," Paramount's forthcoming film of gangster life.

Motion Pictures Reveal New Worlds In The Realm of Scientific Research

Latest News of the British Film Situation

(By Cable from the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S London Correspondent, April 14)

At the second sitting of Commons the measure dealing with the illegality of blind booking passed the standing committee stage. The contrary amendment was defeated by a vote of 21 to 12. The Government amendment, tightening the bill, by preventing blind options, was carried by 21 to 12.

At the third sitting the safeguard amendment, subjecting films to the approval of the Board of Trade, was defeated by 21 to 11. A similar amendment, subjecting bookings to censorship board, was withdrawn. The Labor members quit the meeting, and, lacking a quorum, the sitting was adjourned until April 28. An important amendment, introduced by Lister, involving consultation with an advisory committee on the quota questions eases the trade position.

Talk By Dr. A. B. Hitchins At American Institute Luncheon Stresses Progress of the Art

By Merritt Crawford

THE rapid development of the motion picture in its relation to scientific investigation and research was stressed at a luncheon at the Town Hall Club on Thursday under the auspices of the American Institute of the City of New York. The speaker and guest of honor was Dr. Alfred B. Hitchins, Technical Director of the Duplex Motion Pictures Corp.

His announced subject was: "The Motion Picture, the Visual Link 'Twixt Science and Industry." Dr. Hitchins said, however, in his opening remarks, that a better and more descriptive title would have been: "The Motion Picture, Child of Science, Which Has Grown into an Industry."

The remarkable inventions of very recent years, Dr. Hitchins pointed out have made the motion picture a tremendous factor in advancing scientific research in every field. Its possibilities were now all but limitless and of incalculable value to every other industry and art.

The invention of the optical printer, which has done away with the necessity for contact printing, the only kind known up to four or five years ago, the development of the slow motion picture, and the motion picture speed camera, Dr. Hitchins said, had been all but revolutionary in their importance to science.

These improvements have made possible the study of many subjects which previously had of necessity remained in the realm of theory.

"Motion picture analysis may be roughly divided in two important parts," said Dr. Hitchins. "We can analyze motion by deliberately slowing up the action of very rapidly occurring changes or speed up the action of changes which occur during a considerable period of time. By speeding up the action, we can project on the screen in a few minutes the results of action that probably took months to occur, thus observing what has actually taken place for example, in the crystallization of 'fatigue' of steel.

"An example of the use of the slowing up of motion is the study of projectile flight. Projectiles that take but an instant of time to leave the gun and find their mark can be slowed up so that we can follow every movement on the screen. This has enabled us to acquire much very valuable information relating to all high explosives used in ammunition.

Mickey Daniels and Peggy Eaton, of "Our Gang" Comedies, came to New York on Sunday last on the same train that brought Cecil De Mille; were dined at the National Vaudeville Association, interviewed and photographed; in the evening they occupied a box at the Palace and were introduced to the audience by Lowell Sherman, who is just as popular in the films. Only he is not kidding!

De Mille Promotes Volck

Cecil De Mille announces that A. George Volk, his former production manager, has been appointed Assistant General Manager at the Culver City Plant. He is a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers and the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

During the war he served in various capacities and was chief engineer for the entire North Atlantic district. His eldest daughter, Alice Elizabeth Bates Volk, was recently married, in Paris, to Prince Johannes of Leichtenstein.

Lennox In Perspective

Fred Lennox, well known as a comedian on the stage and screen, and a directorial adviser, has been called into consultation and tests by an inventor, who is endeavoring to perfect a method whereby pictures can most effectively be shown without a screen—at least, the screen as we know it. The method is called Perspection, but details are unobtainable.

Record Broadcast

Vilma Banky and Rod La Roque announced their engagement on April 10 at Los Angeles and while the Associated Press broadcast the news the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. sent their telephotographs to the A. P. in leading cities for simultaneous publication with the announcement. This is one of the transmitted pictures.

Schwab With Sterling

Ben Schwab, for seven years intimately connected with film production and distribution, is now affiliated with Sterling Pictures Distributing Corporation.

Paul Lazarus, United's general sales manager for the south and west, has departed on a three weeks' trip through the southern territory.

Sol Wurtzel, Fox studio manager on the coast, has arrived in New York by way of the Panama Canal.

Pola Negri, on her way to a vacation in Europe, will arrive in this city on Sunday, April 24. She expects to be away for two months. She will visit her mother in Poland, but most of her time will be spent in Paris and Berlin.

Pauline Stark, who recently terminated her contract with M-G-M, has arrived from the coast to play opposite Ben Lyon in "Dance Magic."

Accompanied by Mrs. Cohn and Dorothy Howell, his assistant. Harry Cohn, Columbia's production manager, has started for the coast after a brief vacation in New York.

Emil Jannings, who has laid out a plan to see as much of America as he can during his stay here, is visiting Chicago before starting "Hitting for Heaven."

Creston E. Smith general sales manager of the Middle West for United, has started on a fortnight's trip through that territory.

C. C. Moskowitz, assistant to N. M. Schenck, executive vice-president and general manager of all Loew Theatres, returns from a two months' sojourn in Europe, on the Mauretania. During his tour Mr. Moskowitz visited all the Loew theatre properties in France, England and Germany.

George Fitzmaurice departed for the Coast on Wednesday last, to start work on "The Barker" for First National.

Sam E. Rork made a flying trip from Hollywood to the Great White Way to witness at the Strand the premier of his production, "The Notorious Lady." He is also looking for new dramatic material.

Charles Christie, who is part of the famous comedy personal trade mark, is making his regular visit to the city and will soon return to Hollywood.

Educational's director-in-chief, Jack White, with general manager E. H. Allen and Lupino Lane arrived from Hollywood on Monday last. Messrs. White and Allen will discuss next season's production with President Earl Hammons and return West within the next two weeks.

Irving Briskin, of Sterling Pictures, has started on a tour of the exchanges throughout the West and Middle West and will visit most of the key cities.

Warner's chief of extended runs, Maurice Safer, returns from a three weeks' trip in the Middle West with most glowing prospects.

William Fraser, general manager of Harold Lloyd, is expected to arrive this week for a conference with Sidney R. Kent, of Paramount.

Morris Safier, head of the Extended Run Department of Warner's Pictures, is back in New York after a three weeks' tour of key cities of the middlewest.

Pauline Ettinger, secretary to Ralph Block, editor-in-chief at the Paramount Long Island studio, has arrived in Hollywood.

Malcolm Stuart Boylan, responsible for the titles of "What Price Glory?" is due in New York from Hollywood this week.

Adhemar de A. Gonzaga, editor of Cine-Art, the largest film magazine published in Brazil, arrived in New York from Rio Janeiro on Tuesday last. He is at the Hotel Astor and intends to make a survey of the industry from all angles.

Stanley W. Hatch, recently appointed western sales manager for First National Pictures, left on Monday of this week for a swing around the western circuit. He will be absent twenty-eight days.

Salesmen and Trade Board To Form Joint Committee

The "Get-Together" Luncheon of the Motion Picture Salesmen at the Hotel Astor, on Saturday last, had a large and enthusiastic attendance, and will result in the formation of a joint committee of that organization and the Film Board of Trade to expeditiously consider constantly arising questions in selling. It was the suggestion of President William Wolf, of the salesmen, and its scope and value were emphasized, in turn, by Charles Rosenzweig, president, and Louis Phillips, executive secretary of the board.

A letter from Will H. Hays was greeted with warm applause, for he called the salesmen the very ambassadors of the industry and touched on the ethics of fair dealing. Felix Feist, Metro's general sales manager, in a brief address, said that poor sales made by a salesman made a poor sales manager; that anything that cannot go into a contract is something that has not been put right. Mr. Phillips declared that a large number of cases would not come before the Board of Trade if the salesmen do their work cleanly and conscientiously. And he added: "Don't knock the other fellow! It is poor sportsmanship, as well as bad salesmanship." He said that, in the new spirit of things, the unworthy man had no place in the film business for he reflected discredit upon the honest salesman.

The most entertaining speaker was W. K. Howard, whose "White Gold" is at the Roxy this week. He was, once upon a time, a salesman—and a clean, first-class one, at that. He vowed he felt thoroughly at home in the gathering and spoke of picture making and selling. He named whom he considered the greatest directors in the world today: Lubitsch, because his subtle influence in the treatment of vision and emotion; Mornau, for his technical influence; on Stroheim, great in his breadth and vision, belligerent in his influence—but always great; Cruze, a powerful human influence; Vidor, "great American director;" Seastrom, brilliant realist, being to the screen what Eugene O'Neill is to the stage; De Mille, not to be compared with the others, for, besides being a great imaginative artist, he is a gifted organizer and executive; Griffith, man of vision, without whose technical achievements, the industry would have been delayed ten years in its progress.

True Ambassadors

"The salesmen," said Will H. Hays in his "Get-Together" luncheon message, "are the special messengers of the producers and distributors to their partners, the exhibitors; and the reputation, the welfare and the largest success of their employers are peculiarly in their hands. They are the ambassadors, indeed, of industry good will. I am very certain, too, that they will proceed always in a generous spirit with each other and in an absolutely honest course of conduct with their customers."

Fox Seeks Albany Site

The Fox Film Company is said to be seeking a site in Albany, N. Y., on which to erect a large motion picture theatre. Representatives of the company were in Albany last week and inspected a possible site on State street, nearly across from the Hotel Ten Eyck, and upon which are now located a large restaurant and other business enterprises.

Lyric To Make Way For New Film Theatre

J. and J. Oppenheimer, who own and operate the American Theatre in St. Louis, has bought the Lyric Theatre property, in West Forty-second street, from the S. and S. Lyric Company, Inc., for $2,250,000, and it may be that a new motion picture house will occupy the site, with 2,000 seating capacity.

The structure contemplated at present would combine both theatre and a modern office building. All of which will depend upon certain negotiations with various connections now under way.

Hal Roach hears nice things said about his short comedies. The smile might well be a trade mark for them.

Roxy Star Feature Of Owners' Meet

Interest is quickened in the coming convention of Motion Picture Owners of America, at Columbus, Ohio, on June 7 and 8, by the announcement that the big feature of the gathering will be Samuel L. Rothafel—the one and only Roxy—and, from the interest and enthusiasm already manifested, the owners throughout the nation will warmly welcome the constructive message that he will bring to them. It will, of course, deal with success.

National President R. F. Woodhull, who induced his attendance, says that Roxy fully realizes the international importance of the gathering and that it will have the character of a super-university for theatre owners from all over the United States and Canada.

New Color Film And Real Thing!

Color in screen production is steadily improving and rainbow glory continues to come from the poets of science who deal with chromatic rhapsodies. The latest announcement comes from Joseph Shaw, president of United Color Pictures, who claims that the newest process is far superior to any others yet developed. And F. R. A. Theatrical Attractions also announces it will make colored pictures. The color will be furnished by Negro players.

Sonenshein Secures Series

Henry Sonenshein, president of the Goodwill Film Exchange, has secured the franchise for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey on the Hi-Mark Productions' new sporting series.

King's Sculptor Engaged

Senor de la Torre, noted Spanish sculptor, who came to America two years ago under direction of His Majesty, King Alfonso of Spain, to exhibit copies of world famous collection of Valasquez paintings, has been engaged to act as technical director for Raout Walsh during the making of Fox Films screen version of "Carmen."

The late John Eisele, banker and treasurer of Fox Film Corporation, whose funeral takes place this Saturday and of whom William Fox says: "Death has never called a kindlier or a truer friend, and no one will ever quite fill his place."

New Fireproof Building For Film Centre

M. and L. Hess, real estate brokers and associates, propose to start construction at the beginning of the coming New Year of a sixteen-story fire-proof building, in Forty-fourth street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, which, with municipal approval and the six leases, said to be already signed by the producers and distributors, will serve as a film exchange centre.

Service for 23 Years

C. H. Thompson and M. J. Trimble in 1904 established a motion picture policy at the Opera House, Plattsburg, Mo. The first program contained Pathe product. Each day since then there have been Pathe pictures on the bill.

"Valentino" Victims

Young Italians who aspire to be successors of Valentino—and they are numerous—have been victimized by a fake motion picture school in Florence, four of the directors of which have been arrested.

Frank Roehrenbeck, retiring president of the Loew-Metro Club.

Max Wolf, New Head Of Loew-Metro Club

At a meeting held in Loew's Theatre on Tuesday afternoon the following officers of the Loew-Metro Club were elected for the ensuing year: President, Max Wolff; vice-president, J. T. Mills; secretary, Dorothy Prendergast; treasurer, Harry Kleindienst; financial treasurer, A. Rosenstock. Board of Governors: Frank Roehrenbeck, Charles ("Doc") Steiner and Thomas Downs.

Mr. Roehrenbeck is the retiring president who modestly refused a renomination.

Back From Location

Arch Heath and E. Oswald Brooks, of Pathe, returned this week from Maine, where they had been scouting for locations for the next Pathe serial, "Still Face," written by Clarence Budington Kelland.

Postpones Trip

Elmer Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, who was scheduled to leave for the Coast early last week, suddenly decided to postpone his departure without announcement. It is believed that this change in plan may have resulted from the personal request of Cecil B. DeMille, who arrived in New York last Sunday, and who wished all important executives to be present at coming conferences of the Pathe-P. D. C. officials relative to the pending merger, in which it is now rumored First National will also play an important part.

Artclass Buys Screen Rights To All Craig Kennedy Stories

Max Weiss, president of Artclass Pictures, on Tuesday closed a contract with Arthur B. Reeve, well known author, for all the famous Craig Kennedy stories. The new contract, which supersedes a previous one covering the production of a series of two-reel features based on some of the Reeve mystery-detective stories, forms a blanket agreement between Mr. Reeve and Artclass for the picturization of any or all of his books and stories. All productions, however, will be of full feature length.

Max Weiss announces that four features will be made by Artclass this season with Craig Kennedy as the central figure.

The first of these will be "Pandora," the latest and most popular of Mr. Reeve's books, which has already gone through several editions and has been syndicated widely through the newspapers. Others which Artclass also plans to make are "Atavar, The Dream Dancer," "The Soul Scar," "The Adventuress" and "The Film Mystery," in all of which Craig Kennedy has the pivotal role.

Classroom Pictures In 12 Cities

A conference of educators will be held in this city on April 22 and 23 to consider the motion pictures, completed and in preparation, to be shown in four public schools of each of the following cities: New York City, Chicago, Detroit, Denver, Atlanta, Kansas City, Lincoln,

Rochester, Oakland, Winston-Salem, San Diego and Newton, Mass. At least forty pictures, of geography, elementary science and hygiene will be ready, it is announced, by the coming September. Special aeroplane pictures were made of the Panama Canal.

A Part For Sister-In-Law

Samuel Goldwyn has given his sister-in-law, Constance Howard, a part in the Colman-Banky picture, "The Magic Flame."

At What Price?

Is "What Price Glory" to have a sequel? We shall soon know, for Winifred R. Sheehan, of Fox, announces that his company will purchase the motion picture rights if Laurence Stallings and Maxwell Anderson would only write it.

Von Tilzer in Philadelphia

J. Von Tilzer, United Artists' exchange manager in Buffalo, N. Y., has been appointed manager of the Philadelphia branch, succeeding John Hennessey.

Levy's Anniversary Drive

Jules Levy's first anniversary as manager of First National's New York exchange will be celebrated by exhibitors in the metropolitan district during May.

Zanft on Bedford Board

John Zanft, vice-president and general manager of Fox Theatres' Corporation, has been appointed a member of the board of visitors of the New York State Reformatory for Women at Bedford by Governor Smith.

Goldhar Promoted

T. D. Goldhar, previously a salesman, has been appointed manager of United Detroit Exchange, succeeding Sidney Abel.

Back from Europe with plenty of Tyrolian atmosphere for his next Fox picture, John Ford, director of "The Iron Horse," departed on Wednesday last for Hollywood. He expects to assemble his cast and get to work as soon as possible.

New Fox Theatre in Bronx

Fox Theatres Corporation is to begin building within the next few months, a 5,000 seat theatre and business structure covering the entire block bounded by Tremont, Webster, Carter and 176th street. The project involves an expenditure of about $4,000,000 and the building will be six stories high, and only two blocks distant from the Fox Crotona, the largest theatre in the Bronx, opened about twelve years ago."

Another Roxy?

It is reported that Thomas McKenna, a well known real estate expert, is scouting for a location on lower Fifth avenue or in the Greenwich Village section suitable for a theatre in the Roxy Circuit. Options are said to be held by him now on two properties, either of which would be acceptable to the Roxy officials, if small additional parcels can be secured on satisfactory terms.

Wallach Now at Colony

Edgar Wallach, it is announced by Warner Bros., succeeds Joe Marks as manager of the Colony Theatre. Mr. Marks plans to return to Youngstown, Ohio, where he has been previously engaged in theatrical enterprises.

English Film Men Hear Hard Facts

At the annual General Meeting of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., the Right Hon. Lord Ashfield, chairman of the Company, made an address, in which he told that attendances at Company cinemas during present year compared with preceding year, increased by 485,000 or 3.4 per cent. Gross takings increased by £32,000 or 5.3 per cent. Net profit increased despite the General Strike. The average price of admission including entertainment tax, 1s. 0¼d—(25 cents)—compared with 11¾d (24 cents) preceding year; average annual earning per seat, including entertainment tax, £21.16.10 compared with £18.5.2 previous year. Revenue to Government from Entertainment Tax amounted to £114,937.

"In reference to the Cinematograph Films Bill," said he, "we entirely support Part I of the Bill, dealing with proposed restrictions on the practices of Blind Booking and Block Booking, so obnoxious to the Exhibitor. Regarding the remaining parts of the bill, dealing with the registration of all films exhibited in England and compelling renters and exhibitors to rent and exhibit a certain defined and increasing proportion of British Films—(produced within the Empire)—calculated upon a footage basis, while we are all anxious to establish a British film-producing industry, we are not satisfied that this object can ever be secured through any form of Legislation or Parliamentary enactment.

"Protective legislation may provide quantity—will it provide quality? In America now there are 17,000 picture theatres; estimated average weekly attendance sixty millions. In Great Britain there are 3,760 picture theatres with estimated average weekly attendance of 8 million people.

"Attraction of cinemas in America is three times as great as that in Great Britain. The estimated amount of capital invested solely in the production of films in America is equal to the total amount invested in the entire industry in this country. From this it would appear that British producers must be able to export their productions—to create a demand for them abroad—if they are to establish themselves on a solid economic basis. While the Company keeps to the opinion that the desired results can best be achieved by agreement within the industry, at the same time the Company will cooperate fully in carrying out the requirements of any Act of Parliament and give every assistance to make such an Act a success."

Hero Worship of Valentino

There exists in London a society whose sole object is to perpetuate the memory of Rudolph Valentino. It is the Valentino Memorial Guild, by its motto is "Toujours fidele" (always faithful). The notepaper bears a letter "N" surrounded by a laurel wreath embossed upon it. The Guild was founded in August last and the membership already runs into hundreds, with applications still coming in from all countries and all classes—men, women, children.

The President of the Guild is Miss Mercia Stanhope, 3 Warltersville Road, London, N. 19 (England), who states that the present purpose of the Guild is to defend the memory of Mr. Valentino and induce "the reshewing of the pictures of this great artist and gentleman."

Russian Buying Monopoly

Resentment is expressed in Berlin and London at the tactics of the Russian film buying monopoly, in squeezing down the prices of films bought for Russia from abroad. The strictly controlled foreign trade monopoly and the consequent shutting out of any competition gives the Russians a powerful pull when buying films or licenses, and they have offered prices which are but a fraction of the prices obtained for the same films in other countries. Sellers must accept the Russian prices or not make use of their licenses for Russia. At the same time the Russian produced pictures, infested with Russian propaganda thinly enough disguised, are sold in Germany and elsewhere abroad at full prices or rented on the usual terms.

"Numsee," Wilcox production, after a scenario by Edward Knoblock, is being made with Pauline Frederick as lead. She continues to draw big houses with her legitimate role of "Madame X" at the Lyceum Theatre, Strand—the biggest capacity theatre in London. "Madame X" will probably go on tour.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, during their last trip through Europe, spent some weeks in Russia. While in Moscow they met with a young producer of the new school, who fired them with the enthusiasm to take part in a film entitled "La Baiser (Kiss) de aMry Pickford." Further news is expected.

Slang in film titles from America would appear to need some translation before they are exhibited on this side, if the British picture-goers are to get the full enjoyment from such films.

Mementos of Valentino, such as autograph letters, dressing cases, etc., have been sold recently in London by public sale.

Paris Expects Pola as Guest; "Napoleon" Latest Big Film

(From the Moving Picture World special correspondent.)

Paris, April 6, 1927.

Pola Negri is expected in France, to be present at the Exhibitors' General Convention and at the fete to follow. The latter promises to be a great success. All the well-known screen artists will be there; more than 800 exhibitors have already taken tickets.

Robert Hurel, head of the Paramount renting department here, is quitting the company and will, from now on, be engaged upon the production of three big French filmings.

"Napoleon," by Abel Gance, was shown last week at a grand gala performance in the presence of the French president at the "Theatre National de l'Opera." The profits from this performance will be devoted entirely to the Legion of Honor homes of rest.

Henri Fescourt, stage director of "Les Miserables," is going to make for Societe Cineromans a film based on the popular novel entitled, "La Maison du Matois."

The firm Jack Haik is making a film entitled: "Beneath Arabian Skies." The exteriors will be shot in Algeria, where a large company is already gathered. Haik is also going to make a film en-itled: "Le Bonheur du Jour," directed by Mr. G. Ravel, assisted by H. Krauss, F. Mussey, P. Batcheff, Elmiere Vautier.

A film by G. de Gravonne is to be shown at Fox's entitled, "Paris, Cabourg, Cairo, and Love." It is a Markus Production.

"Croquette," the big picture by Societe Cineromans (Films de France), made in the midst of wild beasts, lions, tigers, elephants, etc., has already scored a popular success, the actors and the whole menagerie also taking part in the grand Carnival at Nice.

"The Legion of Honor," made with the help of the Army Cinematographic Department, showing the principal episodes from the formation of the order up to the present day, has been shown.

Jack Haik has the monopoly for the whole world in the two French films, "Palaces," interpreted by Hugette Duflos, the celebrated member of the Comedie Francaise, and Leon Barry; and "Rue de la Paix," acted by Andree Lafayette, Leon Mathot and Armand Bernard.

Strange rumors are still afloat in Paris regarding the disappearance of Sessue Hayakawa.

Mary Rusk, elected assistant treasurer of United Artists as "just and fit recognition of the invaluable services of a highly intelligent executive to United Artists Corporation."

Col. Levy Buys Three

Colonel Fred Levy and Lee L. Goldberg have added three theatres to the large group of houses they own through the South and in Indiana. The houses are the Riviera, Starland and Granada, all located in Anderson, Indiana, and were bought for about $250,000.

New Producing Firm

A new bronze sign appeared on front of the building at 723 Seventh Avenue last week announcing that Loucks & Norling, Inc., motion picture producers, had offices within. J. A. Norling and A. H. Loucks are both well known in the business, having until quite recently been associated with J. R. Bray in many of his production activities. For more than a year past, however, they have been operating independently, with the new firm as a result.

Trackless Train to S. A.

M-G-M's trackless train, which has been touring Europe and aiding Arthur Loew in establishing M-G-M offices in the principal film centers there, is now on the way to South America, where it will pursue its eventful way through Argentine and Brazil and up the West Coast of the southern continent.

According to an announcement by William R. Ferguson, exploitation manager for M-G-M, the trackless train left Genoa, Italy, on April 12, aboard the good ship Principessa Giovanna, bound for Buenos Aires.

American Contracts Make Canada Studio Self-Supporting

The Canadian Government Motion Picture Studio at Ottawa was discussed on the floor of the House of Commons last week when James Malcolm, Minister of Trade and Commerce, announced that the studio would be self-supporting during the coming year because of the increased revenue through contracts recently secured in the United States for the distribution of the Canadian releases. These contracts had been obtained in Hollywood and Chicago by R. S. Peck, director of the Ottawa bureau.

This was followed by the announcement that the Government studio was being operated along commercial lines, with every film produced by the Department bringing rentals from theatres using them. The Government makes no charge for purely educational reels screened otherwise than in theatres, except to ask for a nominal sum. Films are distributed in the United States and other countries through commercial companies and Mr. Malcolm declared that there was a very encouraging demand for the Government releases. The Government pictures have theatrical distribution in Canada through the Canadian Universal Film Company, Toronto.

sis of various diseases. Practically all diseases bring about definite changes in the tissues and these changes can be made apparent by various optical instruments much more quickly and certainly than by the usual methods of diagnosis. By means of the spectroscope, the microscope, and other optical instruments a photographic record is obtainable and therefore can be translated into motion pictures.

"How important this is, need not be enlarged upon except to say that the camera gives information about the progress of numerous diseases long before any diagnosis is possible by ordinary methods."

Dr. Hitchins also described the automatic developing machinery which the Duplex Motion Picture Corporation is installing for Famous Players in their new plant on West 43rd St., N. Y. City, which represent the last word in scientific handling of motion picture production. They will be used by Famous Players in handling their forthcoming news reel service expeditiously, and will be in operation not later than August 1.

According to Dr. Hitchins these machines will take the film direct from the printers and completely process it, delivering it at the end of the machine ready for exhibition at the rate of 100 feet a minute. These machines will turn out under the care of six men the same amount of work that it would take 110 men to turn out by hand.

Previous to Dr. Hitchins talk a number of interesting scientific films were shown. One of these was a film made by Dr. Hitchins for the Bell Telephone Laboratories, which showed in graphic form how sound is transmitted through the telephone diaphragm over the wires and through the transmitter into the aural passages of the individual on the receiving end. Another picture showed the functioning of the valves of the heart in most amazing fashion. Microscopic motion pictures were also shown of a variety of subjects, animalculi, amoebae, and other minute forms of life in action, the circulation of the blood and the movement of the blood corpuscles, etc.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Trackless Train," after touring America and Europe, is now en route to South America.

Our Stock Market

By Ervin L. Hall

The moving picture companies are on the fringe of what is considered a dull season. For this reason market traders are disinclined to buy the stocks on the theory that earnings will decline during the summer. But people will drop in the movies to get cooled off in the summer rather than to go to high priced theatres. Besides, stock buying is anticipatory. The time when shrewd traders buy a stock is when it is low, or at off seasons.

Hal Roach Studios 8% Preferred Stock. This stock participates in common dividends to 10%. $25 par value. The company is a leading producer of short film subjects. Assets are over $2,750,000. Net earnings for the last 8 years have averaged $167,596 a year. Good yield and good security, and good prospects.

Roxy Circuit, Inc. Theatre took in at the box office $157,611 from March 12th to March 18th inclusive. This is a record. Business is being maintained at record pace.

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc. Business is increasing and more phonofilm contracts for theatres are being made. The company is running at capacity. There were 5,600 shares dealt in for the week ended April 9th. Price range since the first of the year has been from 45½ on January 6th to 23½ on March 21st. Now selling around 28½.

Universal Pictures First Preferred. Only 200 shares dealt in the week ended April 9th. This year the stock has ranged from 103 to 98. Universal Pictures are adding to its theatres and has a satisfactory earning record.

Pathe A. The stock may profitably be bought in July or August. Dealing in the shares is reasonably heavy as 12,400 shares were dealt in up to the week ended April 9th. The highest point reached this year was March 14th when the stock sold at 48. The low was 37 on February 14th. Stock now is selling around 45.

Loew's, Inc. is running better than 40,000 shares a week. On March 17th it reached the record high of 637½. On January it sold as low as 46½. It seems to persist in hovering around 55 and 56 now. The stock may be purchased on recessions. The company is in a sound financial position with a future indicating steady growth.

Let's Go!

Sistrom Renews Contract With Cecil De Mille

William Sistrom, general manager of the DeMille-Metropolitan studios, has signed a new contract and will oversee activities at these two studios for some time to come.

DeMille also announces the elevation of William C. DeMille and Walter Woods to the rank of supervisors joining the present staff of Bertram Millhauser, and Jeannie McPherson. William C. DeMille will also serve as associate producer with his brother Cecil.

Other additions to the DeMille staff are Wilfred Buckland, art director, and Max Marcin, playwright and author.

Enlargement of the stock company at the DeMille Metropolitan studios is also underway. Lena Linda and Virginia Bradford are the two most recent additions. A number of other promising young actors and actresses are also being considered for stock.

D. B. Hampton Becomes Head Of Cody Prods.

David B. Hampton has just taken over the portfolio of business-manager for Bill Cody productions. Dave is the son of Benjamin B. Hampton, former producer of Federal Photoplays and other independent productions.

Hampton is probably the youngest business or production manager in the business but has been associated with affairs of the industry ever since he was a youngster. He started his picture career as a messenger for the old Peralta outfit back east and came to the coast later. Before joining Cody, Hampton was affiliated with M-G-M.

Universal May Sign Lucien Littlefield

Universal is considering the signing of Lucien Littlefield to a five year contract, according to a studio announcement. From the same source comes the further information that Paul Leni will direct "The Man Who Laughed", co-starring Conrad Veidt and Mary Philbin. Dela Sekley will supervise the production.

Thomson's First Is "Jesse James"

As announced in the Moving Picture World several months ago, Fred Thomson has finally joined the Paramount forces officially. It has been a foregone conclusion for a long time that the popular western star would take his horse and chaps and move from the F. B. C. to Paramount.

Thomson's first picture under his new alignment will be "Jesse James", which Frank Emmett Clifton is writing. Production will get under way about July 1.

Art Director Goes to Coast

Laurence W. Hitt, former art director of the Paramount eastern studio, has been named art director of the west coast plant, according to an announcement by B. P. Schulberg, associate producer.

Hitt was appointed art director for Paramount in the east in 1923, one year after taking up his duties with that organization.

Hans Dreier and Albert Freudman, chief set designers, will act as aides to Hitt.

Bushman, Sr., Has Lead

Francis X. Bushman, Sr., has the lead in Universal's "The Eternal Silence." His son, Francis Jr. also has a featured part in "The Scarlet Arrow" at the same studio.

Fraser of Lloyd Corporation Eastward to Confer With Kent

Says the Era of the Short Subject is at Hand and That Its Standing as Entertainment Is Assured—Will Discuss Next Lloyd Production with Paramount

WILLIAM R. FRASER, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, before leaving for New York for a number of conferences with Sidney R. Kent, general manager of Paramount, and other officials of the organization through which Lloyd pictures are released, had a number of interesting statements to make relative to the matter of short subjects. Fraser is also president of the Hollywood Productions now starring Edward Everett Horton in a series of two-reelers.

"The era of the short subjects, featurette, or whatever you may choose to call the two-reel picture, is at hand," declared Fraser to the Moving Picture World before grabbing the "rattler" for the east. "For years the short picture has been fighting for a status on motion picture programs equal to the so-called feature, sometimes with varying success.

"But now its standing as entertainment is assured. The highest grade of two-reel comedies are now finding their way to the market. More money will be spent on these short features than has ever been involved in these productions heretofore.

"A higher type of star will be featured. This is proven by our selection of Edward Everett Horton, who has become one of the best known players of light farce, to star in our two-reelers. Horton's first two pictures, "Dad's Choice" and "The King of Spades" have already been completed."

In producing the Horton comedies, according to Fraser, it is the intention of the Hollywood Productions to surround them with all the advantages of the average high class feature. This will involve the expenditure of considerable money, yet, he feels the investment worth while because of the demand the high class of short feature should create.

William R. Fraser

While in the east Fraser will talk over the next Lloyd production with Famous officials. Lloyd expects to start his next picture within the next month.

Lewis Stone in "His Son"

Production has started on "His Son," Sam Rork's next for First National. Lewis Stone is featured with Lilyan Tashman, Arthur Rankin and Annie Rorke in the supporting roles. John Francis Dillon is directing.

The Short Subject Grows Up —

Carlos Duran

CARLOS DURAN

*Whose Hollywood
Debut Did Not Entail Usual Sacrifice*

By Tom Waller
West Coast Representative

SOME of the world's most beautiful women are Hollywood's best coffee bringers. And some of the men who swish around after them and in between the feet of late patrons also have hair and teeth unexcelled in gloss and flash. They heard about Hollywood money and arrived to learn that Will Hays' statistics are unexaggerated and that no small part of the money for the people who come here unexpectedly is to be found in thin coins on many-hued table tops, between greasy towels and dripping mops. But there is always the chance for a "break"; and they keep on, and sometimes land.

That there are over 30,000 women, symmetrically this and that, and that the film capital never has use for more than around 8,000 of them; that restaurant and soda fountain jobs, as the result, are at a premium—all of this never entered the head of a tall attractive man whose South American parents had been in Spain just long enough to bring him into the world.

This was the Carlos Duran of two years ago. The New York exporter of automobile accessories seated in a Mexico City Hotel deciding to cut short his trip because Mexican business was below par. Less than an hour later Duran, the exporter, had decided to become Duran, the film actor.

A friend had come upon him during his meditation on the export game. A friend from California. A member, in fact, of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Duran assured us recently in the World's West Coast headquarters that the idea of becoming a Hollywood actor never entered his head until this friend broached the subject at a receptive moment. His admission placed him on record as more than violating the Hays' edict. He knew nothing about dishwashing and less about waiting on a table or competing with some modernly disillusioned Venus for a job behind a counter. He was an exporter and Hollywood knows only importers.

But Duran boarded no ordinary train Hollywood-bound from Mexico City. His was the special train chartered by the local chamber of commerce in its tour through Mexico several years ago. So, when Duran stepped off the train the localities saw him in the midst of local propagandists, people who seem to have a most lurid command of the nicest words in the dictionaries of every state and country in the world if the representative races constituting the city's present population mean anything.

Duran, however, had a mutual friend who had a mutual friend well up in the film capital and it was to this friend that he presented himself. Hollywood saved him from the milk wagon driving or dishwashing ignominy to which more than one successful player of today has been forced to stoop. He was not here more than a week before he found himself for the first time in screen grease paint in his first picture "The Coming of Amos".

During the two years that he has been here Duran's climb has been of the slow but successfully sure kind. He likes the place. He has his own ideas. He knows that the time now is not so far off when what his friend told him in Mexico City will be realized. Already he has established for himself a background of twenty well-known feature pictures made by the biggest producers in Hollywood. Twenty pictures that have kept him busy since he received the well wishes of the chamber of commerce.

Among the pictures which he considers best show his work, Duran names Paramount's "Flower of the Night", Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Paris" and Fox's "Carmen" and "Gabby".

On the psychology of what to do to get ahead in a systematic way—since that seems to have been the trend of his career in Hollywood—Duran stated: "Ability and luck."

Up to that time we had thought Duran had specialized in exporting but we then learned that at the age of sixteen he had run away from the home of his parents in Columbia, South America to join a Spanish repertoire company. As an actor and later a leading man he traveled with that legitimate unit for nearly three years through Latin America and then to Spain. It was across the water that his family finally located him when they promptly announced their decision that he was to become a dentist.

A year at the University of Pennsylvania convinced Duran that filling teeth could never take the place of the footlights and that if he were not to become an actor he would not, at least, become a dentist.

Duran refers to the Mexico City hotel episode as an instance substantiating his belief in luck. It was luck that he got in with the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and luck that he had a mutual friend to go to when he arrived here. Duran considers it was luck up to the time he got his first part in pictures and the rest was ability.

It was the wrong kind of luck, however, that caused him to board a train leaving New York for the West in the latter part of January, this year. Where the other train had brought him luck this latest train was responsible for him losing one of the biggest opportunities of his career. This, he told us, was that the leading role in a big South American picture would have been his had he forwarded to his manager the number of the train which he had boarded. It was a role which Duran says he would have had the keenest pleasure in portraying since it dealt with the George Washington of South American of whom he claims to be a direct descendant. It was also a role which, Hollywood observers know, would have netted for Duran a much-coveted spot on Hollywood's constellation.

Broadened by life in the business worlds of London and Paris, in addition to his experience on the American continent, Duran, from his contacts on the inside of the film world, is unhesitant in his praise for Hollywood production methods. He recognizes the motion picture industry as being different and apart from any industry. That it is an industry essentially devoted to art with but a commercial twist. Because of this he said what first appealed to him as exorbitant waste in production methods now impresses him as the utmost in economy. Systematizing production work to the same letter that an automobile is manufactured is "out". Therefore an actor or actress attempting to adopt a schedule for their own career is of necessity forced into a similar class, he believes. Two years have more than ever convinced Duran that it's ability, watchful waiting and luck.

"Tillie The Toiler" Is A Trifle Weak At Santa Monica Preview

Titles by Ralph Spence Brought Laughter But Although Picture is Based on Russ Westover's
Comic Strip It Is Essentially Different

By Tom Waller

West Coast Representative

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER previewed Marion Davies' "Tillie the Toiler" one night this week at the Criterion in Santa Monica. The screen story is publicized as being based on the newspaper comic strip syndicated nationally by Cartoonist Russ Westover.

An audience exceptionally swelled by the Santa Monica specie of "flapper and cake-eater" heralded the flash of the title and Miss Davies' cognomen with manifestations obviously excellent those which came just as the organist fingered in his "Home, Sweet Home" repertory.

On the way up the center aisle the writer heard blah and blah from the undergraduates. Of course that was in just one theatre and the first preview in the first theatre hardly provides material and circumstance for a good all-round permanent box-office criterion.

"Tillie the Toiler" has some Ralph Spence titles that brought only a few of the laughs that we expected. In fact we laughed out loud once or twice and were surprised to get our own echo.

The preview convinced us, however, that the screen "Tillie" in its present state is not like the newspaper "Tillie's" gunny sack of laughs and tricks.

From the angle of straight seeing the closest resemblances to the cartoonist's characters are George K. Arthur, George Barker and Gertrude Short. As the irate boss, the swell-headed under-boss and the office busy-body the newspaper "Tillie" seems to step right into the screen "Tillie."

The tall Matt Moore barely makes the short stubby tilted-nosed Mac of the comic sheet. Miss Davies as "Tillie" has practically everyone playing into her hand and scores her point with such rapid frequency as to give an audience the impression after the first few reels of the picture that she knows she is going to win.

The whole story at its very most was not up to expectations at its unofficial Santa Monica projection.

Will Direct Colleen

After gagging nine of her previous starring vehicles Mervin LeRoy will now direct Colleen Moore in the tenth picture for First National. LeRoy is just 27 years of age and is said to be the youngest man assigned to the important job of directing one of the industry's biggest stars.

Cutting Room Blaze Destroys Key-Positives

Several thousand dollars in damages resulted at Universal City from a fire that started in the cutting room and destroyed the key-positives on a number of pictures. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and Reginald Denny's, "Fast and Furious" negatives were considerably seared by the blaze. This will necessitate the re-taking of many feet of film.

An investigation disclosed, it is said, that the fire started when a spark flew out of a lamp in the cutting room and landed in the celluloid.

Comedian Signs Contract With Warner Bros.

Clyde Cook, film comedian, has signed a contract with Warner Brothers, thus bringing to a close a free lancing career inaugurated a year ago. The contract, according to Jack Warner, comes as the result of Cook's fine work in "The Brute", starring Monte Blue, and "The Climbers" starring Irene Rich.

His first featured role, under the terms of his new contract, will be in support of Louise Fazenda in "Simple Sis", to be directed by Herman Raymaker. Cook is well-known to the vaudeville stage and was with Hal Roach for a number of two reel comedies.

To Title "Les Miserables"

Walter Anthony, head of the title department at Universal, has been selected to title Jean Sapene's foreign-made production of Victor Hugo's, "Les Miserables." Anthony titled "Michael Strogoff."

Ruth Scores With Naturalness In Classic "Babe Comes Home"

Does Not Try to Emulate Barrymore But Retains Simplicity Characteristic of His Private Life—Picture Is Far Above Usual Hokum

By Jim Powers

West Coast Staff Writer

A SATISFIED audience wended its way from the Westlake Theatre following the preview of "Babe Comes Home," starring Babe Ruth. The Babe proved a pleasant surprise as an actor and the picture is far above the usual "hokum," featuring starring stars of the sporting world, whose only qualifications for a screen role is the position they maintain in the said world.

Ruth does not try to act according to the dictates of our best dramatic schools, which is probably the one reason why the picture provides pleasant entertainment. He depends entirely on a naturalness for which he is typical in private life and made no attempt to show up John Barrymore, Jack Gilbert, or other of our well-known thespians of the screen, as a portrayer of "drammar."

Exhibitors and audiences alike, will find a pleasant relief in "Babe Comes Home," compared to the usual shallow feature starring a big box-office name from the world of sport. While there is nothing heavy about the story, it, nevertheless, suffices insofar as entertainment goes. Ruth does remarkably well with his role and is ably supported by a cast of competent players including Anna Q. Nilsson, Louise Fazenda, Arthur Stone and Ethel Shannon. Each of the aforementioned is particularly good in the role he or she is called upon to portray.

The screen story serving Ruth in "Babe Comes Home" was adapted from a short magazine yarn by the late Gerald Beaumont. The background is laid jointly between a baseball field and a laundry, where Miss Nilsson, Louise Fazenda, Ethel Shannon and Stone are employed. Miss Nilsson makes a pleasing heroine first attracted to the famous diamond star by the unromantic but effective dirty shirt of his baseball uniform as it were. The girl takes a dislike to the great Babe merely from being forced to launder the begrimed uniform each week as part of her chores.

Of course in the end she becomes a rabid baseball fan and marries the great Babe. His weakness for tobacco-chewing almost disrupts the happy home for a time but this difference is patched up and they live as happily as married couples are supposed to live ever after.

M-G-M Studios Have Amazing Power Unit

This may prove interesting so here goes. It comes from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer publicity department.

"Enough electricity to light a city the size of Providence, R. I., was used in a single week in the making of three motion pictures," according to Lou Klob, chief electrical engineer at the M-G-M studios. During the filming of big scenes in "Old Heidelberg", "The Trail of '98" and "The Unknown", the electric arcs took the full output of the studio power plant, which is a duplicate in size of the power equipment in Providence. One arc light is said to consume as much current as three hundred incandescent bulbs.

LeBaron Will Work Under Edwin King

Word spread through Hollywood this week that the arrival of William LeBaron as an F. B. O. vice-president meant the ousting of Edwin King as vice-president and chief of F. B. O. production.

LeBaron's job with F. B. O., after his executive association for over three years with Paramount in New York will make him vice-president but under the jurisdiction of Mr. King. As a matter of fact LeBaron's position was officially described to us as being practically the same as the one which Sam Wood held until a few months ago. LeBaron's full title is that of vice-president and associate producer.

HELENE COSTELLO — Has the feminine lead opposite Syd Chaplin in his current picture.

Helene is Chip Off Old Block

Not so many years ago romantic housewives and pre-war Shebas stumbled over each other to gain admission to the local opera-house when Maurice Costello's name appeared in a production. Mr. Costello was probably the first matinee idol of the screen and it was a blasé damsel, indeed, that was not susceptible to his wavy locks and had to suppress a desire to swap places with the fortunate heroine that found herself in the strong arms of the hero as the final clinch flickered out and the lights were turned on.

While Mr. Costello has not been active on the screen in recent years he has perpetuated the name by offering two of his charming daughters to the realms of the silent drama. In this we deal with Helene, a petite little Miss, now playing the feminine lead with Syd Chaplin in the latter's latest for Warner Brothers. Her sister, Dolores, is already established as a popular screen favorite.

Helene was one of the thirteen Wampas Baby Stars of 1927, and is just beginning to forge to the front. Her first picture experience came when she was a youngster and her dad was a star. In those days she always played the part of dad as a child on the screen when the story called for a flashback to his puerile period.

JOHN KRAFFT — Ranked among the top-notch title-writers and with Cecil B. De Mille.

Titling Irvin Cobb Original

Many a poor picture has been saved by the facile pen of a clever title writer. Of late the art of titling has come into its own and the writers that specialize in this branch of motion picture making are beginning to come into their own and draw down the financial recompense their work merits.

Over on the De Mille lot in Culver City they take no chances on letting a good man get away. As a consequence John Krafft has been resigned to a new long term contract and will continue to title De Mille and Metropolitan productions for some time to come.

Krafft claims Indianapolis as his birthplace and received his education in the same city. It was but a step from the classroom to the editorial staff of one of the leading journals of his home town. While working as a columnist on the Indianapolis Star he attracted the attention of Carl Laemmle, who figured that Krafft's trend for humor would look good in screen titles.

He accepted the Laemmle offer and moved his baggage to New York, where he became a fixture for the time with Universal. His relationship with this organization lasted fourteen months and then he transferred his typewriter to the editorial department of William Fox Productions and remained there for five years.

A year and a half as a free lance title writer then followed before he signed under the De Mille banner on a short term contract more than six months ago. The renewal of the contract on its expiration came in the natural course of events.

Krafft titled "The Yankee Clipper," a DeMille special now playing and is at present titling "Turkish Delight," an original story by Irving Cobb.

BOUND UPWARD — Eugenia Gilbert playing feminine lead in the current Columbia production.

Will Be Johnny Walker's Lead

After three months in the east Eugenia Gilbert is more than glad to be back in Hollywood, especially as she has the feminine lead opposite Johnny Walker in the current story at the Columbia studios. The title of this is still unknown but as it is not unusual for a company to "shoot" under these circumstances a good commercial title will quite naturally follow later.

Eugenia has been working in pictures for about four years now with much of her emoting being done for Pathe, both in serial and regular features. She was born in East Orange, N. J., where she obtained her early education only to put the finishing touches to it right here in Los Angeles.

This is her second leading role for Columbia, her last being with Bert Lytell in "Obey the Law." That she was eminently satisfactory in this is proven by her assignment of the lead in the present production.

For three months she was on location in Charleston, S. C., and New York making a picture for Pathe, before returning to do the lead in the latest Columbia production.

She is the shy and retiring type and not given to airy persiflage. She did tell us, however, that her ambition is to portray a variety of different roles in order that she may familiarize herself with all sorts of characters.

Miss Gilbert lives with her mother in Beverly Hills and for variation has a ranch in Ventura, where she spends much of her time between pictures.

Pommer With Irving Thalberg

Erich Pommer, German film executive, has assumed his duties as producer at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. He will work with Irving Thalberg.

LOUISE FAZENDA—Looks as though she was ducking the camera. She's on the Warner "lot."

Was First Mack Sennett Beauty

Louise Fazenda was not first in war, first in peace, etc., but she was one of the first in Mack Sennett Comedies.

Louise was one of Sennett's best bets in the days when the comedy value of a picture was gauged by the number of custard pies heaved in the course of a reel celluloid.

While browsing around the Warner Brothers' lot recently we happened to bump into Louise, at the time resting between pictures. During our conversation she told us all about her forthcoming effort for Warner Brothers, a story called "Simple Sis." She was bubbling over with enthusiasm as she recounted various humorous episodes from the script and declared it would be one of her best pictures.

Miss Fazenda, like many other present day stars, received her baptism of camera fire under the keen eye of Mack Sennett. She also did her bit, which was a rather large assignment—in Sennett's first feature length picture.

Some time back she was put under contract by the Warners and elected to stardom. Frequently she moves her kit to another lot for the purpose of adding a few humorous incidents to a rival production. Her latest was a supporting role with Babe Ruth, idol of the baseball world, in "The Babe Comes Home," a First National release.

She is now at the home.

Herman Raymaker—Looking over the script of "Simple Sis" his next for Warner Brothers.

Jack-of-All Studio Trades

Movie directors are hard workers if we are to judge by the accompanying photograph of Herman Raymaker, who collects his weekly stipend from the Warner Brothers.

Raymaker has done practically everything in connection with the makes of motion pictures with the exception of grinding a camera. The latter in itself is something of a distinction as the majority of directors proudly proclaim their former apprenticeship as a camera grinder.

As an actor and a stunt man, Raymaker first attracted the attention of his bosses. It was not long before Mack Sennett saw directorial possibilities in the short, stocky young fellow that was risking his neck in order to transform laughs to the screen.

For years he remained in the Sennett fold as one of Mack's ace megaphone wielders. Quite naturally he was soon in demand by the larger companies seeking experienced and proven comedy directors. Warner Brothers must have talked more sugar as he is now listed among those present in the files of that organization.

Comedy, however, is not his only forte. Since being with Warners he has done a number of pictures with Rin-Tin-Tin, the clever dog star. At present he is working on "Simple Sis," in which Louise Fazenda is to be starred.

One of his pictures, "Millionaires" with George Sydney is just beginning to record itself as one of the big-money-makers.

From "Simple Sis" he goes to (?).

Fevens Sakes!—Johnnie Hines puts one over on Producer Charlie Burr between scenes on "White Pants Willie," Hines' latest comedy.

Johnny and Charlie Expect A Prosperous Three Years

We caught Producer Charlie Burr and his star, Johnny Hines on the first day of their shooting on their next First National release. The Elmer Davis story "White Pants Willie" is the theme and, as the World's own photograph shows, it starts Johnny off in a greasy mechanic's apron.

Burr was all pepped up about the story. It will be the sixth release of Burr and Hines Enterprises through the Burbank clearing house. But there's more to the story than that. First National has just exercised its option for Johnny Hines vehicles for the next three years. Burr jingled in his right pocket as he told us that the option will mean almost double the money that Burr and Hines have been receiving from their distributors.

Slouched in a chair on the Tec-Art set while he feigned sleep for the benefit of "No Good" sign and to give Hines an opportunity to register that smile on one of Moving Picture World's first exclusive photograph's, Burr snapped into it just as soon as the camera clicked.

"And another thing," he said. And we buzzed away while the cast in "White Flannel Willie" admired a trained goose, which will have no mean part in this picture. The "other thing" was the word that he had bought the famous stage success "A Pair of Sixes" for Hines and that it's going into the works soon so as to be ready for official screening early next year.

Pauline Starke Joins The Free Lance Ranks

Pauline Starke has come to the conclusion that the life of a free lance player is the thing. Therefore she has broken her contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to advices from the Culver City studio.

A trip to New York will intervene before Miss Starke seriously considers further arduous labor before the camera.

Two Film Weddings

Two film weddings served to enliven the week here. Irene Rich, screen actress, and David F. Blankenhorn, Los Angeles realtor and bond salesman, were married at the Pebble Beach home of friends. Albert Conti, character actor, married Miriam Wherry, known on the screen as Patricia Cross in a quiet wedding in Hollywood on Saturday.

Beery-Hatton Team Reunited

"Fireman, Save my Child", forthcoming Paramount release finds that comedy team of Wally Beery and Ray Hatton again united. Announcement to this effect was made by B. P. Schulberg, associate producer.

The tremendous success enjoyed by this pair in "Behind the Front" and "We're in the Navy Now" made the dissolving of the team four months ago regrettable. However, whatever differences resulted in the temporary break seem to be patched up and the pair will be seen together again.

Eddie Sutherland, who directed them in both hits, will be back at the megaphone.

Patsy Ruth With Universal

Patsy Ruth Miller has signed with Universal to play the starring role in "Patents Pending," to be directed by William Kraft. The story is by Harry Hoyt.

Taylor Holmes—Probably reading something pleasant about his current comedies for Gaiety.

Holmes Ideal Domestic Type

The bickerings that now and then inject themselves into domestic bliss and cause the good ship matrimony to flounder around, and often hit the rocks, are as a rule painful to the participants—and by the same token they are more often humorous to the casual onlooker. At least Taylor Holmes figures he can pluck a flock of laughs out of the clear air with a series of two-reel comedies founded on the episodes that go to make up the home life of the average American couple—man and wife.

When we talked to Holmes on the Tec-Art lot, where he is making the pictures, he was then on the second of a series of thirteen domestic comedies scheduled for the present year. His first effort was "The Second Honeymoon." Leah Baird plays the feminine lead.

This is not Holmes' first venture from the legitimate stage to screen effort. Back in the old days, when Essanay and Triangle were flourishing, he took his first fling before the camera. The speaking stage, however, has been his forte in recent years and his "No, No, Nanette" is still remembered in Los Angeles.

By a strange freak of fate, Lawrence Windon, who directed Holmes in all his Essanay and Triangle pictures, is also handling the megaphone on the comedian's current series. The stories are something on the line of those featured by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew some years ago, and to use Holmes' own quotation, "they look mighty good from the standpoint of entertainment."

Director Leo Meehan and Virginia Valli. Meehan will direct Miss Valli in "Down One Way" for F. B. O.

Leo Meehan To Direct Valli

In Hollywood after a short vacation in Honolulu, Virginia Valli finds herself back in harness again with a starring role in "Down Our Way," an F.B.O. production. Miss Valli's contract with Fox expired just before she sailed for Hawaii and, according to her intentions at present will remain a free lance player.

While exchanging studio gossip with Director Leo Meehan, on the F. B. O. lot Miss Valli joined the party and posed with Meehan for a photograph.

The pair will work together in "Down Our Way," which incidentally has one of the smallest casts of any recent pictures attempted by production units. Three people comprise the cast, Miss Valli, Orville Caldwell, and Frankie Darrow, juvenile player.

With the completion of this picture Meehan will immediately start on the screen version of Gene Stratton Porter's "The Harvester." This will be filmed in the locale Mrs. Porter wrote about in her famous novel.

Limberlost Cabin in Rome City, Ind., the original location of this story, will be taken over by a company of picture players, cameramen and technical aides. In this spot all the exterior "shots" will be filmed with the interiors taken care of back here at the studio.

Meehan first attained recognition as a director by his masterful handling of a number of Mrs. Porter's stories now being shown on the screen. Recently he was signed to a new three-year contract by F. B. O. and will direct many of that company's most important productions during the coming year.

The Villain, Louis Natheaux, now playing the city slicker in De Mille's "The Country Doctor," in dignified pose.

Villain Roles Hard On Nose

The hero has a fine time of it in the pictures but it is sure hard on the poor villain. Louis Natheaux, De Mille featured player, will bear us out in this. Poor Louis has probably been socked on the nose more by indignant heroes (in screen roles, of course) than the majority of film actors.

Natheaux is what might possibly be termed the villain developed by higher education. He is a college man, graduated from Northwestern University, and previous to that attended the Culver Military Academy.

He obtained his first real chance on the stage when he took Eddie Cantor's place in Los Angeles during the run of "Canary Cottage." A stage career in New York then followed, which was terminated temporarily by the World War.

After the big brawl across the pond he came to Hollywood and entered pictures. They generally find something for him to do in practically every DeMille production.

In "The Golden Bed" he made a distinct impression and then followed parts in "The Volga Boatman," "Three Faces East," "Silence," "Man Bait," "Fighting Love," "The King of Kings," "Turkish Delight" and he is now busy on "The Country Doctor." In this play he plays the part of the "slick city fella" with his usual sang froid.

Natheaux is not villainous at all to talk to on the "set." He takes his work seriously.

Jean DuPont—One of Hollywood's foremost writers. She is doing the "Beauty Shop Series" for F. B. O.

Put Spice In Witwer Yarns

Some of Film Booking Office's most regular money-makers are springing from the brain of Jean DuPont. From her little office near the set which Fred Thomson used to shoot many of his interiors in his last picture for F. B. O., Miss DuPont put spice in the Witwer series. Now she has just finished work on some material which will snap to the screen something entirely new in the way of women and beauty doctors. On this last work Tom McNamara collaborated with her.

Observers who are around the studios six out of seven days a week are inside on the knowledge that within a year Miss DuPont's present pace will establish her as one of Hollywood's leading woman writers. Not only has her screen work won her the commendation of F. B. O. associated but her writing stories on the side for national magazines has already made her name one really worthwhile at the Hollywood Writers Club.

Persistent effort for a goal which she knew she could achieve caused Miss DuPont to take the first job Hollywood had for her upon receiving her sheepskin from the University of California over a year ago. She then came here as a telephone operator. From that job she moved into the chair of chief of F. B. O.'s reading department. Just a few months ago F. B. O. executives placed her in her present little office to work out her own ideas on her own typewriter.

Rupert Julian who directed "The Yankee Clipper" and is now making "The Country Doctor."

Rupert Julian Started Young

Rupert Julian started his stage career at the age of 16 and has been associated with the footlights and screen ever since.

He was born in Auckland, New Zealand, where he was also educated. His first stage work occurred in the home town and with his first company he toured Australia and South Africa.

Seeking larger fields to conquer he left New Zealand and registered in New York, where his American debut was made on the famous stage of the old Daly Theatre. A number of theatrical engagements followed in which he shared honors with well-known stars.

Realizing the possibilities held forth by pictures he trekked west to Hollywood to appear in Universal Pictures. From there he went to Paramount only to return later to the "U" lot. This time he served both as actor and director and while with this organization was responsible for many of Carl Laemmle's biggest money-makers. "The Beast of Berlin," "Mother 'o Mine," "The Merry-go-Round" (in which he discovered Mary Philbin); and "The Phantom of the Opera," were all Julian productions.

In April 1925 he signed a contract to direct for Cecil B. De Mille and has been associated with the latter company ever since. His last effort was "The Yankee Clipper," which met with noticeable success. At present he is engaged in making "The Country Doctor." This, it is freely predicted, will prove one of the most humanly interesting stories ever filmed. Rudolph Schildkraut, that competent character actor, plays the part of the old New England physician.

Julian has a niche all his own in the directorial ranks and one of the past masters.

Help to Keep Things Clean

CARRYING on its fight against film frauds; a fight which has very largely, though not completely eliminated the hordes of swindlers seeking to profit from the popular belief that there is money in any and all phases of the film industry, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors had a lengthy article in the March issue of The Classified Journal, pointing out the devices of fake film promoters, scenario schools and the like.

This is merely another strategic move in a comprehensive campaign, but it is particularly effective in that this publication is the organ of the Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers, or in other words the men who accept or reject precisely the type of advertising which has done so much to bring pictures into disrepute. Practically every copy goes directly into the hands of some person who can put up the bars against the swindlers in some particular paper, and it reaches practically every paper of any consequence.

Before the formation of the M. P. P. D. A. more than one million dollars annually were thrown away on wildcat schemes; generally by persons least able to afford the loss of their little fortunes. Widows sought to augment their scanty inheritances through this new and attractive road to large dividends. It is on record that one day worker in a New Jersey town almost starved herself to death that she might complete the payments on the course of scenario instruction that she fondly believed would take her from the wash-tub and the scrubbing pail.

In the past few years these advertisements have almost completely disappeared. Credit is largely due the Hays organization, which has performed this service for no personal gain but merely to carry on the general idea of making the cinema clean and above suspicion. It is a work that has been done almost single handed: an accomplishment possible only to a far flung organization.

But every exhibitor can contribute in some small degree to this cleaning up. If you see in your local papers the advertisement of scenario schools, schools of acting, appeals of the familiar "new faces wanted" type or the announcement of the formation of a local production company, argue with the newspaper publisher and, if necessary, call on the Hays organization for aid.

You may think it no concern of yours if some credulous fools are fleeced, but there is a positive dollar and cents value to you in keeping the pictures in good odor in your community. Help the M. P. P. D. A. help you.

ASK any dozen men in the show business who was the greatest showman and the chances are that at least ten will give the name of P. T. Barnum as the greatest showman of all time. And those ten will be wrong—dead wrong. Barnum was one of the best self-advertisers the business has ever known, and he sold his early shows through this advertisement, but he never was a showman and it was not until he doubled up with that superb showman, James A. Bailey, that he was able to regain his rapidly slipping prestige. And yet the average man seldom thinks of James A. Bailey as a showman.

BARNUM died and the Barnum and Bailey show went on to new triumphs. Bailey died—and the show went on the rocks. Had Bailey died first and Barnum been left the survivor, the show would have gone on the rocks just the same, for it was Bailey's showmanship that kept it ever on its upward course. It was Bailey's showmanship that first virtually forced Barnum into affiliation and then sold his unique personality into a gigantic amusement enterprise.

PROBABLY there is no word in the show business more frequently and more grossly misused than this same "showman" and "showmanship." Ninety-five times out of every hundred people really mean "faker" where they say "showman" for the real showman is seldom a faker, very infrequently a self-advertiser and almost never a picturesque personality. He is a hard-headed, self-contained business man, selling amusement just about the same as a butcher sells meat or the grocer sells tea and sugar. If he were not a good business man, he would not be a good showman, for a showman sells entertainment through business methods and not through ballyhoo.

HE may appreciate the value of ballyhoo. Very often he may associate himself with a ballyhoo artist and put the latter forward as a figurehead, but you'll find him in the background, functioning smoothly, efficiently and quietly. He does not seek to break into the newspapers himself. He is the quietest man in the average crowd, he may even be averse to newspaper publicity, but he knows how to frame amusement ventures and how to put them over in a comprehensive and businesslike way.

IT has been this writer's privilege to have known many of the real showmen of the past thirty years, leaders in the dramatic, vaudeville, burlesque and circus fields, and not one of them would measure up to the popular impression of what a showman is or should be. Most of them suggested merchants or commercial executives rather than the popular conception of the showman. Even the leading dive keepers failed to look or act their parts and the owner of one of the most notorious "joints" on the Pacific Coast a quarter of a century ago might easily have passed for an office executive who was active in the Sunday School on his day of rest.

ALL of this would be unimportant were it not for the fact that many men feel that in order to be showmen they must try to act like the accepted type; that they must be loud talkers; back slappers and noisily dressed. Many a man who might have become a good showman had he been content to follow his natural bent, has spoiled himself through trying to look and act the part.

YOU don't have to wear a checked vest and a four carat diamond to be a showman. You don't have to talk loud for the benefit of newspaper men. You can be as modest and retiring as you please, the more modest the better, so long as you keep your finger on the public pulse and seek to cater to the most profitable element.

THE real showman is the person who can please the greatest portion of his public with the least expenditure of effort. Quiet friendliness will get him much further than braggart talk and loud dressing. He will cultivate the newspapers not to flaunt his own personality in print, but to get publicity that will benefit his enterprise. He does not start off his every notice with some reference to "Manager Plank" generally prefaced by some fancy adjective. He appreciates the value of keeping his name associated with his enterprise, but not in a noisy fashion. He talks about his shows and lets the shows speak for him.

HE is modestly appreciative of his own good work. He is willing to help his fellows by telling what he has done. He does not shrink from publicity, but rather he does not everlastingly court it for himself at the expense of his enterprise. He is not perpetually telling others how good he thinks himself to be, but he does not hiss "Liar!" when others tell him how good they think he is.

HE is not trying to be like this or that great man. He is not patterning after any particular model. He is trying to conduct his own business along his own individual lines. He is trying to sell his show through the program items rather than through his high powered automobile, his glossy silk hat or huge moustache. He is just a business man, selling theatre tickets instead of corner lots or dress goods. Put him at a table with a successful merchant, a successful lawyer and a popular minister and you probably could recognize the minister by his collar, but you would have difficulty in placing the other three.

AND don't forget that you do not have to own a circuit to be a good showman. You can be a good showman with only one house and a small-town house at that. It takes just as much skill, just as much showmanship to sell a program in a thousand-seat house in a fifteen thousand town as to sell a million seats a day in three or four hundred large capacity houses. You may not have to work as hard, but you have to be just as good a showman; perhaps even a better one.

WE can call to mind scores of men who operate one or two houses each who are better showmen than some of the men who are acclaimed such from coast to coast and yet who are, at bottom, only good fakers enjoying a run of good luck. Be content to be a good showman, and don't ape the fakers. It is apt to be fatal in the long run.

NO, we're not thinking of anyone in particular. Just thinking.

Big Companies Busy With Preparations For Coming Sales Conventions And Selling Drives

Competitive Conditions Call For Tremendous Effort To Get Adequate Prices For Product

Getting Message Across of First Importance As Exhibitors Will Hold All the Cards

Latest Inside Info On Mammoth Merger Names Ben B. Hampton As Man Behind

Concerning W. Ray Johnston of Rayart

FOR some weeks now practically all the big companies have been speeding up their organizations in preparation for the mighty sales drives, which next month will be launched full force for the 1927-28 season.

STATISTICS and data on every phase of the complex selling problems, which this year will confront the men in the field, are being gathered with feverish haste for presentation at the sales conventions, which loom larger and more importantly every minute.

EVERY company has the fullest confidence in its product and there has been no curtailment in producing costs, but rather the reverse, with bigger and costlier pictures than ever and a consequent increase in responsibility for the sales departments, whose efforts will have to be commensurate with their excellent product and the intensive competition which all realize awaits them.

HOW the salesmen are to get the prices necessary to meet this higher production overhead, in the face of these severe competitive conditions, is the big problem which all are trying to solve and the answer to it is not found easily.

MOST companies are setting their highest hopes on their roadshows, most of which are still incubating, and on getting a break in the luck, which some of them will have and some will not, while in the short subject field the battle will be even keener.

WITH M.-G.-M. and Famous going after theatre patronage, in addition to their own houses, in every branch of short feature activity, including even the news reel, it appears as if the battle for bookings was going to be such as never before has been seen in this industry.

FROM the viewpoint of the exhibitor, there surely needs to be no panic for he can pick and choose his product at leisure and he certainly will not have to pay more than a fair and reasonable price for any of it, while he will have a raft of the best from which to make his selections.

MUCH the same conditions, which crushed or eliminated most of the independent territorial sales companies a couple of years ago and made many a theatre owner rich, exist today, only more acutely, with the difference that the independents who succeeded in weathering the storm are now lined up and entrenched far more securely than many of their big competitors, having solved effectually and economically most of their selling and producing problems.

TO put it bluntly, from now on it is going to be a case of dog eat dog, and every sales medium possible must be used by every company to the fullest extent or their competitors are going to come out on top.

THIS is a thought, which no doubt every big executive is taking to his sales convention with him and behind the scenes is causing many a headache.

SOME of the more foresighted are soon going to grasp the fact that the quickest, most effective and most responsive means to get their message across to the exhibitor is only to be found through the advertising pages of the much abused and much decried trade press—those who do not realize this, or do so too late, will be the losers.

THE exhibitor circulation, as proven by the A. B. C. audit, of the two leading weekly trade papers in this industry, amply demonstrates that the buyer of film takes his trade news seriously, even if many presumably intelligent advertisers do not seem to recognize this fact.

A FAMOUS, if somewhat unlettered, general of Civil War days once said that the way to win battles was "to git thar fustest with the mostest men."

JUST substitute the word "circulation" for "men" and there's an "over the top" idea in it for the wise sales executive, who knows how to use it.

LATEST reports on the Big Merger, Pathe, P. D. C. and First National—which promises now to be even bigger than ever because Universal is also said to be included—are to the effect that all negotiations have been concluded satisfactorily and the deal now only awaits the reports of the appraisers, who are placing their official valuations on the numerous properties involved.

AND the promoter of this giant combination, alongside of which every other that has come into being in this industry become insignificant by comparison, is disclosed as being no less a person than Benjamin B. Hampton.

MR. HAMPTON, advertising man, magazine publisher, film producer and financier, has put over many progressive and startlingly spectacular deals in a quiet way during his colorful career, but if this report is correct, and there is the strongest evidence to believe it is, he has certainly hung up another record.

IN this issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD, W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart, announces his line-up of fine product for the coming season, amplified and fortified by a group of sales accessories, paper, lobby displays and novelty advertising aids for the exhibitor of the biggest business-building potentialities.

ONE of the youngest and one of the strongest of the sturdy handful of State Right organizations which have successfully fought their way through the difficult days of the past two years, the success of Ray Johnston's Rayart pictures has been based on two things—principle and personality.

WE ought to have more men like Ray Johnston in this business—they have exhibitor confidence.

FOR something new in movie thrills, "Chang," Paramount's latest jungle feature, which opens at the Rivoli April 28, is recommended. It is about as novel and distinctive as could be imagined and even the most blasé film fan will get many a real "kick" out of this picture.

Major Merian Cooper and Ernest B. Schoedsack, who produced "Grass," are responsible for this remarkable feature, which occupied eighteen months in the making in the jungles of Siam. In its plot there is woven sympathy, pathos, suspense, tragedy and occasionally comedy. For stark realism, few films have ever come to the screen that match it, for it is the truthful portrayal of the Jimmy Grainger, he of the seven league boots, whose annual mileage in behalf of Fox films would make a trip to the moon seem inconsequential, is back with his New York friends again for a few days. Or he may be off on his mad dash against time once more for all we know, by the time this is printed.

Talk to Jimmy on the phone and by the time you can hang up and get over to Tenth Avenue, where he keeps an address and an office coat to prove that New York is his bailiwick, you are just as apt as not to find that he is half way to Chicago or giving his Buffalo exchange man the once over, while you have been getting into his outer office.

Wireless has nothing on him, for Jimmy's movements are not confined by wave-lengths. The best rule for those to follow, who want to see him, is to start over to the Fox offices about the time they hear that Jimmy is in Denver or Frisco. Then they may meet him coming in.

"Clay Actors" are said to be something new for the screen and a series is to be announced shortly in which they will be featured. They may not be so new after all. Many a screen idol has been found to have feet of clay before this.

ON Monday, April 18, at the Gaiety Theatre, Cecil B. De Mille's greatest achievement, "The King of Kings," will have its premiere. To say that all the industry awaits the critics' and the public's verdict on this wonder picture is putting it far too mildly. All the world awaits it as a revelation and a message, such as never yet the screen has borne to its thronging millions. It must either be all this and something more or Mr. De Mille will have fallen short of the high hopes which inspired him in its making.

"The King of Kings" will be either by far the greatest picture which has ever been made—so great, that by comparison, no film will be found worthy to be called a poor second—or it will be the screen's greatest tragedy. There is no middle ground, upon which it may be measured.

Sufficient reason why the suspense should be all but breathless until its showing on next Monday night.

Herb Cruikshank, who is battling three hundred, with no support, on the esteemed but oddly humdrum Morning Telegraph, slammed his editorial bat at a lot of heads one day this week, without much visible damage to any. Sorry to see Herb go Berserk this way—though his advertising columns may have something to do with it. Sorrier to harbor the fear that the verbiage he uses sounds as if he was taking his pills with a well known Pollyanna editor, who keeps whistling to keep his courage up and whose disposition gets sourer all the time. THE BRITISH FILMS BILL

*Philip Snowden
Assails Critics
Of American Films*

By R. Sydney

London Representative, Moving Picture World

HISTORY does not tell why Nero fiddled while Rome burned; in some quarters it is suggested that his unsuspecting senators were shut up in the house discussing some sort of quota bill.

After withering criticism from one side and apologetic support from the other, the Cinematograph Films Bill on Tuesday, March 22, got its second reading passed by 243 votes to 135.

Some 90 amendments are down for the Standing Committee of the House of Commons, before which the Films Bill now has to go. It is sought to delete a number of clauses and to modify practically all the penalties.

Most interesting are the amendments dealing with the quota proposals in the Act which propose to voluntarily reduce the percentages. It is now evident that the Bill will go through the House and become law by the close of this year.

Nearly the entire Labour Party is opposed to the Bill and in view of the fact that their early return to power is most probable, their opposition is something to be counted on.

In an eloquent speech against the passage of the Bill, Mr. Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, made it clear that the President of the Board of Trade (Sir P. Cunliffe-Lister) in the matter of this Bill is simply a tool in the hands of the Federation of British Industries. Mr. Snowden described the Bill as part of the ridiculous campaign for stimulating by artificial means the buying of British goods. It would make the camera a means for boosting goods which, if they had merit, would not need such a form of advertisement. The American film industry had not been built up by such methods. It had sought talent wherever it was to be found and had exploited it.

America had made the Exhibiting side of the films industry in this country. Fifty million pounds of capital was invested in the exhibiting of moving pictures here and from this investment millions were paid into the national exchequer. The development of film exhibiting in this country was due to American enterprise largely and American films.

Speaking of the abolition of blind booking and block booking, Mr. Snowden remarked that he had never before heard of the wildest protectionist advocating such interference with the right of individuals to make their own bargains.

The quota was another hitherto unthought of restriction on trade. The more absurd a thing was the better the President of the Board of Trade appeared to relish it. And so the next thing he might be proposing that greengrocers must stock a quota of British fruit, and the drapers must not sell more than a certain proportion of foreign-made goods.

British films were at present produced at an average rate of forty pictures annually; to fill the quota as it stood there would need to be sixty pictures made by British producers during 1928. There was not the least likelihood that so many British films of a good class would be available. By the end of the next eight years, according to the quota no less than 200 British pictures per annum would be required to "fill the bill."

Grace Cunard, pioneer serial favorite and Hayden Stevenson, Universal's newest serial star, in "Blake of Scotland Yard," a tense moment in which Miss Cunard, as the mystery woman, blunders in on Blake (Stevenson).

Under the Bill as it stood, films would be produced by people whose incompetence had kept the British industry in its present perilous state; these small enterprises would rush in to make money by putting films, good or bad, on a guaranteed market, at any prices they dared to ask or could get. Many small exhibitors would be ruined in consequence of having to take any sort of British picture to make up their quota or to show films already shown in neighboring cinemas in the same quandry to find British films to fill the percentage demanded under the bill.

Mr. Snowden believed that if the Conservatives were left free to take their own line, every one of them would treat the Films Bill with derision.

Colonel Moore-Brabazon (Conservative) said that the British cinema must get rid of the showman taint. With new blood and with competition for places in the small quota, British producers a few years hence would be able to compete against any other producers the world over.

With its thirteen fresh penalties for as many new offences and all wrapped in a midst of obscurity and uncertainty, the bill, in the view of Mr. Hopkin Morris, looked like the clock of which its owner said that when it struck twelve at two o'clock he knew that the right time was twenty minutes to seven.

Reference to the German quota of fifty per cent. was not very fortunate, in view of the present state of the German film industry and the mooted subsidising or support by the German State of the UFA interests and other German film interests.

The patriotism of Colonel Wedgwood blazed forth against "this most insolent piece of legislation" which assumed that the British public could be made to go and see what they did not want to see. The quota idea had been imported from Germany and to carry it through it would be just as reasonable to import a docile population from the same country.

Mr. Hall Caine, relative of the famous novelist, thought that authors would welcome

Master of Motion Picture Technology

A College Degree Which Is Rapidly Impressing Itself on the Announcements of Our Largest Universities

By Randolph Lewis

THE motion picture industry and the great educational centres, working toward the same end, may, in time, develop a sort of super-man whose practical and sentimental ken will take in all creation and even estimate to a certainty the things that will grow out of the future. Many persons interested can vision the day, now under way to fulfillment, when the proudest degrees earned by intensive study will be Master and Bachelor of Motion Picture Technology. That a school for the requisite training should come into being was inevitable because of the nature of the subject and its relation to the world of living men, and the various angles of its activities.

The motion picture is a cosmic proposition and it is especially appropriate that Columbia University, whose extension courses of instruction girdle the globe—there are earnest students in China and far India today—should be the first to establish such a course. Nicholas Murray Butler, for the last quarter of a century head of the institution, is one of the most practical of men, yet a dreamer of dreams, with the contagious spirit which brings ultimate realization. The coming of today was not needed to give him appreciation of the value of the motion picture. Already had he sensed its possibilities and something of the breadth of its achievement as a vital record of history and a shadow—yet luminous—goddess of education. He has foreseen it growing in power and beauty; he foresees a widening and miraculous future. The importance of such an undertaking as the new educational plan he characterizes as "unpredictable and stupendous."

So it was natural that Dr. Butler should have an educational survey made to determine what subjects would work to the benefit and advancement of the industry—he prefers to call it "profession," that, as a result, he should offer the service of the University. The work preliminary to the new course is now well under way and the survey being made by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, upon which the final educational step will be based, promises to be most thorough—it touches every angle of the industry which may be benefitted by special training and is under the direction of Carl E. Milliken.

The coming motion picture man on "the lot"; in the laboratory, the research and construction departments; in lighting and projection, will know to exactitude what is needed for each demand and how it should be created and applied, just as an expert chemist knows his formulae. His trained mental structure may be partially gauged by the classification of the University members at the meeting at the beginning of the year arranged by Will H. Hayes, for launching the movement. There were James C. Egbert, director of the University Extension, and Frank D. Fackenthal, Secretary of Columbia and these men, the nucleus of the final body which will shape the Bachelors and Masters of Motion Picture Technology:

William A. Boring, Director of School of Architecture.

Daniel D. Jackson, Professor of Chemical Engineering.

Walter I. Slichter, Professor of Electrical Engineering.

James P. C. Southal, Professor of Optics.

James K. Finch, Associate Professor of Civil Engineering.

It is obvious, says Professor Egbert, that there will be added instruction in photography, business administration and scenario writing, the latter having been in operation for some time—the pioneer of the industry to be welcomed by the great University. The plan may not be completed for some time, but it is steadily taking shape, following the inquiry and observations of both the Hayes organization and the educationists. In the Extension Professor Egbert tells that there are nearly 8,000 students enrolled and it is not unlikely that the new course will add a thousand or more. Numerous inquiries regarding it are coming from all parts of the country.

In the handling of the motion picture, precedent shows that its research will have no geographical limit, just as the picture itself has none: Columbia instructors are constantly engaged in study abroad so as to offer supplementary special courses. At present, for instance, Geroid Robinson, honored by the award of a Social Service Fellowship, is in Moscow studying the agrarian aspects of the Russian Revolution of 1917, the tragic side of which could furnish many screen dramas.

"The stupendous growth of the film and its world-widening appeal to millions is one of the social and economic marvels of the century," said Professor Egbert. "In the very beginning it was evident that it must have needs on the educational side. That was imperative, just as it is in every phase of business and of life. In every field the necessity of education is felt—the new spirit of creating and doing, and the need is in all professions. And, right here, I may remark that if the educational institutions of the country had done more for the theatre the present situation, involving good taste and the morality of the stage, would never have developed.

"The Hayes organization is making a most

by Eves W. Sargent.

JACK HORTON was decidedly grateful to Tom Taylor for giving people something to talk about. It took their minds off his own troubles. It was bad enough to have Clara May back at her mother's after the first tiff in their married life. It was tougher to have all Centreville saying "I told you so." Centreville was one of those towns where everyone minded everyone's business but his own.

When Jack and Clara had been married, dire predictions had been made. Clara had a temper and Jack was notably short on patience. Most persons professed surprise that they had stuck it out for five months. At that it had not been a case of temper. Jack had mildly expressed a belief that it was not saving money to buy five pairs of shoes for $8.49 a pair when Clara decided that they were bargains, marked down from $8.99. Jack merely remarked that her passion for bargains would land him in the poor house yet, and even when the front door had slammed—hard—he did not realize that she had gone back to her mother for sympathy and support.

Probably they still would have been talking about it had not Tom Taylor made a lavish distribution of blue and pink cards. Each was numbered and all you had to do was to find the twin number to get free admissions to the Royal the following Friday. Not knowing that only ten sets of the numbers were mates, the entire town was milling around trying to match up numbers and so engrossed that they forgot all about Jack and Clara for the time being, for which Jack was infinitely grateful to Taylor.

He even took a mild interest in his own blue card with 5943 neatly stamped in one corner. All he had to do was find a woman with a pink card with the same number, for the blue cards went to the men and the pink to women. It was intriguing to speculate as to who had the pink twin to his blue 5943, but up to Friday night its owner had not been discovered.

Jack dropped over to the Royal to see if he could find the mate, and slunk into the background when he discerned Clara May beside the box office with a pink slip firmly clutched in her shapely little hand.

He slipped into the background, but not into complete obscurity, and many and significant were the glances cast in his direction as the crowd entered the theatre.

As time passed and man after man shook his head in reply to Clara's eager questioning, the light of pursuit flamed brightly in her eyes. A confirmed bargain hunter, here was a chance not lightly to be overlooked. Someone had the blue slip that would give her an absolutely free admission to the performance, but apparently he had decided not to try his luck. He must be staying home. Clara boiled at the thought.

Jed Chase brought matters to a head as he turned from the questioning Clara.

"My number's 1463," he loudly announced. "Any lady so fortunate as to be matched up with me?"

A score of women eagerly consulted their pink slips, but no one claimed him for a mate and Jed laughingly laid his quarter on the box office ledge and picked up his ticket. As he came toward the door he spied the miserable Horton and chuckled.

"You don't happen to have 5943 do you, Jack?" he asked loudly. "If you have, your wife wants to see you."

He passed on toward the doorkeeper, but Clara instinctively moved forward. Something in Jack's manner told her that he held the mate to her number. She remembered in time that they were not on speaking terms, but she did not quit the lobby. They said that "Reunited" was a wonderful picture, starring her favorite player, and she was willing to pay the quarter, if she had to, but it was the irony of fate that the one man in town to whom she would not speak held the matched number that would let them both in free.

From the semi-shadow of a still frame Jack watched her mental struggles and smiled. He was half tempted to slip someone else his ticket, with the tip that Clara held its mate, but he did not like the idea of anyone else taking Clara in, and he held his place.

The stream of people was growing smaller as the house filled. Already eight couples had proudly presented their paired tickets to the doorman, and through the transoms came the soft strains of the overture.

Jack thrust the ticket back into his pocket and fished out a quarter. He might as well go in. Clara was not going to speak, and he was determined he would not make the overtures to her.

He was almost at the window when he felt a hand upon his arm and turned to look down into Clara's excited face.

"It's foolish to buy a ticket when we can go in free," she said hurriedly. "We don't have to sit together. Let me have your card."

"Half in a daze he turned over his blue card and followed her to the door where she triumphantly presented the pair and swept past the gate, almost into the arms of Tom Taylor.

"Welcome to our city," he exclaimed genially. "Got special seats down front for you lucky folks."

"We weren't aiming to sit together," explained Jack awkwardly, but Taylor swept him off his feet with the assurance that the lucky pass holders simply had to sit together or go back and buy their way in, and before Jack could mutely question Clara they were swept down the aisle to a bunting draped row.

As the main feature came on the beautiful Lady Gwendolyn nearly wrecked her life by promising to elope with the dashing Colonel Ormsby, only to be saved in the last reel by her unemotional but sterling better half. Clara's hand for a moment brushed his as the leader flashed, "What God hath joined let no man put asunder."

It was the faintest gesture, apparently an accident, and as Jack turned to her she was looking intently at the screen and he offered no response.

Many curious glances followed them as they made their way up the aisle, but they were too deep in their own thoughts to notice. As they reached the street he turned to the right with a terse "I'll see you over to your mother's," but a tiny hand fluttered to his arm and a meek little voice answered—"Why can't we go—home," and turned him to the left.

Twenty minutes later little Tommy Babson, who had been given his instructions, reported to Taylor. "They went into his—their house together."

Taylor spat thoughtfully at the cuspidor, and missed, possibly, because his eyes were suspiciously dim.

"It worked," he pronounced oracularly to himself, "but gosh I was afraid Jack wouldn't come down after all the trouble I had seeing them two got the right tickets."

A Breath Of The Desert

"Chang" Opens At N. Y. Rivoli On April 29th

"Chang," the realistic jungle melodrama produced in northern Siam by Major Merian C. Cooper and Ernst B. Schoedsack, will open an extended engagement at the Rivoli Theatre on Friday, April 29, Paramount announces.

Paramount officials maintain that "Chang" is unique among all the motion pictures that ever have been made. It was filmed from a definite scenario, written in New York City, founded upon the elemental age-old theme of man's conflict with the jungle. Cooper and Schoedsack went into the hidden jungles in the northern part of Siam, spent a year and nine months, and made the Lao natives and the fierce tigers, leopards, elephants, snakes and other beasts act in conformity with the prepared script.

Achmed Abdullah, the novelist, an authority on jungle life, is writing the titles.

Ingraham To Do "Arizona Nights"

Announcement is made by F. B. O. that Lloyd Ingraham will direct the final Fred Thomson picture prior to his assuming his new contract.

It is "Arizona Nights" and is said to be along entirely different lines from any story that has been brought to the screen thus far with Thomson as a star.

Fox Lists "Cradle Snatchers" For April 24 to Meet Demand

Screen Version of Broadway Stage Success Removed by J. R. Grainger From Fall Program, With "Is Zat So?"

IN response to insistent demands from first-run exhibitors all over the country, James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Films, announced this week that "Cradle Snatchers" will be released on April 24, to be followed on May 8 by "Is Zat So?" Both are riotous comedies based on Broadway successes with established box-office appeal. "Cradle Snatchers" had been intended for release later in the season. As soon as news came from California of the picture's tremendous success at pre-views, however, the New York office began to get long distance calls from exhibitors asking for playdates. The strong cast and known audience appeal of the picture makes it particularly desirable.

Wherever Mr. Grainger stopped on his trip back to New York from Hollywood, he met demands for immediate bookings. When he pointed out that "Is Zat So?", while entirely different in story, cast and makeup, is also one of the strong offerings on the schedule, exhibitors told him they wanted that, too. The particular demand was for a strong box office picture for the Easter holiday season.

Since "Is Zat So?" was not quite ready, Mr. Grainger decided to advance "Cradle Snatchers" and leave "Is Zat So?" on the list for release on May 8.

"Cradle Snatchers," which ran a solid year on Broadway as a play, has been made into one of the greatest comedies of the screen season, according to reports from the coast. Mr. Grainger was so enthusiastic about the picture after seeing three pre-view audiences go into convulsions that he wired Roxy immediately and the production was booked at once for the big Broadway house, acquired later by William Fox.

The picture "Cradle Snatchers" adheres to the play and the story is enhanced by clever comedy action executed by a great comedy cast. Louise Fazenda heads the list, with Ethel Wales and Dorothy Phillips as the other women with young ideas. Arthur Lake, as the "Swede," is said to have made the hit of his career as one of the "ideas." Joseph Striker

John McCormick

Signs New Star

John McCormick, general manager of West Coast production for First National Pictures, has signed Virginia Lee Corbin to a long-term contract.

Until recently known as a child actress, Miss Corbin, now grown up, appeared last year with marked success in two First National pictures, "Ladies at Play," made at the Burbank studios and "The Perfect Sap," an eastern production.

Miss Corbin was born in Prescott, Arizona, and started her career as a model for artists and sculptors who specialized in child subjects. From this she graduated into motion pictures and despite her youth has appeared in productions by most of the larger companies. She is beautiful, with golden hair and dark blue eyes.

To Start New One

"Dance Magic," Robert Kane's next picture for First National release, is scheduled to go into production this week at the Cosmopolitan Studios, New York. Ben Lyon has the leading male role with a supporting cast headed by Barbara Stanwick, Louis John Bartels and Joyce Collyer.

James R. Grainger

plays the Spaniard and Nicholas Stuart is the other college boy. Sammy Cohen, of "What Price Glory" fame, is also in the cast, which is completed by J. Farrell Macdonald, William Davidson and Franklyn Pangborn as the erring husbands and Dione Ellis in an ingenue role. Howard Hawks directed.

"Is Zat So," directed by Alfred E. Green, has been completed and is in the cutting room. In the cast are George O'Brien, Edmund Lowe, Kathryn Perry, Cyril Chadwick, Doris Lloyd, Dione Ellis, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Phillippe Delacy, Richard Maitland and Jack Herrick.

Smith Finishes

Final shots have been made on "The Poor Nut," the Jess Smith production for First National Pictures. Jack Mulhall and Charlie Murray have the featured roles in this picturization of the well-known stage play Richard Wallace directed.

Youth Picture Goes Into Work

Production work has been started on "Rolled Stockings," Paramount's "youth picture," under the direction of Richard Rosson. Featured in the cast are: Richard Arlen, James Hall, Louise Brooks, Nancy Phillips, David Torrence and El Brendel.

Chester Franklin, director of M-G-M's "The Thirteenth Hour," makes Jacqueline Gadsen swear never to be late again.

Lichtman Reports Swanson Film In 99 Important Cities By May 1

GLORIA SWANSON'S first independent production for United Artists' release, "The Love of Sunya," shown for the first time on March 11, when the new Roxy Theatre in New York City was opened, will have played more than 99 important cities before the end of next month, according to figures released this week by Al Lichtman, United Artists' General Manager of Distribution for the United States and Canada.

Mr. Lichtman said that 32 major centers of population showed Miss Swanson's first United Artists picture in the month of March. New York, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Providence, New Orleans, Toledo, Jacksonville and Galveston being included.

Already, the executive's announcement continued, 27 large population cities, including six key cities, have booked the picture for the month of April. St. Louis, Chicago, Baltimore, Richmond, Columbus, Houston, Denver, Detroit, Minneapolis, Butte and Omaha are among the cities where the "Love of Sunya" will be shown in April.

For showings in the month of May, 40 cities have scheduled "The Love of Sunya." Boston, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Memphis, Charlotte, Milwaukee and Indianapolis are on the May list.

"Beau Sabreur" From Famous; By James Cruze

"Beau Sabreur," P. C. Wren's companion story to "Beau Geste," will come to the screen as a spectacle with a high grade comedy plot coupled with a strong vein of serious romance as its central theme. This was the assertion of B. P. Schulberg in announcing definite plans for James Cruze's next special.

Tom J. Geraghty has been assigned to the preparation of the adaption and continuity. Geraghty last did Wallace Beery's starring vehicle, "The Big Sneeze" from "Louie the Fourteenth," also directed by Cruze.

"U" Dog Star In New Film

Dynamite, Universal's famous police dog star, has started work in "Fangs of Destiny," fourth of a series of canine pictures which Universal is producing under the direction of Stuart Paton.

Edmund Cobb plays the leading male role. The series is being written especially for Dynamite by Basil Dickey, noted canine authority. Each picture of the series is five reels in length and complete in itself.

The Magnascope Used In "Chang"

The Magnascope, Paramount's presentation process introduced successfully at the premiere of "Old Ironsides," will be employed again when "Chang," the jungle melodrama, opens its engagement at the Rivoli Theatre on April 29.

Paramount anticipates that the sudden enlargement of the Rivoli screen to thrice its actual size during the climatic scenes of "Chang" will give audiences a surprising thrill comparable to the one achieved when the good ship Constitution sails into view in "Old Ironsides."

Detroit Books Columbia Films

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, has received a wire from A. W. Bowman, manager of the Columbia exchange in Detroit, informing him that Keith's Uptown has booked two of Columbia's "Big 24" for April, and one for May.

The three productions are "The Bachelor's Baby," "The Price of Honor" and "Birds of Prey." The Uptown is Keith's newest.

Tea in a Chinese costume. Marion Nixon as she appears in Universal's "The Chinese Parrot."

"Flyer" in Work

Cameras have started grinding on "The Phantom Flyer," third of the series of air thrillers starring Al Wilson under the Universal banner. The picture will be completed in a month, is the word from Universal City.

Nick Stuart and Dione Ellis demonstrating the meaning of "Cradle Snatchers," the Fox picture they are appearing in.

Underwood Will Continue With Columbia Films

A contract for the continued distribution of Columbia Pictures by Liberty-Specialty Films Distributing Corporation, which has offices in Charlotte, N. C.; Atlanta, Georgia; Memphis, Tennessee; New Orleans, Dallas and Oklahoma City, was signed by Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, and William ("Bill") Underwood, general manager of Liberty-Specialty.

The combination of Liberty-Specialty, which is conceded to be the strongest distribution organization in the South, and Columbia Pictures, the most formidable of producers, insures for the exhibitors of the entire South a series of box-office attractions of known quantity and superior quality.

Bela Sekely Now "U" Supervisor

Bela Sekely, noted Continental writer and critic, and more recently technical and literary advisor at M.-G.-M. and Universal, has been selected by Carl Laemmle as supervisor for the production unit which is to make "The Man Who Laughs," the big super-picture Universal is planning from the famous Victor Hugo novel.

Conrad Veidt, popular European screen star, especially brought to this country by Laemmle for this production, will play the title role, with Mary Philbin co-featured in the role of Dea, the blind heroine.

Fay Wray Will Play Opposite Emil Jannings

Fay Wray, whose rise to dramatic heights in Erich Von Stroheim's "The Wedding March," has been meteoric, has been selected as Emil Jannings' leading woman in his next Paramount picture, a story of the notorious Soho district of London, tentatively titled "Hitting for Heaven."

Miss Wray is a Hollywood High School girl who broke into pictures four years ago on the comedy lots.

Fuller Goes to Work

Paul Fairfax Fuller, who has given Pathe some of its best story adaptations for serial productions has been assigned by that organization to write the continuity for "Still Face," a new Clarence Puddington Kelland story run serially in the Saturday Evening Post.

'Don Juan' Sets Record For A Barrymore Film

"Don Juan," Warner Bros.' extended run production starring John Barrymore, closed its engagement at the Warner Theatre last week, having achieved the longest record of any Barrymore picture ever produced.

For thirty-six weeks the production played to capacity audiences, was seen by over 700,000 people and drew to the box-office upwards of $1,000,000.

"Don Juan" was succeeded at the Warner Theatre by John Barrymore's other Warner special, "When A Man Loves," which moved from the Selwyn.

With the closing of its Broadway run "Don Juan" will be generally released to exhibitors throughout the country.

Warners Tie-Up Chicago Radio Station WBBM

Radio listeners-in will hereafter receive weekly news of the activities of Warner stars and pictures as the result of an important broadcasting arrangement consummated by the Warner Bros.

WBBM, Chicago, will send over the air items of interest from the Warner Studio every Monday evening, 6 to 7 o'clock. This period, the dinner hour, assures a maximum audience and it is believed that such a radio tie-up will be of incalculable value to the current Warner product.

Station WBBM, Chicago, is operated by the Stewart-Warner Speedometer Corporation. The weekly "Warner Pictures hour" will greatly increase the large public already reached through the medium of radio broadcasting from Warner Bros.' own Los Angeles station, KFWB.

'Irish Hearts' To Be May McAvoy's Second Picture

May McAvoy's next stellar role for Warner Bros. will be in the lead of "Irish Hearts," a picturesque and appealing story of Erin from the pen of Melville Crossman.

With the cast now assembled, work is progressing rapidly. Handling the roles following Miss McAvoy's in importance are Walter Perry, William Demarest, Walter Rodger, Jason Robards, Warner Richmond and Kathleen Key.

Fred Thomson With Paramount; "Jesse James" First Production

FRED THOMPSON, whose meteoric rise to the heights as one of the most popular stars in screen-dom, has been a highlight in the film world, has signed a long term contract to release his future productions through Paramount, it was announced yesterday by S. R. Kent.

With the launching of his association with Paramount, Thomson will enter upon a series of productions of a special type, embracing absorbing themes with a historical background that promises to establish a new standard in the field of Westerns.

His first Paramount special will be "Jesse James," the true story of that famous colorful figure of the past century, with Thomson appearing in the title role. Frank Emmett Clifton, who has become famous for his work as Thomson's special writer and scenarist, is now writing the story.

The same producing unit which Thomson has had for the last two years will continue to make his pictures. Lloyd Ingraham, who has been the director of the star's greatest successes, will continue in that capacity. Shooting is scheduled to begin about July 1, with the contract calling for completion of the picture, ready for delivery by October 1.

"The legend of Jesse James, which has come down to the present generation is wholly brutal," Thomson said, in commenting on his first Paramount picture. "The true story of his life is far different. Back of his career of outlawry is a big, human story of a man driven to desperation by the cruelties and tragedies heaped upon him in his youth. Fundamentally kindly and law-abiding by nature, he was finally hounded by carpet baggers, in the days immediately following the Civil War, into the career that made him notorious. This is the story that I want to tell on the screen."

Thomson's first Westerns were made for a small independent company, but so instantaneous was his popularity that a year later he was signed by F. B. O. Two years ago he organized his own unit which has produced his greatest pictures. With its formation came the crystallization of Thomson's policy, faithfully maintained, of portraying only such vigorous types of American manhood as any American boy could idolize.

"Matinee Ladies"

May McAvoy's first starring picture for Warner Bros. "Matinee Ladies," opened last week for its first showing on Broadway at the Colony Theatre supplemented by a special program of new Vitaphone numbers.

Fleck Assisting

Fred Fleck, former casting director at the Paramount Long Island studio, has been assigned as assistant to Clarence Badger, who is to direct Richard Dix's next starring effort, now in preparation.

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

—Proven Value

You are thinking pretty hard right now about what pictures you are going to buy for next season. It won't be long now till the salesmen are asking you to put your name on the dotted line. And there is one big thought that I believe you will have in mind the same as I have it in mind. When you come to signing on that dotted line you will want to be buying product of proven value. No guess work. You want proof!

Among all the big companies that will be selling short subjects for next season, Educational is the only true specialist, the only one whose sole interest is in giving you the best in one and two-reel pictures, and in backing them up with service that makes them of the greatest value to your box-office.

For seven years this has been our only aim. Seven years of specialized experience. And every year a bigger number of exhibitors have played Educational Pictures. Why? For only one reason. Because they have made money for these showmen. There is no guess work about Educational Pictures. They are the product of specialists—a product of proven value.

Rayart Pictures Corporation In Strong Position For 1927-28

GOOD PICTURES can meet any and all competition."

The speaker was W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart Pictures Corporation, who, on the strength of his record, is qualified to speak as an authority on the subject.

Three years ago, after an extensive apprenticeship, which ranged from assistant director at the old Thanhouser Company to the vice-presidency of Arrow Pictures Corporation, Mr. Johnston organized his own company. Its exceptional success has been a source of amazement to the entire industry. And yet, after one has spoken with the man himself one realizes that success was absolutely inevitable.

Mr. Johnston knows, as the saying goes, what it's all about. He has studied and mastered every problem, phase and angle of production and distribution. He knows the pitfalls that lurk to entrap the feet of the unwary and he knows how those pitfalls may be avoided.

Beneath his deft guidance, Rayart has traveled far.

"I have studied the independent market, so-called, over a considerable period of years," said Mr. Johnston. "I believe that I am qualified to say that I know it thoroughly. And it is because I know it that I am anticipating for my organization, and for any organization engaged in the creation of worthwhile product, a successful season and an assured future.

"It has been said time and again that the independent market is being stifled; that there is no outlet for product other than that created by the old line companies. It is my pleasure and my privilege to refute this mis-statement.

"Starting from a very humble beginning, but building steadily toward an ideal, Rayart Pictures Corporation has progressed far. This progress was made possible because of the quality of our product. We have supplied to the leading independent exchanges of the country, and through them to representative theatre owners the nation over, a consistent supply of good pictures. I don't claim that they were world-beaters. I do say, though, that they were made to entertain and that they fulfilled their mission. Every picture can't be a super-special, you know; there must be a day-in-day-out supply of dependable product. And that's where Rayart pictures come in.

"We were particularly fortunate this year in making our producing affiliations. The men who will create the Rayart product have demonstrated their fitness for their assignments. One of them is Trem Carr, another is Duke Worne, and the third is Charles J. Hunt.

"Our melodramas will be subdivided into the 'Famous Author's Series, 'Superior Melodramas' Series and the 'Imperial Photoplays' Series.

Under the first heading will come the work of Octavus Roy Cohen, Harold McGrath, H. H. Van Loan, Charles T. Vincent, Joseph LeBrandt and Ted Robbins.

"The other two series possess equal merit, with strong exploitable titles.

"You may be sure that those Westerns which we market this year will in every respect live up to the high standard which we ourselves have set.

As for our comedies, we confidently expect that we will do bigger things this year than ever before. We have acquired as the backbone of our comedy program Lige Conley, former star of Educational-Mermaid Comedies, who will make a series of thirteen two-reel laugh gems for us.

"Besides these, we will offer thirteen additional two-reelers, our 'Ruffneck Comedies,' which will feature the cleverest group of juvenile stars now before the camera."

Beth Brown's Titles

Beth Brown, author of several books and well-known title writer, who has written titles for a large number of short subjects, has been employed by Walter Futter.

King Vidor To Bring Company East For Shots

King Vidor is preparing for a trip to New York City where he will film exterior scenes for his new untitled production, which he is now directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

As soon as the interior scenes are completed at the M-G-M studio he will depart for the East, taking with him Eleanor Boardman and James Murray, the featured players of the story and a number of the cast, including Bert Roach and Estelle Clark.

The locale of the story, which is an original by the director, is New York City and because of the immensity of the scenes, it has been decided that it will be better to go East, and film actual locales of the story rather than try to duplicate them at the studio.

Whole Family Busy

Marguerite de La Motte has just finished "Sidewalks of New York" for Columbia. The picture, however, will be released under another title. Her equally famous husband, John Bowers, is now busy at the same studio making "For Ladies Only."

Esther Ralston plucks an ostrich in her first Paramount starring production "Fashions For Women."

Metro's Scenario Staff Kept Busy

Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer now has the largest motion picture scenario staff in the history of the industry.

More than sixty-five expert writers are now working on fifty stories for next season's production.

Half of these stories are originals, the rest adaptations of famous novels or plays.

Among the internationally famous writers now under contract as scenarists at the M-G-M studio are Marion Ainslee, Laurence Stallings, Patrick Kearney, Sada Coawn, Waldemar Young, A. P. Younger, Lorna Moon, Gladys Unger, Douglas Furber, F. Hugh Herbert, Florence Ryerson, Joe Farnham and E. Richard Schayer.

Samuel Goldwyn Has New Star: Shirley Palmer

Samuel Goldwyn believes he has a future star in Shirley Palmer, to whom he has given a contract. Her first role will be in "King Harlequin," Goldwyn's new Colman-Banky film, upon which production was begun yesterday by director Henry King in Culver City.

Shirley Palmer, a Chicago University girl, first appeared on the screen in "Peter Pan," then in several Hal Roach comedies and finally in independent film productions. Goldwyn saw her on the screen and liked her so well that he signed her.

At the same time Goldwyn signed Cosmo Kyrle Bellew.

Two-Star Plans

First National has decided upon two productions for its new team of featured players, Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall. The first is "The Road to Romance," which Charles R. Rogers is producing. The second will be a screen version of Gertrude Atherton's new novel, "The Crystal Cup." Ray Rockett will produce it.

Has Bear Role

George Atterbury, a dwarf, appearing this season in comedies produced at Educational Studios, takes the part of a fake bear in "Hold That Bear," a forthcoming Cameo Comedy.

Baker's Fun Film

Eddie Baker, who is most often seen in comedies as a villain, takes the role of an officious prison guard in "Jail Birdies," the Educational-Bobby Vernon Comedy starring the diminutive comedian.

First Columbia Production For April Release

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, announces that the company's first release for the month of April will be "Paying the Price," a drama of life in the highways and byways of a notorious resort city.

"Paying the Price," boasts a cast of unusual distinction. Mary Carr and William Welch, foremost portrayals of mother and father roles on the screen, have been entrusted with the parental delineations.

George Fawcett, John Miljan, George Hackathorne and Eddie Phillips handle the character portrayals, and William Eugene and Priscilla and Marjorie Bonner supply the romance.

Bradbury For F. B. O. Westerns

Increased activity in the production of Western pictures by F. B. O. is promised in the announcement of President Joseph P. Kennedy, that within 90 days two new units will be added to this division.

The announcement came closely in the wake of Kennedy's statement that Robert North Bradbury has been elevated to the position of supervisor of Western units.

Since Bradbury is both a writer and director, it is anticipated that his addition to the executive staff of F. B. O. will add materially to the quality of the product of this department.

Tom Tyler, whose work has increased in popularity to a gratifying extent under the capable direction of Bob De Lacy, is being groomed to step into the gap which will be caused soon by the departure of Fred Thomson to Paramount.

Title Changed

"Time to Love" is the title selected for Raymond Griffith's starring picture now in production at the Paramount studio. It replaces the tentative title, "Dying for Love." Frank Tuttle is directing.

D. A. R. Approves Four Educationals

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., won the distinction of having four subjects on the first published list of motion pictures approved by the Daughters of the American Revolution, which was made public in the April issue of the magazine published by this society.

"The Vision," "The Blue Boy" and "The Mona Lisa," all Romance Productions in Technicolor, and Robert C. Bruce's Scenic Novelties were named in the list.

Laemmle Appoints Riesenfeld Managing Director at Colony

UPON HIS ARRIVAL from Universal City last Saturday, the first announcement made by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, was that Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld had been secured by Universal as managing director of the Colony Theatre, Broadway, which Uni-

Dr. Riesenfeld's plans for the Colony were outlined by him in a subsequent interview.

"I am going to be a true servant of the motion picture," said Dr. Riesenfeld. "The picture shall be first last and all the time. In presentations, everything else will be only a tempoversal will take over September 1, as a regular Universal presentation house.

The Universal president paid high tribute to the impresario's reputation and ability. He pointed out that Universal expects to have one of the most popular show-houses on Broadway and that as the complement to the high class Universal pictures which will appear on the Colony screen, Universal has made a great coup in signing up Dr. Riesenfeld, past-master in the motion picture presentation field.

rary means of catching the eye or the attention of the audience and of getting them into the theatre.

"For instance, I don't want to give opera in the Colony unless it lends itself to the feature picture of the moment. With some pictures, bits of opera or operatic music will fit perfectly into place and enhance the picture. With others it would be entirely out of keeping.

"I am very glad of the opportunity to direct the Colony Theatre. It is a beautiful house and much can be done with it.

Additions To "The Wind" Cast

William Orlamond and Edward Earle, noted screen actors, were added last week to the cast which M.-G.-M. has assembled for "The Wind," Lillian Gish's starring vehicle now in production under Victor Seastrom's direction.

Orlamond recently scored a marked success in a character role in "Flesh and the Devil," and has appeared in many other Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's productions.

Boston House Keeps Columbia

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, announces as the first important domestic deal consummated for the 1927-1928 season the contract signed by Joseph A. McConville and Abe Montague of Independent Films, Inc., for the continued distribution of the company's product in the New England territory.

McConville and Montague, two of the most progressive exchange men in the country, have distributed Columbia's product since the company's inception.

Monte Blue's New Warner Picture Here

The first print of Monte Blue's new Warner Bros. starring picture, "The Brute," has been received at the company's New York office, and will be released April 23.

In it the star is seen in the character of a cowpuncher, whose adventures take him into the sand wastes of Death Valley and later to the Oklahoma oil fields. Actual locations were used for the filming of these two sequences.

Another point of interest in "The Brute" is the first appearance of Leila Hyams as a Warner leading lady. Miss Hyams is now a contract player with the company.

Irving Cummings directed. Clyde Cook, Carrol Nye and Paul Nicholson are in the cast.

Goldwyn Casts Conny Howard In King's Latest

Samuel Goldwyn has assigned Constance Howard, his sister-in-law, to the second most important feminine role in "The Magic Flame," his current Henry King production which will co-feature Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky.

In "The Magic Flame," Miss Howard will be seen as a young princess. She plays opposite William Bakewell, an 18-year-old Los Angeles High School boy whose career has attracted particular attention thus far.

Ralph Ince In "Shanghaied"

Immediately following the final cutting of "Not For Publication," which he directed and also starred in, Ralph Ince departed for Catalina with members of his technical staff, to prepare "Shanghaied" for production, from a story by Edward Maitland originally titled "Limehouse Polly," in which Ince will again star and direct.

Ida Darling In "Horse Shoes"

Ida Darling, one of the best known "grande dames" on the screen, essays a prominent role in support of Monty Banks in "Horse Shoes," his new Pathe feature comedy.

Miss Darling, who portrays a wealthy and aristocratic middle-aged woman of fashion, has an interesting background of a quarter of a century in motion pictures and on the stage, during which time she played with some of the outstanding figures in the world of drama.

Annual Fox Sales Convention In Atlantic City, N. J., May 11

ON HIS RETURN this week from his third transcontinental trip since last April, James R. Grainger, the dynamic general sales manager of Fox Films, announced that plans have been completed to hold the annual Fox sales convention at the Ambassador Hotel in Atlantic City, beginning May 11.

This will be followed by a series of regional conventions in various parts of the country, each to be presided over by Mr. Grainger.

While in Hollywood Mr.

Grainger conferred with W. R. Sheehan, vice-president in charge of Fox production activities, and made a personal survey of the pictures in work on the Fox lot.

On the way out to California, the Fox sales chief stopped for conferences with his staff and exhibitors in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. On the return trip he stopped in San Francisco and Chicago.

Since last April, Mr. Grainger has spent forty-six weeks on the road, but he has time for a good rest before the convention.

Clyde Cook's Long Contract With Warners

Clyde Cook has been signed to a long term contract whereby he becomes a member of Warner Bros.' stock company of featured players.

Cook was internationally famous on the vaudeville stage as a comic dancer, having scored consecutive hits in Australia, in the Parisian Folies Bergere, in London's Alhambra and finally on the Orpheum Circuit in the United States.

His picture debut was sponsored by Hal Roach, who promptly starred him, and following this contract he appeared in stellar laugh vehicles for Fox.

In the last season he has devoted himself to feature work, notably with Cecil De Mille and Henry King. His most recent roles have been at the Warner studio in "The Brute" and "The Climbers."

Cook's next assignment will be in support of Louise Fazenda in "Simple Sis."

Maynard's Next

Work was started last week on Ken Maynard's next First National starring picture, "The Devil's Saddle," a Charles R. Rogers production described as a modern story of the redskins involving a reservation uprising.

Warner Oland In Title Role

Mary Roberts Rhinehardt's "What Happened to Father" is scheduled for early production at the Warner Studio. The title role has been assigned to Warner Oland, who will start as soon as he has completed "A Million Bid," starring Dolores Costello. John Adolfi will direct. Could it possibly be a villain role?

Mrs Reid Starts 'The Satin Woman'

With preliminary production details completed, Mrs. Wallace Reid started production this week on the first of her two special productions, "The Satin Woman," to be released by Lumas Film Corporation as a deluxe attraction in conjunction with their Gotham Productions.

"The Satin Woman" will mark the re-entry into active screen work by Mrs. Reid, who is acting in the dual capacity of producer and star.

Mary Astor Assigned Feminine Lead in "Two Arabian Knights"

MARY ASTOR, leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks in "Don Q," and for John Barrymore in "Don Juan," has been given the leading feminine role in "Two Arabian Knights."

The "knights" in question (doughboys to be exact) are William Boyd and Louis Wolheim performing under Lewis Milestone's direction in the first Caddo Production for United Artists' release.

Miss Astor has been assigned to the role originally announced to be played by Alma Rubens. However, according to Howard Hughes, president of Caddo Pro-

One of the softer moments of M-G-M's "The Unknown," starring Lon Chaney. Joan Crawford is the gal.

Hit at Strand

"See You in Jail," a First National picture featuring Jack Mulhall with Alice Day and Mack Swain, was enthusiastically received during a week's engagement at the New York Strand. It is a hilariously amusing farce and promises much.

"King of Kings" World Premiere

Great preparations for the world premiere of "The King of Kings" at the Gaiety Theatre, New York City, on Tuesday evening, April 19, indicate that this will be one of the most important screen openings ever staged.

Many of the most distinguished men and women of the East will be present, and the Pacific Coast will be represented by the large party of Cecil B. De Mille, the producer, and by a number of distinguished visitors from the West. The De Mille party arrived in New York last Sunday morning.

The work of remodeling the Gaiety Theatre has been entrusted to Dr. Hugo Riesendorf and John Wenger. For Dr. Riesendorf, in charge of presentation, is in supreme charge of everything beyond the ticket-taker's door. He is rebuilding a lower stage for his thirty-six musicians and preparing a number of novel effects.

An added feature for which, no doubt, the press will feel lively gratitude to John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager of Cecil B. De Mille Productions, is the holding of a dress rehearsal preview at the Gaiety on Monday evening, thus giving the critics ample opportunity to prepare their reviews.

Inspiration To Produce Only Feature Films

Walter Camp, president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., announces that, in future, Inspiration will produce only feature pictures, abandoning its former policy of making program films.

Inspiration made a series eighteen program pictures in which Richard Barthelmess was starred, and during this time they also produced several feature films, including "The White Sister," with Lillian Gish, and "Romola," in which Lillian and Dorothy Gish were featured.

"Resurrection," their latest feature, starring Rod LaRocque and featuring Dolores Del Rio, recently released by United Artists, was co-produced by Inspiration Pictures and Edwin Carewe, who will jointly produce "Ramona," an adaptation of Helen Hunt Jackson's novel. This will be the first starring vehicle for Dolores Del Rio and will likewise be a United Artists release.

"Topsy" Signed

Mona Ray, the Topsy of Universal's "Uncle Tom's Cabin," has been placed under a long term contract.

Gotham Acquires Popular Stories

From the New York office of Gotham Productions comes the announcement this week that two well-known works of popular authors have been added to the forthcoming schedule.

In addition to the material previously announced, Gotham has now secured the rights to "The Spider's Web," by Reginald Wright Kauffman and "The Head of the Family," by the late George Randolph Chester.

Both of the stories acquired are ideally suited for the screen purposes without any basic changes in adaptation and both are by authors of world wide reputation.

Jimmie Adams In Educational's "No Sparking"

After several days of strenuous work filming scenes of a hotel on fire, the cast of "No Sparking," a forthcoming Educational-Jimmie Adams Comedy, has earned a well-deserved rest, and will enjoy a brief vacation. Some of the most dramatic fire sequences ever made for a Short Picture form the background for some of the clowning in this picture.

William Irving and Bill Blaisdell carry through the major portion of the supporting comedy section in this new Jimmie Adams Comedy. Ann Christy appears opposite Jimmie in a delightful role. Harold Beaudine directed, with Eddie Baker as his first assistant.

England Likes It

"The Belle of Broadway," the Columbia drama starring Betty Compson has been released in England under the title of "The Darling of Paris," and was greeted both by the daily and trade press with enthusiastic approval.

New Fox Trot

Arthur Murray, world-famous originator of dances, has created "Horse Shoes," a new fox trot to be executed to the strains of the new melody inspired by the Pathe feature—Monty Banks' "Horse Shoes."

Added to Cast

Three well known character actors were added this week to the cast of "Rich Men's Sons" when Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production, signed George Fawcett, Frances Raymond and Robert Cain for important roles in this Columbia comedy-drama.

Wide Variety of Entertainment In Universal's Coming "Shorts"

Ethlyne Clair, popular as Mrs. Newlywed, is now playing opposite Hoot Gibson in Universal's "The Prairie King."

Sex Appeal Stuff

Felix the Cat is pictured as the annoyed cat that can't evade the wailing notes of a saxophone in "Felix the Cat in Sex Appeal," the latest release in this series by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Big Boy's Next

Production work has been completed on "Atta Baby," an Educational-Juvenile Comedy, featuring "Big Boy." Charles Lamont directed the picture.

Monty Banks is going to make them swim home. A group of beauties from his Pathe Feature comedy "Horseshoes."

Super-Shorts, Known As "U" Junior Jewels, Will Include Best Box-Office Stuff; Also 52 Two-Reel Westerns

UNIVERSAL will again lead all other companies in the number of one and two-reel subjects offered to the market in 1927-1928. All varieties of entertainment are included in their short subject program, one and two-reel comedies, westerns, specials, serials and newsreels. Heading the list are the super-shorts, known to the trade as Universal Junior Jewels.

Also, Universal is offering another new two-reel comedy series to the market. It is a series of six Octavus Roy Cohen comedies made with Charles Puffy, the fat comedian.

In the one reel comedy field, Universal will have 26 Snappy Comedies, 13 of them to be known as Drugstore Cowboy Comedies, featuring Arthur Lake, and 13 as Harold Highbrow Comedies, featuring Churchill Ross.

There will be 26 Oswald Cartoons, one-reel animated cartoon comedies featuring a new character, Oswald the lucky rabbit, made for Universal by the Winkler Productions, Inc.

Universal also will supply 52 two-reel westerns to next year's screens. They will consist of four series of 13 dramas each. The several series are the Northwest Mounted Pictures, featuring Jack Perrin; the Texas Ranger Pictures, featuring Fred Gilman; the Stunt Cowboy Series, featuring Bob Curwood, and the Champion Kid Rider Series, featuring Newton House.

First of the Junior Jewels comes a new series of ten two-reelers, the second series of "The Collegians," the bright and snappy pictures of college life and adventure written and supervised by Carl Laemmle, Jr. Nat Ross directs the new series, with the same featured players, including George Lewis as star, Dorotay Gulliver, Hayden Stevenson and Churchill Ross.

In the Junior Jewel class for next year will be found the second series of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," twelve two-reelers made by the Stern Brothers from the famous George McManus cartoons and with the lovable baby, Sunny McKeen, as "Snookums."

Universal has also scheduled its first 1927-1928 serial in the Junior Jewel class, so exceptional has it been found to be. It is "Blake of Scotland Yard," featuring Hayden Stevenson, and directed by Robert Hill.

Then come the fifty-two Stern Brothers Comedies, four series of 13 each, including the Buster Brown series, from the R. F. Outcault comics, the "Mike and Ike, They Look Alike" series, from Rube Goldberg's celebrated newspaper comic characters; "Keeping Up With the Joneses," from Pop Momand's widely famed comic strip, and "Let George Do It," also adapted from a George McManus comic strip.

A new series of Gump Comedies also will be released, made with the old reliables, Joe Murphy, Fay Tincher and the youngster, from the well-known Sydney Smith cartoons. There will be twelve in this new series, each two reels in length.

At The Roxy

"The Love Thrill," Laura La Plante's Universal Jewel production, premiere May 7 in the Roxy Theatre.

Walter Futter To Make A Survey Of Middle West

Walter F. Futter, head of the company bearing his name, which produces Curiosities, an Educational release, is leaving shortly for the West Coast. He will make a survey of the Short Subject situation in the middle west and far west, and then attend the Educational convention in Los Angeles in May.

Mr. Futter will visit Omaha, his former home city, before returning to New York.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, and his youngest star, Sunny McKeen, who plays "Snookums" in "The Newlyweds and their baby" series, released by Universal.

Johnny Hines in "All Aboard," in K-A Theatres

Johnny Hines' latest First National Picture, "All Aboard," produced by C. C. Burr, has been selected by the Keith-Albee Offices as the photoplay feature on the bill of the New York Hippodrome for the week beginning Monday, April 18th.

In addition to this important booking, "All Aboard" will head the Keith Comedy Carnival bill in theatres throughout Greater New York, Brooklyn and Westchester, and will be heavily exploited to stimulate interest on an all-comedy bill of picked headliners.

According to reports from the Home Office, "All Aboard" is receiving heavy pre-release bookings.

Dorothy Devore Signed; Star Of Educational 2-Reel Comedies

DOROTHY DEVORE featured in two-reel Christie Comedies up to three years ago, has been signed by Educational to be starred in her own series of comedies next season. There will be six two-reel comedies in the series, which will be known as the Dorothy Devore Comedies, and produced at the Educational Studios.

Miss Devore has been taking featured roles in long feature pictures during the last three years, but now she is returning to her old love, the short comedy, where she was so popular only a few years ago. Miss Devore played in Christie Comedies for about four years.

The signing of Miss Devore means that Educational will have probably the best known comedienne now playing in Short Features. There are extremely few girl comedy stars now appearing in two-reel pictures, and of these few Miss Devore undoubtedly is the most widely known and most popular. Known to practically every comedy lover in the motion picture world, Miss Devore's return to the two-reel comedy field in a series named after her is expected to be welcomed by the fans everywhere.

Born in Texas, Miss Devore was playing in motion pictures before she was out of her teens. She was being featured in comedies before she was 22 years old and has been a featured player or has played important roles in feature pictures ever since. Comedy lovers have found her equally amusing as a fractious child, young "deb" or turbulent tom boy.

Miss Devore is another comedy star who might be termed a "diminutive beauty." She is not much more than 5 feet tall, has brown eyes and hair. Her hobby is her work on the screen, which in part accounts for the stellar work she does before the camera.

Some of the best known Christie Comedies in which she has been featured are "Hazel From Hollywood," "Navy Blues," "Kidding Kate," "Getting Ger-tie's Goat," "Winter Has Come," "Stay Single" and "Babies Welcome."

Cast All Wet!

The whole cast in "Dumb Belles," an Educational-Billy Dooley Comedy, were thoroughly wet and kept in a very much dampened condition for many hours in taking the scenes at the Christie Studios. The sequence which shows Dooley fighting some firemen with a stream of water from a fire hose requires only a few minutes to show on the screen, but in shooting this part of the comedy, the actors and beauties were kept wringing wet on three successive days.

Hancock Talks Over The Radio

Don Hancock, who knows as many jokes as any other man living (because he is the editor of the Pathe-Topics of the Day), broadcast a lecture on "The Seriousness of Joke-smithing" from WEAJ Wednesday, April 13th at 6:45 P. M.

Camera Work Ends

Shooting has been finished on "Pleasure Before Business," one of the few remaining productions of Columbia's present season schedule.

Pathe News In 3 Stage Plays; With Drawings

In three reigning Broadway stage successes, Pathe News is receiving the most dignified exploitation ever accorded a film of any kind.

Pathe News plays an important part in the dramatic action of "Spread Eagle," Jed Harris' latest success, now current at the Martin Beck Theatre, and it is also featured in a scene in "Chicago," the satirical comedy playing at the Music Box, and in a humorous scene in "Honeymoon Lane," Eddie Dowling's latest musical comedy triumph at the Knickerbocker Theatre.

The presentation of a special Pathe News film in "Spread Eagle" is a highly important link in the development of the play. It is believed that this is the first time that a news film has been used as an actual part of a dramatic stage production.

Jean Doree In Stern Comedies

Jean Doree, well-known screen comedienne, is playing opposite Sid Saylor, in the new "Let George Do It" Comedies being made by the Stern Brothers for Universal release.

Sam Newfield, Stern Brothers director, has just started on the first of the new "George" series, to be a feature of the Stern Brothers offerings for next season.

Saylor is also appearing as Mr. Newlywed in the new 1927-1928 series of "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" Comedies, also a Stern Brothers product. This series will be released as Universal Junior Jewels next season.

Ian Keith Cast

Ian Keith has been cast as an Arabian lover in "Two Arabian Knights," for United Artists.

Matt Moore, Hal Roach Star, In Pathe Release Week of April 24

MATT MOORE, popular feature star, heads the cast of "Hon. Mr. Bugg," the Hal Roach Star Comedy which shares two-reel honors with Mack Sennett's "Broke in China," with Ben Turpin on the Pathe short feature program of April 24th.

Other attractions on this program are the third chapter of "Melting Millions," Current serial co-starring Allene Ray and Walter Miller; Pathe Review Number 17; "The Pie-Eyed Piper," one of Aesop's Film Fables; Topics of the Day Number 17, and two issues of Pathe News, the pioneer news reel.

Pathe Review Number 17

Tim McCoy's Next

Col. Tim McCoy's next for M.-G.-M. will soon start under the tentative title of "The Frontiersman." The story is an original by Ross Willis and Madelin Ruthven and will be directed by Reginald Barker.

Miss Hutton Cast

Lucille Hutton, who has been leading lady for Al St. John in most of the Educational-Mermaid Comedies in which he has been featured this year, again is cast in the principal feminine role in "Jungle Heat," the new Mermaid Comedy.

"Cured in the Excitement" is the Sennett release for the week, and Madeline Hurlock plus Billy Bevan are being cured.

Elks Picture In Phila., To Honor Exalted Ruler

The keenest enthusiasm marked the private screening of "Moulders of Men," the F. B. O. Gold Bond production sponsored by the Elks' organizations, in the Grand Ballroom of the beautiful Elks' Club, in Philadelphia, on Sunday evening, April 10, in honor of Charles W. Grakelow, Grand Exalted Ruler of the Elks.

Freedland Kendrick, mayor of Philadelphia, and 800 prominent citizens of Philadelphia said the film was one of the finest they had seen in years, and a worthy tribute to the order of Elks throughout the world.

Title Changed on Rork's Next

The title of Sam Rork's next picture for release through First National has been changed from "His Son" to "Pierre of the Ritz."

"Magic Flame" Cast Grows

William Blakewell and Constance Howard have been added to the cast of "The Magic Flame," in which Samuel Goldwyn will star Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky.

Charlie Murray In Arizona

Charlie Murray and company are now in Arizona for the filming of exteriors of "The Poor Nut," First National production.

Dashing Ben Turpin giving a customer a thrill in "Broke in China," a Mack Sennett comedy for Pathe. Ruth Taylor is the blonde.

Barbara Kent, who is appearing in "No Man's Law," a Pathe-Hal Roach feature, with Rex the devil horse.

"Mr. Wu" With Lon Chaney, Off To Good Start

"Mr. Wu," Lon Chaney's latest starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, opened last week in Cleveland and Detroit to enthusiastic audiences. William Nigh directed.

The featured players are Renee Adoree, Ralph Forbes, Gertrude Olmstead, Holmes Herbert, Louise Dresser, Anna May Wong, Claude King and Sonny Loy.

The production opened this week at the Forum, Los Angeles.

"Mr. Wu" will make its New York debut in the near future.

"Fleet Feet" One Of "Sportlights"

John L. Hawkinson, producer of the Grantland Rice Series of single-reel Sportlights films released by Pathe, has lined up two new entertaining numbers, one of which is already being filmed under the title "Fleet Feet." "Fleet Feet" is woven around some of America's most famous sprinters.

Another Grantland Rice Sportlights number, which Hawkinson is preparing for Pathe, will be devoted to the hobbies of noted Americans, artists, authors, poets, architects and stage players. This will be a novelty film, featuring persons widely known and possessing unusual entertainment value.

Spanish Dancer For Roach

Lupe Velez, Spanish dancer recently signed by Hal Roach, will make her screen debut as leading lady for Charley Chase in his next comedy.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"The Haunted Homestead"

Universal—Two Reels

Fred Gilman and Violet LaPlante have the leading roles in this Mustang Western which follows along one of the numerous variations of familiar western formulas. A homesteader settles on an abandoned ranch and finds it is used as headquarters for a bandit gang, who kidnap his daughter. The young sheriff captures the gang and rescues the girl. Both comedy and drama revolve around a situation where the bandits in error take a sack supposed to contain hidden loot and find it only contains the homesteader's cornet. There is the usual amount of typical action, and a negro servant furnishes additional comedy. It is an average western two-reeler.

"Dumb Belles"

Educational—Two Reels

Billy Dooley, portraying again his familiar character of a boob sailor, inherits a boarding school for girls in this comedy. The fun, which is good for a number of smiles, arises out of the fact that according to the will either Billy or his sissy cousin, whoever proves to be the best teacher, will fall heir to the place. Billy makes a mess of things because of the funny and unusual stunts he makes the girls perform and while he loses the school, he makes such a hit with the girls that they flock to him when he starts another one in opposition. William Watson directed. Jack Duffy and Bill Irving, pictured here, are in the cast.

"Pathe Review 12"

Pathe—One Reel

BRENDA PUTNAM, the sculptress, is shown superintending the making of a casting for one of her bronze creations in the opening chapter of this magazine. Zion Park, Utah, is a scenically beautiful series of shots in the National Park series. The final section of this entertaining reel marks the beginning of a series of pictures of "Trapping Wild Game in Africa," obtained by the Smithsonian-Chrysler Expedition to the Tanganyika Country.

"Buried Treasure"

Educational—One Reel

IN THIS SCENIC Novelty Mr. Bruce builds up a little yarn about a Scottish terrier dreaming of a bone he has buried and cannot find. He suspects a black cat has stolen it and hunts all along the beach, encounters a strange bird, keeps up the search in the snow and far into the Springtime. While it is short on the usual scenic splendor of the Bruce subjects, there is an interesting animal angle.

"Brain Storms"

Educational—Two Reels

A quartette of comedians, Clem Beauchamp, pictured here; George Davis, Phil Dunham and Jack Lloyd, together with Lucille Hutton, make up the cast of this breezy Mermaid Comedy. Clem is the favored suitor and Phil, his rival, hires a supposed detective to aid him in downing Clem. The detective is really an escaped lunatic and George Davis is thoroughly amusing in this eccentric role. He does everything backward such as throwing Phil and the girl's father out of the house at a party. There are several good gags that should register with the spectators and a thrill comedy sequence where the lunatic takes Clem and the girl on a wild auto ride and persists in doing all sorts of crazy stunts with the car before he is captured by the asylum guards.

"First Prize"

Educational—One Reel

Phil Dunham, pictured here, is cast as an artist who has the temerity to paint his prospective mother-in-law's portrait in this latest Cameo Comedy. He meets with a series of accidents and emerges with hay sticking to his coat and a cow, a donkey and a goat following him and causing all sorts of excitement. The gags should prove entertaining to the average fan, as the reel is plentifully supplied with slapstick. Of course, the picture gets spoiled and the presence of the animals in the studio leads to general havoc and confusion. Toy Gallagher is the girl and the cast also includes Wallace Lupino and Alice Belcher.

"The Magician"

Pathe—One Reel

IN THIS ISSUE of the Aesop's Fable cartoons, the cat appears in the role of a magician who does all sorts of stunts. He finally takes his girl to Chinatown and gets in dutch with the tong gangs but his magic proves handy when he produces a mule that kicks the Chinamen out of the way. Not quite as varied as some of the other numbers, it is nevertheless an amusing offering.

"Bray Magazine"

Bray—One Reel

THIS issue of Bray Magazine, which is up to the standard of the series, opens with views of the Great Lakes, showing fishing and hunting mallard ducks. The second section deals with the manner in which the New York water supply is handled and filtered, while the third shows the making of pottery from moulding to the final firing of the product.

"Ten Years Old"

Pathe—Two Reels

One of the members of "Our Gang," fat little Joe Cobb, pictured here, is cast as a poor lad who has a birthday party. On the same day, Jackie, a rich kiddie, also has a birthday party. The gang don't want to miss either and this leads to a general mix-up. Finally they compromise by taking Joe and his cake to Jackie's party and then proceed to rough-house the place. It is a good number of this popular series and much of the fun centers around a wonderful cake that Joe cooked and into which the baby dropped tacks, bottles, dish rags, soap and other things. The humor here is a little more forced than usual, but it should prove a good offering for any type of audience.

"Keep Off the Grass"

Pathe—One Reel

FARMER AL in this Aesop's Fable animated cartoon joins the park police and has a busy time that means amusement for the spectators. He chases cats using a kangaroo for a seesaw, routs cats and dogs trying to steal a baby carriage, has an encounter with an ostrich and gets into a row with the police when he loses his clothes in a crap game with two monkeys.

"Buster, Don't Forget"

Universal—Two Reels

In this Stern Brothers Comedy, "Buster Brown Series," Buster has an early morning date with Mary Jane, but "falls" hard for a little girl whose folks have just moved into an adjoining house. "The other woman" is strikingly beautiful, and Buster dances attention on her, while Tige goes to Mary Jane to tell her of Buster's duplicity. Mary returns with Tige to discover an alert dog-catcher hovering about, and in the excitement attendant upon efforts to capture Tige, Mary recaptures her Buster from "the other woman" and guards her sweetheart with a rolling-pin. Tige escapes from the dog-catcher's wagon to rejoin Buster and Mary Jane.

"Ruling the Rooster"

Educational—One Reel

WHAT APPEARS to promise a prize fight between a duck and a leghorn chicken turns out to be an egg-laying contest in this Life cartoon. It is a moderately entertaining number with considerable familiar material and ends with the hen's husband trying to flirt with the winning duck and being licked soundly for his pains by the irate hen.

"The Jolly Jilter"

Pathe—Two Reels

Ben Turpin appears once again in the role of a heart-breaking debonair lady-killer in this Mack Sennett comedy, with Alma Bennett, pictured here, and Madeline Hurlock as the objects of his affection. There are a number of clever and amusing gags that are good for laughter from the Turpin fans and audiences in general, centering around Ben's flirtations with a society dame and a lady of the footlights. He keeps getting into scrapes and skilfully getting out of them, keeps things in an uproar and, of course, wins out in the end. J. A. Waldron supervised the production and Eddie Cline directed from a scenario by Phil Whitman and Harry McCoy. It is up to this star's usual amusing standard.

"Melting Millions"

Pathe—Serial

Featuring the popular serial players, Allene Ray and Walter Miller, Pathe is offering "Melting Millions," a chapter-play dealing with a fight for the possession of an enormous fortune, in which an unscrupulous gang in approved serial fashion use fair means as well as foul ones to get control of this money and prevent it from falling into the hands of the heroine, who is the rightful heir.

The story opens with a bang, with a bandit invading a millionaire's home. It develops that he is foster-father to the heroine, who is the long lost heiress. The villain and his crafty gang immediately start to work to do away with the girl and her father, but they are checkmated at each turn either by the hero, a dashing young army officer who comes to the girl's rescue, or by another mysterious friend.

There is the usual carried over suspense at the end of each episode with hero or heroine left in some thrilling difficulty. The first chapter ends with an attack in an underground cave with the father mysteriously spirited away and the girl and the hero in peril. The second shows this pair in the hold of a ship that is rapidly filling with water, and the third witnesses the heroine falling over the edge of a roof.

There are the usual type of complications, villainy and thrills and for the most part the action moves at a fast and exciting clip, although the second episode slows down somewhat while the director is building up to a situation where the girl is forced to marry the hero to save him from jail.

Allene Ray and Walter Miller are too well known to necessitate saying much about them; they make an attractive pair and their wide experience in serial technique enables them to handle their roles to the satisfaction of the fans. E. H. Calvert as the head of the gang of conspirators, with W. N. Bailey and Frank Lackteen as his lieutenants, give good performances and keep the nefarious schemes in motion. John Cossar is well cast as the millionaire. Spencer G. Bennett directed the chapter play.

There is plenty of excitement provided by this serial in the opening episodes to keep the fans satisfied and if the pace is kept up throughout it should prove a popular attraction in houses where serials are in favor.

"Germ Mania"

Educational—One Reel

HERE IS ONE OF the cleverest cartoons that has been offered to the public in a long time. Our little friend, Felix the cat, is the hero, and Cartoonist Pat Sullivan has hit upon an exceptionally clever and amusing idea. Felix invades a laboratory and gets hold of reducing and enlarging fluids. The chemist tries them on Felix with funny results, such as giving him a tiny head and an enormous tail. A love germ makes himself the same size as Felix by using the enlarging fluid and chases the cat, who saves himself by restoring the germ to its original size. This cartoon is a wow.

"The Newlyweds' Shopping Tour"

Universal—Two Reels

Lovey (Ethlyne Clair) takes Snookums (Sunny McKeen) to Dovey's (Sid Saylor's) office while she goes shopping.

Dovey is looking for a contract on the boss's desk, and puts Snookums on the knee of an important customer. Snookums covers the customer's shirt front with rubber stamp marks, "C. O. D.," "Paid in Full," etc., and playfully pours mucilage in the man's hat. Dovey takes the balance of the day off, to find Lovey. After a long search in a department store Dovey finds Lovey, but Snookums wanders off. Finally they find the baby, riding back and forth high in the air in a parcel carrier on a wire, and the store is partly dismantled in the efforts of the idolizing parents to recover their precious child. They find baby asleep in the basket, and won't disturb him until the store closes. Papa has to pay a stiff bill for his visit to the store.

"They Call It Love"

Universal—One Reel

Neely Edwards is featured in this Blue Bird comedy, and, as is usual with Neely, he manages to distinguish himself with some comedy that seems to bring something of a novelty to the screen. He attempts to free a strange lady from a toy balloon that is lifting the bottom of her skirt to the level of her shoulder—and although in the first instance the "woman" is a dress store dummy, she later comes to life and complications ensue. A giant villain enters the plot, and the end is fast and furious, and all ends well so far as Neely and the girl are concerned.

"The Prince of Whales"

Educational—One Reel

IN THIS LIFE CARTOON Comedy, little Nibbins and his pal the pup are seen aboard a whaler. After several clever gags they finally sight a school of whales and the cartoonist has shown considerable ingenuity in the manner in which they defy the law of gravitation with a small boat and large anchor and finally get the whales to chase them, ending by luring the whole bunch to jump on deck. Nibbins is then crowned the prince of whales. One gag shows the "crow's nest" of the vessel as actually the home of crows.

"Climbing Into Cloud-land"

Educational—One Reel

PHOTOGRAPHIC shots interspersed with animated cartoons, as usual, make up this Lyman Howe Hodge Podge. Tourists viewing Glacier National Park are shown by cartoon work as being transported to China and then follow interesting scenes of that country and Egypt. An amusing novelty shows the Charleston being danced by cartoons representing only the clothes of a man and a woman. It is a good issue of this series.

"Flaming Snow"

Universal—Two Reels

This is a two-reel Western comedy, in which Ben Corbett and Jack Knapp, aided and abetted by a fine comedy cast "stage" a show for the home town folks that contains all the "hokum" one would expect to find in the old shows of two decades ago. A cigarette starts a fire in the prop "show" during one of the sob scenes burlesqued toward the close of some fast action stuff, and to make the scene more exciting a southwestern tornado blows up and adds to the general calamity in which the theatre is almost demolished. Vin Moore directed this exceptionally fine comedy.

"Barn Yarns"

Educational—One Reel

FELIX, THE CAT, is shown in this animated cartoon to have a well developed bump of gratitude. It is an amusing number with the usual clever imaginative touches. Felix is saved by a duck from drowning and then he saves the duck from becoming the farmer's dinner. The same thing happens with a friendly school of fish who help him and he shows them how to avoid the farmer's hook.

"Girls"

Fox—Two Reels

Richard Walling and Sally Phipps head the piquant cast of this delightful little jazz version of an O. Henry story directed by Gene Forde and supervised by George E. Marshall. Tom Drake (Mr. Walling) has the unique reputation of being the only kissless senior in a co-ed college and Louise (Miss Phipps) undertakes to relieve Tom of his kissless halo. Louise plays her cards well, but Tom eludes all of her efforts during a sequence of rapid action scenes, until, after being cornered in the girls' shower he manages to escape, and Louise snares him on the campus, and after kissing Louise, Tom goes about, rampant, kissing all the girls until Louise captures him again all for herself.

"Jail Birdies"

Educational—Two Reels

Here is a peppy little comedy that moves at an exceedingly fast clip and offers a lot of entertaining moments for the audience. Bobby Vernon, the star, is seen as a college lad jailed for speeding. He finally persuades the judge to let him off to attend his graduation, in the company of a guard, played by Eddie Baker. The upshot of the scheme is that the "dumb" guard gets much the worst of the deal and is rescued by Bobby, who finally has the satisfaction of seeing the girl's father also pulled for speeding. Frances Lee shows to advantage as the girl, with Billy Engle as her father. An amusing sequence shows Bobby on the rock gang trying to convince his prospective father-in-law that he is practicing with the football team. All goes well until he has to kick a big stone that he is using for a football. Director Walter Graham has used a nicely balanced combination of farce and slapstick.

Nature's Wonderland

Fox—775 Feet

THIS IS ONE OF the William Fox "Varieties," and one of the most entertaining of the present series. Scenes in the redwoods stand apart for their presentation of the beauties of California. A trip to Mt. Whitney is a thing that theatre patrons will long remember. The transition from sunny summer valleys to the ice of high glacier trails is made via the camera and all told in terms of the most exquisite photography.

PAPA spunk! It seems like the guy in the tin suit is going to swat poor little June Marlowe, Universal player in "The Chinese Parrot."

'THIS is a scene from "Horse Shoes," Monty Banks' latest for Pathe. There is luck in horse shoes.

ALTHOUGH not perceptible, Raymond Keene and June Marlowe, Universal featured players, are playing tennis on ice-skates. We would like to see them play on skis.

TOY GALLAGHER and Muriel Evans of Educational, trying to disguise themselves with blonde and brunette wigs. They are spiking the pump.

MARION DAVIES, Cosmopolitan star, as she appears in her production of "Quality Street" for M-G-M.

FISHING is the title of this picture. The girl is Leila Hyams, who has been signed to play the leading feminine role opposite Johnny Hines in his next First National picture.

NOTES ABOUT WIDE-AWAKE EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGE MEN FROM ALL POINTS

San Francisco

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Berkeley, Cal., Apr. 14.*

GROUND is to be broken May 1 for the 5,000-seat Fox Theatre to be erected at Market and Larkin streets. Announcement of a definite date for the breaking of ground for the house has been made by Howard J. Sheehan, manager of the William Fox film interests in Northern California, and J. R. Grainger, general sales manager of the organization, who was a visitor at San Francisco late in March. Announcement is also made to the effect that a Fox theatre is to be erected at Oakland in association with Alexander Pantages, and that these interests will also erect a theatre at Fresno, Cal.

In connection with the fifth anniversary week celebration of the Golden Gate Theatre the management of this house released some interesting data on its operations since the opening date, in March, 1922. In this period almost ten million people have attended the 5,465 performances. A large percentage of the attendance is women and an average of 3,000 children attend every week. The house seats over 2,900 and has a staff of employees numbering 80. The lobby was recently redecorated at a cost of $20,000 and two vertical signs, the largest west of Chicago, have been added.

Every house record of the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, was broken by "Flesh and the Devil" and the production was held over for a second week. Only once before in its history of five years has this house kept a picture longer than a week.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, was a recent visitor at San Francisco, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Rosabelle Laemmle; his secretary, Jack Ross; Julius Stern and Beno Rubel.

Walter J. Rudolph, leader of the orchestra of the New Alhambra Theatre, San Francisco, has purchased a home in San Leandro, an east-bay suburb, famous as the "Cherry City."

E. M. Bloch has joined the San Francisco branch of the Universal Exchange as salesman.

W. W. Kofeldt, founder of Imported Pictures, Inc., has severed his connection with this concern. He returned recently from a trip to New York.

Among the California exhibitors who have been on San Francisco's film row of late have been: John DiStasio, Sacramento; James McInery, Fairfield; A. G. Clapp, Sonora; Gus Johnson, Newman, and Louis Marks and Max Weiss, Sacramento.

A number of moving picture houses in the San Francisco territory have been closed of late, the list including the Bieber Theatre, Bieber; Paramount Theatre, Fall River Mills; Woodland Theatre, Woodland; Strand Theatre, Dunsmuir, and a small house at Butte City. George Roy has also arranged to close the Empire Theatre at Reno, Nev.

To Manage Auditorium

Miller Merriwether, who for the past several years has successfully managed motion picture houses in North and South Carolina, has been appointed manager of the Auditorium Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Mr. Merriwether has been for the past few months managing the two picture houses in the above city for the Forsythe Amusement Co.; these houses will continue to be under his management. The Auditorium Theatre plays road shows, Keith vaudeville and feature pictures, and is owned by the Piedmont Amusement Co., of the same city.

Fred Herrington Has Made Name as Organization Man

Fred J. Herrington, secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, one of the best known and hardest working men in exhibitor organization circles for years, is at present busily engaged in assisting the Convention Committee in preparing all plans for the forthcoming seventh annual convention to be held by the organization in the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, April 24, 25, and 26.

Fred was an exhibitor when the industry was young, having opened the Fairyland Theatre in the South Hills in 1905, this being the first theatre in that district. In 1909 he transferred his activities to Mount Oliver, where he built the Coliseum Theatre on the spot where A. A. Weiland's Rialto Theatre now stands, he having sold the house to Mr. Weiland in 1919.

Fred began this organization activities in 1909 when he was elected National President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania, which position he held until 1915, when he became national president. Later as national organizer for the organization in 1916-17 and national representative of the M. P. T. O. of A., in 1920, he visited and made the acquaintance of practically every theatre owner in the land. He also served as secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania, just prior to the formation of the M. P. T. O. of West Pennsylvania and West Virginia, in 1921, at which time he was elected secretary of the organization, and which position he has filled since.

A tireless worker for the welfare of the exhibitors at all times, Fred has the respect and admiration of all the theatre owners, and asks the World to convey through its columns his hope that he may be able to greet each and every theatre owner in the territory personally at the forthcoming convention.

Ohio

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Hamilton, O., April 14.*

THE partnership of Harry Smoots and F. Harris, operating the Vine Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, has been dissolved, Smoots acquiring the interests of his erstwhile associate with whom he has been in business for the past several years. Many improvements are contemplated in the house.

A stick-up artist attempted to strut his stuff recently, using Mary Monning, cashier of Gifts Theatre, Cincinnati, as the victim. However, the plucky young lady called for help, and the bandit fled. He was later captured by the police.

Stanley Jacques, former local manager of the Cincinnati Pathe branch, paid a visit to his old haunts recently, this being his first official trip since having been appointed sales manager for the Pathe central district.

Canton

The Strand Theatre, Canton, Ohio, is another Ohio house to install the Vitaphone. Manager Calla predicts a big success, judging from the advance enthusiasm displayed.

The Grand Opera House, Canton, Ohio, has been closed and according to current rumor it may thus remain in the future. Poor business is given as the cause. The house is under lease by Feiber and Shea.

Columbus

Among the recent incorporations at Columbus, Ohio, appears the Wells-Kiester Theatre Co., Dayton, Ohio, with B. F. Kiester, R. E. Wells, Charles W. Dale and others. The new company will operate the theatre which will be part of a new building now under construction at Grand and Salem avenues.

Springfield

The I.O.O.F. Lodge at Springfield, Ohio, is contemplating the erection of a new theatre in that city to be located on South Fountain avenue. Estimated cost $125,000.

Lima

Max Bernstein, Lima, Ohio, is reported as negotiating for the building of a new theatre to cost around $225,000.

The new organ which will shortly be dedicated at the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio; will be presided over by Frank G. Wilson.

ANOTHER chapter was written this week in the federal court proceedings in Kansas City, started by the showing of the Dempsey-Tunney fight pictures at the Pantages Theatre the latter part of February. Charles H. Dow had pleaded guilty, March 5, to transporting the films in violation of the federal interstate transportation laws, and was fined $1,000. This week a temporary restraining order was issued by Judge Albert L. Reeves against Dow and William Levy of Kansas City, preventing them from showing the films until at least after the hearing on the order. The restraining order was asked by Leon Britton of New York, who alleges he had exclusive rights to the pictures and that Dow and Levy had obtained them "by theft," purloining or by trick and device. Britton declares he did sell them a showing right and asks also for an accounting of profits made.

S. B. Brimblecom, formerly owner of the Maple Theatre, Kansas City suburban house, was given a verdict for $2,433.30 against Ben Shylen, former owner of the theatre, in the circuit court this week. Brimblecom had sued for $7,000 damages because of alleged misrepresentation in the sale by Shylen of a lease on the theatre. The alleged sale was in 1924.

The Orpheum Theatre, through Lawrence Lehman, manager, and the Co-Operative Club of Kansas City were hosts to 110 children of the Jackson County Parental Home at the matinee Wednesday.

Fortunately W. P. Cuff of the Peoples and Mainstreet Theatres did not have the receipts for those theatres with him when a negro bandit attacked him Friday night. The negro, without warning, struck Mr. Cuff on the head with a revolver near his home. As the bandit was searching Mr. Cuff's pockets Mrs. Cuff called from the house, frightening the negro away.

Walter Fruedenberger, sales manager for Ad-Vance Trailer Service, returned from a business trip to Chicago. C. A. Schultz, P. D.C. branch manager, went to Wichita, Kas., after additional business.

She was a pretty girl, was Estelle McBride. Often she would visit headquarters of the M.P.T.O. Kansas-Missouri in Kansas City and confide in Mrs. June Medcalf, secretary, that she thought one William Bradfield, Metro-Goldwyn salesman, was the "judge's earmuffs." Then the secret leaked out. The couple had been married since January 1.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: W. P. Cuff, Peoples and Mainstreet Theatre, Chanute, Kas.; S. E. Wilhoit, Electric, Springfield, Mo.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.

Charles G. Branham, newly appointed divisional manager of Universal chain theatres, has established his headquarters in Kansas City. John Nolan, Fox branch manager, made a hurried business trip to Chicago this week. R. A. McGuire, Warner Bros., home office representative, was a Kansas City visitor. Harry Strickland, Warner Bros., went to Coffeyville, Kas., to visit John Tackett, of the New Tackett Theatre, it being the first time the two had seen each other since 1907. Gib Jones is the new assistant manager of the Enterprise Film Corporation. "Red" Jones, Educational branch manager, was hustling for more contracts in the territory this week. W. J. Morgan, P.D.C. sales manager, was a Kansas City visitor.

Griffith Brothers have appointed Jerry Jeters as manager of the Isis and Rialto Theatres at Oklahoma City, Okla.

No Mourning in Missouri When Amusement Tax Dies

After dragging along throughout practically the entire Missouri legislative session, the amusement tax bill of Missouri, which passed the house, died just prior to adjournment of the legislature, when the senate ways and means committee reported adversely on the bill. The bill provided a tax of 10 per cent on all theatre tickets sold. With the legislative problems out of the way, the M.P.T.O. Kansas-Missouri now is turning its attention to the semi-annual convention, which probably will be early in May, according to President R. R. Biechele, the place to be selected later.

Colorado

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Denver, Colo., Apr. 14.*

BY the narrow margin of 38 votes the citizens of Colorado Springs, Colo., voted for the repeal of the ordinance prohibiting Sunday amusements "for pay," thus insuring Sunday movies for the Pike's Peak city after a fight extending over many years and marked by five former attempts at the polls in which the proponents of Sunday shows were defeated by large majorities.

The victory of April 5 was the result of a busy campaign put on by 100 Colorado Springs business men who favored the repeal of the ordinance. It is hoped that the thousands of tourists who visit this popular vacation town will now remain in Colorado Springs over the week-end periods.

Carl Ray, owner of the Carl Ray Theatres of Cheyenne, Wyo., and Earl Nye, manager of the theatres, arrived in Denver last Thursday for a several days' visit with branch offices.

W. T. Porter of New Castle, Wyo., has purchased the Garden Theatre of Lusk, Wyo., from Bishop & Miller. Mr. Porter has operated the Edison Theatre of New Castle, Wyo., for a number of years. He plans to circuit his programmes between the two theatres.

Out-of-town exhibitors seen transacting business along Film Row within the last few days were Tom Love of Hanna, Wyo.; Ed Schulte of the Rialto Theatre, Casper, Wyo.; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Burt of the American Theatre, Culbertson, Neb.; Chas. F. Rumbaugh, Liberty Theatre, Pagosa, Colo., and Ed Schoelkopf of the Opera House, Idaho Springs, Colo.

Nebraska

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Omaha, Neb., Apr. 14.*

THE new Riviera, which has been the talk of the moving picture people of this section of the West, is now operating in full swing in Omaha, having opened formally for matinee on a Saturday. This is the two and a half million dollar theatre of the A. H. Plank enterprises. Mr. Plank is the chain picture show exhibitor magnate of Nebraska and Iowa, having some fifty houses.

M. R. Tournier, who has operated the Star Theatre at Mason City for many years, has just decided to start showing pictures on Sunday. The town has been "open" as to Sunday pictures for years, but Mr. Tournier has never taken advantage of the opportunity before.

Minnesota

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Minneapolis, Minn., Apr. 14.*

MINNEAPOLIS is to have still another new motion picture theatre, costing in the neighborhood of $1,000,000, according to a report which circulated through the city last week and found its way to the front pages of the newspapers. The story had it that a big national picture concern had sent a representative to the city to look over sites for the proposed theatre. One of the sites said to have been considered was near La Salle avenue and Ninth street, where the Minneapolis Theatre, a $3,000,000 house which will be leased to Publix, will be built.

A permit was issued this week for the foundations of the Minneapolis Theatre. The work will cost $40,000 and is expected to be completed by June 1.

Rochester

Work was begun last week on the new $350,000 picture house in Rochester, Minn., which Finklestein & Ruben will control. The theatre will seat 1,700 and will be named the Chateau Dodge.

The Northern Theatre, located on the north side of Minneapolis, has been vacated, and will soon be replaced by a pool hall.

Ben Marcus, office manager of F. B. O. in Minneapolis, has been placed in charge of special work in the territory, and Al Hixon has been named to take his place as manager.

Visitors in Minneapolis this week included three Warner Brothers officials: Eddie Silverman, general sales manager; Morris Safier, sales manager of the extended run department, and Clayton Bond, district manager from Chicago.

The Minneapolis operators' union and the Northwest M. P. T. O. settled their differences over the Vitaphone this week, and the attraction was hurriedly booked into the State Theatre, where it was scheduled to have been shown several weeks ago.

Duluth

The ordinance which would have forced daylight saving time on Duluth was defeated at the municipal election this week. The bill had been opposed, among other people, by exhibitors, who feared an adverse effect on business.

Iowa Notes

The Amuzu Theatre at Dows, Iowa, has been sold by Fred Brooks to Almon Drury. Drury plans to show pictures there five nights a week.

W. A. Mattuck has acquired the lease of the Savoy Theatre at Toledo, Iowa. Mr. Mattuck hales from Ottumwa.

Rugby

G. A. Trover, owner of the New Lyric Theatre at Rugby, N. D., has announced the appointment of Otis Engen as manager.

Two weeks after the Minneapolis city council granted David Onan & Son a license to build a theatre in the loop district, the same body revoked the license. The move was made because the council feels that the Gateway district is already badly overseeded.

North Dakota

The Strand Theatre at Fargo, N. D., has been changed into a vaudeville house, the Fargo has been turned over to stock players and the Orpheum opened last week with "Ben Hur." These changes were announced by the American Amusement Company, which is affiliated with Finkelstein & Ruben.

J. Hogrefe and Dr. R. J. Quinn, recent purchasers of the Happy Hour Theatre at Burke, N. D., have changed the name of the theatre to the Community and are altering it extensively.

St. Louis, Mo.

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
St. Louis, Mo., Apr. 14.*

THE St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors League has passed a resolution opposing Daylight Saving for St. Louis. The resolution, bearing the signatures of O. C. Lehr, chairman, and W. O. Reeves and Everett Hayes, members of the special committee, will be presented to the Board of Aldermen should any attempt be made to introduce a Daylight Saving ordinance.

The St. Louis Theatre, which plays Orpheum vaudeville in conjunction with a feature motion picture and short subjects, has reduced the Saturday matinee admission price scale to 35 cents for adults and 15 cents for children against the former rates of 50 cents and 25 cents.

The Orpheum Circuit is celebrating the twenty-ninth anniversary of its entrance into St. Louis. In 1898, at the old Columbia Theatre, Sixth and St. Charles streets, which was then advertised as "The new fireproof Columbia Theatre, American's handsomest playhouse," the opening bill of Orpheum vaudeville was presented.

Owners and managers of theatres in the Southern Illinois coal fields have reconciled themselves to a long-hot-and-hard Summer, as it now looks like nothing under the sun can prevent a coal strike beginning on April 1. The Winter, which is just coming to a close, was the very best the theatre owners in the coal fields have enjoyed for many years.

Gid Stafford plans to open the Town Hall Theatre, Elsinoire, Mo. Charles Daniels has taken the Marshall Theatre, Maplewood, Mo., to Mr. Mitchell. Jim Drake plans to open a new theatre in East St. Louis to be known as the Drake Theatre.

C. A. Bauerman has opened the Newport, Newport, Ark., and the Greenville, Greenville, Mo., are reported to have closed.

Erwin Ryffel, a dancer, has filed suit in the St. Louis Circuit Court for $15,000 damages from the St. Louis Amusement Company for injuries which he alleged he suffered in a fall at the Shenandoah Theatre, 2313 South Grand boulevard, St. Louis, on January 2, 1927.

The Gayety Theatre, Fourteenth street and Locust boulevard, St. Louis, for many years one of the country's leading burlesque establishments, has surrendered to the moving pictures. Recently the Gayety began the presentation of pictures in conjunction with tabloid burlesque shows.

That the Grand boulevard motion picture world may lose one of its chief figures is the gist of gossip along the local Rialto. In some quarters the report is even stronger than rumor, although as yet no official confirmation has been issued. It is said Gene Rodemich is considering an offer to take over the director's baton for a leading theatre in Boston. So if Gene goes, the Grand Central, operated by Skouras Brothers probably will not look the same. But if he does depart, Skouras Brothers will endeavor to bring Brooks Johns to St. Louis.

The Queens Amusement Company has been incorporated in St. Louis. The incorporators are: William Goldman, M. Goldman and S. Goldman, Jr., six shares each, and T. Curley, two shares. The capital of $2,000 is fully paid.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the St. Louis Amusement Company will be held between the hours of 9 a. m. and 12 o'clock noon at the company's offices in the Ambassador Theatre Building, Seventh and Locust streets, on March 25. A board of directors will be elected. The board will later elect officers for the year. Spyros P. Skouras is president of the company and W. Arthur Stickney, treasurer.

The Lyric Theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., celebrated its sixth birthday on Sunday, March 13, with a cake-baking contest.

Crook Is Radio Fan But Gives Good Car the Air

Milwaukee, Wis., April 14—Maybe he had left his driver's license in his other coat; maybe he could tune a radio set but couldn't turn an automobile wheel: at any rate the crook who happened along while Louis Orlove, Purchasing Agent for Saxe Amusement Enterprises, left his car parked with a brand new and not too expensive radio set locked within it, chose to swipe the radio and left the car. Mr. Orlove is not quite sure whether to take umbrage at the implied sneer at his motor taste or to accept the tacit compliment to his taste in a radio receiver.

Michigan

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Detroit, Mich., April 14.*

THE Redford-Detroit Theatre Corporation, now building a theatre and office building in Redford, have leased their theatre to the Kunsky Theatre Corporation for 15 years at a net annual rental of $22,800. The lease cannot be assigned by Kunsky for five years.

Frank Stuart, now P. D. C. manager in the South, came to Detroit, his home city, last week to have a tonsil operation performed. It was a complete success and after a few days rest Stuart returned to the South.

The Broadway Strand, oldest of the downtown first runs, has again changed its policy and now is reverting to musical stock plays. The theater also will play first run films, whenever available.

Tom Ealand, former manager of the Regent Theater in Grand Rapids, has joined the sales staff of Warner Bros., and will make the Grand Rapids territory his headquarters, as his home is still in the Furniture City. Ealand is one of the best known theater managers and film salesmen in the Michigan territory.

On March 25th, a son, Charles Henry Jr., was born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Miles, of the Miles Theater, Detroit. This is the second child.

Jack D. Goldhar has been appointed manager of the Detroit office of United Artists, succeeding Sidney Abel. The appointment was made by Cressen Smith, general sales-manager of the middle west.

Owosso

Harry Angel and Bob Codd have disposed of their Lincoln and Strand Theatres in Owosso, Mich., to Fred C. Zemer, who formerly operated the Victory Theater in Jackson. They still retain their theater in Niles, which is managed by Mr. Codd.

In a special newspaper advertisement, Charles H. Miles invites the theater-going public to share with him in the profits of his new Oriental Theater, now under construction at West Adams near Park avenues. The ad also presents a blank, telling the reader to send it in and receive a ticket to the Miles Theater.

The Orient Theatre, opened only three weeks ago, is the first Detroit theatre to go "on the air" on a permanent basis. There is an agreement existing among the Detroit motion picture theatre owners that no member of the organization shall broadcast programs over the radio. The Orient, however, is using WJR, a local advertising station, to presents its organ recitals and band presentations.

Canada

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Ottawa, Canada, Apr. 14.*

THE Major Theatre Company, Limited, with S. Major as president, has been organized at Toronto, Ontario, and the company is erecting a solid brick, two-story theatre in Silverthorne, a Toronto suburb, costing $75,000, to be opened in June. The theatre has a 60-foot frontage and 152 foot depth, with a capacity for 750 persons. The second floor of the building contains large lodge rooms. A feature of the new house is a baby carriage room, adjacent to the lobby. Stores flank each side of the entrance.

When George J. Forhan of the Griffin Theatre, St. Catharines, Ontario, conducted a Spring Beauty Pageant, the winning beauty was escorted by him on a prize-winning tour of local stores where wearing apparel to the value of $150 was presented to her.

Picture Service, Limited, 615 Yonge street, Toronto, has announced its appointment as exclusive Canadian agent for De Vry products.

Star City, Sask.

The Gaiety Theatre and two adjacent buildings at Star City, Sask., were destroyed by fire, which started in the projection room when the theatre was empty. The loss was estimated at $75,000.

After being associated with film exchanges in Toronto and Winnipeg for the past eight years, William Legassick has been appointed assistant booker at the head office of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, which operates more than 100 theatres in Canada. Mr. Legassick was formerly with Regal Films, Fox and First National.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

W. P. McGeachie, manager of the Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, secured co-operation from an unusual source when young ladies of the Y. W. C. A. appeared as mannequins for the spring fashion show which he staged at the theatre in conjunction with local merchants.

A Toronto theatre that has performed a comeback is the College, a suburban house that was built by the Allens and was later taken over by Famous Players Canadian Corp. Under the management of George Morrell, the College is now regularly hanging out the Standing Room Only sign. Frequent presentation of double features, has helped considerably, according to Manager Morrell.

Jack Laver, former manager of the York and Teck Theatres, Toronto, has been appointed manager of the Bedford Theatre, a new suburban house, which has been acquired by Famous Players Canadian Corp.

Edmonton, Alta.

A Star Impersonation contest was a recent feature at the Capitol Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, under the direction of Manager W. P. Wilson. For two nights, competitors appeared in the roles of screen stars and the likenesses were both striking and ludicrous.

Hull, Que.

The three moving picture theatres of Hull, Quebec, were closed on Good Friday in recognition of the religious observance of the day, these being the Laurier, Eden and Capitol Theatres. This is the only day in the year when the Hull theatres are dark, as they are operated Sundays as well as weekdays.

Interest in the Stanley Cup series of the National Hockey League between Ottawa and Boston ran high among the countless Ottawa hockey followers. Manager Ray Tubman capitalized this interest by arranging a special telegraphic service to the Regent Theatre, Ottawa.

New York

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Albany, N. Y., Apr. 14.

INTERNATIONAL officers of the stage hands and electricians' unions are to be invited to the dinner which will mark the closing of Troy's theatrical bowling league two or three weeks hence. At the present time the Lincoln team is leading, although being closely pressed by the Proctor five.

Troy

Harry Brooks, who has been president of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union in Troy, N. Y., for the past twelve years, and who served one term in the New York State Legislature last year, is minus two fingers of his right hand after having caught them in the fan belt of his automobile. Mr. Brooks was removed to a local hospital where the fingers were amputated.

Saugerties

The village board in Saugerties, N. Y., by a vote of 5 to 3, has gone on record against Sunday movies, following an agitation that has been under way for several weeks. In Kingston a similar agitation has also come to naught, as the residents of the city voted against Sunday shows.

Film exchanges and booking offices generally throughout New York state will be interested in a change that took place last week in the Schine organization with headquarters in Gloversville, resulting in Max Milder being named to do all booking for the Schine circuit of over seventy houses. This work has been done for several years past by Peter Dana.

Walter Roberts, manager of the Troy Theatre, is once more head of his household, Mrs. Roberts having returned from several weeks in New York City, where her father is ill. Late in May Mr. and Mrs. Roberts will again occupy a summer camp on a nearby lake.

Syracuse

Mike Freedman, formerly connected with the Shirley houses, in Schenectady, is now connected with one of the Schine theatres in Syracuse, according to reports reaching Film Row. William Benton of Saratoga Springs, is now looking after theatres operated by his brother, the latter being ill.

Kingston

Down in Kingston, Harry Lazarus is as busy these days as the proverbial bee, getting things in readiness to open his new house in May. He will close his old theatre and the new one will be devoted not only to motion picture shows, but also vaudeville and road shows.

Williamstown

While most exhibitors in this section are laying off on their big pictures just now, A. S. Thornton, of Williamstown, is planning to show all his features during April and May. Mr. Thornton's house plays almost exclusively to students at Williams College. The summer months are dead ones for Mr. Thornton.

Moe Mark and Walter Hayes, of the Stanley group, were in town last week for exactly two hours, but during that time they transacted what would ordinarily be a full day's business. Incidentally, the young ladies at the Mark Ritz will soon blossom forth in new uniforms.

O. R. Rieffel, salesman for Paramount out of Albany, was laid up all of last week by an infection in one eye. L. J. Hacking, district manager for Pro-Dis-Co, dropped off in Albany on his way from Buffalo to New York City. Andy Smith, eastern district sales manager for First National, and Sidney Katz, of the F. B. O. forces, were both up from New York.

Kentucky

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Louisville, Ky., Apr. 14.

THE IDEAL THEATER CO., operating a theatre at 23rd and Market streets, has announced plans for another theater, at Forty-first and Market streets, having filed plans with the City Building Inspector, for a house to cost about $50,000 exclusive of equipment, furnishings, etc., and to operate as a suburban theater.

M. Switow & Sons, Enterprises, Louisville, capital $100,000 has been incorporated as an operating company for handling some of the Switow Theaters, the organization having recently purchased one at Louisville, two at Lexington, and one at Danville, Ky., from the Levy-Goldberg interests. Incorporators are Michael Switow, Sam, Harry and Annie Switow. Liability limit of the company is $1,000,000.

The B. F. Keith Mary Anderson Theater in Louisville during the week of April 4, celebrated twenty years of theatrical activity in Louisville. At the opening of the theater twenty years ago De Wolff Hopper and Marguerite Clark starred in "Happyland."

Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville, active in the exhibiting and film exchange circles of the district, is on a trip to the West Coast, to look over picture operations there.

Illinois

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Chicago, Ill., Apr. 14.

ANOTHER radio studio has been opened by the B. and K. circuit at the Oriental Theatre and now the circuit has radio studios at the Chicago, the Uptown, the Tivoli and the McVickers Theatres. Organ recitals are broadcasted every morning from the McVickers Theatre studio.

District Manager Shirley and Chicago Manager Mendelsohn will head the Chicago delegation of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales staff that will go out to the west coast for the annual sales convention.

Abe Tague, who recently sold the Strand Theatre on Lincoln avenue to the I. Ettelson circuit, has taken over the 1,200-seat Milford Theatre at 3311 North Crawford avenue from William Mueller, who has had the house since its opening several years ago. Mike Seigel, house manager under the Mueller circuit, will continue with the new owners.

The patrons of the Riviera Theatre of the Orpheum circuit were mystified when a stench bomb was found on the main floor of the big north side theatre. While some of the patrons left, the majority stayed and tried to enjoy the show.

Joe Abramson of the Chicago Film Board of Trade will go to French Lick Springs for the meeting of the secretaries of the Film Boards of Trade at that resort next month.

Sidney Anschell, formerly the head of the Universal Concessions Co. and associates, have taken over the Star and Garter Theatre at Madison, near Halsted, and will spend about $40,000 in fixing the house up. Feature pictures and burlesque will be the policy. Arthur Moeller will be house manager and Leo Stevens presentation director. M. S. Boog will buy pictures for the Anschell Theatres.

Hannibal

Thieves carried away a 2,000-pound safe with the Sunday receipts of the Orpheum Theatre of the Price circuit at Hannibal. Manager Henry A. Sheidker says the bandits tore down the ticket booth to get to the heavy safe and almost wrecked the front of the house.

Pennsylvania

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Pittsburgh, Pa., Apr. 14.

THE films boys are forming two ball teams, one the married men's team, and the other, of course, the single men's team, and plan to oppose each other various times during the coming season. Jack Weyrock will manage the benedicts, while "Bill" Schmidt will look after the fortunes of the bachelors. "Bill" has not yet announced his lineup, however, Jack announces he has the following signatures to contracts, and his team will be picked from among the following well-known exchange men: Harry Fry, Ray O'Toole, Art Sullivan, Jim Weyrock, Bill Graner, Jack Graham, Jim Alexander, Bill Price, Bill Lee Barton and Lee Hunt.

A sextette of the salesmen from the local Paramount branch, has purchased cars the past week. The boys are: David Kimmelmann, A. H. Passarelli, M. Simon, David Brown, Robert Caskey and Charles Perry. Not to be outdone by these enthusiasts, Manager J. E. Fontaine has purchased a country club coupe.

Exhibitor visitors on Film Row the past few days included: C. B. Pascoe, Somerset; Carl Becker, Butler; John Bixler, Scottsdale; Theodore Mikalowsky, Masontown, and "Mike" Rosenbloom, Charleroi.

Paul Fine, district representative for the Arctic Nu-Air Corporation, is spending a few days in the Pittsburgh territory.

L. F. Whelan, director of exploitation for the Harold Lloyd Corporation, was a recent visitor to the local branch. At one time Mr. Whelan was publicity director for the office here.

E. W. Booth and Arthur Goldsmith, salesmen with the P. D. C. exchange, have both purchased Hupmobile cars recently.

Harvey B. Day, former Pittsburgh film man, and now special representative for Kinograms, was a recent visitor at the Educational exchange in Pittsburgh.

E. F. Moore, Jr., at one time salesman with the Pittsburgh Warner office, and a brother to Carlos E. Moore, manager of the United Artists branch here, passed away at his home in St. Cloud, Minn., recently at the age of 23 years.

Stanley C. Jacques, Central Division manager for Pathe, spent several days the past week in the Steel City, conferring with Manager B. M. Moran, of the Pathe branch here.

A brand new elevator, equipped with all modern safety devices, and of high speed, is now in operation in the film building at 1018-20 Forbes street, Pittsburgh. And maybe the tenants and exhibitors aren't glad. Climbing stairs or waiting for the freight elevator was getting sort of monotonous.

Published reports which have indicated that the Liberty Theatre in East Liberty is installing the Vitaphone, are incorrect. However, Vitaphone is now being installed at the Regent Theatre in East Liberty. Opening date has not yet been selected.

Parkersburg

Two new picture theatres are soon to open in Parkersburg, W. Va. One is owned by C. R. Schutz and the other by Peter Thomas.

Moe Koppelman, former assistant manager at Standard-Federated here, and now officiating in a similar capacity at the Universal branch in Cleveland, week-ended in Pittsburgh the past week.

Etna

Miss Mildred Clark, of the Helma Theatre, Etna, made one of her infrequent trips to Film Row the past Monday.

O. T. Taylor Finds His Presentations Are Liked By His Own Patrons, As Well

MOST of the presentation ideas offered by O. T. Taylor in his department in Moving Picture World are tried out in his own string of houses in Aberdeen, Wash. On this page will be found a photograph of his own production of "A Night in Spain," as staged by him and produced by a local dancing teacher. Just to prove up, Mr. Taylor had his stage crew work out the set from the printed description instead of from his original sketches. He writes that the presentation gave satisfaction for three days.

Mr. Taylor, of course, knows the value of local talent appeal and is particularly fortunate in that the local teacher is a pupil of Mordkin. This assures him a competent cast to draw from, but even where the local teacher is less professionally experienced, excellent results can be had. In Mr. Taylor's own case he finds that he can materially increase the attendance.

This presentation was worked precisely as described in this paper, the routine running as follows: The drapes parted on a blue stage as a boy singer entered through the gate, coming down stage. His number was "In a Little Spanish Town." Four dancers come on and do a number as he goes over to the side of the stage for the chorus of the song. This was followed by a tango with the singer and a partner, while six girls, three of whom were dressed as boys, filled the stage. The music for the dance was "La Rosita." The soloists went upstage while the chorus did a concerted number to the tune of "La Sorella" and then the woman dancer did a solo to "Barcelona."

The teacher was merely handed a copy of the paper and told to work out her routine, and so far as Mr. Taylor was concerned he might have been merely one of our readers instead of the author. It took only four and a half hours of his own time to do the entire staging.

No town capable of supporting a picture theatre is too small to have a dancing teacher or at least some woman who will give her time to teaching. Where she actually conducts classes, the work is easier, since she is appreciative of the advertising she receives, but it is always possible to find some woman who takes a delight in getting up Sunday school shows, who will be fascinated by the idea of putting shows on in a regular theatre. Mr. Taylor is sending in a wide variety of suggestions, and all of them are as practical for small stages as for the larger houses.

Mr. Taylor writes that he has had some odd experiences since he joined the staff. One friend, who apparently had not noticed the signature, told him of "some damned clever stuff" this paper was running, while another, who had noted the signature, told him of a namesake in New York. One of his productions is now being toured in this section by an agent who ran into the idea in this paper and adopted it for an attraction.

If you are not following Mr. Taylor's stuff, you are not getting full value out of your subscription. Many subscribers write that it is one of the best features. Get your share of it.

Neatness Won

In connection with a Boy Scout parade for A Regular Scout at the Rialto Theatre, Chattanooga, Ten., W. F. Brock offered a prize for the neatest scout. It helped the excitement along.

Old Checks Were Used in Laugh Check Stunt

For Casey at the Bat, J. B. Carroll, of the Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Florida, used regular bank checks good for "one thousand laughs." That part is old enough, but here is a new angle. Banks do not like to donate checks for stunts and the safety paper costs more than throwaway stock. Mr. Carroll got hold of old checks, printed up for various customers who, for some reason, had dropped out. Carrying their names, it was not possible to give them to other depositors, so the bank gave them to Mr. Carroll, who had them overprinted "Bank of Laughter" with rule lines to kill the bank's name and that of the depositor. As these checks were all printed with the depositor's name in the same place, Mr. Carroll was able to blot them all out with one make-ready, and obtained his stock for nothing.

Mr. Carrall also rubber-stamped the Saturday Evening Post carrying the Paramount ad for the picture, invited the Senators, who were training nearby and put his doorman into regulation baseball uniform. He took a lot of kidding from the regular patrons, but he was a fine ballyhoo.

Prizes For Slang

Among other things he did for Casey at the Bat, E. R. Rogers, of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, offered prizes for the most comprehensive list of slang expressions pertaining to baseball. Some of the lists suggested it would be easier to weigh the entries than to count the expressions. It made for general interest.

He also took advantage of the fact that the players were reporting to the home team by announcing that Casey would report tomorrow, and the sport editors ran a cut to show which Casey it was.

Silhouette Wedding Is Latest Stage Novelty

Stage weddings have been a best bet for a long time, but A. J. Kennedy, a First National exploiteer, worked out a new one for the American Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., on The Marriage Whirl.

He went through the usual motions of getting donations, and the taxi, hotel bill, flowers, ring, license and minister were all supplied gratis. It was just like all other stage weddings with this important difference: No one saw the bride and groom or the minister. Instead they saw their shadows sharply defined against a stretched sheet, and in the newspaper accounts the pictures of the bride and groom were given, but masks were painted in over their features.

This novelty only made it more intriguing to the audience, but it made it easier to find a couple willing to face the publicity in return for the presents.

Try the black and white wedding the next time you have a marriage title. It will work even where you have had the old style ceremony.

A PICTURE OF O. T. TAYLOR'S OWN PRODUCTION

This presentation of "A Night in Spain" was made at the Weir Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash., entirely from the instructions given in Moving Picture World. Mr. Taylor simply handed the issue to his crew and they did the rest.

Comes the Girl Sign Painters for Kelly's Slide

THREE OF THE HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE BIRMINGHAM CAMPAIGN FOR A BAND AND A FILM

The Post was collecting money for the Firemen's Band, and the Temple Theatre was collecting money for The Fire Brigade, so they pooled issues and both cleaned up. On the left is the blackface comedian dressed in an old helmet of fifty years ago. The usherettes man the apparatus in the centre and on the right is the extension ladder.

Fire Brigade Assisted Local Newspaper Drive

Generally when some made-to-order stunt is evolved for a picture, the idea is so generally copied that there is a lack of contrast and the reports become tiresome. Nothing like that seems to happen to "The Fire Brigade." Metro tied up the Fire Chief's Association to the picture, but they follow no cut and dried routine.

Down in Birmingham, Ala., the Temple Theatre played in extra good luck, for the Post was about to make a drive for instruments for a firemen's band, and they put over the drive and the picture simultaneously. What helped one helped the other, so they pooled issues and both cleaned up.

The department made a display of a new high power pumper that drew crowds to read the banners for the fund and the picture. A black-face comedian helped along by wearing the helmet of the original Birmingham fire chief and shouting his quips through the old-fashioned speaking trumpet without which no chief could extinguish a fire in the old days. His audience "plant" circulated through the crowd and kept things moving.

When the pumper palled they brought out the biggest extension ladder and switched from the comedian to a local black bottom champion and the collections went right on. The police band and the high school musical organizations came in on a parade and the firemen jumped from the roof of the theatre into the life nets. The five fire buggies for the chief and his assistants carried spare tire cards as well as the taxis, and there were firemen all over the place.

The band will get a lot of money and the Temple rolled up a whole wad of extra coin, so everyone is happy.

Insurance Helped

There seems to be no end to the Fire Brigade ideas. T. Y. Walker pulled another good one for the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., when he got a local fire insurance company interested. They ran a large advertisement in the newspapers, gave out 1,000 throwaways and mailed out 200 heralds. It helped get T. Y. a second night turnaway.

Used Numerous Stunts Putting Over Marines

The Retlaw Theatre, Fon-du-Lac, Wis., used a number of stunts to put over "Tell It to the Marines," including a bugler on the roof of a tall building who sounded the calls and then dropped a thirty-foot sign off the cornice. It took him ten minutes to get it back again and then he would repeat. He was used every day from twelve until one and from half-past five to half-past eight.

Eight machine guns were borrowed from a local guard unit, four of which were used for lobby display, while the others were perambulated on a truck. A special lobby front was constructed and decorated with some 500 flags borrowed from a local decorator.

The Mayor delivered the print to the theatre, under escort of Boy Scouts, and was largely responsible for a 2,000 attendance at an 1,100 seat house the opening night.

One of the newspapers ran an harmonical contest in connection with the showing, and newsboys were given helmets to wear while selling their papers.

SLIDING KELLY INTO THE STILLMAN THEATRE, CLEVELAND, WITH A PAINTED SIGN

On the left are the two girls who painted the sign shown in the centre, merely filling in the outlines worked in by regular painters. They took their own good time about it, for the longer they worked, the larger the crowd. On right is the lobby of the Stillman showing a giant baseball lettered "Game today." Kelly slid right in.

IT On WEBC Was Smash For Clara Bow and It

G. W. Carlson, of the Peoples and Savoy Theatres, Finkelstein & Ruben Theatres in Superior, Wis., gave the local radio station a new signature the other day. The station broadcasts from the centre of the town and uses a pair of tall towers for its aerial. Shortly before Clara Bow was due in the Elinor Glyn play at the Peoples, two large red letters appeared on the towers, offering "IT" in place of the station signature.

Mr. Carlson let them guess a couple of days and then told the newspaper and the paper told the rest of the town. The letters were electrically lighted at night, so that they worked continuously.

Mr. Carlson also used the public utilities to put over this picture. The Superior Water, Light and Power Co., controls the town and practically every householder gets a bill once a month. Directly under the meter readings is a blank space where the company affixes an advertising sticker, which is changed monthly. Mr. Carlson persuaded them to omit their own sticker and let him rubber stamp all the bills with an announcement for "It." This is another of those ideas that used to be common, but which seems to have fallen into disuse of late. If you can get the gas and electricity bills you have the entire town, and they can't throw your advertisement away until they have paid the bill. It simply has to be read.

On "We're in the Navy Now" Mr. Carlson got the announcer to tell his radio audience that he was going to write a song about the comedy, but was taking time to write a good one because nothing less would do justice to the comedy. It was just a little quirk, but it gave much more force than a straight announcement.

Hat Designing Contest Help to Barbara Worth

F. W. Brock, of the Rialto Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., got a lot of the revival of the newspaper design contest for "The Winning of Barbara Worth" when he played that United Artists picture.

He hooked the News to the idea and together they landed one of the leading stores on the offer of a hat worth $18 as the first prize. Brock contributed the second prize of $5 and sixteen pairs of passes while the newspaper gave the space.

A portrait cut of Vilma Banky without a hat was routed off so that most of the coiffure was removed and this incomplete cut was set into the space as shown, allowing plenty of room top and sides for the drawn design. The idea was to draw in the most fascinating hat the feminine mind could conceive.

The cut shows one of the pen and ink sketches, but there was no limitation as to medium and the hat could be done in water colors, oils or crayons as well as in ink or pencil. Many of the designs were a riot of color, but it was the idea and not the coloring which won the prize, so pen and ink artists were not badly handicapped.

The idea is not at all new. It has been worked both for hats and dresses. Where Mr. Brock won his best return was the fact that he worked the scheme at a time when feminine interest was largely centred on new clothes for Easter. The timeliness gave it double value, but the idea is always useful.

Inside Stuff

Al. Mason, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Tex., worked something new on It. He used a mystic; supposed to be a member of a peculiar sect, to tell the ladies how to develop "it." One of the admonitions was to be sure to see the Clara Bow picture. The rest was good old fashioned hoakum.

A local hotel was persuaded to use the "I" and "T" in its sign with red letters, and Mason used a lot of the regulation stunts to bat the picture over to a surplus.

PUT THE SHOW ON WHEELS AT STRAND THEATRE, GULFPORT
Pat Kleinpeter, of the Saenger house, got a snappy attractor for The Show when he put the trick on wheels and ran it across the top of the lobby. Not very expensive and an ideal appeal these spring days.

Broadway Chorines Register for Mothers Day

GIVING A THOUGHT TO MOTHER AND THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT ALONG THE GAY WHITE WAY

Two Universal exploiters put over a knockout stunt to open The Fourth Commandment at the Colony Theatre, New York. They offered to send a remembrance to any chorus girl's mother provided that the girl would register her mother's name and address in the lobby of the Colony just before show time. It formed a ballyhoo de luxe for the Mother picture.

Got Chorus Girl Army To Register for Mother's Day

Opening "The Fourth Commandment" at the Colony Theatre, on Broadway, Sidney C. Davidson, of Universal exploitation, aided by James Hood Macfarland, of the Publicity Department, put over a stunt that should stand as a Broadway classic.

In case you don't remember, the Fourth Commandment runs "Honor thy father and thy mother," and the picture deals with two mothers, portrayed by Mary Carr and Belle Bennett. Davidson decided to appeal to the chorus girls, and arranged with the Chorus Equity Association to send an artificial carnation to the mother of any member, provided that she would register her mother's name and address with a representative in the lobby of the Colony. Davidson thoughtfully limited the registration to the hour before show time, when it should do most good, and provided Leon Erroll as the first enrolment clerk.

He got the flowers without cost by suggesting artificial carnations as being more lasting than the natural flower.

The stunt made the grade in all the New York papers. It might be press work, but it made good reading, and good pictures, and that was all the editors cared. It made a wonderful stunt.

Gave 1,200 Passes

Realizing that Michael Strogoff was a good school hook-up, Al Levers, of the Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, Texas, gave 1,200 passes to school children, each accompanied by a multi-graphed letter telling of the play. It made a lot of talk and brought in many times the original number of paid admissions.

He also hooked the Postal Telegraph to a distribution of 1,000 special wires announcing "Mike's" coming.

Boy Scout Contest Was Treasure Hunt Product

Frank J. Miller tied in to a Boy Scout treasure hunt when the Scouts held a test. The boys were required to make a map of the territory covered and turn in their field notes. The Scout Council gave gold and silver medals and Miller contributed ten passes.

Scouts frequently have field work and other contests, and if you keep in touch with the scoutmasters you can frequently declare in; particularly on the massed troop events.

There were no marines available in Huron, S. D., when the Bijou wanted to put over "Tell It to the Marines." Manager Rehfield used boy scouts, and they worked almost as well. Another help was the Legion, which attended in a body one of the nights.

JUST TO SHOW THE NEWSBOYS STILL PARADE—THIS ONE COMES FROM LOS ANGELES

Newsboy parades may be a bit stale, but we haven't printed one lately, so here's the line of march of the Los Angeles Express carriers, fifteen hundred strong, on their way to see Slide, Kelly, Slide, at the State Theatre. They made a sizable turnout and it was figured that a band would be an utter waste of money with all the kids in action at once.

A UNIVERSAL GOODWILL HOOKUP TO A MOVIE BALL

Howard Lichey, of the Tri-State Amusement Co., of Ohio, gave a Movie Impersonation Ball at Steubenville, Ohio, and offered prizes to every person in costume. The window display shows the contributions of Universal stars.

Gave Prizes From Stars To Every Ball Attendant

Howard Lichey, publicity man for the Tri-State Amusement Co., of Ohio, also looks after some ballrooms owned by his company, and lately he organized a movie ball for the Capitol Ballroom, of Steubenville. He announced prizes to every person who came dressed as a picture star in some production, the prizes ranging from autographed postals to some really valuable gifts.

As the Tri-State plays every Universal release in its twenty theatres, the stars were asked to contribute prizes, and offerings were made by Laura La Plante, Norman Kerry, Hoot Gibson, Ethlyne Clair, Reginald Denny, Mary Philbin, Marian Nixon, June Marlowe, Jean Heresholt and George Lewis. These were made the basis of a window display which gave the stars and Universal considerable publicity, while at the same time it helped the ball along.

Lichey felt certain of the success of the event that he advertised it as the first annual ball. Events proved that he was right, and hereafter there will be at least one event each spring.

Whether or not you can induce the players to contribute prizes, you can get a lot of advertising out of a movie ball if you work it right. Require the contestants to impersonate some player soon to appear at your theatre and you'll get a lot of advertising out of the stunt.

Big Business Repaid Efforts on Spangles

When she came to play Universal's "Spangles," Mrs. S. E. Moore, of the Oliver Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo., figured that with the bluebirds coming north there should be some extra money in a circus play, and she set herself out to get it—and she did.

First off, Mrs. Moore borrowed a section of sidewall from a tent company and masked in the front, as shown in the cut. This is the simplest tent effect that we have recorded. About the centre of the picture is a shadow box that probably will not come through in the cut. It shows a circus caravan going through the open country in the early morning. Two clowns did stunts on the sawdust covered sidewalk, and a girl dressed as the heroine also helped along, while a gypsy read palms for all who could get close enough to her.

Had 1,000 Wild Beasts

Mrs. Moore even carried the sawdust into the theatre, strewing it in the aisles and foyers to give the proper atmosphere.

A sign on the tent front announced that one thousand wild animals would be turned loose in the theatre on Thursday and Friday nights. These, of course, were annual crackers, enveloped, with a warning printed on the envelope. The crackers were procured from Loose-Wiles through the local store.

Several other concerns hooked in on the circus atmosphere and wrapped heralds in their outgoing packages. The net result was just about double the usual business for those two days. You can't tell Mrs. Moore that advertising does not pay when you work it on the right sort of picture.

Sold With Bricks

A load of bricks, of the sort supposed to have been used in building McFadden's Flats, was the big noise on this picture at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta. Ernest Morrison worked the stunt through the automobile editor of the Constitution, and the bannered outfit was perambulated for three days.

Morrison also got out a flashy blue on white throwaway about half a yard long, using 15,000 of these; put out 5,000 doorknobs and pasted taxi windows, as well as using colored banners on his marquee for the first time. He knew he had a "popular" hit, so he worked the popular appeal. Usually the Howard advertising is more dignified.

Picked the Ushers

Just to be different, Sidney Dannenberg, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., used ushers for his Blonde or Brunette stunt. He picked the blondest and the most brunette of his ushers, dressed them in tuxedos and set them out to give away cards printed up with talk of the picture and headed "Blonde or Brunette which do you prefer?"

A bannered automobile went along to carry the surplus cards and to jump the boys from one section of the city to another. The boys worked stores, ice cream saloons and beauty shops as well as the streets.

A SIMPLE TENT FRONT ON SPANGLES FROM ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Mrs. S. E. Moore (second from the right), used two clowns, a Spangles and a fortune teller for lobby work, gave away one thousand lions and tigers and did about double the usual business at her Oliver Theatre.

Four Good Examples From Current Newspaper Work

Three Section Layout Lacks Close Contact

A Layout of a display for The Winning of Barbara Worth that is practically three strips comes from Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo. There is so little connection between the three that, save for the prices, the lower section might as well have been left off.

TELL IT TO THE MARINES—LON CHANEY

IN THREE LAYERS

The upper portions have sales value, though they lack the single glance appeal that makes for the best selling. One is either sold on the title alone or has to leave the title and go upstairs to be sold. There is not the intimate connection between the two that sells Colman and Banky in The Winning of Barbara Worth. Rather you are sold the stars and look to see what the play is, or you are sold on the title and look for the stars. In either event the lower third is largely waste. Of the three line only the middle one means anything. Unless you know that a flood is the big scene in the play, there is nothing to the statement that this is the thrill that has Niagara jealous, and even if you know about the rushing waters, you are not apt to be impressed by the allusion, nor is the statement that the climax alone is worth ten times the admission price particularly convincing. This space is almost entirely unnecessary.

It always is a bad layout to strip your display. It is doubly bad when there is nothing to connect the three. Most cross space ads are held together by the border, but here the bendy band across the centre, carrying the title, cuts off the upper and lower sections as completely as though they were three different appeals. It would have been better had the title panel been drawn in to permit the black border to run completely down the sides, but even this would not have been good layout.

The real trick in layout is to get as much of the display as possible to a point where it can all be read as one. Here you have Harold Bell Wright, Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky and Barbara Worth, all to be sold at first glance. You do not get all these factors in the Valentine space unless you are persistent. This is not up to the Valentine standard, and at best the Valentine has its ups and downs.

Mostly Portraiture Is Stillman Don Juan Sale

Out in Cleveland the Stillman Theatre runs all the way from all type to mostly picture. For Don Juan, with its large cast of favorites, M. A. Malaney decided upon pictures, and uses portraits of nine of the principals to get his appeal over, with a minimum of type. You do not have to sell more than the idea of Barrymore in Don Juan. If that cannot coax your dimes, no amount of exhortation will. Pictures form the better appeal, for all of these names will support the Barrymore appeal. Barrymore in Don Juan should be good, but Barrymore with all these favorites should be even better worth while.

A PORTRAIT GALLERY

We like the manner in which the portraits are grouped. Made into a single cut they would suggest the same excellence of cast. Nine single cuts look like a lot more than a group of nine persons, and in this position they form a frame that links up to the type. This would not be as effective were the cuts to rise above the test. Moreover this is a departure from the usual form of Stillman advertisement, and as such it attracts greater attention. It is surprising that so few managers realize the value of a change in putting over extra-important releases.

Don't get the idea that just type will sell tickets. It's what the type says that counts.

Gets Better Than Usual For Flesh and the Devil

Although the halftone on this space for Flesh and the Devil from Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C., does not come up very clearly, we think that this is a particularly good display, both for layout and copy—particularly the latter. There is a tone to the bank just below the title that carries more than usual conviction, chiefly because it lacks superlatives.

PARTICULARLY GOOD

The Loew Washington houses turn out some of the best displays on the circuit, but now and then they boost up their own standard, and this offers an exceptionally good combination of illustration, type and copy. The line cut is ample to carry the attention, the type is placed where you cannot miss it, and when you read the sales talk you are convinced that there is something unusual about the offering, though not a single superlative is used, the copy reading "Here's the truly magnificent, romantic triumph that held New York spellbound for weeks. A story of love, passion and temptation that is the sensation of the year." You do not instinctively feel like calling the writer a liar after you read that.

JUST THIS SIZE

Much special work was done for the picture in Chicago, and with only a single four letter title to display this was more than ample. Even the opening announcement did not run much longer than this, for with many papers and a high lineage, it does not pay to buy space by the square foot.

Reviewers' Views On Feature Films

Edited by C.S. Sewell

ONE OF THE GREAT classics of literature, "Resurrection," written by the famous Russian novelist, Count Leo Tolstoy, has been transferred to the screen by Edwin Carewe and is offered by United Artists as a starring vehicle for Rod La Rocque.

Mr. Carewe has produced a picture that is tremendous in its drama and aided by the superior work of the cast and the big and sincere scale on which the story has been handled, it rivets the attention and holds it all the way through. Characteristic of the Russian dramas, "Resurrection" is heavy drama and no attempt has been made to lighten it by the introduction of comedy relief. The spirit of the original has been retained even to the so-called unhappy ending.

The picture, produced on a big scale with apparently authentic Russian atmosphere, is excellently directed. Count Ilya Tolstoy, a son of the author appears in a minor role as a philosopher, and this device is used to link together the different high lights of the story.

"Resurrection" is not a honeyed milk-and-water story, on the contrary it veers strongly to the unpleasant side of life and nothing has been done to gloss over the hero's despicable conduct toward the girl, in fact this angle has been played up, and not only scenes leading up to her degradation but his other affairs with women are presented in an unusually frank manner from a sex standpoint, but it is all thoroughly in keeping with the mood of the story.

La Rocque's interpretation of the leading male role is very fine and one of the best things he has ever done, but even discounting the fact that his role is lacking in sympathy, Dolores Del Rio easily walks away with the honors. Her work is truly magnificent and gripping in its appeal to the emotions. It is one of the most marvelous performances that the screen has witnessed, more than justifying the excellent impression this newcomer made in "What Price Glory."

So gripping is the drama and so magnificently produced and acted, "Resurrection" should not only appeal to high class audiences but to the great majority of theatre-goers as well, and even though it is not according to Tolstoy's story, we are of the opinion that a "happy" ending would not only improve the box-office value but would be thoroughly consistent with the development of the story.

Inspiration Pictures Inc. Presents
Rod La Rocque in "Resurrection"

With Dolores Del Rio
Based on novel by Count Leo Tolstoy
An Edwin Carewe Production
A United Artists Picture

CAST:

Prince Dimitri Rod La Rocque

Major Marc MacDermott
Aunt Sophya Lucy Beaumont
Aunt Marya Vera Lewis
Princess Olga Clarissa Selwynne
Old Philosopher Count Ilya Tolstoy

Length—9,120 Feet

Prince Dimitri becomes infatuated with Katusha a peasant girl. Returning to St. Petersburg he becomes calloused and sophisticated and takes advantage of Katusha's innocence. Returning from war he is on a jury that convicts Katusha of murdering a man. Learning of her being driven from home, and that she became a woman of the street after losing her baby, he feels his responsibility and seeks to atone. He goes with her to Siberia and their love is reborn anew but she refuses to become his wife and sends him back to Russia. Tremendously dramatic life.

"Casey at the Bat"

Famous Poem Serves As Basis For An Uproarious
Feature Comedy With Wallace Beery As The Star

Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky present
Wallace Beery in
"Casey at the Bat"

Suggested by poem by Ernest Thayer
Directed by Monte Brice
A Paramount Picture

CAST:

Casey Wallace Beery
O'Dowd Ford Sterling
Camille ZaSu Pitts
Putnam Sterling Holloway
Spec Spec O'Donnell
Trixie Iris Stuart

Length—6,040 Feet.

Casey makes such a hit with a village ball club as a slugger that he is signed by the New York Giants. In the deciding game everything depends on him and he strikes out. Through the efforts of Camille, his village sweetheart it develops that he has been double-crossed and is the victim of a trick ball and the game is played over. Roaring farce comedy.

ERNEST THAYER'S famous poem "Casey at the Bat," immortalized as a recitation by DeWolf Hopper, has been used as the basis for an amusing farce comedy by Paramount with Wallace Beery as the star.

Those who are familiar with the poem know that the setting is that of a baseball game and the big punch comes in the last line when at the crucial point in the deciding game, the mighty Casey struck out. This idea has been retained but a story has been built up around it. Casey is shown as the small town junkman and hero who is signed by the New York Giants and the big climax occurs during one of their games with Pittsburgh. In order to provide for the "happy ending" however, considerable liberty has been taken with the idea of the story and Casey is shown as the victim of a trick ball with the picture ending with a promise that the game will be played over.

Instead of playing up the human interest and dramatic possibilities of the poem the picture has been handled from the comedy angle and it emerges as a heavily gagged comedy set in the period of the early nineties. There is the small town dude wonderfully portrayed by Sterling Holloway, the village dressmaker, who is the sweetheart of Casey and who discovers the fact that he is the victim of a trick, the crooked baseball scout played in Ford Sterling's best style and of course Beery himself as the bush leaguer who runs riot in New York as the idol of the fans. Beery's handling of the role is a treat, from the time he first appears on the screen to the final fade-out he keeps the audience in good humor.

"Casey at the Bat" is built for laughter, and cannot be taken seriously, and it certainly offers an hour of chuckles and smiles well worth anybody's time.

Of course there is a mild romance and some villainy. Casey's manager is shown as his rival and he not only brings about an estrangement between Casey and his village sweetheart but helps to frame Casey so that he will keep away from the game and then aids the crooked scout in planting the trick ball. ZaSu Pitts has a congenial role as the village girl and extracts quite a bit of pathos and considerable comedy.

There is hardly a foot of "Casey at the Bat" that does not contain a laugh or a smile and while it may disappoint some who know the poem, it offers hilarious entertainment for all who go to the theatre to be amused.

"Horse Shoes"

A Host of Amusing Gags Makes Monty Banks' Newest Comedy Good Audience Entertainment

A. MacArthur presents
Monty Banks in
"Horse Shoes"

Directed by Clyde Bruckman

A Pathe Feature

CAST:

Monty Milde.....Monty Banks
Henry Baker, Jr.....Ernie Wood
William Baker.....John Elliott
His daughter.....Jean Arthur
Conductor.....Arthur Thalasso
Mayor.....George French
Judge.....A. Borgato
O'Toole.....Burr Apling

Length—5,668 Feet.

Monty and the girl are mistaken for a newly married couple aboard a Pullman car. It turns out that Monty has a job as lawyer for the girl's father and he finally wins out in court against designing relatives and then marries the girl. Uproarious farce.

PATHE'S NEWEST FEATURE comedy "Horse Shoes," starring Monty Banks, upholds this comedian's reputation for providing fast and amusing material that should keep the majority of patrons in good humor.

This time, we meet Monty as a graduate of a law school, en route to take a job. Adventures start to fall his way immediately and keep up until the final fade-out. An auto accident brings the girl to the scene and this leads up to the first big comedy sequence in which the pair are mistaken for newlyweds and fate has placed them in the same section in a pullman. No one will believe their denials and a lot of good gags have been introduced here that will keep the spectators in an uproar although certain of the touches are a trifle daring and the humor growing out of the antics of a parrot are decidedly risqué for the family trade.

With the discovery that Monty's new boss is the girl's father and that a rich brother is trying to swindle him out of a fortune, the picture begins to get faster and faster with a lot more ingenious gags showing Monty's efforts to get hold of an incriminating paper. The climax comes in a court room scene the like of which would never happen in real life. There are chases and slapstick galore with Monty of course winning out, and despite its absurdity, it is good for a number of laughs and provides a finish that should send them away laughing and satisfied.

In addition to the gags, Monty has more opportunities for acting with a touch of pathos here and there and proves satisfactory and Jean Arthur is altogether pleasing as the girl, with the others in the cast rendering capable support. Clyde Bruckman's direction hardly gives the spectator time to recover from one burst of laughter before he is in the midst of the next one.

"Madame Wants No Children"

First Product of the Fox European Studio Is Comedy Drama With Maria Corda As Star

WITH MARIA CORDA in the leading role, Fox Film Corporation is offering "Madame Wants No Children," the first production to be made in the company's European studio. The title gives the key to the theme and the story is built around a young wife who shuns the responsibilities of motherhood, preferring jazz and social life. Eventually her husband who loves children resents her frivolous attitude and the story closes with the arrival of a baby to grace their home.

Star, director, and the entire cast are foreign and unknown to American audiences.

The picture, produced in Germany, has a French setting and the treatment of the story follows along continental rather than American lines. This is especially evident in the treatment of the hero's love affairs, while the wife is shown as frivolous and neglectful of the home, the hero's former mistress is pictured as a paragon of perfection along these lines, catering to his every want and whim. It is a question as to whether American audiences will take kindly to this moral standard.

Maria Corda, the star, is attractive and vivacious and creates a good impression in a rather thankless role, Harry Liedtke capably handles the role of the husband and the supporting players are satisfactory although the light-of-love overdoes her role by wearing a perpetual smile.

Alexander Korda has directed the story that the interest is held although the story does not reveal any especial dramatic force to offset the handicap of its continental atmosphere and treatment and unknown players, with American audiences.

William Fox presents
"Madame Wants No Children"
with Maria Corda
An Alexander Korda Production

CAST:

Celyane.....Maria Corda
Paul.....Harry Liedtke
Louise.....Marie Paudler
Celyane's Mother.....True Hesterberg

Length—5,415 feet

Paul, marries Celyane a frivolous society woman who prefers jazz to dancing. Finally he becomes disgusted and leaves her. Celyane however learns her lesson and their home is blessed with children. Comedy drama.

"Three Hours"

Mystery Story Which Develops Into Poignant Drama of Mother-Love Stars Corinne Griffith

Asher, Small and Rogers present

Corinne Griffith in
"Three Hours"

Based on story "Purple and Fine Linen"
by May Edgington

Directed by James Flood
A First National Picture

CAST:

Madeline Durkin.....Corinne Griffith
James Finlay.....John Bowers
Jonathan Durkin.....Hobart Bosworth
Gilbert.....Paul Ellis
Governess.....Ann Schaefer
Baby.....Mary Louise Miller

Length—5,760 Feet.

James Finlay, wealthy, is robbed by a poorly dressed woman, who begs three hours of grace. She tells of her rich husband's cruelty. Finlay goes with her to her husband's home and she finds that her baby is dead. Pathetic story of mother love and suffering.

EACH OF CORINNE GRIFFITH'S starring vehicles during the past year or more have been entirely different and point strongly to the policy of the producers of presenting her in as widely varied stories as possible. This is strikingly borne out in the First National production "Three Hours."

Not only is Miss Griffith's role different from anything she has previously attempted, but the story gets well away from the beaten path. Starting off with the essentials of an intriguing mystery melodrama we are introduced to a shabby woman who steals a wallet from a rich man, decks herself out in gorgeous clothes and begs for three hours of freedom. This is granted and past events are told by means of flashbacks, unfolding a touching dramatic story of a mother's love and a jealous husband's inordinate cruelty in casting her out and keeping her away from her baby. Somewhat dubious about believing her, the rich man goes with her to her husband's home to which she has been suddenly called and there follows a smashing dramatic climax when she finds that her baby is dead. In keeping with the theme, there is only a bare hint of a future romance.

While not realizing all of its emotional possibilities, Miss Griffith gives a capable performance of this role and John Bowers makes an excellent foil as the rich man.

A Major Differs From a Sergeant

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

F. B. O.

ARIZONA STREAK. Star, Tom Tyler. A fairly good western with Frankie Darro and Beans running away with the show. Tom's leading lady was a Miss Vaughn. I think not so good—in fact, terrible, if I may be pardoned for using the comment of one of our patrons. She may be a Wampas star, but she doesn't profile well. Tone O. K. Appeal fair. Sunday, special no. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 15-30, 15-40 specials. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

BIGGER THAN BARNUM'S. Stars, Ralph Lewis, Viola Dana. Patrons especially well pleased, the picture being out of the beaten track. Stars do good work and Ralph Ince is especially good in the comedy part. The first good business in over a month, with the kids filling the front rows to capacity. Tone O. K. Appeal general. Sunday yes, special no. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 15-30, specials 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

BIGGER THAN BARNUM'S. Stars, Lewis-Dana. Good program picture. Dana is good drawing feature here. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special no. Draw town and country class, town 896. Admission 10-25. Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre (200 seats), Neola, Iowa.

BREED OF THE SEA. Star, Ralph Ince. I had the impression, from the advertising, that this was going to be one of those rough "drag-'em-out" pictures, but I was surprised. What of such action there was, was toned down to the right degree and I was gratified to hear many favorable comments from people whom I expected might not like this type. Good for any type of house. Tone O. K. Appeal general, hardly for Sunday, no as special. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 10-30. (specials 15-40). Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

BROADWAY LADY. Star, Evelyn Brent. A fair program picture which did just a fair business at the box office. Evelyn Brent is a good star but not popular here. Tone good, appeal 60 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

DEADLINE. Star, Bob Custer. Good picture and pleased fair business. Tone good, appeal 85 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

HER HONOR THE GOVERNOR. Star, Pauline Frederick. Nice little picture but not a special. It is wonderfully well directed with a cast of unknowns (except Miss Frederick) and the story is quite interesting. Advertising O.K. Tone O.K., appeal strong. Sunday yes, here, special no. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HOMESTRUCK. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Good program picture of stage life. Miss Dana is better in this, and in Bred in Old Kentucky, than in her K. K. K. film or in Bigger Than Barnum's. Good print. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

IMPOSTER. Star, Evelyn Brent. Another good picture from Brent. Just enough action to please the men and just enough drama to please the women. Tone O. K., appeal general. Sunday, special no. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 15-30. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (300 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

LADDIE. Stars, John Bowers. Gene Stratton Porter novel. Used this on Christmas Day. Was first inclined to omit this date but finally decided that Laddie was sweet and clean enough for the day so set

"It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man." That is our slogan, we exhibitors who send unbiased reports on pictures we have played.

Our Gang is held together by the bonds of common interest and mutual good will. We welcome you into our circle, you will automatically become one of us by the free-will act of sending picture tips to this dependable tip department.

OUR GANG

it in. Laddie is a picture that anyone should be glad to see and is one that an exhibitor should be proud to show. Tone O.K. Appeal general. Sunday, special yes. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 15-30, specials 15-40. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

LONE HAND SAUNDERS. Star, Fred Thomson. Another good one of the Thomson pictures and pleased the few that saw it. This one is of a little different type which makes it good entertainment. Don't pass this one if your patrons like westerns. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

LONE HAND SAUNDERS. Star, Fred Thomson. An average Thomson picture with Silver King. Tone excellent, appeal 75 per cent. Special no. R. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Natoma, Kansas.

REGULAR SCOUT. Star, Fred Thomson. The usual good Thomson F. B. O. subject and one that pleased the patrons, plus the Boy Scouts. Did good business. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special yes. Draw general class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

WILD TO GO. Star, Tom Tyler. Very good western although the Tylers follow pretty much the same formula. Frankie Darro and Beans very good and Tom's leading lady an improvement over the last one. Quite a few fights. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

First National

DUCHESS OF BUFFALO. Star, Constance Talmadge. Pretty good; her name does a lot, but she has made much better ones. Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

DANCER OF PARIS. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Just a program picture. Can't say it did much good here. Why put Dorothy in something like this? We saw enough Paris pictures. Appeal 25 per cent. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

FOREVER AFTER. Star, Lloyd Hughes. A splendid love story of young folks, played by young actors who gave a really creditable performance. It is absolutely clean all the way and there is not even a villain in it—which goes to prove that a villain is not always necessary to make a story entertaining. Fast football game and some thrilling war shots in this number. Good paper. Worth playing in any house. Tone fine, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special almost. Draw all species, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

IT MUST BE LOVE. Star, Colleen Moore. Failed to draw as good as Ella Cinders. The public likes Colleen; but business here in general is away off and her pictures are not proving to be worth what they are asking me for them. Tone fair, appeal 70 per cent. Sunday, special (with regard to above) yes. Draw all classes, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

LADY IN ERMINE. Star, Corinne Griffith. Pleased majority, but it was a kind of an impossible story. Tone poor, appeal fair. No as special. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widener, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

McFADDEN'S FLATS. Stars, Murray-Conklin. This is sure hard on a manager as well as the house; pretty good crowd for a change. Tone good, appeal 75 per cent. Sunday no, special yes. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-30. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

MEN OF STEEL. Star, Milton Sills. Was disappointed in this show. First National called it a special, but we could not see it. It was a fair feature, but we have seen Sills in a lot that we liked him in better. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widener, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

OVERLAND STAGE. Star, Ken Maynard. Oh, boy! how my western crowd ate this one up. One of the best westerns I ever had in my house and it will please any crowd. Maynard has all other western stars skinned, for his pictures are not ordinary westerns, but honest to God western productions worthy of running in any house. Tone, Sunday O.K. No as special. Appeal 90 per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SPLENDID ROAD. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. A splendid picture which failed miserably to draw at the box office; did not make the price of the feature. Tone fair, appeal 80 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SUBWAY SADIE. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. She sure was fine in it and she is liked here. Tone good, fair appeal. Sunday yes, special sure. Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre, Neola, Iowa.

Fox

BLUE EAGLE. (7 reels). Star, George O'Brien. A drama of courage, loyalty and strength, but it is mostly strength. Lots of fights and Big Bill Russell took his part as well as O'Brien. One fault in this picture is continuity is poor. Paper good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HAVOC. Star, George O'Brien. War scenes more convincing than The Big Parade. A splendid story with clever handling by directors and players with as bum a title as has ever been invented when box office consideration is expected. Fair tone. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LAST TRAIL. Star, Tom Mix. Here's a thriller. Since Tom has packed his dress suit away in moth balls, he's been giving us real pictures once more. There's action from the first shot where he's pursued by a band of Indians to the finish of a thrilling race between five four-horse stage coaches. They don't make westerns any better. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

LOVE MAKES 'EM WILD. Star, Johnny Harron. Everyone from the janitor up bullied this poor angleworm; then, when he believed his days numbered he blossomed out as a gilded butterfly and got the partnership and the girl and all the fixings. Nice light comedy that went over good. Cast and direction good. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

MONKEY TALKS. Star, Olive Borden. Most of our patrons liked this. The impersonation of the monkey was wonderful. Well worth playing, but would have been more interesting with an American locale. Tone fair, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday depends, special no. Draw farm class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

MUSIC MASTER. (7 reels). Star, Alec Francis. An older people's picture; brought new older class patronage. A strong story of father love. A sad picture in spots, but a very happy ending. Good Sunday picture. A bit too long. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MUSIC MASTER. Star, Alec Francis. This is a picture that any exhibitor can be proud to show on his screen. Good story, well directed and acted. Thought it even better than Return of Peter Grimm and that was mighty good. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

NO MAN'S GOLD. Star, Tom Mix. Back to the old kind is right. Bad storm kept crowd away, but those that did venture out certainly did brag on it. Tone excellent. Appeal 95 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

SHAMROCK HANDICAP. Star, J. Farrell MacDonald. A "different" type of horse racing story; as refreshing as a visit to the "Ould Sod." By leaving out the horse racing end and playing up the human interest Irish types, business should be better than usual. Tone good. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Gotham

KING OF THE PACK. Star, Peter the Great (dog). Good, the dog was great. What I call a small town picture and should go any place fine. I would be glad to get more of this kind. Tone, appeal good, Sunday, special yes. Draw town and farming class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

Metro-Goldwyn

BATTLING BUTLER. Star, Buster Keaton. Not much to this one; Buster didn't make them laugh much. Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

BARDELYS THE MAGNIFICENT. Star, John Gilbert. Played two nights and did fair business, but as I draw from country and small towns, the roads were bad with mud. Good tone and appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and country class, town 896. Admission 10-25. Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre (200 seats), Neola, Iowa.

BROWN OF HARVARD. Star, Jack Pickford. Good action story, plenty of pep. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm, merchants, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

DENI-BRIDE. Star, Norma Shearer. This picture also starts with a bang, sags a bit in the middle, but ends all jake. Metro has cast this young lady in some fine pictures, but this one didn't please our audience like "His Secretary" did. Paper and cuts good,

Thanks Mr. Gulick

R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado, asks that this be communicated properly—so:

"Thanks, Mr. Paul Gulick, for your letter, and the photograph which arrived in good shape."

AND ALSO—

Here Y'Are, Hoot!

"Hoot—in The Denver Dude starving you for Universal)—you're a regular fellow in sending me your very good looking photograph. It arrived the same day we were showing The Denver Dude—this picture is another one you can run on any day and look your patrons in the eyes when they come out. Everyone pleased and so was the management."—R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada (Ten miles from Denver), Colorado.

slide poor. Ran special trailer on this, which helps picture go over. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DESERT'S TOLL. (6 reels). Star, Francis MacDonald. The third M.-G.-M. western that outbeat them all as to drawing power. Despite bad weather we did good business and everyone was pleased. Print and paper good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DESERT'S TOLL. A very good western with the prettiest scenery we have ever seen. Had the star been known it would have drawn better. Tone good, appeal 95 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

FLESH AND THE DEVIL. Stars, John Gilbert, Greta Garbo. In one word I can describe this picture, and that word is knockout! A knockout from every standpoint. Not suggestive but plenty of the love stuff the ultra-smart crowd likes and lots of the things that make real pictures to please them all. Boost this as you have no other picture this year, for it is there and will make you some real money. Tone O. K. Appeal 100 plus. Special, yes. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

HEAVEN ON EARTH. (7 reels). Star, Conrad Nagel. A gypsy girl (Renee Adoree) and an American youth (Nagel), roaming the road together without a cent and finding love and happiness, which is heaven on earth. Good program picture that you can advertise and boost. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

A LITTLE JOURNEY. Star, William Haines. Poor, and I am sure sorry that William Haines was cast in this role: I think it hurts him a great deal. Carey good. Tone, Sunday, special no. Appeal fair. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

MARE NOSTRUM. Good and very good. Lost a plenty on this one, as it poured down rain both nights. Had I taken in enough to pay rental I'd have been happier. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. in fair weather. Sunday, special yes. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

MIKE. A very good story. Has good tone and fair appeal, just above program schedule. Sunday yes. Draw merchant, farm classes, town 1,650 widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

RED MILL. Star, Marion Davies. Say, fellows, here's a peach of a comedy. Marion Davies wonderful. Pleased a hundred per cent. Played two days and played it hot, ahead of Kansas City. Buy it and step on it. Tone, appeal good. Draw general class. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

ROAD TO MANDALAY. Star, Lon Chaney. A very good story with good tone and appeal. Special yes. Draw farming, merchant class, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TAXI DANCER. Star, Joan Crawford. Good program: Joan Crawford was very good. Fair appeal. Sunday, special no. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

Paramount

BEHIND THE FRONT. Stars, Beery-Hatton. The biggest flop we have had here for ages. Had a lot of wall s. Print was badly butchered up and Paramount could not furnish advertising. Appeal here 50 per cent. Tone good, special not here. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

GOD GAVE ME TWENTY CENTS. (7 reels). Star, Lois Moran, supported by Lya de Putti and Jack Mulhall. A heavy picture, with the stars all doing good work. Did the usual Tuesday and Wednesday business: no extra drawing power. Good print. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HOTEL IMPERIAL. Star, Pola Negri. Rental for this town thirty per cent. higher than it should have been. Lost money on this account. Picture good and worth seeing, but the fault is it was oversold. Tone good, appeal poor. Sunday, special yes (with reference to above). Draw merchant, farm class, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

KISS IN A TAXI. Star, Bebe Daniels. A clever farce. Chester Conklin is the cause of much comedy. Bebe is very good in the picture also. Yes for Sunday. Draw big city general class. Admission 20-25-40. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre (1,100 seats), Indianapolis, Indiana.

LOVE 'EM AND LEAVE 'EM. Star, Evelyn Brent. A real entertaining picture from every viewpoint; you won't go wrong. A good cast and a good story is all we crave. Tone fine, appeal 75 per cent. Sunday, no. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

MANNEQUIN. Star, Alice Joyce. A picture that pleased, especially the ladies. A gorgeous production with a dandy style show. Interesting throughout. Tone, appeal good. Draw general class. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

NEW YORK. Star, Ricardo Cortez. Oversold on this one; sold for about thirty per cent. higher than it should have been. Good picture; no fault to find with it in any way as a picture; but we lost money for reason already explained. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday and special yes (in right places). Draw merchant, farm classes, town 1,650 widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PALM BEACH GIRL. Star, Bebe Daniels. Our fans liked this one immensely: it had everything—speed, pep and comedy. Tone good, appeal splendid. Draw general class. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

SONG AND DANCE MAN. (7 reels). Star, Tom Moore. A little comedy that seemed to please the few who saw it, but we didn't break even on this one. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

VARIETY. Star, Emil Jannings. This is a marvelous production that will entertain most any audience and those who know good pictures will stop to comment on it; but by virtue of its cast being foreign, and having a bad title, it will not draw probably in small towns. One you need not be afraid of, though, if you can get them in. The picture is there! Appeal (to those who came) 90 per cent. Special yes. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

VARIETY. Star, Emil Jannings. Best foreign picture I ever saw. Lots of comments on this one. Emil Jannings very good. Book it if you want to thrill your audience. Tone good, appeal 75 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000.

Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

WILD HORSE MESA. Star, Jack Holt, Good, if we had seen it all—but it was off as much as it was on the machine. Heluva print. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-20. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

Producers Dist. Corp.

SEA WOLF. Star, Ralph Ince. A genuine offering of Jack London's famous sea story which gave universal satisfaction for two-day showing. Tone none, appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday, yes as special. Draw all classes, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SIMON THE JESTER. Just a very ordinary program picture and not worth running unless you are forced to run it. It was a jester with me—just so many feet of exposed raw stock. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

United Artists

BLACK PIRATE. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. The Technicolor photography of this film was mainly responsible for its success here. Fairbanks is not a great drawing card but the colored film was great. We should have much more of it. Tone fair. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Neuman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LITTLE ANNIE ROONEY. Star, Mary Pickford. This is a dandy fine picture and believe it pleased every one who saw it. Tied up with the local school and did a very nice business. Picture a little old but don't pass it up if you can buy it right. Tone fine, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special almost. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

MOLLYCODDLE. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This is an old picture but a good one at that. Played this to a fair Saturday night crowd and think it pleased the majority. Made a little money and that's what counts. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

POLLYANNA. Star, Mary Pickford. Old but good; if you haven't used it you will bring in some new customers with it. Tone yes, appeal fine. Sunday, special yes. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

SPARROWS. Star, Mary Pickford. Another overdrawn "Our Gang" type comedy; not quite as dull as the Annie Rooney one, but entirely too long as is. By using strong added attractions you should be able to do some business. Fair tone. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

STELLA DALLAS. Star, Belle Bennett. This did the biggest three days of the season for us and everybody more than satisfied with the picture. It's the kind that gets word-of-mouth advertising and you know what that means at the box office. Belle Bennett great and whole cast very good. Played it in Lent, too, so you know it had to be a wow to pull the way it did. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

Universal

BEAUTIFUL CHEAT. Star, Laura LaPlante. Not so good here; all the men panned this one. Pleased the majority of the women.

An Iowa Recruit

Welcome to C. G. Brothers, Star Theatre, Grand River, Iowa, who, in sending the reports that start him as a member of Our Gang says: "For a long time I have been very much interested in the Straight From the Shoulder Reports and they sure tell a story; so I am sending in a couple to Van's 'Our Gang' department."

Not much of a story; not so good for a small town. Tone O.K. Appeal 50 per cent. Draw town, country class, town 450. Admission 10-25. H. V. Ritter, McDonald Theatre (300 seats), McDonald, Kansas.

BLUE BLAZES. Star, Pete Morrison. Just a western, nothing new or startling. Tone good, appeal fair, Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

COHENS AND THE KELLYS. Stars, George Sidney, Charlie Murray, Vera Gordon. One of the best pictures ever shown at the Green Lantern, outside of special productions. Comedy, action and acting all good and well balanced. More good comments on this picture than we have had for a long time. Sunday, special yes. Appeal 100 per cent. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

COMBAT. Star, House Peters. Good action and woods picture; not many lumber camp scenes, but my people liked it all right. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town, farm classes, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

COMBAT. Star, House Peters. A dandy picture that pleased them all. Print in good shape. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

DENVER DUDE. (6 reels). Star, Hoot Gibson. Another six reeler of good entertainment from Hoot. Title good for us, and so was the paper. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DENVER DUDE. Star, Hoot Gibson. A very good Gibson subject that will please his following; however, there were some who wanted him in strictly western. He pleases, but let's hope he stays away from the "due" stuff. They want Hoot as a wild ridin' cowboy and if he is wise he will remain a wild cowboy. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

HIS PEOPLE. Star, Rudolph Schildkraut. Consider this a mighty fine picture. Good direction, good story and a cast that is hard to beat. Everyone pleased. Tone, appeal good. Draw general class. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

HIS PEOPLE. Stars, Rudolph Schildkraut, Blanche Mehaffy. Ranks almost as highly as the Cohens and the Kellys and that is high praise. Acting extremely good and suitable for any audience. Sunday yes, special no. Appeal 90 per cent. George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Delaware.

PHANTOM BULLET. Star, Hoot Gibson. Good western for here. Went over big. No S. R. Sure took with the crowd. Reels in good condition. Saturday, but not special. Draw general class, town 450. Had bad weather. C. G. Brothers, Star Theatre, Grand River, Iowa.

THE SET UP. Star, Art Acord. Just a western. One of the westerns Universal made with that same ranch house used in 150 westerns from them. Scenery must be scarce out there. Appeal 50 per cent. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, manager, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

SKINNER'S DRESS SUIT. Star, Reginald Denny. A very good comedy. Kept the house in an uproar. Cost too much but it sure pleased. Tone good, appeal 95 per cent.

Sunday yes, special no. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

TAXI, TAXI. (7 reels). Star, Everett Horton. Horton better than ever. Miss Nixon was sure O.K. too. A good farce comedy that is as entertaining as some big laugh specials. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

UNDER WESTERN SKIES. This picture has a good story. Starts in the East and ends in the West, with plenty of action and comedy and that is what the average moviegoer wants. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and country class, town 500. Admission 10-25. H. V. Ritter, McDonald Theatre (275 seats), McDonald, Kansas.

UNDER WESTERN SKIES. Star, Norman Kerry. Good program that pleased most all. Tone good, appeal 80 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

Warner Bros.

BELOVED BRUTE. (Vitagraph). A good one in good shape; old, but it pleased, all who saw it. Couldn't get them in. Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

Short Subjects

GREEN ARCHER. (Pathe-serial). Star, Allene Ray. As good as we ever played. Kept them guessing to the last night who the Green Archer was. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre, Wirt, Oklahoma.

HAVE COURAGE. (Educational - Billy Dooley). He's sappier than ever in this one but it made patrons laugh at that. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HE DONE HIS BEST. (F. B. O.-Chas. Bowers). For novelty stuff, this series of Bowers tricks are great, but its not exactly comedies; we usually book one of these with a two reel comedy of Educational or Universal and a feature, and it makes a real show. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HODGE PODGE. (Educational-magazine). A fair one reel offering for a short subject or to fill. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LAND O' FANCY. (Educational-Felix-cat). Felix in the Land of Make-believe, and it's good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LITTLE MISS BLUFFIT. (F. B. O.-comedy). A treasure hunt filled with laughs, with F. B. O.'s greatest comedians. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

THANKS FOR THE BOAT RIDE. (Universal-Wanda Wiley). This comedy is just fair. This kiddo don't take so well here. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Miscellaneous

FOREST HAVOC. Star, Forrest Stanley. It will do for a Saturday night if they are not too particular. Just a program show. The print we had was very dark in spots. Tone good, appeal fair. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RECKLESS COURAGE. (Weiss). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Not so bad for a cheap western. Draw the boys and the wild west loving gang but has no appeal for townspeople. Tone fair. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 10-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

A Presentation Featuring Novelty Orchestra

A Moving Picture World Presentation Devised by O. T. Taylor

ALTHOUGH worked up as an orchestra presentation this setting may be used as background for singers or instrumentalists other than novelty orchestra.

It is also suitable for a dance presentation with dancers interpreting the native dances of the several countries, winding up with Charleston or Black Bottom.

The nationalities used may, of course, be changed to meet the producers requirements.

The suggestions offered here are based on the popularity of the songs and dances of these countries, or on melodies suggestive of the country, yet offering numbers that are distinctively different. Thus the rather heavy, sonorous song of the "Volga Boatman" is contrasted in the sentimental melody of Italy, "Sole Mio."

The lilting rhythm of "Habanera" or "La Sorella" is followed by a melody of the mysterious orient.

The Routine

The drapes parting reveal a formal setting consisting of an ornamental center panel, flanked by columns, silver and plush drapes, viewed through an arch of twisted columns supporting a decorated beam.

The circular, stained glass window in center panel is illuminated from behind. The stage is in blue light.

The orchestra seated on, and in front of the platform is in amber light from overhead. The soloists get white spot from projection booth. Suggested opening number; short selection from "Raymond."

Stage to white light for the popular number following selection.

Stage to amber light for sentimental ballad introducing singer working in spot.

Novelty number: "Songs of Nations." Stage to blue light for opening. Window changes to russian scene as orchestra opens with "Song of the Volga Boatman." Introduce singer.

Window changes to gondola scene. Orchestra segue to "Sole Mio."

Amber stage, red on orchestra.

Change to spanish scene as orchestra segue to "Habanera." Red stage changing to Magenta as oriental scene appears in window and orchestra segue to "Allah's Holiday," "Moonlight on the Ganges" or similar. Red on Orchestra changing slowly to white as orchestra begins "American Medley" of favorite songs finishing with chorus from popular songs. White lights full up for finale.

The Settings; Figures 1 and 2

The central panel B has a circular window opening showing, as the drapes part, a stained glass window, A. The panel is of frame construction covered with muslin, or heavy paper, painted a deep red, almost Tuscan, with decorative stuff in colored bronzes, orange trim. The panel is set between the silver tabs CC. The eye, DD, in blue plush, is caught up on two long and two short twisted columns in gold, EE. These are highlighted in yellow and shaded with black.

Two similar, but larger, columns FF support the border G which is painted to represent an ornamental beam resting on brackets.

Beam decorations in gold, orange and black on cream ground.

The pedants H are cut from wall board and finished in gold, silver and colored metallics, and are suspended on chains or heavy wire. Illuminated with baby spots from center, overhead, they present a dazzling appearance.

CONSTRUCTION.

The twisted columns are cut from wall board and nailed to battens, H fig. 3, and are "set up" by fastening the lower end securely to the floor and the upper end to a line made fast to fly batten and drawn taut.

The changing window effect is made as follows: A strip of bleached muslin, about a foot wider than the window opening, A, fig. 3, is divided into as many square sections as needed for changes by means of spacers C. The spacers are battens about $\frac{3}{8}$ by $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, placed one on each side of muslin and nailed together. A screweye, D, is placed in each end of spacer.

The screweyes act as batten gliders on the guide wires EE which are fastened to a fly batten and to the floor close to the back of the center panel B and drawn taut.

The first section (stained glass window) is raised in position to show through window opening. This section is painted in dyes or transparent colors and oiled. The other sections are raised to position in sequence during rendering of the novelty number.

The pictorial sections may be in silhouettes or in vivid transparent colors in flat tones outlined in black, and oiled to suggest parchment.

The window is spot-lighted from behind.

This effect is also obtained by projecting slides, from behind, onto a white muslin screen stretched over the opening.

British Films Bill

the bill, and mentioned that "a very close and distinguished relative of his" was among the greatest contributors of super-films among British authors.

Mr. Arthur Greenwood denounced the Films Bill as the wildest farrago of administrative nonsense ever put before the House of Commons. The booking clauses were a sop to the exhibitors to induce them to swallow the quota, which was a bribe to the producers.

Sir Thomas Inskip, winding up for the Government, expressed confidence that there would be more than enough Empire films to provide the quota. (Empire including India, Australia, etc.)

One exhibitor told a press representative that American producers could bring over their own companies and make pictures here in producing companies promoted and financed by them. While this would provide employment for British labor, it would not tend to a sound British producing industry.

The general view of the trade as reflected in the press is that the exhibitor stands in fear of the lack of safeguards in the Films Bill. While an imposition of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and rising quota need not lead to the introduction of bad British films, at the same time it is apparent that the bill does not provide any safeguard against such an undesirable outcome of the enforcing of the quota upon exhibitors.

Trailer Importance Stressed By Stanley-Fabian Executive

SUCCESSFUL motion picture theatre managers are more and more realizing the importance of trailer announcements in their theatres, according to a statement by Louis R. Golding, one of the executives of the Stanley Fabian Corporation, in charge of their chain of neighborhood theatres in Newark, the Oranges and other northern New Jersey cities. Mr. Golding proves his far-sightedness with the following remarks:

"An interesting step in the evolution of the motion picture from the early days of experiments with 'pictures that move' to present importance as one of the leading industries of the nation can be more easily understood if one follows the history of what was once upon a time a comparatively unimportant adjunct of the motion picture and has now developed into the widely used trailer announcement; conceded generally by showmen to be one of the best mediums with which to advertise coming motion picture attractions."

"Early forms of screen announcements made of mica and glass were more or less of a makeshift; dragged in the old-fashioned stereopticon as part of the modern motion picture entertainment—served as an announcement that the show was ended, as they lacked the interest of animation possessed by the cinema and served to break up the smooth movement of the motion picture show.

"Then, as motion picture presentation advanced—as exhibitors and producers cast about for new ideas—someone hit upon the simple expedient of an announcement on film that would combine the scenes from the actual picture to be presented, giving hints of its action and plot without revealing the story, coupled with interesting sales titles. This type is supplied exhibitors today by National Screen Service.

"There was no question that the action scene trailer represented a distinct improvement."

Trailers

ment. In the first place the motion scenes kept the audience in the seats. Secondly, there was no break in the continuity of the presentation and it gave your future programs the benefit of a type of advertising that served to stimulate audience interest to a degree that assured you of many returning to witness the film features in the trailer announcements.

"For a considerable time, suffering from precedent, the trailer received only a slovenly presentation. Even in some theatres today it is customary for the orchestra or organist to sit idly in the pit or at the organ console during the showing of these trailers, a custom which I believe is often the mistake of bad management.

"I have found from actual observation of audience reaction that trailers make very interesting short film features; they contain punchy and effective scenes which, if heightened with music, can easily be developed into an excellent attraction.

"Therefore, in order to get the maximum results from our trailer show, I secure the music cues for each picture about the same time I enter our trailer bookings with National Screen Service. It is then a simple matter for the orchestra leader or organist to select the 'theme,' or an appropriate cue from the thematic musical arrangement and adapt it to the scenes shown in the trailer. In the major number of cases we usually stress the theme or if that is inappropriate some inspiring strain. In some theatres we have a complete orchestral rehearsal of our trailers when we score the feature picture, and in other houses where the rehearsal is impractical, the leader or the organist cues the trailer at the first show. Usually, they have a splendid idea of what is needed musically and it is rarely that a different selection has to be made after the opening performance.

"From the standpoint of practical showmanship I believe that to neglect your trailers is to neglect your box office. Their proper presentation will bring added dollars. There may be marvelous pictures—good pictures—ordinary pictures, but the trailers are always great. Their very brevity and the fact that there are always some unusual and interesting scenes in every picture permits the trailer makers a selection of material that enables them to turn out a trailer with a definite box office for every picture—be it good, bad or indifferent."

New Theatre for Ironwood

This is to advise you, for news in your paper, that the Ironwood Amusement Corporation, A. L. Picker, general manager, is planning a new theatre in Ironwood, Michigan, and will start construction this coming spring. The theatre will seat approximately 1,200 and will be put up at a cost of $150,000. The theatre will be built to accommodate vaudeville, motion pictures and road shows. The Ironwood Amusement Corporation is now operating the Rex Theatre at Ironwood, Michigan, and the Rivoli Theatre at Hurley, Wisconsin. Any further information on this subject you would like I will be very glad to give you.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Rialto Theatre Corporation, 601 Shubert Building, has taken over Alamo Theatre, 34th and Main streets, from E. E. Webber, and Roanoke Theatre, 39th and Summit streets, from L. J. Lenhart. Beside improvements planned for these two theatres, pipe organs will be installed.

PONTIAC, MICH. — Pryale Construction Company, 405 Pontiac Commercial Savings Bank Building, has general contract for one-story theatre to be erected at 35 South Saginaw avenue, for W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., C. L. Kendrick, secretary and treasurer, 505 Insurance Exchange Building. Estimated cost, $50,000.

CHICAGO, ILL. — Commonwealth Theatre Corporation has plans by John Ebersson, 212 East Superior street, for five-story theatre, store and office building at 46th place and South Parkway. Estimated cost, $1,000,000.

Seattle Gets New N. T. S. Co. Building

The National Theatre Supply Company, of which B. F. Shearer is Coast manager, has under construction a splendid new two-story and basement building in the new Film District of Seattle. This will greatly facilitate service, as three local headquarters are now being maintained to house the various branches of the service. Four frames, 80 feet high, projecting 24 feet below ground, will be a part of the new workshop equipment. Workshops, designing rooms and offices will be on the second floor; while all displays, equipment and supplies, library and private offices will be on the first floor, which will be so arranged as to display attractively chairs, objects of art, etc. There will be a conference room on the main floor. Mr. C. Wallace Drew, who obtained his architect's degree at Cornell, and graduated from the School of Fine Arts at Yale, has recently come to Seattle from New York, to assume charge of the departments of architecture and design for the National Theatre Supply Co. Mr. Drew has made a special study of color. He was a captain in the Air Service, serving in the World War for three years.

$35,000 For Attleboro Elm Equipment & Remodeling

The Elm Theatre, of Attleboro, Massachusetts, it is announced by Julius Levenson, of the Elm Amusement Company of Boston, will be remodeled and decorated at a cost of $35,000.

New leather seats and a new heating plant are among the improvements. Stucco outside walls and a completely redecorated interior will increase the cost but will give to the Attleboro patrons a theatre of the latest type and all that can be desired in comfort, courtesy and charming environment for the picture.

Mr. Levenson is very enthusiastic because the citizens of his community have taken a keen interest in his plans.

Baby Theatre Planned To Do Man-Sized Business

The smallest complete moving picture theatre in Omaha is being erected at 5120 Davenport street. It is being constructed in the basement of the home of Sam Dresher of Dresher Bros., big cleaning and dyeing company in Omaha. The movie will be used for the entertainment of Mr. Dresher's friends. The theatre proper will be capable of seating 35 persons, while besides this there will be a rest room for the ladies. At every change of program Mr. Dresher will mail out 35 tickets to his friends. These are to be exchanged at the ticket office at the Dresher home for reserved seats. One of the Dresher children will have charge of the "box office." A little lobby, beautifully decorated leads from the box office entrance to the main entrance of the theatre or to the rest room. There will be three curtains, a velvet drop rising as the overture is played, then a second curtain with a hunting scene, and finally a third curtain with a scene of Farnam street, Omaha. A miniature pipe organ is being installed. This theatre is to open in about two weeks. Mr. Dresher has even complied with the regulations of the state fire warden's office, by providing two exits front and back, in case of emergency.

Bluebook School Answers, Special

HERE is the answer mentioned in next column to No. 559. I am printing it special, though one answer to the question has already been printed, just to show you the calibre of some men now engaged in projection. I'll bet sixty-nine dollars and eighty-seven cents that the men who wrote these answers put a good picture on the screen, and put it there with at least reasonable efficiency, too. The reason for this mad wager is that such men seldom or never do sloppy work. Am I right?

Question 559 was: Draw a diagram of a multiple rheostat connection and tell us the result of such a connection and why that result obtains. Brother George Einzinger, New York City, answers as follows:

In accompanying sketch, E_r = voltage drop in rheostats r_1 and r_2 ; E_a = voltage drop in the arc and E = the total voltage drop in the circuit equal to voltage pressure in the power lines. (By that I think Einzinger really means that E equals the power line voltage, which is presumed to be entirely consumed in the circuit.—Ed.)

The incoming current, I , splits at point A and follows the two paths, i_1 and i_2 . When i_1 has passed through r_1 and i_2 through r_2 , they meet again at point B, where they again form the amperage represented by I , but that amperage is at a lower potential than it was at A. The reduced voltage is diagrammatically represented as E_r , the arc voltage drop being conveniently represented by E_a .

Let us now consider just what resistance the two branches r_1 and i_2 represent or offer to the current.

According to Ohm's law, the current in any part of an electric circuit is equal to the voltage difference between its ends divided by the resistance offered between those ends. So we have, in this case, $i_1 = E_r \div r_1$ and $i_2 = E_r \div r_2$, and $I = e_r \div R$, in which R equals the resistance which could be substituted for the two rheostats without altering the current flow and the voltage for the total circuit, as: $i_1 + i_2 = I$; also $E_r \div r_1 + E_r \div r_2 = E_r \div R$. This equation is available for all possible values of E_r , as well as for the value $E_r = 1$.

We have $\frac{1}{r_1} + \frac{1}{r_2} = \frac{1}{R}$. Put into words instead of symbols, the sum of the reciprocals of the branch resistances is equal to the reciprocal of an equivalent total resistance. By this law we may quickly and accurately calculate the values of all multiple connections. Let us, for example, assume the rheostats in this case to have the values shown in the sketch. $r_1 = 3 \times 2$ ohms, or 6 ohms, and $r_2 = 2$ ohms. We then have $\frac{1}{6} + \frac{1}{2} = \frac{1}{R}$ and $\frac{1}{6} + \frac{3}{6} = \frac{1}{R}$; $R = \frac{6}{4} = 1.5$ ohms.

I well know all this will be over the heads of many of the men, but just remember that the various symbols stand for values shown on the sketch and you should be able to dope it out. In future, however, I wish all of you would take note that such symbols of r , and the like are difficult and costly to put into type; also there are likely to be errors in setting them, hence please stick to the plain numbers or letters for expressing such formulas.

Bluebook School Special

This week there will be no question, and no answers, except that of Brother Einzinger to Question 559. We must do this occasionally anyhow, because the "School," valuable as it is, is crowding out a great mass of other highly valuable matter.

Keuster Lands on Broadway

Some weeks ago in commenting upon the answer Richard Keuster made to one of the Bluebook School questions, I called attention to the fact that such men as he ought to be placed in our best Broadway theatres.

Much to my surprise when Harry Rubin, Supervisor of Projection for the Publix Theatres, having need for more men in the Paramount, one of the two very best motion picture palaces in New York City, went to the union offices to arrange for the men, the union had, among others, summoned Richard Keuster for his consideration, and Keuster was one of those selected by supervisor Rubin.

May I offer my warm congratulations to both Local 306 and Supervisor Rubin. The union can do nothing of greater real advantage to itself than continue a policy thus started. Supervisors of projection should, above all things, bend their energies to building up a thoroughly competent projection force. That is their really BIG job. The best theatres should have the best men, and the competent, energetic men who strive to improve their knowledge and give the best service possible DESERVE the best positions, and it is to the ultimate good OF ALL CONCERNED that they have them.

Radio Tip Comes From John Hertner

Here is another suggestion. It comes from John Hertner, President Hertner Electric Co., who is past master in matters electrical. He first takes me good naturedly to task for the wrong heading on the article referred to. A "Transverter" was given as the seat of trouble, whereas it was really a Wagner Rotary Converter. Apologies. Don't know how the mistake happened. Oertner says: "Magnetic disturbances in a motor generator or in a rotary converter set should be pretty well shielded if the machine be surrounded by a fairly heavy iron mesh screen. However, it is not sure that some of the trouble may not have its seat in the projection arc. We have been told that under some conditions the carbon arc will set up such trouble. However, it would seem the sheet metal of the lamphouse should shield out most of such an effect, and for that reason it is possible a shield around the converter will remedy the trouble."

All of which is also passed along with an editorial disclaimer of any knowledge on the subject. If any one else has suggestions of value to offer let him set them forth.

Lamp Information Available

Hall & Connolly, manufacturers of high grade high intensity lamps have prepared, and now have ready for distribution a twelve page illustrated booklet descriptive of their latest model, called the "Type F. R."

This lamp is built ruggedly and is a very fine equipment. It has been thoroughly tested out in practice. We advise every projectionist to address a post card or letter to Messrs. Hall & Connolly, Inc., 129 Grand St., New York City, asking for a copy of this booklet. It will be sent free of charge and should be in your library. The illustrations show all the details of construction of the lamp. Get one.

Hill Hands Out Real Broil Hot Off'n Grill

HERE'S Roger M. Hill, who for some years has had charge of design, installation, maintenance and operation of all equipment in Army motion picture theatres, and worked so hard on the job that he worked himself right smack into a nice clean hospital cot—which he expects very soon to bid adieu to—has quit the Army theatre service, and already is branching out as a Consulting Engineer.

Hill just wrote me, roasting me to a nice dark brown, because of an answer I made to E. A. Early, Projectionist, Parkersburg, W. Va., which he claims is 'all wet.' Says I ought to make positive statements, and not be so vague. Says I am "optically ignorant." Oh gosh, but he handed me a whole box full of very sour lemons.

But still Hill and I are friends—good ones too, I hope—and I'm going to come back at him and say that my answer to brother Early would be repeated under the same circumstances. I believe no living man could make positive statements concerning such matters. Maybe the day will come when we can, but we can't now, and don't let them tell you different.

And let me say right here that his statement that I am ignorant in the matter of technical optics has much foundation in fact. My knowledge of optics is more of a general nature, but is pretty thorough in what I term projection optics, which does NOT include lens making or designing, although if it comes to that I do know, in a general way, exactly how a lens, to do any certain thing, is designed.

What in the name of Heaven does brother Hill think I am anyhow? A blooming magician? Does he expect me to be an expert in optics, an expert in mechanics, an expert in electrics, an expert in theatre lighting, an expert in screen surfaces, an expert in motion pictures and still projection, and on top of all that be a writer expert enough to take the dry-as-dust mass of material which reaches my desk and make it over into a department which is read by pretty nearly ALL motion picture projectionists and moving picture machine operators, by thousands of theatre managers and exhibitors, and even, intermittently I presume by the producers themselves, or some of them anyhow?

I'll say Hill expects a lot for his money! But anyhow Hill IS an able man and an able engineer. He will be welcomed OUT of the hospital and into the projection engineering field both by this department and by its editor, roast or no roast. I like to be toasted once in a while anyhow. It wakes me up a bit maybe.

Gwynn Brings Up Points On Crossing Light Rays

W. R. GWYNN, Longmont, Colorado, has the following to say concerning where the light rays cross in the projector optical system:

I have just studied Brother John Griffith's very excellent answer to the old enigma "how many times do the light rays cross" and have come to the conclusion that he used more intelligence in answering the question than Mr. Otto Kafka did in stating it, as it could not very well be answered as stated, due to no specific "light rays" were named in the question.

While I have long regarded Mr. Griffith as one of the authorities on this subject and eagerly read anything he has to say on the subject, I wonder if the two drawings he has submitted in answer to Question No. 551 cover the subject completely.

If I understand his explanation correctly, one ray emanating from the top of the crater and another emanating from the bottom of the crater cross twice in reaching the screen, although in Fig. 2 he has shown them crossing a third time between the crater and the condenser lenses.

Might the question be viewed from the following method of reasoning also?—the crater comes to a focus at or near the film and is upside down (cross No. 1); the condenser system comes to a focus a few inches in front of the projection lens and is upside down (cross No. 2); an image of both the top and lower carbons may be found at a point a few inches in front of the projection lens and is upside down (cross No. 3); the film comes to a focus on the screen and is upside down (cross No. 4); Brother Griffiths shows two extreme rays crossing between the crater and the first condenser lens (cross No. 5) and aside from these there several billion other "crosses" not mentioned. I believe that I understand this fairly well myself, but mention the above aspects of the subject to show how confusing the subject may become when not properly stated.

Due to the frequency with which this subject comes up in projection circles and the endless and futile arguments that sometimes result when it does appear, I wonder if Brother Griffiths might not be given another opportunity to present the subject in the department with the question stated more definitely.

"Starting with a ray emanating from the top of the crater and another emanating from the bottom of the crater, how many times are these rays COMPLETELY inverted in reaching the screen and at approximately what points along the principal projection axis is complete inversion accomplished?"

(By "completely inverted" is meant that a ray a portion of which formerly occupied the topmost position in the beam is now bottom-most and conversely, that a ray a portion of which was formerly on the bottom of the beam is now on the top of the beam.)

I have suggested the question as above in an attempt to eliminate what appears to be a confusion resulting from the use of the word "cross" and have substituted "completely inverted" instead, as it will be noted that what Griffiths designates as "supplementary rays" cross the supplementary rays of other "groups" following the point where the secondary axis rays cross. While the secondary axis rays have crossed, the image is not "completely inverted" until the supplementary rays have also crossed.

The question as stated above is not thought to be a "perfect" statement of the problem and you can no doubt improve on it considerably if this subject is again submitted to the readers of the department.

I have not changed a word of brother Gwynn's letter, except to eliminate its personal beginning and ending. I believe there is a possibility that Griffith might make his argument more clear by adopting the advice of Gwynn, but that is, of course, up to his judgment. Griffith always has access to this department up to any reasonable amount of our very limited space.

Really Big Things Are Coming on Projectors

Within a very short while I will be able to give you photographic illustrations and descriptions of some of the best and biggest improvements, from the practical viewpoint of the projectionist, that have been made in motion picture projectors in the last few years.

I have just examined some scientific optical apparatus which the International Projector Corporation has purchased and put into use which will make for heretofore unknown and unheard of accuracy in motion picture projector parts and will enable the International Projector Corporation to analyze certain inherent defects, which defects have passed into the production and worked to the detriment of both accuracy in projection and longevity in the life of films.

The International is not quite ready yet to have these things described in detail but within a few weeks I am going to give you some mighty interesting dope.

Get It and Read It

May I direct your attention to the advertisement of the International Projector Corporation in the Twentieth Anniversary Edition of the Moving Picture World. It is well worth reading. It is not the usual blah blah about "mine is the best upon, over or under the earth." It is a plain, straightforward, and withall modest statement of what the organizations which evolved and improved the Power's and Simplex projectors, which now are combined in the International Projector Corporation, have done for the benefit of the motion picture industry.

Projector manufacturers have labored under the great handicap of a definitely restricted consumption. They have carried on long, complicated and highly expensive experiments in order that the industry might have the best there is in projectors, and I am telling you, without any maybes, what when we consider the number of parts in the modern projector, and the very high degree of accuracy those parts must have, it is little short of a miracle that such equipment CAN be turned out at the price.

The advertisement under discussion says. "Dependability, simplicity of operation and superior projection have won for the Simplex and Power's projectors a reputation as the world's standard." And that statement is evenly and exactly true, too, mark you well.

Letter Proves That Study Beats Whining

FROM a certain city in Ohio, which I had better not name, comes a letter inquiring for the address of the American Projection Society, which the writer desires to join, and that of the S. M. P. E., which he also proposes to join, as an associate member, of course. The addresses have been forwarded.

The writer then remarks: "Some years ago I was on the committee of 'operators' which welcomed you to our city, on what was, I believe, your first lecture tour. Incidentally, I might mention that the man who kicked most about spending good money on 'that Richardson' is now holding down the least desirable job in the city. He knows but little more about the profession than he did on that far distant day.

I then had the poorest job in the city. I have not now, by considerable. I mention this only to cite the fact that if many who today are whining about not getting an even break would have done a bit of real studying, as others did, much to their disgust, they would now have no cause for complaint.

I follow the Bluebook school closely, work out the answers and when the answer appears find that I often have fallen more or less down.

What you have said about those who refuse or fail to study loosing out is exactly what I have warned them of for many years. They will loose more rapidly in the future, because exhibitors are slowly awakening to the fact that a "good picture" may be made much better, and the fact that a good picture is on their screen does not prove that it is not put there wastefully, both in electric current and in equipment. They are coming to a realization of the fact that the paying a certain set sum, and slowly are real projectionist not only gives much better general results, but also gives them at greatly reduced cost.

Preordained

“— the final result of the motion picture on the screen was preordained from the day that Edison got his first sample of Eastman film.”*

That was in 1889. And today the film that made motion pictures practical is the film that makes the most of the cinematographer's art and carries all the quality through to the screen—Eastman Film.

THE MERRIEST BIRTHDAY OF ALL!

—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer celebrates its anniversary with “Rookies”

Karl Dane and George K. Arthur will be your audiences' best friends!

THIS is our Anniversary.
WE celebrate it with “ROOKIES”—the marvel comedy!

BEFORE a single theatre
HAS shown it, “Rookies” is
THE talk of every film row.

FOR INSTANCE, M. B. SHANBERG CIRCUIT OF KANSAS CITY WIRES:

“Screened Rookies tonight. Absolutely greatest comedy ever produced bar none. Unquestionably will prove a natural at box office. I would be ungrateful if I failed to express appreciation for this one.”

THIS is certainly a happy
M-G-M birthday, but remember
WE give the present—“Rookies.”

“MAC” of Daily Review says:

“If the average successful comedy has 300 laughs, you can figure ‘Rookies’ on a basis of a laugh every five feet. It is a surprise picture. It’s got enough entertainment value to pack a big road show production. It will make people talk. It will give them plenty of funny things to tell their friends about later.”

This Spring everybody says “Rookies”

To the Public There's Only One News Reel—Pathe News

An exhibitor friend writes one of our branches as follows:

"I have gladly renewed my contract for the Pathe News. Common sense, plus five years' experience with it, tell me that the rooster will continue to be able to crow over the world's best news reel."

We are glad to promptly and publicly express to our friend our appreciation for his confidence and patronage. We assure him that his confidence is not misplaced. We promise him that the Pathe News will continue to be all that he expects,—and more. For his information, and that of the many other friends of Pathe News, we submit the following:

Cameramen of Pathe News

Today a larger staff than ever. Eighty per cent of the old force, in spite of other offers, remained loyal. The stars, Fasold, Harde, Donohue, Baltzell, Hollahan, Delevan, Flanagan and others remain. To them have been added the best news cameramen anywhere,—Sears, O'Brien, Traynham, Blache, Nichol, Zimmerman, La Voy and many others.

The Pathe News staff today is the finest in its history, hand-picked, experienced, enthusiastic. It would be impossible to assemble another like it.

Editorial Staff of the Pathe News

Seventy per cent of the old force intact, to which have been added new men with ideas, vigor, experience. We are satisfied that the new editor, Ray Hall, and his assistants, de Rochemont and Cour, cannot be equalled anywhere. Their calibre is shown by the News today. You know that it is better than ever.

Competition is nothing new for the Pathe News. It has met it in the past, and still remains the best. It will continue to be best. And to the Public there's only one news reel—the Pathe News.

France Enforces Non-Inflammable Film Next April

London Angry at U. S. Control of "Mons"

(Special cablegram to the Moving Picture World)

London, April 20.—Non-inflammable film enforcement in France commences in April, 1928, and will be effective throughout all France by December.

The Australian Parliament has appointed a select committee to study films.

The London film trade expresses displeasure over American control of "Mons." It is supposed that the American plan is simply to push "The Big Parade."

De Mille Rules Production, Pearson Exchanges and Acquisition of New Independent Product

By Sumner Smith

THE merging of Pathe, P. D. C., Keith-Albee and Orpheum moves on apace with the announcement this week of a complete readjustment of the capital structure of Pathe Exchange, Inc., to be proposed to stockholders at a special meeting called for May 12 to ratify the plan.

The recapitalization plan provides for the authorization of $10,000,000 of ten-year 7 per cent. Pathe debentures, of which $6,000,000 will be presently outstanding; $3,000,000 of 8 per cent. preferred stock, of which $814,300 will be presently outstanding; 500,000 shares of Class A preference stock of no par value, of which 259,739 shares will be presently outstanding, and 1,500,000 shares of no par common stock, of which 704,870 shares will be presently outstanding.

J. J. Murdock, Keith general manager, will become president of Pathe, as exclusively predicted in MOVING PICTURE WORLD two weeks ago, and, though it is not yet announced, Elmer Pearson will have the highly responsible job of handling many independent films to be acquired, both shorts, serials and features, and of managing the exchange system, recognized as one of the finest in the business.

The Board of Directors will include Mark E. Heiman, president of the Orpheum Circuit, Inc., and representatives of the bankers. No mention is made of provision for Frank Munroe, president, John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager of P. D. C. That may come later.

Cecil B. DeMille will be responsible for the production of from thirty-five to forty pictures, as he now is with Metropolitan.

Opinions seems to differ along the Rialto on a merger with First National, but the "ayes" have it. This would be a merger on production alone, with working agreements governing the distribution of product to different theatre chains.

The Pathe announcement of its proposed expansion says it includes the acquisition of:

THE election of John J. McGuirk as president and the presence on the board of seven directors interested in the Stanley Company of America at the annual First National meeting this week at Atlantic City assured Stanley control of that company. Now, it is felt, McGuirk will go ahead with plans for a merger with Pathe-P. D. C.-Keith which he is said to have.

Ex-President Robert Lieber, "happy" at the chance to devote more time to his own interests, welcomes his new position of chairman of the board. Richard

A. Rowland remains first vice-president and general manager, Abe Sablosky is second vice-president, John H. Kunsy third vice-president, Samuel Spring secretary and treasurer, and Robert W. Perkins assistant secretary.

The Board of Directors now consist of Barney Balaban, Harry M. Crandall, Jacob Fabian, M. L. Finkelstein, Clifford B. Hawley, Richard F. Hoyt, Robert Lieber, John J. McGuirk, E. V. Richards, Jr., Irving Rossheim, Abe Sablosky, Spyros Skouras and Morris Wolf.

F. N. Elects McGuirk

The Board of Voting Trustees, which replaces the Executive Committee, consists of James B. Clark, Harold S. Franklin, Richard F. Hoyt, Robert Lieber and Moe Mark.

An Advisory Board which will meet with the Board of Directors at the call of the president, taking the place of the present franchise holders' committee, follows: A. H. Blank, chairman; George Trendle, Tom Saxe, Tom Boland, Harry Nolan, Abe Gore, John H. Kunsky, I. H. Ruben and the above directors and officers of the company.

Before the convention convened a ripple of excitement was caused by the consolidated financial statement of First National and its subsidiaries, dated January 1, 1927, which showed a net income of $1,032,655.67 for the previous year as compared with $1,951,485.12 for 1925. It is largely attributed to higher production costs. The new Burbank studio is expected to effect radical economies.

It is possible that First National officials in New York will themselves conduct a check-up on past production expenses and may even impose certain not-to-be exceeded limits on future production.

Dario L. Faralla, assistant comptroller and one of the best auditors in the country, left for the West early this week on the ostensible mission of routine work. Some believe, however, that he has been deputized to watch expenditures in studio land.

Kolima to England

William Kolima, British director, who has been acting as gag man for Lupino Lane, has returned to England, where he will accept an offer to direct a series of British-made comedies.

Big Broadway Splurge For "King of Kings"

What may be a record advertising representation on Broadway is being put over by P. D. C. for Cecil DeMille's "King of Kings." A 150-foot sign the full length of the Gaity Theatre building at 46th street and atop it has been erected; beside it, on the corner is another big "King of Kings" sign and next to that, in about the middle of the building, a third is being erected this week that, P. D. C. says, will be the biggest theatrical sign in New York City. It runs four stories high.

"Joe" Shea reports that tenants on three of the floors are moving out because the huge sign shuts off all sunshine. It is supposed that P. D. C. is adjusting the matter of leases in order to put over this tremendous triple advertising splurge on Broadway. "The Big Parade" hitherto has held the reputation of being the largest sign along the Rialto.

Paramount Convenes

Four Paramount foreign representatives have arrived for the annual spring sales convention, May 2-5. They are John W. Hicks, Jr., of Sydney, Australia, managing director of the Australasian organization, accompanied by Mrs. Hicks and their young son; John L. Day, Jr., of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, general manager of the Paramount South American organizations; R. A. Loomis, of Guatemala City, branch manager for Guatemala, and Harry Novak, of Cristobal, Canal Zone, branch manager for Panama.

To Address Convention

S. L. Rothafel will be the guest of the Motion Picture Owners of America at the eighth annual convention in Columbus, Ohio, on June 7, 8 and 9. He will bring a message to theatre owners on efficiency in management.

Carl Laemmle, who takes over the Colony Theatre on September 1 for Universal, has engaged Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld as managing director.

Pathe Recapitalizes for Merger companies with which he is at present associated.

"A favorable contract, which does not call for the usual advances of negative cost, for the distribution by Pathe of the pictures previously directed and supervised by DeMille, including 'The King of Kings' and other pictures previously distributed by P. D. C. This contract beside the highly advantageous elimination of the usual advances grant to Pathe an option to purchase under certain circumstances the pictures in question for $1.

"A contract with the well known Keith-Albee and Orpheum interests for the exhibition of pictures distributed by Pathe, in theatres owned by or associated with them, covering the principal cities and key centers in both the United States and Canada."

One of the economies expected is the closing of about thirty-two exchanges where there would be a duplication of service.

This alignment has been forced upon Pathe, a formal announcement said yesterday, by competitive conditions in the industry. "Until this year," Vice-President Elmer Pearson of Pathe said, "several of the largest producer-distributors have confined themselves to feature length pictures, leaving the short subject field largely to the recognized specialists in this line, of which Pathe Exchange, Inc., was the leader. Recently, however, two of the largest of such producer-distributors have declared their intention also of producing and distributing short subjects."

Pathe Exchange, Inc., is controlled by the banking house of Blair & Co., Inc., through which the negotiations have been conducted very largely. This house recently acquired the Class B stock holding of Merrill, Lynch & Co. in the Pathe company. The Class B stock elects six of the nine directors. Before the Keith-Albee-Orpheum group purchased a half interest in Producers' Distributing the principal stockholders had been Mr. De Mille and Jeremiah Milbank. They still have a large stock interest in the company.

Non-Flam in France

the Ministerial decree that on and after January 1, 1928, exhibitions of all motion pictures shall include non-flam film only, the 'Syndicat Francais des Directeurs de Cinematographes' appealed under date of February 19, 1927, to the Prefect de Police, asking that the following dates be fixed for the compulsory use of non-flam films:

In cities of 100,000 inhabitants, April 1, 1928.

In cities of from 5,000 to 100,000 inhabitants, July 1, 1928.

In cities of from 8,000 to 25,000 inhabitants, October 1, 1928.

In cities of from 1,000 to 8,000 inhabitants, December 31, 1928.

"The prefect has promised this association that he will make this appeal the order of the day of the next meeting of the Commission Superieure des Theatres for consideration for proper recommendation to the Minister of the Interior."

Actor's Death Sends Kelly to Hollywood Jail

Clever Juvenile Waits Grand Jury Finding

Hollywood, April 20.—Working himself up to one of the film capital's most sought after juveniles in the eleven months that he has been out here, Paul Kelly is in the Hollywood jail tonight awaiting the findings of a Grand Jury's investigation into the death of Ray Raymond, local musical comedy star.

Kelly's arrest took place last night and, according to the police blotter, a few hours after a fist fight between the two in Raymond's home.

An autopsy has since indicated that Raymond succumbed to a hemorrhage of the brain. In a statement which the police say they obtained from him, Kelly is alleged to have admitted engaging in the fight and to have left Raymond in a conscious condition in his home.

Kelly had reached that point in his screen career where his eligibility for stardom was obvious to Hollywood. It was recently reported that Warners had signed him to co-star with May McAvoy in "Irish Hearts." At that studio today it was admitted that such negotiations had been started but had terminated with Jason Robards getting the role.

It also was said that Kelly was to have one of the leads in F. B. O.'s "Hook and Ladder," which goes into production next Monday. F. B. O. officials admitted that Kelly has been considered but that Warner Richmond has the part.

Kelly first gained prominence in Thomas Meighan's "The New Klondike." Recent pictures in which he appears include "Slide Kelly, Slide," "Special Delivery," and "The Poor Nut."

New F. B. O. Chief

Wm. Le Baron, F. B. O. vice-president in charge of production, who entrains for the studios this week. He is expected to make some changes in personnel.

Open Atlanta Exchange

General Sales Manager Ed J. Smith of Tiffany Productions, Inc., is in Atlanta, Georgia, where he has established another link in the world-wide Tiffany producing and distributing organization. He has appointed W. G. Minder as manager of the Southeastern territory, with exchange offices at 106 Walton street.

New Work for Jack

Fred M. Jack, formerly special southern representative of First National Pictures, has been appointed assistant manager of the company's Atlanta branch, of which C. R. Beacham is in charge.

D. W. Griffith Returns to U. A.; No M-G-M Merger, Says Schenck

D. W. Griffith returns to United Artists. He will form no other affiliations and will be with this company from now on. The announcement was made Thursday morning by Joseph M. Schenck, president.

Mr. Griffith's title will be Director-General of the Art Cinema Corp., Schenck's producing company, releasing through U. A. and in which Griffith will be an equal partner with Schenck. Mary, Doug and Charlie also are financially interested in it. Griffith will produce and direct one picture a year and will supervise all others made for Art Cinema Corp.

Warners Own Vitaphone; Price Reductions Rumored

Early Announcement of Signing of Big Circuit Is Expected—Others to Follow Soon

By Merritt Crawford

EARLY announcement that one of the big circuits, which had previously held aloof from Vitaphone in the hope of developing some other system of sound pictures for competitive purposes, had signed contracts with Western Electric to install Vitaphone equipment in all its key theatres, may be expected, it is learned by MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

This information followed close on the official announcement this week that Warner Brothers had acquired 100 per cent ownership of the Vitaphone Corporation, through the purchase of the stock holdings of Walter J. Rich.

It was learned further, that under the new arrangement by which Western Electric takes over all the financing and carrying charges of theatre installation costs of Vitaphone equipment, leaving to the Vitaphone Corporation the exclusive function of issuing franchises for same and collecting its royalties, that tentative agreements have been reached with several of the larger theatre holding companies looking toward the adoption of the Vitaphone sound recording and reproducing system on a big scale.

It is understood that a considerable reduction will be made at once in both the installation costs, which have to date ranged from $15,000 to $25,000 according to the size of the theatre, and in the weekly charge of 10 cents per seat which had been the Vitaphone Corporation's royalty from its franchise-holders in view of the greater volume of business anticipated.

"Don Juan" Gross for N. Y. Run Is $789,963

"Don Juan," starring John Barrymore, at the Warner Theatre during its thirty-six-week run took in $789,963.55 from a total patronage of 511,754 persons, Warner Bros. announced.

For the nine months it played at advanced prices, "Don Juan" maintained a capacity sale of 85 per cent., with the average admission paid figured at $1.55. Close to 15,000 people viewed it each week.

Wingart Publicity Director

Earl W. Wingart, for seven years with Paramount as director of the studio publicity department in the East and later assistant to Edward King and unit production manager, has been appointed director of publicity of the Hollywood studios of F. B. O.

Gain General Manager

B. P. Schulberg, Paramount associate producer, has named John J. Gain as his general manager. Gain recently arrived on the West Coast from the Long Island studio, where he held the position of studio manager.

Ono Joins P. I. C.

U. Ono, exporter, has sailed for Japan to represent Producers International Corp. in that territory. It is reported that he may acquire some theatres on his own behalf. While not pessimistic, Edmund H. Howells, Producers' representative for the Far East, sees a prospect of hard work to popularize American films in Japan. The company is exercising extreme care in selecting films for Japan. Shanghai, Mr. Howells said, is having a theatre boom due to increased foreign population, largely military in character.

Men for News Reel

It is reported that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is on a still hunt for news reel talent. One of the editors of the New York World last week was approached with a proposition to occupy an executive chair. Whether he was to direct the operation and policies of the news reel or simply to handle the assignment desk—a responsible job in itself—was not divulged, because the World man would not consider the offer. It is said that there are several jobs open. M.-G.-M. has not yet announced that it is seeking men.

Gilbert's Arrest Publicity Stunt? No! No! They Say

Now He's Working in
"Twelve Miles Out"

Hollywood, April 20.—Right in that "Nize" Beverly Hills where Doug Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and all of them commune, John Gilbert went and got himself arrested the other night. The next day the local judge gave him ten more days to meditate in the town jug and decide what it was all about.

But the Beverly Hills assistant to Mayor Rogers and Fairbanks were early morning callers. Now Gilbert is working on the M. G. M. lot in his first day in "Twelve Miles Out."

Gilbert, they say, wanted the police to arrest some one whose name he could not recall. The next day he said something about an "hallucination." The "thing" smacked so horribly of publicity that the World broached that subject to the M. G. M. department.

"Publicity?" they snorted, "not unless the Judge was trying to pull one for himself."

Barsky Leaves M-G-M For Krellberg Corp.

Bud Barsky, supervising producer at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios and well known independent producer, will become vice-president of the new Krellberg Pictures Corp. Sherman S. Krellberg, president, now in California, announced this week that Mr. Barsky would assume his duties as general production manager within the next few weeks.

Two productions, "The Little Girl God Forgot," Edward E. Rose's stage play, starring Dorothy Devore, and Charles DeVry's "The King of Clowns," starring James Kirkwood, will be started shortly under the personal supervision of Mr. Barsky. Six other productions will be made for the 1927-28 season.

Rookies Due at Capitol

"Rookies," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's farce comedy dealing with training camp life and starring Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, has been tentatively booked to open at the Capitol Theatre, New York, April 23.

Arrange Texas Premiere

The world premiere of "Wings," Paramount's epic of the air, has been definitely set for May 17, at San Antonio, Tex. Only one performance will be given at San Antonio.

Educational Announces Convention Travelers

The annual convention of branch managers and heads of departments of the home office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., will be held in Los Angeles on May 2 to 6. Home office executives and branch managers of the eastern seaboard states will leave New York City the afternoon of April 28. Western managers will join them in Chicago.

Earle W. Hammons will head the party, which will include A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager; J. R. Wilson, sales manager; Gordon S. White, director of advertising and publicity; Harvey Day, sales manager of Kinograms, and Captain G. McL. Baynes, president of the Kinograms Publishing Corporation.

Other eastern officials will include J. F. Burke, Max Stahl, Arthur Lucas, Jack Skirball, Oscar Hanson and Lawrence Wooldridge.

Belgian Tax Revision Marked for Approval

The Belgian Cabinet is about to submit for Parliament revision the Cinema Tax Law, F. L. Herron of the Hays office reports. Reductions are from 3 francs, 12 per cent.; up to 5 francs, 16 per cent.; to 7 francs, 20 per cent.; to 9 francs, 24 per cent.; above 9 francs, 28 per cent., plus a straight tax per cent. on gross takings and 5 centimes in a franc on gross takings to cover censorship cost.

The trade approves this revision. The abrogation of the 10 per cent. tax on the gross is the most beneficial item, and dropping the tax of 5 centimes in a franc for censorship also helps.

Joseph M. Schenck will leave New York City for Los Angeles on Friday. He will be accompanied by Victor M. Shapiro, advertising and publicity director of United Artists, and J. H. Moscovitz of the Joseph M. Schenck Enterprises. I. C. Freud, builder of the Los Angeles United Artists' Theatre, will join the party in Chicago.

W. E. Callaway, southern sales manager for First National Pictures, is back in the home office following a trip to New Orleans.

Walter A. Futter, president of Wafilms, Inc., is leaving the last of this week on an extended visit to Hollywood, to investigate the stock library situation and possibly establish a branch of his organization there.

Paul N. Lazarus, United Artists' general sales manager for the South and Far West, returned to the home office last Monday from a sales trip through the South. On Friday he leaves for a two months' tour of the Southern and Far Western exchanges.

R. C. Seery, manager of First National's Chicago branch, was in New York for two or three days last week conferring with Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager of the distributing corporation, on next season's product and on affairs of the Chicago office.

George Allison, manager of Fox Films' Atlanta, Ga., exchange, is a visitor in New York. He arrived at the Fox Home Office last week to go over a number of important deals with James R. Grainger, general sales manager.

Clarence A. Hill, of General Sales Manager James R. Grainger's home office staff, is on the road on a special mission for Fox Films. After visits in Ohio, Mr. Hill will take in St. Louis, Kansas City, Mo., Omaha and Des Moines.

Cresson E. Smith, United Artists' general sales manager for the Middle West, returned from a two weeks' trip to the middle western centres on Monday and left on Wednesday for an extended tour.

Herman Starr, chief office executive of Warner Bros., sailed on the Majestic April 22 for an eight weeks' trip during which he will visit London, Paris and Berlin.

Moxley Hill, United Artists' general sales manager for the Eastern division, left on Wednesday for a ten days' trip to Philadelphia, Buffalo and Toronto exchanges.

Lou Remy, Southwestern district manager for Fox Films, is in town for a few days. Most of his time here will be spent in conference with James R. Grainger, Fox general sales manager.

J. R. Bray, president of Bray Productions, Inc., has left for the Coast on his regular yearly trip. While there he expects to see the first of his new comedies for the season 1927-28. He will also complete his line-up of product.

W. J. Heenan, manager of First National Pictures' Philadelphia branch; Robert Smeltzer, manager of the Washington office; and A. W. Smith, Jr., eastern sales manager for First National, attended last week a New York conference of the managers of theatres in the Wilbur and Vincent Circuit to discuss several matters of mutual interest.

Irving Briskin, of Sterling Pictures Distributing Corporation, has returned to the home office in New York after a three-week tour of exchanges in seven key-cities.

A. W. Smith, Jr., eastern and Canadian sales manager for First National Pictures, has returned from a flying trip to Canada. In Toronto he conferred with R. S. Bell, general manager of the Canadian office, and with N. L. Nathanson. In Montreal he saw a number of prominent exhibitors as well as First National's branch manager, A. Gorman.

Policy Change in Publicity Is Made By United Artists

Even Specifies Previews Must Have Music

Victor M. Shapiro, director of advertising and publicity of United Artists, reports the conclusion of a year's investigation among newspaper and magazine editors and a crystallization of policy. Twelve rules, inspired by answers to inquiries and by a recent editorial in the Editor and Publisher, center on the basic thought that the story stands on its own feet as a piece of news.

United Artists' news stories, then, will be characterized by the following innovations:

No superlative adjectives.
No editorializing in news stories.
No news occurring, no stories will be issued.

No exclusives. Only Sunday feature stories will be exclusive. If an editor gets a story and telephones for verification, his confidence will not be violated.

No personal publicity. Each star has a representative.

No statement made without authority cited.

No story released until official, with contracts actually signed.

No editor is asked to run any story as a personal favor.

No advertising will be withdrawn because of sincere viewpoints in criticisms.

No expense account for entertainment.

No editor who violates a release date will receive any news thereafter.

No previews in projection rooms, without music, will be given any reviewers on United Artists Pictures.

Beating the Law

J. P. and R. E. Whitney, operators of the Mayflower, Florence, Kas., were found not guilty of violating the Sunday law the other day. The law holds that a person should not do unnecessary labor on Sunday, but it gives persons who hold any other day as their Sabbath the privilege of working on Sunday. Therefore the Whitney brothers employed Seventh Day Adventists to operate the theatre on Sundays, Seventh Day Adventists holding Saturday as their Sabbath. Thus far business has been good.

Faked Heart Attack Saves Ruben Jewels

Jewelry and silverware valued at from $8,000 to $10,000 were stolen by burglars who entered the Minneapolis apartment of J. H. Ruben, member of the firm of Finkelstein & Ruben, last week. Mr. and Mrs. Ruben had just returned from the theatre when they were confronted by the prowlers in their apartment. They were quickly covered by guns, and the burglars proceeded to ransack the place in leisurely fashion, holding Mr. and Mrs. Ruben prisoners for fully 15 minutes. Mrs. Ruben, by feigning a heart attack, was able to prevent the burglars from seizing her rings and a diamond pendant.

Glynn's Theatre Opens

Glynn's Floral Park Theatre at Floral Park, L. I., opened on Monday. The theatre seats 2200. Mike Glynn plans a further extension of his interests in the fall. Now he operates at Patchogue, Bay Shore, Babylon and East Hampton.

Jacobo and Max Glucksmann have again secured the Columbia franchise for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Ecuador and Brazil. They will introduce several new innovations in this territory.

"U" Plans to Buy Out Schine; Seeks Full Control of Circuit

Now Owns About 25 Per Cent. of Rich Northern New York Property—Details Kept Secret

DOMINATION of the rich Northern New York theatre field by Universal through a 100 per cent ownership of the Schine circuit is forecast for the future, probably after Carl Laemmle returns from Europe early in the autumn.

Negotiations are quietly under way for the taking over of the Schine interests in toto. Universal now owns about 25 per cent. of the company, which boasts about fifty theatres, making it one of the largest chains in the country. It is probably that the present active management will be retained to work under Universal supervision, since it is exceptionally capable.

Few of the Schine theatres figure in the red ink column. Some of them, despite their small seating capacity, show astonishing net profits at the end of each week. One Schine theatre of 1,300 seats, charging a top of 40 cents, is known to show a average weekly net profit of $500. And it is located in a comparatively small community.

What inducements Universal will offer Schine to part with the entire control of the valuable circuit are a matter of conjecture. In fact, that angle of the deal now is being thrashed out, it is said.

Full ownership of the Schine circuit would give Universal absolute control of two of the largest circuits in the country, the other being the Hostettler chain of thirty-five to forty houses, which was purchased entire just before Universal Chain Theatres was organized. It would strengthen Universal's position as to trading propositions.

As stated previously in Moving Picture World, Carl Laemmle at one time leaned toward Saturday Evening Post advertising rather than the expensive building of a theatre on a Broadway site on which he held an option, feeling that the "sticks" were little influenced by press-agented Broadway runs. Later Mr. Laemmle decided to feature Broadway runs, and he got them in the theatres of his competitors by effecting trading agreements. For instance, a Paramount picture would get booking over the Hostettler circuit in exchange for the week's showing of a Universal picture at the Rialto.

Now Mr. Laemmle has gained the Colony Theatre on Broadway, a comparatively small house, but a first-class one, and with Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld managing, it provides a most attractive New York home for Universal pictures. Therefore, by owning the Hostettler and Schine circuits entire, he will be in a position to ignore trading propositions, except in the event of the simultaneous release of a couple of big specials.

Canadian Co. to Make Bairnsfather Picture

"Carry On, Sergeant," a story recently published by Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather, author of "The Better 'Ole," has been selected as the first feature to be produced by the British Empire Films of Canada, Ltd., which is affiliated with the British Incorporated Pictures, Ltd., organized by Col. W. F. Clarke and R. T. Cranfield.

The production of short subjects has already been started at the studio of the Ontario Government at Trenton, Ontario.

Weeks Joins Columbia

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, has named Carl Weeks for the newly created office of personal contact man. Mr. Weeks will be entrusted with the establishing of a personal touch between the home office of the company and theatre owners all over the United States. His headquarters will be New York.

No Adverse Laws

Pennsylvania, the first state to impose censorship on motion pictures, has passed through the throes of a hectic legislative session without adding anything to the discomfiture of exhibitors.

A Big Bronx One

A new picture and vaudeville theatre seating 5,000, will be built by Marcus Loew in the Fordham section of the Bronx, New York City. Definite information as to the site is withheld. The theatre will be patterned after the Capitol on Broadway. Construction begins almost immediately.

Oil Marred Film

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld wishes to call the attention of the reviewers of "The King of Kings" at the Gaiety Theatre Monday night to the fact that by an accident which occurred in the film booth, the beautiful Technicolor sequence that opens the picture was marred in presentation. A tiny drop of oil had seeped from one part of the machinery to the lens and caused the heavy mist that obscured the coloration on the screen.

United Artists to Offer 17 During '27, Says Schenck

Furnishes a Description of New Product

United Artists will release seventeen pictures in 1927, more than in any year in its history. Joseph N. Schenck, who leaves for California tomorrow (Friday) said that a new policy applies in 1927 of "one picture a year," to be made by each independent producer.

D. W. Griffith, one of the four founders, returns to the organization founded by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Mr. Griffith in 1919. All four founders will make pictures for 1927 release, Mr. Schenck said.

Six new independent film-makers are included in the United Artists announcement: Norma Talmadge, Corrine Griffith, Fred Niblo, Herbert Brenon, the Duncan Sisters and Edwin Carewe.

The list follows:

Mary Pickford in an untitled five-and-ten-cent-store-girl production. Director: Sam Taylor.

Norma Talmadge in "The Dove." Director: Roland West. Leading man: Gilbert Roland.

Gloria Swanson in "The Battalion of Death." Director: Albert Parker. Leading man: John Boles.

Corrine Griffith in "The Garden of Eden." Director: Sidney Franklin.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus." Director: Mr. Chaplin. Leading Lady: Merna Kennedy.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Gaucho." Director: F. Richard Jones.

D. W. Griffith's will be the first production of a group which he calls "Romantic Studies of Humanity."

John Barrymore in "Cellini." Director: Frank Lloyd.

Duncan Sisters in "Topsy and Eva." Director: Del Lord.

Buster Keaton in "College." Director: James W. Horne.

Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky in "The Magic Flame," Samuel Goldwyn's presentation of the Henry King Production.

Gilda Gray in "Passionate Island."

Morris Gest's first film production, "The Darling of the Gods."

Fred Niblo's "Laugh, Clown, Laugh."

Herbert Brenon's "Sorrell and Son."

Edwin Carewe's Production, "Ramona," with Dolores del Rio starred for the first time.

"Two Arabian Knights," a Cadco Production with William Boyd, Mary Astor and Louis Wolheim, directed by Lewis Milestone.

OUR STOCK MARKET

Conducted by Ervin L. Hall

Since last week, moving picture stocks have shown favorable market action, especially Warner Brothers A. Reports from companies reflect competent management and a favorable outlook for 1927. Many of the moving picture corporations have been putting their houses in order preparatory to the more economical and efficient prosecution of their business. At the same time it must be admitted that competition is growing more keen in the industry, so that many of the new and smaller companies will find difficulty competing with the powerful units. An outstanding feature in the business and one causing much discussion is the future of the "sound picture." Informed opinion is divergent on this point, some holding that it will never be practical and others maintaining that it will be developed to the highest state of perfection so that practically all of the companies will be forced ultimately to do business with those who have and enjoy the patent monopoly.

The Pathe Statement

The statement of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the year ended December 25, 1926, has just been released. Gross sales and rentals for the year amounted to $16,828,590 and income from other sources amounted to $310,735. Net income applicable to dividends was $899,676. The issued stock of the company at the end of the period consisted of 189,660 shares of Class "A" common and 10,000 shares of Class "B" common, on both of which quarterly dividends of 75 cents a share were paid during last year. The cumulative preferred stock outstanding amounted to $1,748,300, on which dividends of 8 per cent. per annum were paid.

This week a proposal for a change in the above capitalization was announced, which is to be submitted to stockholders at a meeting on May 12. The stockholders will be asked also to approve the acquisition of contracts with Cecil B. de Mille for the production under his direction of feature length pictures and with the Keith-Albee and Orpheum interests for the exhibition of Pathe products in theatres controlled by them.

The recapitalization involves the authorization of $10,000,000 ten year 7% debentures, of which

$6,000,000 will be presently issued. The stock will consist of $3,000,000 in 8% preferred, of which $814,300 will be issued, which is the present preferred issue, and 500,000 no par value shares of Class "A" preference stock with 259,739 shares outstanding. The common stock will consist of 1,500,000 no par value shares of which 704,870 will be issued.

To take care of the present stockholders it is proposed to exchange for the present Class "A" and Class "B" common shares for the new Class "A" preference shares in the ratio of one share of new Class "A" preference share, which is to pay $4.00 plus one-half share of new common for each share of the present outstanding stocks. The plan is intended to facilitate the expansion of Pathe.

The Class "A" preference stock is to be entitled, subject to the rights of the preferred, to cumulative preferential dividends of $4.00 per share per annum, and after the common stock has received dividends at the rate of $2.00 per share per annum (subject to certain limitations), to participate, share for share, with the common in any further dividends paid, up to an additional $3.00 per share on the Class "A" stock in any one year.

The Class "A" preference stock, also, is to have preference as to assets in the event of involuntary liquidation, to the extent of $50.00 per share, and in the event of voluntary liquidation $75.00 per share, and is to be redeemable as a whole or in part at any time, at $75.00 per share. It is anticipated that the debentures which will carry non-detachable option warrants, will be purchased by a syndicate headed by Blair & Co., Inc., and associates.

The present Class "A" common is selling around 48 and paying $3.00 which net about a six and a quarter per cent. return. It is rather early to comment as to whether the exchange will benefit the stockholders, but on the face of things it appears that the company should be able to earn the dividends anticipated and in that case the new Class "A" preference stock will allow a larger return on the investment and also give a speculative opportunity with the new common.

Stanley Co. of America. The stock list committee of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange ruled that the capital stock of the above company shall not sell without the 20% stock dividend on April 8th, and not until further notice. Box office receipts of the theatres operated by the company for the 12 weeks ended March 19, 1927, totalled $8,642,878, compared with $3,566,186 for the corresponding period of 1926. John J. McGuirk, president of this company, notified stockholders of this $5,000,000 increase in revenue by sending out quarterly dividend checks. This would seem to indicate that the stock could be profitably purchased.

Loew's, Inc., advanced in response to the latest release of the company in which an increase of earnings was reported and still better business for the year forecasted. Loew's is one of the entrenched moving picture corporations and its stock could hardly be called speculative in the sense of meaning risk as an investment.

N. Y. Corporations

Three companies incorporated in the motion picture business in New York State during the past week. The companies included First Division Pictures, Inc., $75,000, with Lillian Cunningham, New York City; Florence Abramson, Middle Village; Henry Danziger, Brooklyn; American Sport Series, Inc., $20,000, Hyman B. Jackson, Mabel Danziger, Gertrude M. Weinberg, Brooklyn, and a company manufacturing motion picture machines under the name of Visual Demonstration System, Inc., $25,000, Howard H. Starrett, Edmund S. Brown, Percy R. Smith, Buffalo.

Lasky to Select Four Junior Stars Yearly

If the new plan inaugurated by Jesse L. Lasky, Paramount executive, of selecting four Junior Stars each year is carried out according to program, it should re-ignite the ambitions of "extra" players that find it so difficult to get a break on the screen.

The plan was devised by Lasky for the development of new talent. Names of the fortunate selections for the first batch are being keenly awaited along the boulevard. They will be made known within a few days.

In future these choices will be made annually and all directors in the Paramount organization will be urged to watch these junior stars at work and advise them in the perfection of their work.

Nancy Pulls Through

Nancy Lee, pretty motion picture actress, can walk again after a four month siege in the hospital. She was run down by an automobile when she stepped from the curbing in front of the Lasky studio four months ago.

For a time it was feared that the girl would be crippled.

The Lamonts Off On a Vacation

Charles Lamont, director of Lupino Lane and "Big Boy" for Educational, with his wife, Estelle Bradley, who in pictures is Lloyd Hamilton's leading lady, are enjoying a delayed honeymoon some fifteen months after their marriage. The couple sailed for Hawaii a short time ago where they will rest until the Educational Studios open early in May.

Lamont is taking his first vacation since he became a director, four and a half years ago.

Educational Pictures Are on Eve of Their Strongest Year

Convention Will Mark Production Increase As Well As Addition of Two New Stars—May Add Director

JUST before its convention out here we learn officially that Educational Pictures Corporation is making a star out of Big Boy, the industry's most successful infant actor; that it has signed Dorothy Devore to a long-term contract during which she will be starred as a comedienne; that Lupino Lane will enter his third year with a production schedule of eight instead of six, two-reelers, and that Lloyd Hamilton, for whom 1927-28 means six years with Educational, will turn out his regular eight short subjects.

There is a possibility that before the convention comes to an end at the close of the week commencing May 2, there may be one or more additions to this galaxy of short subject stars. As the list now stands, however, Educational has four stars, unsurpassed in their respective spheres. Collectively, they offer types and material for the best in Hollywood's contributions to the short subject market for 1927-28, from the standpoint of variety and proven quality.

The three-year contract to which Miss Devore has just affixed her signature makes Educational among the first producers of short subjects to star a comedienne. This new departure in the two-reel field will be ushered in during the next year by Educational bannering the six productions which she will make for 1927-28, "Dorothy Devore Comedies."

Early in June, Miss Devore will commence work on the Educational lot as a short subject star. This field is one in which she is especially well at home, having made about seventy-five short comedies during her five-year association with Christie. "Hold Your Breath," a Christie feature, was one of her first experiences in lengthy productions. Later, however, she had important parts in thirty features of all categories. These she made during contractual relations of nearly two years with Warner Brothers. In considerable of her work for that organization she was co-starred.

Miss Devore's work for Educational will probably be confined to the character type of comedy. In all of her 1927-28 short subjects the role of the naughty little girl who gets into a lot of mischief but does not get hurt or injure anyone, will probably predominate, she told us. Her rise to the unique position of being the only comedienne to be actually starred in two-reel comedies is marked after a successful career before the camera of exactly seven years. Prior to that time she was engaged in musical comedy and vaudeville.

As for Big Boy—he was born three years ago last November and it has taken him just that time to become an actor, featured player and now star. So 1927-28 finds him Hollywood's youngest star and a bigger wage earner than most of Hollywood's grandpas. What he gets each week is too fat for the pay en-

Will be First Vita Film Made on Coast

May McAvoy will appear opposite George Jessel in "The Jazz Singer," according to an announcement at Warner Brothers. Production is scheduled to get underway about the first of May.

It will be the first Vitaphone picture made in Hollywood. Alan Crosland, who directed the last three John Barrymore pictures will direct "The Jazz Singer."

Menjou is Made Honorary Hasher

Because of his dexterity in the role of a waiter in "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," Adolphe Menjou, so the tale goes, has just been notified to the effect that he has been made an honorary member of the Geneva Association. This outfit is made up of the last word in culinary experts and platter wielders.

Changes Made By Hal Roach

Henry Lehrman now heads the story department at the Hal Roach studio in Culver City and will have the handling of all story material.

The Roach staff of directors has also been increased with the signing of Louis Gasnier.

At the same studio Leo McCarey has finished casting for his next production and will start work immediately. Max Davidson, David Butler, Lillian Elliot, George B. Williams and "Spec" O'Donnell are in the cast.

LLOYD HAMILTON

DOROTHY DEVORE is looking forward to the commencement of her contract with Educational Pictures Corporation which starts her off in June as the starring comedienne in Dorothy Devore Two-Reel Comedies. It isn't because Miss Devore hasn't been in two reelers. Her five years with Christie well initiated her in that respect. Neither is it due to a change, because Miss Devore has also been co-starred in many feature length pictures. What gives her the great kick is that this June she will practically be her own boss.

"No pie throwing for me," she told us in her first visit to the West Coast headquarters of Moving Picture World. "A" starring comedienne cannot afford to be anything but a perfect lady," she laughed.

Then Miss Devore gave us the real reason—that the kicking, punching and slapping which an audience "eats up" when a man is the purveyor or recipient just doesn't go with a leading woman on the screen.

A nice bad girl sometimes and the tomboy type of youthful femininity at others is what Miss Devore believes she will be in many of her pictures for Educational.

Incidentally, Miss Devore is the one leading lady in filmdom that we know who got into the picture racket without having a screen test made. It was seven years ago and she was on the vaudeville stage and quite young at the time, but she definitely recalls that her debut in Christie two-reelers was the only screen test she ever had.

BIG BOY, all dolled up in fur collars and patent leather pumps, looked over the West Coast headquarters of Moving Picture World this week. He picked out a nice mahogany desk to bang his little boots against while Mrs. Sabiston told us all about Malcolm.

It seems that six months before Malcolm was born, just about three years ago, Mrs. Sabiston had acquired a Hollywood bungalow. The first thing she noticed about Hollywood, she told us, was not the climate or the stars, but the fact that mothers in her neighborhood did "nothing but talk about their youngsters and the movies." That her offspring would be kept clear of a camera career was this little mother's big avowal.

However, Malcolm had not finished the cooing of his second month in the world and Hollywood before a friend of his mother's picked him out as just the infant for a cradle episode in Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks." And the two-months-old infant earned his first fifteen dollars per day.

When he was six months old, Victor Schertzinger called Mrs. Sabiston to bring her baby boy over to the "Bread" set for three consecutive weeks of work.

When Malcolm reached his ninth month he was signed up for two Christie comedies. It was here that Jack White's brother Sam told Jack about Malcolm, resulting in the baby being re-christened "Big Boy."

Now at the age of three years and six months Malcolm is a star.

THIS past year has been one of exceptional activity for Lupino Lane. First of all he had to make twelve reels of comedy for Educational. Then he had to get a line on the box office receipts of his own theatre in London. After that on divers times he had to hasten to matinees and evening performances at the local Music Box where he was starring in a tip-top musical comedy.

The ensuing year means more work than ever before for Lane. Instead of twelve reels it is a total of about 16,000 feet of finished and edited film that he will have to turn out for the Educational coffers.

Watching Lane work on the Educational set and sitting down at the same luncheon table with him provides us with a fairly good idea of why Lane's stuff ranks high in the short subject field at the box office.

His work on the set while the camera is grinding is what everyone sees on the screen. But just off the set in-between shots gives one the inside track on Lane's knowledge of story construction. One then gets the impression that this star must memorize his script. The real reason, however, is divulged over the luncheon table. In the latter case one time we were more or less of a necessary eavesdropper. Lane was seated with his director and gagman. It was this touch and that touch, suggestions in fact which could be made by no less than an authority on writing and adaptation. We learned later that Lane is such an authority.

SCREEN star and hero seem to be synonymous at the box office. If it's in comedy an audience more or less expects the star to be the pie thrower. Lloyd Hamilton, Educational's pioneer laugh cracker, however, knows little about hurling pies. He has had them slapped at every part of his anatomy. For the past six years, when a plate has dropped on his set it has been Hamilton's hand and when a pie has been flung it has been Hamilton's full face which has usually caught it.

Hamilton is the kind of a comedian who maintains consistent box-office draw by his portrayal of natural goofiness. That comedies are comedies and melodramas are mellow has always been Hamilton's policy. His reasoning that the greater the comedian the more naturally stupid he should be, seems to gibe with the cash register.

Stardom for Hamilton has thus meant more and more punishment. Slipping on wet floors with a tray full of dishes, falling backwards into tanks and being the buffer for many a "prop" automobile are just a few of the things he submits to from members of his cast on the Educational lot.

But there is one angle which, as the star, Hamilton considers most seriously. His leading lady must be taller than himself. In accord with a general plea for sympathy which produces the best laughs Hamilton must have an "opposite" that he may look up to and Hamilton straightens up to about six feet himself!

Barbara Bedford

BARBARA BEDFORD

Who Enjoys The Sovereignty Of Free Lancing

By Tom Waller
West Coast Representative

A CHICAGO critic wrote recently about Barbara Bedford:

"The reappearance of Barbara Bedford in 'The Notorious Lady' makes me want to utter a few cheers. This young woman seems to me one of the most promising of all the younger screen stars, yet she's always disappearing after a particularly satisfactory performance. Why don't we see her more often, I wonder?"

A lot of people have been wondering about Barbara Bedford. Hollywood knows that she is one of its best dramatic actresses. But then—

What the Chicago critic doesn't know, Hollywood, however, does know. And yet—

To the fan she may have appeared on the screen of his favorite theatre only a few times during the past few years. He wants to see more of her. Why isn't she in this role in that picture? Why can't they get more pictures with Barbara Bedford!

The trade, particularly the exhibitor, knows that pictures as a rule, are sold in block. And the exhibitor knows that even if he could stand 'em up with a dozen Bedfords a year he could not get them. Because there are so many play-dates in every block. Because it doesn't take many blocks to fill up the play-dates. Because Barbara Bedford during the past few years has been in more blocks than he could ever hope to use, even if his playdates were double their present number.

Now, about what else Hollywood knows about Miss Bedford. The "else" that may not be known even to the exhibitor, let alone the out-of-town critics and the fan whose favorite screen may be even close to the boundary of the film capital.

What Hollywood knows is that Miss Bedford has been what is locally defined as a free-lance. She hasn't been with any particular company for any definite number of pictures. She has avoided the dotted line which would give one producer Barbara Bedford's services for a certain number of years. She has kept the fan wanting and guessing, as is reflected in the Chicago writer's observation. Partly because she likes the change in studio environment, because, although the lights and cameras in every studio are the same, the people are different. It's not only new faces with Barbara, however, it's the woman in her. The competition for her services, the knowledge that she is good and is wanted and because of this can do what other actresses might call playing with the flame of good business.

The few years that Barbara has free-lanced has more than substantiated the fact that in dodging the contract flame she has not risked her position in the business. Her multiplicity of worth-while engagements proves just as widely to the contrary. Free-lancing in her particular case has enhanced her screen value. Because in playing in so many pictures made by so many producers her general releases have covered far more screens and thereby added thousands to her fan following over what it would be if she had sewed herself up for a term of years with an individual maker of pictures.

That's Barbara Bedford's way of reasoning it. We got it from her in winks, smiles and nods in a dark Sunset Boulevard studio and we got it from her over a pock-marked table, where delightful brown eyes seasoned pitiful culinary efforts.

In our prattle with Miss Bedford we were naturally interested in conversationally traveling through some of her experiences in the many studios to which her free-lancing has brought her.

Thinking back over the chat, we recall Miss Bedford being here and then at First National, being there and again at First National. Inadvertently, she mentioned First National as her scene of activity, especially during the past year, so many times that we began to think that knowing Hollywood was "all soggy" and that she had really violated her known policy and was "holding out" on Hollywood.

Although she emphatically denied it we got the hunch on second thought that Barbara Bedford has finally decided to release in the block and give theatre owners the advantage of getting her in a "bunch." As a matter of fact two of her pictures for First National, "Old Loves and New" and "The Notorious Lady," are now in the first runs throughout the country. Then the one with Conway Tearle and the other with Milton Sills places six productions of all that she has done during the past year to the credit of First National. In all of these pictures she was co-starred.

Not only the six pictures in one block, but the fact that she referred more often in our Sunset Boulevard nook to the Burbank environment. There she can't say too much about the pictures that Sam Rork makes and the way John McCormick handles them. She's partial to First National beyond a question of a doubt. Where some one else free-lancing might be a little more general in praise Miss Bedford speaks her mind. She doesn't have to worry about Hollywood diplomacy because Hollywood knows what the critics and fans in the big cities and the small towns think about her. They know that these places want her. She knows it. Therefore, to take it or leave it doesn't worry her in the least, if our understanding is anywhere near correct.

Emoting on a Saturday morning was the condition in which we found Miss Bedford at the Fine Arts studio where she is co-starring in a stage story picture for Tiffany. We got there, after our Ford had broken down several times, in a friend's Locomobile. Then we witnessed a number of people making a quick exit from Stage Four and learned that Miss Bedford was not to be disturbed during her efforts to bring the tears. Slipping in through a side door and balancing ourselves on a rafter with a friendly electrician we had the rare opportunity of observing how difficult it is to start the tears in flow in a dark studio on a sunshiny Saturday.

Miss Bedford used no glycerine. She told us later that a tear-producing preparation of this kind had once nearly blinded her. Instead, she ordered the organ grinder and fiddle striker to pick out their darkest tune. Then she buried her head in her lap. Pretty soon we saw her brind up her head with a smile and shake it negatively. Then she hid it again in the folds of her dress while the "musics" wailed their "lonestomest." The second time two tears rolled down one cheek and she turned that side of her head to the camera. Everything was fine after that except that it was necessary for a couple of close-ups and the taking of several still pictures. When we got to her she commented about the tears and the day and she confided:

"Oh, it isn't so hard to emote under ordinary conditions. But when you are in a real taxi and the meter is clicking out the waiting time you just can't help but think that you should hurry, and hurrying tears is impossible—at least with me."

Seventy-five features is the total of the pictures in which Miss Bedford has been cast, featured and co-starred. And she came to Hollywood to take care of a sick brother!

Barbara Mystifies the Critics

Lon Chaney Dons Chinese Glad Rags in M-G-M's Mystic "Mr. Wu"

Production Has Been Lavishly Filmed Being Rich and Colorful in Scenic Effects—Nigh Directed

By JIM POWERS
West Coast Staff Writer

Lon Chaney's last production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, "Mr. Wu," had its premier at the Forum Theatre this week and while the usual galaxy of celebrities were on hand for the initial performance the screen story did not seem to go over so well with the audience, as a whole.

Chaney, by virtue of an old Chinese custom, is called upon to murder his daughter Nang Ping, when he discovers her liaison with a handsome American, played by Ralph Forbes, and misses fire in his efforts to regain the sympathy of the audience following his homicidal gesture. "Mr. Wu" is the pictorial version of the shop-worn theme of the gal betrayed and is reminiscent of "Poor Butterfly," the musical production of a few years ago.

In the character of Wu, Chaney lacks the forcefulness of his portrayals in many of his former screen plays. Lack of story, of course, proves an enormous handicap for an actor to overcome.

Renee Adoree makes a petite little China maid and just misses stealing the picture completely. The love scenes between she and Forbes are well done and the oriental background lends color to the action.

The production has been lavishly filmed, the "sets" vieing with the story for honors and coming out a little in front.

Too much footage is used in prolonging a story that could be more entertainingly depicted in a fewer number of reels.

While Chaney, Miss Adoree and Forbes monopolize the spotlight, Louise Dresser, Holmes Herbert, Gertrude Olmstead, Claude King, Anna May Wong and Sonny Loy do well with the opportunities afforded them. Anna May Wong is especially good in the role of confidant and bosom friend of Nang Ping.

The picture opens with Chaney in the role of a venerable old Mandarin of ancient vintage. In this character he gets a chance to demonstrate the well-known Chaney artistry in make-up. Anxious that his grandson, and heir to the House of Wu, shall be trained in western customs as well as those of his own race, he contracts with Claude King, in the guise of an American tutor, to personally supervise the daily habits of the growing lad.

Therefore, young Wu, when he reaches manhood, is a strange mixture of the mysticism of the East and the more progressive characteristics of the Occident. This is the character in which we find Chaney during the bulk of the picture. He is good in it, but not remarkable.

William Nigh directed the production and turned out a picture rich and colorful in scenic effects.

DANIEL B. CLARK

who has just been re-elected president of the American Society of Cinematographers, Hollywood. Clark is chief cinematographer for Fox Productions starring Tom Mix.

Niblo Ready For "The Enemy"

Fred Niblo is getting ready to start shooting on his next Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Enemy." His last picture was "Camille," for United Artists.

Woman Director To Start Second

Dorothy Arzner, who recently signed a new directorial contract with Paramount, will start work this week on her second production starring Esther Ralston, "Ten Modern Commandments."

Miss Arzner's excellent showing on her first picture after graduating from the cutting room to a director's chair resulted in her present long-term contract. Her first picture with Miss Ralston was "Fashions for Women."

Langdon Will Go Slumming

Harry Langdon's next vehicle will be a story laid in the slums of the average large American city and will present Langdon as a droll male Pollyanna. Announcement to this effect sets at rest reports that his next story would be the screen version of "The Butler and Egg Man."

Production is scheduled to get underway immediately at the First National Studio.

Educational's Strongest Year

velope of America's greatest steeplejack. It is a figure for each year to the left side of the decimal point.

June 1 of this year finds Big Boy a star at three, and it will find him shining brighter than ever at the age of six because his guardian has signed the Educational dotted line allowing him to receive stellar honors for the next three years.

Lloyd Hamilton is the veteran of Educational veterans. His checked hat and goofy walk will, according to advanced information, prevail in his 1927-28 product the same as it has done ever since Lloyd ceased to be the "Ham" in the old "Ham and Bud" series. Hamilton's short subjects have always clicked well at the box office and so the new production year for him means the re-winding of a reliable time piece of screen fare.

It is the cane and monocle and a slight exaggeration of an ordinary English air that will also carry Lupino Lane through his third year with Educational. As was made known in an exclusive interview with this star appearing in this department several months ago, Lane is an exhibitor. From the standpoint of a well-paying 2,000-seat house in old London he knows the kind of comedy the people want. Backed by years of stage as well as screen experience he conducts himself before the camera on the Educational lot as an actor for the screen and the box office.

Thus is the comedy field covered from every perspective for 1927-28 by Educational. This corporation is on the eve of the strongest year in its history. It is made so by the recent amalgamation of all of its units under one banner, making Educational Film Corporation both a producer and distributor with its own studio in Hollywood and its own home office in New York.

A few renovations are being made in the studios on Santa Monica Boulevard which are now closed, as is the custom each year at this time. At all other periods three companies usually work at one time. For their interior shooting Educational has 40,000 feet of stage space which gives these two-reel comedy units considerable more indoors than several Hollywood companies specializing in the making of feature-length productions. There is even some talk, at this time, of building another stage since it has always been the belief of E. H. Allen, general manager of Educational Studios, that an over-equipped and roomy studio is the cheapest thing about motion pictures.

Where Educational made 44 two-reelers last year it will produce 52 for 1927-28 release. Instead of 24 it will also make 26 single reel comedies. It is now known that three of Educational's leading directors, Charles Lamont, Norman Taurog and Stephen Roberts will continue to wield their megaphones on the Educational lot and that also because of the increase in the general production schedule there is a possibility of the company acquiring another director.

Coming from New York to attend the Educational convention, which will be held at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, during the week of May 2, will be: E. W. Hammons, president; Arthur A. Kirkpatrick, assistant to president; Gordon White, director of advertising and publicity; J. R. Wilson, sales manager, Lowell Calvert, production manager. The west coast aggregation at the convention will include all of the stars, and will be headed by General Manager E. H. Allen, Jack White, supervising director, and Ray Hoadley, west coast publicity director.

Chaney Puts On Oriental Make-up

Over Zealous Press Agents Toss the Bull

Over-zealous press-agentry seems more rampant than usual in Hollywood. Stories breaking in local newspapers dealing with contractual and probable tie-ups between screen stars and studios evaporate into thin air as a general thing when check-ups are made at the various studios mentioned in these yarns.

Fritz Feld, who played the Piper in Morris Gest's stage presentation, "The Miracle," according to one story this week appearing in a motion picture column, had been signed by Gest to appear in the screen version of "The Miracle" when he (Gest) returns to Hollywood to produce it for United Artists. The fact that First National and not United Artists happens to own the screen rights to the production seems to be lost sight of completely. And First National is going to produce it. Also Feld is under contract to U. A. So that's that.

At the United Artists' studio they knew nothing relative to Feld and "The Miracle."

At the same studio we learned that they were entirely in the dark as to Charles Ray being the selection, or probable selection, for the leading male role opposite Corinne Griffith in her initial U. A. starring production, "The Garden of Eden."

Jimmie Adams In "No Sparking"

Blacksmiths and others can look at "No Sparking," the forthcoming Educational-Jimmie Adams Comedy, without picking a single flaw, for much attention was given to detail in a "village blacksmith" sequence.

This is a typical example of the large amount of thought given to details in these two-reel comedies made at the Christie Studios.

Bootleg Picture

John Gilbert will get started within a few days on his next starring production for M-G-M, "Twelve Miles Out," which Jack Conway is to direct.

A. P. Younger is now putting the finishing touches to the script. Ernest Torrence will play the part of the captain of a band of hijackers.

Paramount Takes Flyer in Munitions

What will the Chinese use for gun powder in their private war in the Far East if moving picture companies continue to squander ammunition the way they have been grinding out war comedies. The Moving Picture World gets the following information from the Paramount studio purveyed by a P. A. with a flair of statistics and such:

"Almost one million pounds of gunpowder, TNT and dynamite have been purchased by Paramount-Famous-Lasky during the past six months for photographing battle sequences."

Another Crank Turner Turns To Megaphone

Film cutters and ex-cameramen appear to be coming into their own so far as movie directors are concerned.

N. J. Barrows, better known as Nick to his friends and studio associates, is one of the latest of the cameramen to make good in a directorial capacity.

Barrows is now making his first picture with Edward Everett Horton under his new contract and making it to the satisfaction of all concerned, judging by the flowery praise of Jack Murphy, production manager for the Harold Lloyd Corporation, producers of the Horton comedies.

Before accepting the offer to direct Horton, Barrows was in the scenario department of Famous Players-Lasky with headquarters in the East. Before that he was a gagman.

Much of his work has been in the East which is the main reason he is not as well known on the coast as he should be.

His practical experience as a cameraman stands him in good stead as a director. He is naturally familiar with camera angles and has a fine sense of photographic qualities.

We expect to hear a great deal more of Barrows from now on, seeing that he has made up his mind to take up his abode in the film colony.

Feature Touch Is Achieved In Hollywood Production's Shorts

First Two Two-Reelers Teeming With Action And Executed by Players Accustomed To Feature Length Fare

SHORT subjects with a feature touch in cast, plot and sets is the ambition realized by the first two two-reelers of Hollywood productions which will be released through Paramount in August.

In Harold Lloyd's projection room we privately previewed this week the initial work of Lloyd's feature specialists on two-reel product and Edward Everett Horton's debut in the same.

These were "Dad's Choice" and "The King of Spades." They are teemed with meaningful action executed by people accustomed to the minute detail of feature length screen fare.

That they are spending $500,000 in production of six of these comedies alone, as was told exclusively in the World several months ago when this department revealed the fact that Paramount had stepped into the field of "shorts," was very much in evidence in the completion of the initial effort.

The first picture shows Horton as the persistent lover of an heiress combatting a difficult father. The novelty of this lover mistaking this father for the gardener and having the father assist in the elopement of his own daughter immediately establishes an interest which is sustained and generously periodized with worthwhile laughs until the couple, father and the auto find themselves on top of a flat fast-moving freight car. In this picture Horton's experiences in the establishment of a modiste are especially hilarious. Winding around Josephine Crowell's chair in pursuit of a lap dog who has appropriated his girl's purse will get laugh after laugh. Otis Harlan, Sharon Lynn and James Gordon are also in this cast.

In the "King of Spades," Horton is the spoiled son who has mastered card tricks in idling away his time. His appearance in white flannels in a saloon of the old fashion western type will not only amuse but will interest any audience because he turns out to be immune to bullets and a terror at the gambling table. In this picture Horton's role is considerably enhanced by the performance of Jack Raymond as the valet. There is a great similarity between the two which an audience will soon detect.

J. A. Howe directed both of these two-reelers, while Tom Crizer and N. T. Barrows wrote the stories.

Hazel Howell, clever comedienne now playing prominently in support of Monty Banks in forthcoming Pathe featuring comedy "A Perfect Gentleman."

Griffith "Dying For Love"

Joseph Swickard and Alfred Sabato have been added to the cast of Raymond Griffith's next starring vehicle for Paramount, "Dying for Love." Frank Tuttle will direct.

Maloney Starts Work on Seventh

Leo Maloney started production on his seventh Pathe production, "Border Blackbirds," at his ranch in the San Bernadino mountains this week. Ford I. Beebe wrote both story and continuity.

Eugenia Gilbert is playing her fourth lead opposite Maloney in the past eight months. Supporting the star are a number of other players that have been with him in previous pictures.

Edward C. Kull, formerly in charge of the Universal camera department, has been assigned to the Maloney unit.

Greta's Lead — Ricardo Cortez, late of Famous Players-Lasky but now at M-G-M opposite Greta Garbo in "Anna Karenina."

Cortez Lead In "Anna Karenina"

After four and a half years with Famous Players-Lasky, Ricardo Cortez is now with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the duration of one picture at least. He has the male lead opposite Greta Garbo in "Anna Karenina," and looks very martial in his uniform of the Russian, Count Veronsky.

Cortez started in pictures eight years ago in New York, his first appearance before a camera coming at the old Vitagraph studio. Later he went with Universal and for a time was on the Selznick payroll.

Before going into pictures he had a whirl at the stage and was in stock with a company in Albany, N. Y., for eight or nine months.

He has no desire for the stage now, however, and is more than satisfied to earn gasoline money for his chariot by punching the time clock at some established studio.

His severing of relations with Famous was the result of a mutual agreement satisfactory to both sides, he told the Moving Picture World. He also informed us that Famous had made him overtures to return to the fold, but that he was perfectly satisfied with free-lancing and would continue to ply his wares from studio to studio for the time being at least.

Cortez is more than pleased with his role of the Count Veronsky in "Anna Karenina," and it should not be surprising to hear that he has signed an M-G-M contract before the final close-up on the Russian opus is "shot."

Directorial "Ace"—Introducing Richard Wallace, the youthful director responsible for "McFadden's Flats."

Richard Wallace May Join U.-A.

With the glowing box-office reports on "McFadden's Flats" reverberating throughout the country, Richard Wallace, youthful megaphone wielder, finds himself listed in the exclusive ranks of big-time directors.

He has just finished another First National production, "The Poor Nut," which we gather is also destined to prove a big money-maker and further add to his laurels.

There is a persistent report along Hollywood Boulevard that Wallace will soon join the United Artists' fold. Wallace refused to deny the possibility of the move when questioned by Moving Picture World. He did maintain, however, that there was a likelihood of his next assignment being with United Artists.

Wallace started his picture career as a cutter at Mack Sennett's comedy factory and later graduated to the writing staff. From writing he went to directing at the same studio, where he remained for some time before transferring his allegiance to the Fox lot.

Hal Roach, appreciating Wallace's comedy touch, signed him to direct Roach Comedies. He turned out a number of these before attracting the attention of the producers of Corinne Griffith's pictures. He joined Miss Griffith's unit to direct her in "Syncopating Sue," and from there went to the Jesse Smith unit of First National to direct "McFadden's Flats." This picture made box-office history and went a long way towards making Wallace as a director. It did make him one of the most discussed young directors in the business.

Heavy—Not in roles but in avoirdupois. Charles A. (Buddy) Post caught rushing the bucket—fire bucket.

Some Hair Dye Presto! Career!

A towering figure of gigantic proportions passed in front of the sun and the Fine Arts studio was more or less in darkness. Investigation brought to light the fact that the said figure was the property of Charles A. Post, better known as "Buddy," one of the giants, physically speaking, of the screen. A flicker of the lens and the Graflex proves our statement by the accompanying photograph.

Post had a hallowed ambition in his preliminary whirl at pictures to be known as a Keystone comedian in the days when Mack Sennett was keeping the world giggling with his custard pie operas. A visit to Sennett brought little satisfaction. "Make me laugh," said Sennett to Post. Post failed, so he didn't get the job.

His first opportunity in pictures came with Mary Pickford in "M'Liss." It was a small part, but put an edge on Post's appetite for a career on the screen. Mickey Neilan finally decided to give him a chance and cast him for a fairly good part in a production he was then making for Art Craft. As this brought no enthusiastic offers from other producers, Post returned to the stage. The company he signed with went flat in two weeks, so he returned to the vigil of the casting offices.

Ever since he has stuck to pictures and is now finding his services much in demand. He dyed his hair to prove to producers that he was a comedy type, so that now, he of the once raven locks, is crowned with a halo of blonde tresses.

Post's motto seems to be never give up, but keep plugging even if it takes a bottle of hair dye to convince producers.

Joe LaShelle—One of the best known and most adept of the younger cameramen grinding for large production companies.

An Artist In Camera Angles

During the past few years the motion picture cameraman has come into his own to a certain extent. Producers began to realize that a camera was not merely a contraption with a crank and a reel of film, but to the expert cameraman represented the brush and easel of the portrait artist.

Photography has reached a highly developed stage of perfection at the present time and adept crank turners are at a premium. The larger studios are not slow at putting them under long-term contracts.

Among the younger cameramen that have made a strong bid for recognition and are now coming into their own is Joe LaShelle, now holding out at the Metropolitan studio after two years of service. Joe has just finished as one of the cameramen on "The Thirteenth Hour," in which Lionel Barrymore was featured by M-G-M. He has also seen considerable active duty on the Cecil B. De Mille "lot" since quitting the cutting room for the camera.

LaShelle was born and educated in Los Angeles and as a kid had a penchant for photography. His first studio employment was in the Lasky laboratory, where he remained six years, during which time he rose to manager of the cutting room.

Desirous of getting out on the "lot," he accepted a job as assistant cameraman and was soon promoted to second cameraman under Director George Melford, with whom he remained two years. After free-lancing a while, he joined Metropolitan.

Back Again—Mrs. Wallace Reid is now producing and appearing in "The Satin Woman," directed by Harry Lang.

Mrs. Reid In "Satin Woman"

Mrs. Wallace Reid finished work this week on her first personally produced picture in which she has played an important role since "Broken Laws." The title of her current vehicle is listed as "The Satin Woman" and deals with the rejuvenation of a fashionable society woman.

Several years ago Mrs. Reid, then known on the screen as Dorothy Davenport, took her initial fling at pictures at the old Biograph studio on East 14th street, New York. Many names that are famous in screen lore today were also on the cashier's books at the same time, including the two Gishes, Lillian and Dorothy.

Engagements with the now defunct Reliance and David Horsley companies followed in the East. In the natural course of events her travels lead her to the Coast, where she has remained ever since. After her marriage to the late Wallace Reid, at that time the screen's most popular hero, she quit pictures.

Following a long absence she returned to produce two pictures in which she played no important part in so far as acting was concerned, but concentrated entirely on their production.

At the Fine Arts' lot, where she is filming "The Satin Woman" we found her conferring with her director, Walter Lang, while a galaxy of "extras" waxed convivial over "cold tea" and gingerale in a fashionable cafe.

"You may be interested to know," declared Mrs. Reid to Moving Picture World, "that Ruth Stonehouse, Gladys Brockwell and myself are back together in a cast again, after a lapse of many years. Once we all earned our weekly checks at the same studio.

Star's Gazing — Sally O'Neill in costume she wears in current production, "The Callahans and the Murphys."

Discovered In L. A. Ballroom

Things were rather quiet on "The Callahans and the Murphys" stage, so we found Sally O'Neill roaming aimlessly about the M.-G.-M. lot.

"Just a minute," said we pointing the camera at her.

"Okeh!" smiled Sally and the deed was consummated and the exhibitor readers as a result get a close-up of the famous O'Neill smile.

Sally started on the "lot" on which she now finds herself rating a star's dressing room. This happened two and a half years ago and her success is a great advertisement for ambitious young girls anxious to carve a screen career. Simply patronize the centers of interest where you are seen by the high-and-mighty of filmdom.

Sally was dancing at one of the larger hotel ballrooms in Los Angeles when she came under the speculative eye of Marshall Neilan and his wife, Blanche Sweet.

A screen test and a contract resulted from Neilan's interest. Her first pronounced hit on the screen came in "Sally, Irene and Mary," which also brought Joan Crawford to the front.

Questioned as to which part, of all parts, she has enjoyed most, she replied, "Slide, Kelly, Slide."

Sally lives with her folks and has a sister, Molly O'Day, also in pictures, now under contract to First National.

She has no desire to forsake the pictures for the stage.

Dorothy Sebastian — A busy actress these days appearing in three separate productions at the M.-G.-M. studio.

Cast In Three Separate Films

Dorothy Sebastian qualifies as one of the busiest young actresses in the business. At present she is cast in no less than three separate and distinct productions underway at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

When a representative of the Moving Picture World ran into her on the lot the other day, she was all be-decked in the raiment of a royal princess. She had just come off the "set," being used in filming Greta Garbo's latest starring vehicle, "Anna Kerenina."

In this production she plays the part of a princess of noble birth, albeit considerably older than Dorothy is herself. But Dorothy does not mind taking on a few years on the screen just as long as it gives her ample opportunity to perfect herself in various characterizations.

She likes to work and does not object to finding herself in three different casts at the same time. Besides her part in the Garbo picture, she is in "The Gray Hat" and also in Reginald Barker's present production.

Miss Sebastian started her screen work with Robert Kane's First National unit in the East two years ago and a year ago affixed her signature to a M.-G.-M. contract. Recently she renewed her M.-G.-M. affiliations and will be with that company for a few years to come.

On the screen, if she had her own way, she would do parts in which she is naughty—but nice. Remember "The Demi-Bride?"

Julia Faye—De Mille player attired in military cape and the perennial Faye smile. Next picture "His Dog."

Has Been In All De Mille's Films

Persistency is its own reward and Julia Faye, DeMille featured player, qualifies as a typical example of the adage.

Miss Faye has been with DeMille in every picture he has personally directed up to and including "The King of Kings." She has just finished in "Turkish Delight," and is getting ready to start work in "His Dog," which will be directed by DeMille's latest directorial acquisition, Karl Brown, who produced "Stark Love."

"Intolerance," with D. W. Griffith at the helm, provided Julia with her first opportunity in front of a camera. Although she studied for the stage she did nothing along this line, her entire career having been spent in movie studios.

She was born in Richmond, Virginia, and educated in Roanoke with the finishing touches added at the University of Illinois.

Julia was one of the first baby vamps on the screen, making her debut in this type of role at the time when Theda Bara, the original vamp, was standing the village cut-ups on their ears. As she explained herself, she has gradually been transformed into a sweet young thing. In "His Dog" she plays the part of an unsophisticated maiden and what's more, likes the character.

Those interested in knowing what the screen's pampered few do with the fabulous salaries they are purported to earn, may find the following information interesting. Miss Faye is putting four of her younger cousins through school, two of whom are at present attending the University of California. This is not publicity hokum either.

Irvin Willat.

Principals of "Behind the Door." Wallace Beery, Jane Novak, Hobart Bosworth and Irvin Willat.

IRVIN WILLAT

BEFORE going into pictures, while still in his 'teens, Irvin Willat tried printing, sign painting, kodak finishing, and commercial art. The result of this early training still holds sway for in the rear of his beautiful California home there is a building which houses his playthings of today; those playthings are the result of his early training as a boy. Here he has a complete printing plant, carpenter and machine shop, an artist's studio, with drawing boards and easels; there is a dark room, a camera room and all of the latest machinery for the cutting and handling of film. In the house he projects pictures for his own amusement or the amusement of his guests.

To his brother, C. A. (Doc) Willat, Irvin gives all credit for the opportunity of his early training and start. His brother was the manager of the old Imp Company of New York and when he sent for his kid brother and suggested that he have a try at motion pictures, Irvin imagined that in time he might earn as much as seventy-five dollars a week.

Then along came the part of a young man opposite Mary Pickford, in a one-reeler. Willat got it. It was finished, and cut, and ready for a pre-view. The company was called in, and they all looked at it. When the lights went up, Irvin was not there. When they found him, he was applying for a job painting bulletin boards.

His brother suggested that he go into the still picture room and develop the tests of the cameramen and make the still pictures. Willat liked this work and succeeded. He went from there to the laboratory, and progressed to the camera. While on the camera, he became well known as a trick photographer of exceptional ability.

Being ambitious, with J. Parker Reed, Sr., he bought and exploited a picture entitled, "Mexico." They didn't make any money out of it, but they had a lot of experience and during his spare time, he took up his art again, cartooning this time, and was cartoonist on the "Film Report," a small, independent journal, published for the purpose of fighting the trust, a print of one of these cartoons reproduced here.

Later Willat joined the All-Star Feature Corporation, under August Thomas. Thomas knew direction, and knew the drama, but he did not know motion pictures, and depended a lot on Willat for his motion picture knowledge, and in turn, gave Willat that much-needed start and the valuable fundamental knowledge of direction and of the drama. With this knowledge, Willat joined the Dyreda Company. J. Parker Reed, a young promoter, and J. Cyril Dawley, one of the foremost directors at the time, headed the company.

With the Dyreda Company Willat did his first directing. It was in Nassau. Mr. Dawley had to rush to New York to prepare the sets. And there were some scenes in the jungle with the savages to be made by Mary Miles Minter. He entrusted this to Willat. It was only a day's work, but it gave him confidence.

Willat directed the New York sequence of "Always in the Way," with Mary Miles Minter, and Dawley promised him a picture to direct. Always enthusiastic, he overworked in finishing and cutting this picture.

While in the laboratory, Willat had been title photographer, cutter and a sort of under-superintendent. It was here, too, that Willat painted the first illustrated titles to be shown on the motion picture screen, an art which he later developed for Thomas H. Ince on the West Coast.

While Willat was in the hospital, the Metro Film Corporation was organized. They absorbed the Dyreda Company. Willat went back to Metro, told them of his ideas, but a deaf ear was turned to his directorial aspirations and he was told if he wanted to continue on the camera, he could. Willat was determined not to go back as a cameraman.

Jack Reed had gone out to the Coast with Thomas H. Ince. Reed wired for Willat that they were having trouble with their photography. Thomas Ince had known Willat when both were with the old Imp Company. He went West, straightened out the photographic situation, developed the decorative titles, revamped stories, made extra scenes.

It was Thomas Ince who gave him his first chance at directing a complete picture. He developed trick photography to a high point at that time, making "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "False Faces," "The Guilty Ban," "Behind the Door," "Below the Surface" and several others.

Willat has worked for most of the big companies in his career as a director. Leaving Ince, he and his brother formed a company and made four features for Hodgkinson the most interesting of which was "Down Home," a rural drama, one of Leatrice Joy's first starring vehicles.

He has recently been with Famous Players, having worked there several times. Here he made "Wanderer of the Wasteland," the first Technicolor natural color picture to be made by a producing company, which served to bring the attention of the public so vividly to his beautiful wife, Miss Pillie Dove, now a First National star. Other notable productions for Famous were "On the High Seas," "North of 36," "Ancient Highway" and "The Enchanted Hill."

Willat has now returned to Universal, returned to Carl Laemmle, the grand old man of pictures, whose friendly guidance of former days was one of the real factors of Irvin's success in later years.

Irvin came to Universal to do a big special, but an emergency compelled him to make "Back to God's Country," which he has just finished.

Irvin Willat was the first man to make a Technicolor natural color picture. Starting in the laboratory he went through every phase of motion picture production until he took his place with the foremost directors of today.

Bread and Butter Pictures

ALMOST every week one or more plays reach the Broadway screens that are dismissed by the critics with fine contempt as the veriest drivel. Sometimes these writers simply throw up their hands in horrified disgust and refuse to comment seriously on the trashy product. They are beneath the notice of the highly intelligent Broadway critic.

And because the New York reviewers can find no good in these productions, the smaller city men follow their lead and they, too, hold their aristocratic noses with delicate disgust and cry to the high heavens for Art.

Now and then a picture will come to the screen that is lauded to the skies. The critics stumble all over their feet in their efforts to get into the front row of applauders, and they go out and tell the waiting world that there is still some hope for the generally despised art of picture making.

Few of them stop to consider that the highly artistic picture may make only a limited appeal. It may be boosted over in a hundred first run houses, but when it gets over to the second runs and lower, the red ink begins to trickle in until, in the very small houses, the trickle becomes a flood.

Some of these pictures may show a small profit. A few more are lucky to break even. Some will represent a definite production loss. This does not, of course, refer to the splendid road show pictures. They generally make a financial clean-up. The type of picture to which present reference is made is the higher class program offering, intelligent in story, brilliant in production and admirable in cast and yet not a popular success.

Often these are made with the advance realization that their making will not be followed by a great financial return. They are made with the hope that they may gross their costs or at least represent but a small loss. They are made to satisfy the comparatively limited number who appreciate the best, and produced in the hope that they will help to give tone to the general product through satisfying the minority demand.

If they break even, well and good. If they lose, their loss is more than covered by the large profits of the trashy farces, the sensational dramas and the light comedies the critics so intolerantly regard.

It is all right to seek higher phases of the art, but meanwhile why not recognize that it is the pictures so superciliously regarded by the critics; these pleasant unambitious but genuinely entertaining pictures that pay the bills for the adventures into the generally unprofitable "artistic" pictures that are highly lauded, but thinly patronized.

To Broadway Screens to Win Big Business*

They Will Not Be Omitted From the 1932*

But Sometimes Criticism Halts Selection*

EASTER brings more new pictures to Broadway than have been listed in any similar period for a long, long time. Of course, "The King of Kings" is attracting widespread attention, but Norma Talmadge is by no means a poor second. Every actor yearns to play "Hamlet" and every actress has her heart set on "Camille." Some of these days we'll probably find Clara Bow trying to camp "Armand," and we hope that Mrs. Glyn makes the scenario. There would be a combination worth while. Bennie Schulberg, please sit up and take notice.

WHAT happened to that projected Hal Roach drop-in theatre in Los Angeles? Not long ago there was a lot of talk about it, but nothing lately. The Roach press agent may have been shooting for space, but there is a sound idea back of the scheme. Here in New York the Cameo should make a cleanup with the same idea. There are hundreds of men around the crossroads with half an hour or so to waste who would welcome such a house. In the old days the saloon solved the problem, but a man can't sit up to a drug counter for half an hour over an ice cream soda.

TWO good old timers were inadvertently omitted from P. A. Parsons' splendid story of advertising in the Anniversary Issue of Moving Picture World. P. A. made his apologies in advance, but that does not put Al Selig and Lon Young into the big number. Both of them put on their advertising long pants many years ago. We'll promise they will not be omitted from the big quarter centennial, five years from now.

IT was almost inevitable that the presentation of "The King of Kings" should have revived the hoary old story of John B. Stetson, who when he made a production of "The Passion Play" was indignant with the producer for using only twelve Apostles. He didn't see why he could not have a couple of dozen and make a really big production. De Mille stuck to the twelve and did not even try to swell the number.

AND "The Passion Play" reminds of Jimquin's story of the black top traveler down in Mexico who presented the Pathe version for an entire Holy Week in a town below the Rio Grande. For Easter Sunday he announced a special show "for men only," with the admission boosted to a whole dollar. And when he started to run off "The Passion Play" again, the excitable audience used the blue seats as kindling for the tent and did their best to cremate the manager. Any of you chaps remember the days when you used to have a print of "The Original Fatima," to run off at a quarter a head along about eleven o'clock for the red hot sports? Them was the happy, primitive days!

HOPE Paramount has better luck with its Author's Council than happened ten or eleven years ago when Lubin tried it. All the directors and office scenarists sat in council one night each week and the stenographer read briefs of the most promising of the stories. It got to be eleven o'clock one night and it had been "thumbs down" all evening. Finally Ferd Singhi looked about the room. "The idea," he suggested mildly, "is to buy some of these stories." An author is apt to make a devil's advocate to anyone else's work.

TIME was when all theatrical contracts called for half salaries or a layoff the week before Christmas and Holy Week. No manager expected to do more than break even in these seasons and considered himself lucky if he did as well as that. Along Broadway Good Friday was better than average this year and the general business for the week was far larger than was anticipated. The times change, and theatrical conditions change with them. But tradition holds good in that Easter Week is cleanup time. All of the houses have been packed and some of the larger shows played to a stand-out even on the swing between matinee and night. With the public schools closed for the week, there was naturally a huge matinee business, but the nights were even better.

THE play may be the thing, but you have to hand it to the director, too. Take "Knockout Reilly" at the Paramount this week, for example. Structurally this is not more than good average melodrama. Carelessly produced it would not have scored very strongly. Carefully directed by Malcolm St. Clair the picture becomes invested with a charm arising almost wholly from good direction of able players. And even the good playing would have been without avail unless intelligently directed.

IT is not unlike two public readers presenting the same selection. One may mouth and mispronounce his words, giving the wrong inflections and reading into the lines an entirely different meaning. Another, with a better voice and higher intelligence may read the same words in a manner to bring out fully the hidden beauties of the author's thought. One man gets merely the idea—and gets it wrong. The other adds something of his own to the work of the author. A really first class director is entitled to fully as much credit as the author.

IT seems a pity that some of the wonderful stills made on current productions get no further than the newspaper offices. Many of these pictures are genuinely artistic and probably would command a market were they made available to the public. This applies, of course, only to the really big productions, but we believe that a portfolio of ten or a dozen pictures, selling around a dollar a set, would find a ready market.

IN this connection it is interesting to recall that the Motion Picture Story Magazine, pioneer of the fan issues, was the outgrowth of the suggestion that booklets be issued on some of the fine one reel productions Vitagraph was making around 1909. J. Stuart Blackton worked the idea over and the result was the magazine.

May Write Fresh Page In Film History

THE announcement that Warner Brothers have acquired full ownership of the Vitaphone Company, through the purchase of the stock holdings of Walter J. Rich, upon which they held an option, forecasts many interesting and early developments in the "sound picture" field.

THAT it indicates an immediate broadening in the sphere of Warner Brothers and Vitaphone activities is a certainty, with the probability that means will now soon be found, which will afford a mutually satisfactory basis for other big producing and theatre-holding groups to be franchised to use the recording and reproducing devices exclusively controlled by the Vitaphone Company through its contracts with the Western Electric Company.

ACCORDING to the official announcement, in future all financing and installing of Vitaphone apparatus will be in the hands of the Western Electric, solely, and its subsidiary, Electrical Research Products, Inc., while the Vitaphone Corporation will be free to devote its entire facilities to the production and distribution of Vitaphone numbers and musical accompaniments.

WHILE the formal statement does not say it in so many words, the effect of the whole deal will be to place the Vitaphone Company in the highly desirable position of being on the receiving end exclusively, issuing franchises and collecting royalties for same, without tying up any large capital or involving any responsibilities for the carrying charges attendant on installation costs, which may have to be repaid over a period of time, all of which are now assumed directly by the Western Electric Company.

DOUBTLESS there will be a substantial reduction in the present costs of installing the Vitaphone equipment in theatres, which now range from $15,000 to $25,000, according to the size of the house, and it is also more than probable that the charge of ten cents per seat per week, which has hitherto been a condition of every Vitaphone theatre franchise, will be greatly modified or a new rental plan evolved, in consideration of the volume of business which now may reasonably be anticipated.

ONCE the new terms of installation and franchise royalties are announced, and it is only a matter of a few days, when this may be expected, as it is understood they have practically been determined upon already, watch the scramble among some of the big circuits to get their names on the dotted line for Vitaphone franchises.

THE election at Atlantic City of John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company, to succeed Robert Lieber as president of First National, which was long ago forecast, and the combination of the Stanley-West Coast Theatres-First National forces, is less interesting as news than in its potentialities for influencing the future course of the film industry.

THE present balance between the big producing-distributing-theatre holding groups is so nicely adjusted, that any new alignment of interests or combinations with leanings or affiliations away from those heretofore existing, bids fair to be most disturbing, not to say revolutionary in its far-reaching possibilities.

JOHN J. MCGUIRK is a strong and farseeing executive, who has proved his outstanding abilities in successful theatre operation and in finance, and he will now have an opportunity to apply his great talents to the production problems—which are by no means of lesser importance than the theatre end—of First National.

OF chief importance—to the industry at least—however, will be the direction in which he guides the great merger of interests he now heads and whatever future alliances may develop, there seems to be no doubt but that a new page in motion picture history is about to be written.

PARAMOUNT Famous Lasky and Publix, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Loew Theatres, Inc., or the merging Keith-Albee, Orpheum, North American Theatres, Pathe and Producing Distributing Company, with which of these three giants will John J. McGuirk elect to join forces, against the other two?

WHILE others have been striving to find their place in the sun, establish a monopoly or maintain themselves against increasingly intense competitive conditions, according to the point of view, by buying, building or controlling theatres—the retail stores of our industrial scheme—at least one able and farseeing individual has been making considerable progress in getting a corner on the finest line of merchandise we have, some of which every retailer is apt to need and need badly during the course of the year.

THE individual referred to, of course, is Joseph M. Schenck, head and front of United Artists, who announces the important production plans of that company in this issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

MERCHANDISE, after all, is what this or any other business must have to keep its retail stores open, and it takes no Solomon to surmise that in the coming days of intense theatre competition, Joseph M. Schenck's particular kind of box office merchandise is going to be in big demand.

CECIL B. De MILLE has made a great picture in "The King of Kings," which opened at the Gaiety on Tuesday, a wonderful portrayal, reverently and faithfully executed, of the greatest drama in human history.

YET somehow to this writer, this really marvellous production seems just to miss being what it surely ought to have been—the screen masterpiece of all time.

Merritt Crawford

HENRY MAC MAHON broadcasts the information that with the opening of "The King of Kings" at the Gaiety this week, there is only one theatre on Broadway north of 42nd Street, which hasn't been taken over by the movies. This is the Winter Garden, where the Shuberts still are making a desperate effort to stem the celluloid invasion.

The legitimate theatres now housing motion picture attractions are the Astor, Central, Cohan, Criterion, Gaiety and Globe, while the ten regular motion picture houses along the Main Stem are the Capitol, Colony, Embassy, Paramount, Strand, Rialto, Rivoli, Loew's New York, Loew's State and Warner's.

Which recalls, that when the Strand opened, just thirteen years ago this week, there were plenty who averred with due solemnity that the movie was the moron of the amusement business, a passing craze which would soon slip back into the oblivion in which it belonged, while all speculated on the possibility of making enough motion pictures of sufficient novelty and attraction quality to supply the theatre with a new bill weekly.

Joseph Plunkett, who presided over the Strand's big birthday party this week, and watched the never ending line at the box office, may have wondered what the next thirteen years were going to bring about in the way of changes. Television and "talkies" are already here and the ten thousand seat house is not far distant, with the stereoscopic film and the huge screen no longer merely visionary theories.

The movies surely do move.

Randy Lewis, who was just beginning to get accustomed to hide his feet under a desk in the Moving Picture World editorial staff room, goes westward in a few days to do continuities for Hoot Gibson and others. The adolescent urge originated by Horace Greeley did not impel him to leave his friends here flat, but a colorful telegram, outlining the advantages of California residence, when you have a fat contract to go with it, proved too much for his powers of resistance. The boys will miss Randy, but they wish him a power of good luck in his new adventure.

When William Le Baron, newly announced vice president in charge of production for F.B.O., goes to Hollywood next week, it will be the first time that this well known production executive has set foot in California, although his name has been associated with many screen successes during the past eight years. It is no secret that he is expected by President Joseph P. Kennedy to pep up F. B. O.'s production activities considerably, still further reinforcing the efforts of Edwin King, the head of the studio, with whom Le Baron was formerly associated at Famous Players eastern plant. It will not take the new production chief long to get acclimated and then watch his smoke.

Herbert H. Van Loan, who still writes pictures for Rayart, although now a full fledged playwright, because Ray Johnston once took him to lunch when he needed lunch, has written a new stage play, "Blood Money," with George Middleton, which will open in New Haven, Conn. on May 16. His latest stage success, "The Noose," which recently closed a twenty-eight week run at the Hudson, is now going big at the Selwyn, Chicago, where it opened Easter Sunday.

Lya de Putti, piquant as ever but a trifle travel worn, is fast becoming a commuter between New York and Hollywood. For several months past she has hardly had time to get her suitcase unpacked before she has had to jump a transcontinental train again.

A hurry call from Universal last week started her west after barely forty eight hours in New York, where she had hoped to remain a fortnight at least. She begins work on Monday in "Midnight Rose" in which Bessie Compson was scheduled to star, under the direction of James Young. That is provided nothing occurs in the interim, which will once more make her buy a ticket east.

R. F. (Pete) Woodhull, president of the M.P.T.O.A., is stepping on the gas these days, getting ready for the national convention at Columbus in June. He says that exhibitors everywhere are showing keen interest in M.P.T.O.A. affairs and he looks for a record turn-out at the forthcoming convention. With Roxy as a drawing card, it ought to prove the biggest yet.

Robert H. Kane has started things humming at Cosmopolitan Studio again with his latest feature, "Dance Magic," for First National. He has the unique distinction of being the only big producer, not in captivity, who has demonstrated that he can make pictures of premier box office quality more economically in the East than in Hollywood. California sunshine evidently means nothing to Bob Kane for he uses no more "juice" in making his pictures in New York than he would on the Coast, though the sunshine there was once given as the reason for Hollywood being the movie Mecca. But then Bob is in the picture and not the real estate business.

William R. Frazer, general manager for Harold Lloyd, is a forestry expert. He is mainly responsible for securing the co-operation of Will H. Hays in enlisting the aid of the country's screens during National Forestry Week, beginning April 24 with "Plant A Tree," as the slogan. Lots of folks do not realize, Mr. Frazer points out, that the wholesale destruction of trees, without an organized effort at replacement, is by way of being a national calamity.

Again the power of the screen is shown in broadcasting this important propaganda for anything which affects the general prosperity of the nation will have a similarly serious reaction upon the entire film industry.

WE hear a lot about "specials" and "roadshows" these days, which are planned by various companies, but the exhibitor is beginning to take these brave announcements with his tongue in his cheek. Any importantly planned picture may or may not be of "special" or "roadshow" quality, but it has got to be made first before anyone can say so and even then it is still a matter of guesswork largely until the picture has stood the acid test of public approval.

Production costs no longer make the difference between the picture of outstanding box office quality and the one that is just another of "those things." Why kid ourselves about it? Or try to impress the once impressionable exhibitor with the same old bunk? He's getting wiser every minute.

More brains, instead of more money are what is needed in the planning of our big pictures, rather than rivers of adjectival blah blah from publicity departments, if the industry is going to progress. Otherwise a lot of our biggest producers are going to face deficits next year that will look like a young national debt. And this don't mean maybe.

Herbert Crooker mimeographs that Johnny Hines is having trouble with two of his temperamental staff, because he has given one and not the other a part in his forthcoming production, "White Pants Willie." It seems that Loretta, Johnny's "famous educated parrot," who had a part in his recent feature, "All Aboard," is sore because he has given the feathered role in his newest production to Bozo, the comedy goose. Herb assures a waiting world that Loretta has become so indignant, that she is moulting and sheds a feather every time Johnny Hines comes near her cage.

Newspaper headlines are often misleading. Thus the amazing announcement in a Connecticut paper "SCREEN STAR TAKES BATH FOR HUSBAND" might or might not indicate that Earl Carroll was out again, whereas the fact is that the story beneath this startling caption merely stated that Mary Hay, lately Mrs. Dick Barthelmess had married a gentleman named Vivian Bath.

At least it indicates that Saturday Night still has its traditional significance among newspaper head writers of the Nutmeg State.

SOVIET FILMS STEEPED IN PROPAGANDA

Lenin First To Recognize The Power Of Movies

By R. Sydney

London Representative Moving Picture World

SPEAKING of Russia, we have been able to secure the following figures relating to the progress of cinematography in that vast and tragic country. The beginning of the industry there dates back to 1901. The first Russian productions, promoted by Tcharinine, date back to 1906. From this date, producers, renters, and cinemas steadily increased. The World War threw Russia on its own resources in this respect and the development of the industry there took on a rapid phase. In 1917 throughout the whole of Russia (as it was then), there were 2,700 cinemas under private enterprise; about 15 production firms with a total working capital of some 12 million gold roubles. Then, the Government did not concern itself with the industry, and the first and only State organization before the Revolution (1917) that took an active interest in the silent art was a commission appointed in 1915 to inspire patriotism and do military propaganda through film production and the screen. Nearly 90% of the producing firms were located in Moscow, with some second rate firms and studios at St. Petersburg (now Leningrad), and Odessa. There were about 70 renter firms, not counting Poland and the Baltic States, 18 of which were in Moscow, a dozen in St. Petersburg, and the rest in the provinces. These firms rented about 12 to 15 million metres of exposed film, of which only 30% were of foreign origin. This extensive production is explained by the circumstance of the war and the suppression of the Czarist censure following the revolution of March, 1917.

Such was the cinema industry in Russia up to the close of the old regime. The revolution was a heavy blow for private enterprise. In pre-revolution days, under the old regime, cinematography was in the hands of capitalists with one aim: to make rich those who had invested with them their money; so they did all they could to entertain the cinema-going public. Naive stuff for the moujiks and melodrama for the middle classes! It was the day of popular folk and fable stories or dramas that made the air "blue!" Nothing was done to edify the public or educate the masses of peasantry. But this was all radically changed with the coming of the Revolution and the establishment of the U. S. S. R. Lenin saw the mighty power of the moving picture appeal; Lenin said, "Of all the arts, for Russia the supreme and greatest art is the cinema." Despite this, the position of the industry was precarious under the new regime, which spread panic and despair in the hearts of the cinema proprietors and producers, who accordingly fled from Russia taking with them what they could of their trade property and destroying the rest.

So, in 1919, there were in Russia only the studios of Ermolieff and the Societe Russe, who still carried on and produced three or four acceptable films yearly.

Then came the "Renaissance" for the cinema industry in Russia. The Soviet leaders set out to find scenarios, actors, producers, operators, equipment, etc., etc., and unceasing efforts have since been carried on for the reestablishment of the industry, though mainly for the furtherance of world-wide Soviet Russia propaganda. Everywhere today the workers have their Cine Clubs and are supplied with films at cheap prices, and admitted to the cinemas at reduced rates. Of course, it is all a matter of monopolies granted by the Government; there is no competition; Goskino, a firm founded in 1922, has the monopoly for renting.

So cinemas and cine-clubs continue to increase. In January, 1924, over 1,000 film programs were distributed; in July, 1924, 2,500 were sent out to the various screens. The organization Goskino carries on a grand campaign of education and culture. Every month, more than 600,000 metres of positive film of educational subjects is distributed among the workers' clubs, 20% of it being given free. At the same time, Goskino is always out to find new methods of production, to meet the growing aspirations of the emancipated masses of the new Republic. So we see on their screens the familiar "Gazette" series of films,—films of real happenings in life; artistic films, such as "The Extraordinary Adventures of Mr. West in the Country of the Bolsheviks," and "The Death Ray." Then there is "The Strike." In this film there are absolutely no heroes nor heroines, but the crowds act their parts so naturally and sincerely that the spectator feels himself one among them as the drama is unfolded on the screen. The stage director of "The Strike" was Mr. Eisenstein, who gave us another masterpiece in the story of the warship Potemkin, considered unquestionably the masterpiece of moving picture art the world over at the present day.

Such was the position of the cinema industry in Soviet Russia up to 1924. At the end of 1924 coordinate action in the industry was effected by the foundation of the share company SOVKINO, (Soviet Kinematograph) who commenced work March 1, 1925. Sovkino has the monopoly of rentings in Russia, and also the monopoly for production and sale of Soviet pictures to foreign countries. On October 1, 1925, the results of Sovkino Company's activities were:

Cinemas, including cine-clubs, increased to over 2,000 or 60%. Price of rentals reduced by 45% compared with former prices of Goskino and other firms. This Government monopoly, as it really is, tends to spread the cinema all over the country, and their maxim is: "All the profits of the cinema for the development of the cinema."

For 1926-1927 SOVKINO plan to produce 40 to 45 big feature films, 64% of which will depict life under the Soviet regime, 11% historical-revolutionary, 2% classical literature works, and the remainder various. They aim at perfection in quality, art reform, and subject to suit the spirit and new aspirations of the masses of workers and peasantry.

A SIZABLE CINDERELLA

by Eves W. Sargent.

RUSHVILLE never had a Cinderella contest, and when Jim Sprague, of the Bijou suggested the idea to Ben Hayden of the Boston Shoe Shoppe, Ben almost kissed him. It was about the time the girls were laying in their Easter footwear, and it should bring every girl in town to the Shoppe instead of to Ben's hated rival.

It was very simple. Jim was to get a pair of shoes from some famous star and give them to the girl who could most capably fill them. Being a literal sort of chap, Jim decided to get a real pair of shoes instead of the usual fake of working of a pair of small sized shopworn shoes from stock.

He figured that he needed the most help on "Russian Love," starring Vera Vodsky, a comparatively recent importation, and so he wrote to her direct. And it so happened that an untrained mail clerk passed the letter along to Vera herself, and Vera, pleased at this tribute from one of her new admirers, sat right down and replied to the letter instead of passing it along to the press department.

A few days later the town policeman parked himself in front of the Boston Boot Shoppe in a vain effort to keep the sidewalk clear, for just inside the plate glass was a letter in Vera Vodsky's own illegible scrawl advising Jim that she was only too glad to comply with his request and that the shoes were following parcel post.

Just below was a flock of pictures of Vera and the offer of the shoes to the girl whose feet most nearly compared with those of the famous star.

Rushville was in a ferment. Hank Bream, the druggist, was pestered with requests for "something to make my feet small" and the Rushville Banner gave two columns on the front page to a splash about "the signal honor done our thriving metropolis," slopping over with laudation for "our enterprising entrepreneur" James H. Sprague.

For days the flappers crowded into the post-office for both the morning and evening mails, and Jim waited importantly for word that the shoes had arrived. For nearly a week Jim had a double daily ballyhoo as the flappers flattened their noses against the glass of the boxes to be first to view the package and pass the word along.

Finally the package did arrive, and Jim viewed somewhat dubiously its rather large dimensions.

"Looks like perhaps she sent two pairs of shoes," suggested the postmaster. "Either that or you wrote Charlie Chaplin by mistake."

"Probably she wrapped them vary carefully," sparred Jim, as he hurried through the waiting crowd and over to Hayden's store, where in the private office they unwrapped the parcel.

As the last wrapping of tissue paper fell off there was a gasp. They were simply enormous.

"Eights, and double D, at that," was Hayden's comprehensive comment. "Only Ma Prichard or that nigger cook over to Snow's could wear those. Catch any flapper even trying."

Dismally they looked at each other, starting as the chief of police entered.

"Hurry up and put those shoes in the window," he demanded. "The whole darned town is waiting to see them."

"Them!" demanded Jim, pointing to the expansive footgear. "Bill, they'll laugh me out of town."

"Put 'em in or I'll run you out of town," commanded the chief. "I got to keep order in this burg and I only got one policeman to do it with. You show them shoes."

Almost tearfully Jim and Hayden headed for the window and put the shoes on the black velvet pedestal already arranged for them. They barely fitted the generous platform, and the shouts of laughter that beat through the glass told Jim that he was licked.

Hayden let him out of the back door and he slipped down the alley to his own office where he grabbed for the telephone and called up his exchange. Into the rubber receiver he poured the story of his defeat then listened expectantly, finally to break in with an indignant: "Say, I ain't paying twenty-five cents a minute just to hear you laugh."

That had the desired effect and briefly Howard Thornton gave the explanation. "Vera's a wonder," he soothed, "but she's a peasant girl and she has big feet. They're so big that they seldom play her in a full length scene, and then she rehearses in carpet slippers and gets eased into her shoes just before they shoot the scene. It takes two men to get them on and three to get them off."

"But why did she send them?" demanded the irate Sprague.

"Didn't know any better," explained Thornton. "Your letter must have gone direct to her. You should have worked it through me. I'd have wired the studio agent and he would have shipped on a pair of small ones. Next time come to me, Jim. I'm always glad to help."

"There won't be any next time," prophesied Jim glumly. "This is going to put me out of business."

"Not a bit," assured Thornton heartily. "You sit tight, tell them there must be some mistake and I'll fix you up."

"It's going to take a lot of fixing," objected Jim, but Thornton only laughed.

"This is easy," he declared. "By the way, Jim, how about your contract for the 'Fabulous Fifty.' You haven't signed up yet."

"I will if I get out of this scrape," promised Jim, and somewhat heartened, he hung up the receiver.

He had to stand an immense amount of kidding that evening, but he followed the tip, and declared stoutly that there must be some mistake. Even at that, he was fed up on jokes, and he breathed a sigh of relief the following morning when he pasted to the glass of the Boston Shoppe a telegram from Los Angeles which ran:

"Just discovered that my maid has made a dreadful error. Stop. Sent a pair of her own shoes by mistake. Stop. Sending a pair of my own by air mail. Stop. Best regards to my loyal Rushville friends. Vera Vodsky."

Three days later Jim received a pair of 2-aa by air mail, and rushed them into the window. He did not make similar display of a bill that came a day or two later and he cheerfully sent to the Los Angeles studio a check for fourteen dollars for one pair of costume shoes.

He did not even object when Thornton tilted the price of "Fabulous Fifty" by a cool two hundred dollars. It was worth the money.

Begin At The Bottom

JACQUELINE GADSEN, who is co-featured with Lionel Barrymore in M-G-M's mystery story, "The Thirteenth Hour."

MARTHA SLEEPER, 1927 Wampas Baby Star, who is appearing in Pathe comedies.

MARY BRIAN in a costume not at all compatible with the name of the picture she is appearing in; Paramount's "Knockout Reilly."

JUDGING from this picture Monte Blue couldn't be playing the title role in Warner's "The Brute." But then.—

RICHARD DIX trying to look hard in his latest opus for Paramount, "Knockout Reilly."

WE don't wonder that George O'Brien is smiling. Dione Ellis is not hard to look at. They are appearing in Fox's "Is Zat So?"

NANCY NASH is the girl with the black stockings on and the chorus is from Fox's "Rich But Honest." They all seem to be rich AND honest."

MARY MABERRY is going to have a hard time attracting all the attention with her sister Pathe-Sennett dolls.

THIS is little Alma Bennett, who draws her pay for appearing in Pathe-Sennett Comedies.

THIS Mack Sennett bathing girl who is appearing in Pathe Comedies, didn't give her name. But what's in a name?

JUST to be different, Ruth Taylor donned a street costume. Now I ask Pathe, is that nice?

ALTHOUGH Madge Bellamy is appearing in Fox's "Ankles Preferred," we think her face is quite as fetching.

HEAVE to the waistline, let the hips fall where they may. Estelle Clark, M-G-M player, out on a bender.

Detour the Contours

DOROTHY DEVORE, who just signed the Educational dotted line, looking wistfully rustic.

ALMA RUBENS, who is appearing in Fox's "The Heart of Salome."

LEILA HYAMS' first appearance under her contract with Warner Bros. is in Monte Blue's next picture, "The Brute."

ANOTHER disturbing daguerrotype of Mary Mabary, Pathe-Sennett comedienne.

Pull Down The Shade

TOM MIX and Marjorie Daw should know enough to pull down the shade by this time. Scene from Fox's "Outlaws of Red River."

A LITTLE car for a big star. Dolores Costello tries out this bus between scenes of her next Warner starring picture, "A Million Bid."

WE envy the desperado with Allene Ray in his arms. A scene from chapter four of Pathe's serial, "Melting Millions."

CAMOUFLAGE is not precisely our idea of art, but Marjorie Zier of Pathe-Sennett comedies is a lovely girl.

BUSTER KEATON, filled with collegiate fervor and trying hard to hold down the bag at first base in his next picture for U-A "College."

A Jungle Symphony

KAMEELA (Ann Rork) overhears a nasty plot about something or other in First National's "The Notorious Lady."

"THE CLIMBERS," a story of old Spain, surrounds Irene Rich with a picturesque plot as her next for Warner Brothers.

BABE is expecting guests. Anna Q. Nilsson tells the Sultan of Swat (Babe Ruth) to lay off chewing tobacco in First National's "Babe Comes Home."

THIS child looks as if she were handed a divorce. Clara Bow in Paramount's "Children of Divorce."

MARJORIE DAW smiling ecstatically about something in Fox's "Outlaws of Red River."

BARBARA BEDFORD is "The Notorious Lady" in First National's picture of the same name.

NO wonder she looks sad. Her sweetheart's in the jug. Mary Brian thinking of iron bars in Paramount's "Knockout Reilly."

LAURA LA PLANTE is going to poke someone in the ear, judging from the icy stare. She is in "Beware of Widows."

Warner Bros. Program For May Release

The month of May will bring four releases from Warner Bros.

On May 7th, Rin-Tin-Tin's latest starring vehicle, "Tracked by the Police," will have its first showing.

May 14th will be the day on which "The Climbers," starring Irene Rich, will be released.

"Irish Hearts" will be delivered to exhibitors on May 21st. It is May McCavoy's second starring picture for Warner Bros.

"A Million Bid," scheduled on May 28th, brings Dolores Costello in another starring story, melodramatic in nature.

Krellberg Lists Eight Pictures For 1927-28

Sherman S. Krellberg, president of Krellberg Pictures Corporation, announces through his New York office at his company's Los Angeles headquarters that production will be started immediately on the first two of eight pictures to be released in the 1927-28 season.

"The Little Girl God Forgot," Edward E. Rose's famous stage play, will star Dorothy Devore.

The second release is "The King of Clown." James Kirkwood will be starred.

"Criminal Youth," a sociological problem play, will be made with the cooperation and under the supervision of one of the best known American authorities on criminology.

Ramon Novarro and Alice Terry in M-G-M's "Love." Miss Terry appeared in this picture before going abroad.

Five Important Releases On M-G-M Schedule Next Month

"King of Kings" At Gaiety Only

Producers Distributing Corporation announce that the Gaiety Theatre engagement of Cecil B. De Mille's production, "The King of Kings," will be the only showing in the East this season.

The Western premiere will be held sometime next month in Grauman's Chinese Theatre, which is now under construction in Los Angeles.

Rork-Rowland Rogers' Film

After negotiations extending over a number of weeks, contracts have been signed whereby Sam E. Rork will star Will Rogers in Charles Hoyt's "A Texas Steer" as a special production for First National Pictures.

This announcement is issued by Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager of First National, who came east with Mr. Rork a few days ago.

Canada Likes 'Em!

Two Tiffany feature productions, "College Days" and "That Model From Paris" played two of the leading motion picture theatres in Montreal this week.

"That Model From Paris" will be seen at the Imperial and "College Days" at the Strand.

Starring Vehicles For Chaney, Novarro and Marion Davies on Tentative List; Also Tim McCoy in "California"

THE STRONG SPRING release grouping introduced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in April with such pictures as "Rookies," "Lovers?" and "Frisco Sally Levy" will be maintained during the coming month by an impressive list of five feature films according to M-G-M's tentative May schedule.

Starring vehicles for Lon Chaney, Ramon Novarro and Marion Davies are included in the May group of releases.

"The Unknown," Chaney's new starring picture, is said to provide this versatile actor with one of the most intriguing roles of his career, that of an armless circus freak in a Spanish tent show. The story is an original by Tod Browning, and was directed by him, with Joan Crawford, one of the most popular of the younger actresses, playing the star. The cast of "The Unknown" includes Norman Kerry, John George and Nick DeRuiz.

Ramon Novarro's new starring release is "A Certain Young Man," in which Renee Adoree and Carmel Myers have important roles. This film was directed by Hobart Henley, and is a sparkling comedy-drama, with Novarro in a part rather different from those in which the public has been accustomed to seeing him.

Marion Davies's new production is "Tillie the Toiler," in which this popular star essays another delightful comedy role, that of the heroine of a picturization of Russ Westover's cartoon, "Tillie," known to millions of newspaper readers throughout the country. Hobart Henley directed, Ralph Spence wrote the titles, and the supporting cast includes Matt Moore, George K. Arthur, Gertrude Short, Bert Roach, Estelle Clarke, George Fawcett, Harry Crocker and Claire McDowell.

A new historical Western picture starring Tim McCoy, who jumped to the front ranks of screen popularity in this type of role with his first two films, "War Paint" and "Winners of the Wilderness," is also on the books for May. The new picture, "California," is a dramatic story of frontier days by Peter B. Kyne, famous for his Western adventure tales. W. S. VanDyke, who made McCoy's earlier pictures, directed.

"Captain Salvation," another May Release, promises to take high rank among the adventure stories of the year, with Lars Hansen and Pauline Starke heading a strong cast. John Robertson was the director.

Lovely Dione Ellis as she appears in Fox's "Cradle Snatchers."

M.-G.-M. Signs Star

Josie Sedgwick, for many years a star in Western features, and a sister of Edward Sedgwick, who directed the current hit, "Slide, Kelly, Slide," has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. She will play an important role in "The Trail of '98."

Norma—Now and Then

"Camille" is Miss Norma Talmadge's final First National picture.

"The Dove," now in production, is Miss Talmadge's initial United Artists picture.

Roxy Gets "Cradle Snatchers," Fox Film, Based on Stage Hit

ONE OF THE FIRST things James R. Grainger, Fox Films' general sales manager, did when he arrived at Hollywood early this week, was to look at "Cradle Snatchers," which had just been completed at the Fox West Coast Studios.

Immediately after the screening he put in a long distance call to S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel. The result of the conversation between Roxy and Grainger was that the former contracted for the showing of the screen version of the Russell Medcraft-Norma Mitchell farce for his new theatre and will present it at an early date.

The cast includes a number of the leading lights of filmdom, of whom there are Louise Fazenda, J. Farrell MacDonald, Dione Ellis, Dorothy Phillips, William Davidson, Joseph Striker, Sammy Cohen, Arthur Lake, Franklyn Pangborn and Ethel Wales.

Roxy had previously purchased "Ankles Preferred," the last Fox picture starring Madge Bellamy, for presentation during the week of May 15.

In a wire to Fox Home Office executives, General Sales Manager Grainger waxed unusually enthusiastic over "Cradle Snatchers," which he classified as one of the smartest and fastest comedies ever screened.

Stars Signed For Artclass Serial

Eugenie Gilbert, heroine of many Pathe serials, has been signed to play the leading feminine role in "Perils of the Jungle," the ten episode wild animal serial which Artclass will release this season. Featured with her will be Frank Merrill, also a favorite with movie audiences, according to an announcement by Max Weiss, Artclass president.

Star Cast? What?

The additions of Helene Chadwick, Lionel Barrymore and Mario Carillo to the cast of "Anna Karenina," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's forthcoming vehicle for Greta Garbo, were announced this week.

Jules Levy Has N. Y. C. Record For McFadden

During the month of May "McFadden's Flats" will be shown in more than 200 theatres in Greater New York. This record has been nailed up by Jules Levy, manager of First National's New York exchange, in connection with the sales drive which marks his first anniversary in his present position. The showing period covered by this drive is from May 1 to June 4.

Twenty prints of the picture will be used in the five boroughs of New York City during May, which is more than the total number used in some territories. Theatre chains in the Greater City which have booked "McFadden's Flats" are Fox, U. B. O., Springer, Consolidated, A. H. Schwartz, Mayer & Schneider, Rachmiel & Rinzler, Hulus, Joelson and Salkin and Charles O'Reilly.

Twelfth Success

If "The Trail of '98," Clarence Brown's current production for M-G-M, lives up to the expectations of studio officials, it will take its place as the noted director's twelfth consecutive box office success, according to his personal representative.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Seven New Productions Now In Studio

THE NUMBER SEVEN hovers over the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, where seven big pictures are being prepared for early production, as a part of the most comprehensive producing program ever attempted by this organization.

Three of these are well into production, but still have many weeks to go before reaching the editing and titling stage. These are: "The Trail of '98," the great Northern epic which Clarence Brown is directing with a cast of thirty-six players; "Old Heidelberg," directed by Ernst Lubitsch, and "The Crowd," King Vidor's latest production.

Pauline Stark as she appears in M-G-M's "Captain Salvation."

Two other feature pictures now in production are Lillian Gish's "The Wind," in which she appears with Lars Hanson, under the direction of Victor Seastrom; and Marion Davies' "Quality Street," based on Sir James Barrie's famous stage play, and directed by Sidney Franklin with Conrad Nagel in the leading male role.

Among the pictures in production at present are: "His Brother From Brazil," which Robert Z. Leonard is directing, and "The Callahans and the Murphys," under the direction of George Hill.

Drunk with the new venture—woman—Prince Dimitri (Rod LaRocque) has his fling at a new life and finds himself wrapped up in one beautiful woman after another. With Dimitri now, it is just a matter of stopping at so many places as the night will permit. A scene from United Artists' "Resurrection."

First National's May Releases: Five Big Films

Five feature productions are listed on First National's May releasing schedule, starting with the George Fitzmaurice production, "The Tender Hour." It will be released on May 1.

On May 8, C. C. Burr's new Johnny Hines' stellar vehicle, "All Aboard," will be released. Charles Hines directed.

Robert Kane's production of "Broadway Nights," adapted by Forrest Halsey from Norman Houston's story, will be nationally released on May 15. Joseph C. Boyle directed.

On May 22 Wid Gummings production for First National of the great and only Babe Ruth's first picture, "Babe Comes Home," will be released to exhibitors.

The fifth May release, scheduled for the 29th of the month, is Charles R. Rogers' production, "The Sunset Derby," directed by Albert Rogell from the story by William Dudley Pelley.

Irene Rich Is Wed

Irene Rich was married last week to David F. Blankenhorn, Los Angeles real estate man. The ceremony took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William May Garland in Pebble Beach, California. After a brief honeymoon she will return to Hollywood to start her next Warner production, "Dearie."

Eighteen From Excellent During Season '27-'28

Excellent Pictures Corporation's product for 1927-28 will comprise eighteen feature productions to be sold as "Eighteen Excellent Pictures." Novels and plays comprise the bulk of the sources of these pictures, with a few original stories.

The leading feature is "The Nest," starring Pauline Frederick, supported by a notable cast and directed by Will Nigh. "The Nest" was a famous Broadway stage-success.

Owen Davis, Langdon McCormick, Carleton Cornell and leading contributors to the magazines and book marts are included among the authors of the new Excellent product.

A statement signed by Samuel Zierler, president, and Louis Baum, vice president, declares that the policy of Excellent Pictures Corporation is to sell its product on a three year franchise basis. This year eighteen features will be produced; next season twenty-four features and in 1929-30, thirty features.

New Role For Her

Lillian Gish has completed "Annie Laurie" for M-G-M and is preparing for her star role in "The Enemy," adapted from Channing Pollack's stage success.

Pathe's Wide Range of Western Films Has Five "Draw" Stars

THE diverse quinette of Western feature series presented by Pathe offers the exhibitor a wide choice of outdoor attractions with popular stars.

The Western stars under the Pathe banner are Leo Maloney, Bill Cody, Buddy Roosevelt, Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Wally Wales. Each of these stars excels in his particular field of endeavor, although all of them provide entertaining Western attractions that appeal to all types of audiences and register returns at the box-office.

Leo Maloney presents a hero of the old West at its best. The themes of Maloney pictures are usually based upon actual traditions of the West and present these striking American figures in strong dramatic action. An added asset to the Maloney pictures are the star's marvelous trained horse, "Monte Cristo," and his dog, "Bullet."

Maloney has under contract Ford I. Beebe, one of the best writers of Western pictures in the business.

Bill Cody is famed for his feats of horsemanship and hard riding in his action dramas. Cody also excels with the lariat, whip and gun. This Western star has an enthusiasm for staging stunts that are daring, unusual and absolutely genuine. Cody's current Pathe feature Western, "The Arizona Whirlwind," is a story of the mining country along the Arizona border. Margaret Hampton appears opposite Cody. "Laddie Be Good" is announced as Cody's next offering.

Buddy Roosevelt, Buffalo Bill,

Jr., and Wally Wales, the trio of young Western stars appearing in their respective series of Pathe Western features produced by Lester F. Scott, Jr., are all rapid-fire action heroes, and, in addition, feature a light comedy-dramatic element.

The college-bred cowboy, so popular today, is typified by Buddy Roosevelt, an example of clean, vigorous, virile young manhood—a wholesome, romantic hero of the great outdoors.

"The Fightin' Comeback" is Roosevelt's latest release. Clara Horton is the leading lady.

Buffalo Bill, Jr., is the dyed-in-the-wool Cheyenne cowboy, born in the West and living it every day. Bill, Jr., is a successful horseman and an adept with the six-gun and lariat and early in his career signed as a broncho-buster and fancy rider in the Sells-Floto Wild West Show and Circus, all of which groomed him for his present career of a popular Western star. "The Ridin' Rowdy" is Bill, Jr.'s, latest release.

Olive Hasbrouck is the charming lead. Other current Buffalo Bill, Jr., releases are "Galloping Gobs," in which Betty Baker is the leading lady, and "Bad Man's Bluff," in which Molly Malone is the lead. Buffalo Bill, Jr., is now completing "Pals in Peril."

Wally Wales is a dashing, happy-go-lucky genuine cowboy, who looks good in a dress suit. Wally hails from southern Texas, where he was born on his father's ranch, the Rio Del Sorrento. Lester F. Scott, Jr., took this youth from his father's ranch and trained him in the rudiments of acting and developed him into a star.

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

—Outside the Contract

A large part of the value of any product is represented by the advertising and the service that are not mentioned in the contract. Ivory soap, Arrow collars and Buick automobiles might be just as good without advertising, but they would not sell as well and would not make as much money for the dealer.

Educational Pictures make money for exhibitors, not only because they are of the highest quality as entertainment, but also because they are supported by extensive national advertising and powerful exploitation tie-ups. They are the only short features that have had consistent national advertising.

A popular brand means as much to the dealer in motion picture entertainment as to the dealer in groceries, or in clothing.

M-G-M Takes Screen Rights To "Starlight"

Motion picture rights to "Starlight," the Gladys Unger play in which Doris Keane was starred two years ago, have been purchased by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Starlight" was first presented with Miss Keane in its stellar role at the Curran, in San Francisco. Later the same star appeared in it in New York City. The play tells the life of a great French actress.

Air Epic Ready For Final Work

After a period of preparation and actual production lasting over a period of nearly 20 months, "Wings," Paramount's epic of the air, soon will be ready for the cutting room.

Reports indicate that Director William Wellman and Supervisor Lucien Hubbard have turned out a "natural."

"Wings" is the "pet" of the Paramount studio. It is recognized as a fine achievement, and will carry to fame not only the names of Wellman and Hubbard, but also the featured players, Charles Rogers and Richard Arlen, who are associated with Clara Bow and Jobyna Ralston in the principal roles.

Universal's "Big Gun Group" Listed On 1927-28 Schedule

UNIVERSAL reports, in connection with its announcement of 1927-28 product, that there will be a special group of thirty-three Universal Jewel Productions for showmen on this coming program. This section of the production units will be known as "The Big Gun Group."

Another Paul Leni picture leads off this section. It is "The Chinese Parrot," made from the mystery novel by Earl Derr Biggers. Marian Nixon, Hobart Bosworth and K. Sojin are the leading players.

Then will come "The American Eagle," a stirring film of the American Flying Forces in the World War, written by Lieut. Neward Blanchard, an American ace. This will be an Emory Johnson Production, with Raymond Keane and Barbara Kent.

The succeeding Jewels will be as follows:

"Wild Beauty," starring Rex, the wild horse. Directed by Henry MacRae from a story by Sylvia Seid. Universal's first picture with the superb horse star. June Marlowe, Universal junior beauty, featured in the production.

"Silk Stockings," a Laura La Plante picture directed by Wesley Ruggles, from the Broadway stage success "A Pair of Silk Stockings," by Cyril Harcourt.

"The Small Bachelor," a William Seiter Production from the P. G. Wodehouse magazine serial. Andre Beranger, Barbara Kent, Otis Harlan, Carmelita Geraghty, Gertrude Astor and similar popular players are in the cast.

"You're in the Army Now," a comedy by Stuart Lake around the Army of Occupation. Mel Brown will direct.

"He Knew Women," another Paul Leni picture, starring Ivan Moskine and Lya De Putti, adapted from the musical comedy, "The Peasant Girl," a Morris Gest production.

"Midnight Rose," an all-star picture directed by James Young.

"Back to God's Country," a James Oliver Curwood story directed by Irving Willat, with a cast headed by Renee Adoree.

"The Four Flushers," a Mel Brown production starring George Lewis.

"Finders Keepers," another Laura La Plante picture made by Wesley Ruggles, from the story by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

"Cheating Cheaters," an adaptation of the Max Marcin stage success.

"Alias the Deacon," another adaptation from a Broadway stage success, made by Edward Sloman with Jean Hersholt and an exceptional cast.

"The Shield or Honor," an Emory Johnson production.

"My Wonderful One," starring Mary Philbin.

"The Girl Show," directed by William Wyler from a story by Charles Logue.

"Thanks for the Buggy Ride," another Laura La Plante Jewel, directed by Wesley Ruggles.

"We Americans," from the M. H. Gropper and Max Siegel stage success.

"The Eternal Silence," a Jewel adapted from William McLeod Raines' "The Yukon Trail."

"Thirteen Washington Square," a Mel Brown production from the Broadway stage success by Leroy Scott.

"The Stolen Lady," from a story by William Dudley Pelley.

"The Crimson Hour," a new Mary Philbin picture, in which she is co-starred with Ivan Moskine, in the European play "Lea Lyon."

"The Irresistible Lover," a Norman Kerry picture, directed by William Beaudine.

"The Counsel for the Defense," by Henry Irving Dodge, who wrote "Skinner's Dress Suit."

"How to Make Love," an all-star picture made by William A. Seiter.

"Hot Heels," a new picture from the pen of Gerald Beaumont, directed by Robert Hill.

Also, there will be seven Hoot Gibson Jewels, several of them written by Peter B. Kyne and the others by established western authors.

Next in order of importance in Universal's release program are ten Thrill Feature series, consisting of five features made with Dynamite, the Devil Dog, and five Aviation Stunt pictures made with Al Wilson, the leading air-devil.

Universal feature program also includes twelve Western features made with two popular Western stars and with the Universal Ranch Riders. Six of them will star Fred Humes and the Ranch Riders.

The other four serials are "The Trail of the Tiger," featuring Jack Daugherty, directed by Henry MacRae; "The Scarlet Arrow," featuring Francis X. Bushman, Jr., directed by Ray Taylor; "The Haunted Island," featuring Jack Daugherty, directed by Henry MacRae, and "The Vanishing Rider," featuring William Desmond, directed by Robert Hill. The "Tiger" serial is from the pen of Courtney Ryley Cooper, "The Scarlet Arrow" by Howard Clark, and "The Haunted Island" by Frank R. Adams.

Finally, Universal will release 104 issues (two a week) of the International Newsreel.

Frank Currier Celebrates 50 Years As Actor

Fifty years ago this month Frank Currier, famous character actor of the screen, started his stage career, as a boy of eighteen, by paying a role in Dion Boucicault's "The Shaugran," in Cincinnati.

He is now celebrated his fiftieth anniversary by playing an Irish role in "The Callahans and the Murphys" at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

McGowan Back This Week

Robert McGowan, director of "Our Gang" comedies for Hal Roach, is expected back at the studio this week after a three months absence in the form of a vacation. At the same studio we learn that H. M. Walker, vice-president of the Roach organization, is to leave for New York.

W. C. De Mille Will Supervise

Additions to the executive staff of the De Mille Studio were announced last Wednesday by Cecil De Mille.

Mr. De Mille states that henceforth General Manager William Siström will have working with him, not only the present successful supervisors, Bertram Millhauser and Miss Jeanie Macpherson, but also a new supervisor, Walter Woods, and William C. De Mille, who becomes an associate producer of from eight to ten of the pictures to be made.

His appointment to assistant producer takes William C. De Mille from the field of direction, in which he made forty-five pictures with conspicuous success and places him again in the work of dramatic construction where he scored his first great triumphs.

P. D. C. Acquires German Star

Lena Malena is the latest potential star to be enlisted under the Cecil B. De Mille banner. Two weeks ago, unknown except in Germany, today Lena Malena, the "Continental flapper," takes her place on the ladder leading to film stardom.

McCulley Signed

Johnston McCulley, former Los Angeles newspaperman and well known as a screen writer, has been added to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer writing staff. McCulley wrote "The Mark of Zorro," regarded by many as Douglas Fairbanks' best starring vehicle.

Moscow Actress With Norma

Maurice Gest arranged with Norma Talmadge to have Olga Baklanova, Moscow Art Theatre player, support her in her first United Artists picture, "The Dove," which Roland West is directing.

Maynard Starts

"The Devil's Saddle," Ken Maynard's next starring picture for First National, which Marion Jackson adapted from the book by Kenneth Perkins, has gone into production with Al Rogell directing.

"Navy Week" Epic

First National Pictures has arranged for a special showing of Robert Kane's big naval feature, "Convoy," at the Norva, Norfolk, Va., the week of May 30, which is "Navy Week."

Warners Call Annual Sales Convention In New York City

SAM E. MORRIS, general manager of distribution of Warner Bros. has called a convention of Division and Branch Managers to meet in New York for an intensive three days' conference on the company's product for 1927-1928.

April 29th and 30th and May 1st are the dates designated for this business session to be attended by the principal sales representatives of Warner Bros. from every part of the country. Formal announcement of the program for the coming year will be made. The line-up of stars and stories will be described to those present and sales policies will be discussed in detail.

The convention will be presided over by Sam E. Morris, H. M. Warner, Sam L. Warner and Major Albert Warner will address the meeting along with other executives and department heads. It was hoped that Jack L. Warner who is in charge of production, would find it possible to attend but activities relative to the making of next year's picture are already under way to an extent which demands his presence at the studio.

The Hotel Pennsylvania has been chosen as the headquarters for the convention. The sessions will be held on the roof of the hotel. Warner Bros. have formulated some entertainment plans for the visitors but these will be entirely subordinated to the business in hand and the three days will be primarily devoted to a high-powered preparation for the big sales drive the organization will put behind their next year's campaign.

The executives of Warner Bros. feel that the coming season will be the very apex of the company's success so far. Other years may have been anticipated as banner ones but 1927-1928 will be the supreme achievement of all for which the preceeding have been only a foundation, according to the Warner leaders already acquainted with their future plans.

"Country Doctor" Under Way At De Mille Studios

Filming of "The Country Doctor" is under way at the DeMille Studio. With Rudolph Schildkraut featured in the title role, Rupert Julian, who recently made "The Yankee Clipper," has resumed the directorial megaphone.

The play is a drama of New England life fifteen years ago, written and adapted by Beulah Marie Dix.

"The Prince of Head Waiters"

"The Prince of Head Waiters" is the final title given Sam E. Rork's comedy drama, in which Lewis Stone, Priscilla Bonner, Lilyan Tashman, Ann Rork, Robert Agnew and E. J. Ratcliffe have the featured parts.

Tentatively called "His Son," when it went into production at First National Studios, with John Francis Dillon the director. "Pierre of the Ritz" and "Modern Madness" were the next tentative titles given.

"The Prince of Head Waiters" is the title which Liberty magazine gave the story by Garrett Fort.

Universal Sales Convention Set For Chicago, May 1 to 4

WITH THE ARRIVAL in New York last Saturday morning of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, from the Coast, accompanied by Lou B. Metzger, general sales manager of the Laemmle organization from Chicago, it was announced that the annual Universal sales convention will be held in Chicago, May 1, 2, 3 and 4.

The Drake Hotel will be the rallying point for the Universal selling force. The convention will be attended by several times as many sales executives and salesmen as ever were assembled before by Universal.

In addition to the branch managers, exploitation men and other executives from each exchange, every territory will send several salesmen. They will be top-notch salesmen, most of them veterans in the Universal service. Their selection will be made as the result of their sales activities during the next few weeks.

The convention will consist of a number of business sessions at which Universal's new product will be discussed by various sales heads.

Mr. Metzger will direct the convention, assisted by H. M. Herbel and Earl Kramer, Universal sales directors. Among the Universal home office officials and executives attending will be R. H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, E. H. Goldstein, Julius Stern, Paul Gulick, Robert E. Welsh, Nat Rothstein, Hal E. Hodes, Sidney Singerman, Dave Bader, E. D. Leishman, Ben H. Grimm and others. The convention will close with a banquet.

MARY GARDNER, charming ingenue, who plays a prominent part in the forthcoming Patheserial "Crimson Flash."

Pauline Starke In "Dance Magic"

Robert Kane's "Dance Magic" went into production last Tuesday at the Cosmopolitan Studio, New York City, with Pauline Starke and Ben Lyon heading a large cast. It will be a First National release.

The new Kane picture is an adaptation of Clarence Buddington Kelland's novel, recently serialized in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Kane paid $50,000 for the screen rights, after outbidding a number of other producers for the dramatic tale of conflict between New England Puritans and Manhattan jazz kings for the soul of Jahala, "the world's greatest dancer."

Victor and Edward Halperin, who owned the screen rights to the story, are making the picture in conjunction with Kane, the former directing with his brother acting as production manager.

"Color Classics" In Publix Houses

Tiffany Productions, Inc., announces that the Tiffany Color Classic "The Isle of June" has been booked in the Howard Theatre, Atlanta; Newman Theatre, Kansas City; Saenger Theatre, New Orleans; Metropolitan Theatre, Houston; Texas Theatre, San Antonio; Palace Theatre, Dallas and Loew's Palace, Memphis. These are all Publix theatres.

Tiffany's "Backstage"

Tiffany Productions Inc., announces that it is now filming a stage romance entitled "Backstage." A cast of well known players are being assembled for the portrayal of the principal roles.

Bellman, of Hollywood Pictures, Has N. Y. Zone for Columbia

NEGOTIATIONS looking toward the distribution of Columbia's "Perfect Thirty" in the New York territory during the season 1927-1928 have been completed. Hollywood Pictures Corporation, through Jack Bellman, its president, holds this franchise. "The Perfect Thirty," according to Joe Brandt, president of Columbia, represents the greatest line-up of productions ever announced by Columbia.

Embracing a wide variety of subjects, it is the intention of Columbia to place behind this series every production and financial resource the organization can muster.

In closing with Jack Bellman, Mr. Brandt said he feels he has assured for "The Perfect Thirty," in the New York territory, just the type of representation their high quality demands.

Mr. Bellman is favorably known by exhibitors in the territory. He has a reputation for keen showmanship and square dealing that fully reflects Columbia's ideas and aims along these lines.

Columbia Releases

Columbia Pictures announces as the second release for April a comedy, "Pleasure Before Business."

Joan and John

Joan Crawford has been selected to play opposite John Gilbert in the latter's new starring vehicle, "Twelve Miles Out."

"7th Heaven" Taxi Feature Of Fox Ballyhoo Through the East

WITH THE ARRIVAL in Chicago this week of "Eloise," the pre-war French taxicab imported to play a part in the screen version of "7th Heaven," Fox Films is ready to start the cross-country ballyhoo which is part of the unusually strong preliminary campaign laid out in exploiting this picture.

The cab leaves Chicago, April 25th, and will travel East under its own power, visiting every important city on its way to New York, where it is due to pull up on July 3rd.

This stunt, conceived by Winfield R. Sheehan, Vice-President and General Manager of Fox Films, will be carried through by General Sales Manager James R. Grainger and his sales force.

The cab will be driven by Lieut. Didot, formerly of the 39th French Infantry, 52d Division, Eighth Chasseurs. Lieut. Didot will wear the battle-stained uniform in which he fought during the World War.

Landon Burks, the experienced showman and advance agent, will "go ahead" of the cab, making press arrangements and supervising the official welcomes which have already been prepared in most of the cities to be visited. In order to insure complete success of the expedition, Mr. Grainger has given orders that as the cab moves into each sales district of Fox Films the district sales manager becomes responsible for following through Mr. Burks' plans.

"Eloise" was one of the cabs which was commandeered to rush General Gallieni's division to the banks of the River Orcq when Von Kluck's Army threatened Paris from the north and west, thus saving the French capital.

Mr. Fox bought it from the French War Office and succeeded in digging up one of the taxicab license plates used in Paris in 1914.

"U" Signs Up

Lois Moran

Universal announces that it has signed Lois Moran for "The Irresistible Lover," a Universal-Jewel to be made for next season's release. Norman Kerry will play the leading male role and Miss Moran will be co-starred with him.

Julian Johnson To West Coast As Title Editor

Julian Johnson, playwright and screen writer, formerly production Editor of Paramount's New York studio, has been assigned to the post of film and title editor at the Paramount studio in Hollywood.

Johnson is the latest member of the Eastern studio's executive personnel to go West following the consolidation of Paramount's production forces on the West Coast.

Sea Scenes Not Listed In The Tiffany Contract

Two of the principals in Tiffany's "The Enchanted Island" had a narrow escape from drowning when the hawsers attached to a raft were parted by heavy waves of the Pacific. The raft was carried to sea.

Charlotte Stevens and Pierre Gendron were on the raft at the time.

The scenes were being made in and about one of the small rocky islands off the coast of Lower California.

It was with difficulty that the rescue boat could approach the raft for fear of being wrecked. The players clung to the raft for more than an hour before they were hauled aboard the small boat.

Leo Maloney Nears Close Of New Film

"Don Desperado," a Pathe Western feature starring Leo Maloney, is in the final stages of filming at the star's pretentious studio at Skyland, in the heart of the picturesque San Bernardino Mountains of California.

Leo Maloney earned fame as a Western rider when a mere boy and reached the pinnacle of skill as a featured rider with Buffalo Bill's Wild West show.

Eugenia Gilbert, a real beauty, and the genuine all-round out-door girl, is again seen as Maloney's leading lady. Fred Dana, Charlie Bartlett and Bud Osborne also appear in support of the popular Western star.

Strong Cast For Florence Vidor

Margaret Quimby, who stepped from George White's "Scandals" into a motion picture contract, is in the supporting cast of Florence Vidor's new Paramount starring picture, "The World at Her Feet."

Arnold Kent, Paramount leading man, and William Austin are also in the supporting cast. The picture is being directed by Luther Reed.

"Eloise," the pre-war French taxicab imported by Fox Films to play a part in the screen version of "Seventh Heaven." It will go on a ballyhooing trip under its own power.

Nearing the End

"Rich Men's Sons," Columbia's comedy drama of life among the four hundred, entered this week upon its final stages of production.

Miss Daw in Cast

Marjorie Daw was the only woman taken on location by Tom Mix in making scenes for "The Outlaws of Red River," for Fox.

Pathe has a wide and interesting range of Western stars in the persons of (left to right) Buddy Roosevelt, Leo Maloney, Bill Cody, Wally Wales and Buffalo Bill, Jr.

Richard Sears, Vet News Man, Goes to Pathe

Richard Sears, close personal friend of both President and Mrs. Coolidge, and acclaimed the best-known cameraman in New England, has been sited by Editor Ray Hall as Pathe News representative in that territory and is already active in behalf of the pioneer news film.

Sears, who has a record of 27 years as a news photographer, has been in charge of the New England activities for another news reel and resigned this important post to join Pathe News.

This Pathe News man has a great fondness for sea life and pictures of the sea, the instinct probably being inherited from three generations back. His father is still living and is 76 years old. He was a retired sea captain and before its destruction at sea, owned the Stag Hound which carried Lincoln's proclamation to Europe, beating a Cunard Liner by ten hours.

"Dick's" exploits would fill a book," aptly stated the "Boston Traveler."

McGregor Cast; Will Play Lead In "Kid Sister"

Two persons responsible for Columbia successes in the past have been selected to contribute to the making of "The Kid Sister," a comedy drama of backstage life.

Malcolm McGregor, the only person to be chosen for the cast so far, will have the leading male role. This marks the third production in which McGregor has appeared for Columbia this season.

Dorothy Howell, who has to her credit the stories or continuities of several of Columbia's best pictures, will do the scenario.

New Horseman For "U" Westerns

A new "find" has been uncovered at Universal City, it is announced. This time it is a Western star. His name is Ted Wells, but at Universal they refer to him as "the Sensation on Horseback." He is said to possess the double attainment of being a whiz in the saddle and a wow in the close-ups.

He has been signed on a long-term contract by the Laemmle organization and will be starred for next season in a series of seven feature pictures.

Fox Films Will Release 24 Short Subjects During May

James R. Grainger, General Sales Manager, Announces 6 Two-reel Comedies, 3 Varieties and 9 News

One of the Mack Sennett nymphs lending considerable background to "Catalina, Here I Come," released by Pathe.

FOX FILMS will release twenty-four reels of short subjects during May, according to James R. Grainger, general sales manager. Three production units will contribute to this output, made up of six two-reel comedies, three one-reel varieties and nine issues of the Fox News Reel. Four of the established Fox comedy brands will be among the two-reel releases. These will be three of the Imperials, one of the Helen and Warren Married Life series, one O. Henry and one Animal Comedy.

The Imperials are: "A Spanish Omelet," on May 8th; "Wine, Women and Sauerkraut," on May 22nd, and "A Midsummer Night's Steam," on May 29th.

The Helen and Warren release is titled "Just a Husband," and is released on May 1st.

"Man About Town" is the O. Henry release, while the Animal Comedy is "A Kangaroo Detective." These comedies are on the release schedule for May 15th. The May Variety releases are "Nature's Wonderland" on May 1st, "Reflections" on May 15th and "Monarchs of the Soil" on May 29th.

The Fox News issues will be released on the usual days.

Commenting on the May comedy releases, George E. Marshall, who supervises these productions, said they represented the best efforts of his unit. He pointed to the laugh-compelling main titles as typical of the complete productions, every foot of which, he said, contains laughs of the real kind.

"The Fox two-reel comedy unit is working like a great big well oiled machine. We have assembled the best group of directors, gagmen and titlers on the West Coast and they prove it with pictures. Reports from General Sales Manager James R. Grainger's staff of record-breaking business attest in the way we want that the exhibitors appreciate our efforts. When we please the theatre owners it means that our ultimate aim is achieved, that of pleasing the millions of motion picture theatre goers."

Varges' "Shots" Of Chinese War In International

The seriousness of the situation in war-ridden China is well illustrated in the current issue of International Newsreel, which contains most thrilling motion pictures of the evacuation of Nanking.

These pictures, made by Ariel L. Varges, International Newsreel's chief cameraman in China, and his native assistants, were brought to New York by airplane from Vancouver, and were the first to reach the outside world.

They are now being shown by International Newsreel at leading theatres through the country.

"Big" Bookings

Two Pathe fun-films, an Aesop Film Fable entitled "Fair Exchange," and a Hal Roach Our Gang comedy, "Love My Dog," were presented at the Roxy and Capitol Theatres during the weeks of April 9th and 16th.

Hawkinson Off On Foreign Tour

John L. Hawkinson, producer of the Grantland Rice single-reel Sportlight pictures for Pathe, sailed for Europe Wednesday, April 13th, on the Albert Ballin.

Mr. Hawkinson's trip abroad will be in the nature of a combination business and pleasure tour of Southern Europe and North Africa.

Gray Remains

Lawrence Gray, now working in "The Callahans and the Murphys," which George Hill is directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will continue his association with that company in Norma Shearer's new picture, "Liberty Bonds." This will be directed by Monta Bell.

Players See Baseball Epic

The entire personnel of the New York and Philadelphia American League baseball teams—the Yankees and the Athletics—were the guests, with members of their families, at the Embassy Theatre, New York, last Tuesday evening, where they saw Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Slide, Kelly, Slide," now in its fifth week of capacity business.

The party, which numbered seventy-five, gave the film an enthusiastic reception.

Dick Sears, Pathe News New England representative, and his friends from the White House—President and Mrs. Coolidge.

"With Will Rogers In Paris" On Pathe Program For May 1

WILL ROGERS, world-famous traveler, lecturer and entertainer, again comes to the Pathe short feature program offering in the little featurette, "With Will Rogers in Paris," for the week of May 1st. Other releases for this date include "Smith's Kindergarten," produced by Mack Sennett, featuring Mary Ann Jackson, Ruth Hiat and Raymond McKee; "Ginger and Genius," a Grantland Rice Sportlight; the fourth chapter of "Melting Millions," current Pathe serial; Pathe Review Number 18; "A Fair Exchange," an Aesop Film Fable; Topics of the Day, number 18, and two issues of Pathe News, numbers 38 and 39.

"With Will Rogers in Paris" is the third detour in the pilgrimage of this world-girdler.

Pathe Review Number 18 presents: "The Tears of Pele": Waterfalls of Hawaii, which, a legend tells us, pours forth tears from her crater, eternal weeping for an extinct volcano; "Money to Burn": Italy's mint is recalling banknotes and issuing silver, and 90,000,000 lira go up in smoke; "Death of the Flowers" (Pathecolor): A pictorial interpretation of verses from the famous poem by William Cullen Bryant; "An Unusual Interview": Continuing the "Animal Cracker" Series. In this one there is an exclusive interview with Bruno B. Grizzly, leading "heavy man" and sheik of the animal studios.

This Irishman Directs Roach's Jew Comedies

An Irish director making a series of Jewish comedies!

That's the latest development at the rapid-fire Hal Roach Studios, where things have a habit of happening. Leo McCarey, a true-blue son of old Erin, is poring over Hebraic folklore and historical data, to give to the world a Pathe series of real laugh-makers featuring Max Davidson, the diminutive character actor.

Work has now been started by McCarey on his third offering. Davidson is supported by a notable cast.

Expert Teaches Serial Players

Jack Ganzhorn, world's fastest revolver shot, was engaged to play an important part in "The Hawk of the Hills" now being made by Pathe, and to teach Walter Miller, who co-stars with Allene Ray, how to handle a six-shooter the way they did in Montana in the fast-shooting days of 1870.

Miss Hyams Wins!

So pleased are Warner Bros. with the work of Leila Hyams in her first picture for them that they have exercised their option on her contract to secure her services for a long term of years. Miss Hyams' initial role is in "The Brute," Monte Blue's starring picture listed for release on April 30th.

Roach's "Rex" In "No Man's Law" A Pathe Release

"Rex," the marvelous black stallion star of the screen, will be seen again in another entertaining Hal Roach feature production, titled "No Man's Law," scheduled for release by Pathe on April 24th.

"No Man's Law," is a story covering but twenty-four hours in its action and presenting only four human and four animal players as the principals in the cast.

In this, the fourth Pathe feature starring Rex, the king of wild horses, are Barbara Kent, James Finlayson, Oliver "Babe" Hardy and Theodore Von Eltz in the human supporting roles. Lady, the magnificent white mare seen previously with Rex, and two comic burros complete the cast.

Miss Hyams Signed

Johnny Hines has prevailed upon his producer, C. C. Burr, to sign Leila Hyams to play the leading feminine role in his forthcoming First National picture, "White Pants Willie." Miss Hyams scored heavily in "Summer Bachelors," and recently finished work in "The Brute."

Lupe Velez, Hal Roach's latest sensational discovery. A 17-year-old Mexican girl who will appear in Pathe comedies.

Young Story Sold

Richard A. Rowland, general manager for First National Pictures, Inc., has purchased for that company the world film rights to an original screen story by Howard Irving Young. "Tell the World."

Seven Two-Reel Star Comedies In Educational May Releases

WITH SEVEN TWO-REEL COMEDIES, five animated cartoon comedies, two one-reel comedies and four one-reel novelty and scenic subjects, in addition to Kinograms news reels twice a week, scheduled for release in May, Educational will have a well-balanced program of pictures next month.

Two favorites of comedy fans head the month's program in their respective two-reel laugh pictures, Lloyd Hamilton in "Breezing Along" and Jack Duffy in "Queer Ducks."

"Big Boy" fulfills the ambition of every youngster his age by becoming hero at a circus performance in "Atta Baby," the new Juvenile Comedy featuring the three-year-old star.

"Poodles" Hanneford, circus clown and bareback rider, returns to the screen in "Circus Capers," the initial Hemaïd Comedy on his new contract. James Jones directed the picture under the personal supervision of Jack White.

"New Sparkling," a new Jimmie Adams Comedy, is described as a spectacular fun picture. Lupino Lane is starred in "Who's Afraid?" a burlesque of current mystery plays. Bobby Vernon has a fast-moving farce, "Tie That Bull."

Mitchell Lewis Supports Chase In Funny Film

Mitchell Lewis, world-famous dramatic character man, invades the ranks of the comedians in Hal Roach's "Forgotten Sweeties," Pathe comedy starring Charley Chase.

"Forgotten Sweeties" has to do with the complications resulting from the close proximity in an apartment house of old affinities—both now married to later and more jealous loves.

Wide Demand For Vitaphone's Lincoln Caswell

One of the Vitaphone numbers in wide demand for the week of May 30th is the Lincoln Caswell interpretation of Abraham Lincoln as he delivers the famous Gettysburg Address.

This excellent presentation was given in New York during the week of Lincoln's birthday, in the three theatres in which the Vitaphone was installed at that time.

Caswell's impersonation received tremendous applause on Broadway.

Lloyd Hamilton crabbing the act in "Breezing Along," an Educational-Hamilton comedy.

Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. Schedules 208 Short Features

THE Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation's short feature department will have 208 subjects for release during the coming year, according to an announcement by Emanuel Cohen, director of short feature production.

In addition to the 104 issues of Paramount News, which go into the theatres twice weekly, there will be 26 Krazy Kat cartoons produced by Winkler Pictures, Inc., and 26 Out of the Inkwell cartoons produced by Out of the Inkwell Films, Inc.

The Winkler company also will produce five novelties and five short comedies and comedy dramas.

"Our complete group of short features," said Mr. Cohen, "will be announced within a few weeks, Paramount is putting into its short features the same high quality of production which has stamped its feature output. We will have a proven product of box office value."

Patsy Leaves Warners

Patsy Ruth Miller will have completed her Warner Brothers contract with the final scenes of her present starring vehicle, "The First Auto," according to her father and manager, Oscar W. Miller. Outside of a definite alignment for one picture with another company, nothing certain is scheduled for the future.

Zellner to Rejoin Mary

Arthur Zellner, who is now handling the New York engagement of Norma Talmadge's "Camille," at the Globe Theatre, will resume his work as eastern representative of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks after the "Camille" showing.

Death of Mrs. Rosson

Richard Rosson, directing "Rolled Stockings," was summoned to Hollywood from Berkeley, Calif., last week, by the death of his mother.

"U" Buys a Play

Universal announces that screen rights have been acquired for "Give and Take," the Aaron Hoffman stage success of several seasons ago.

"Monte Cristo"

In N. Y. Cameo

"The Count of Monte Cristo," with John Gilbert, Renee Adoree and Estelle Taylor, has proved so successful at the Cameo, New York, that it has been held over for a second week.

In reviews by New York critics, it was generally agreed that Gilbert does some of the best acting of his career.

The revival of the picture started at the Fox Terminal, Newark N. J., where it broke the house record. Joe Leo was in charge of the showing. Later it was shown in the Fox, Philadelphia, where it established what is believed to be a world record for a 2,400-seat house, taking in $36,000 in a six-day run.

Then it was brought to the Cameo, where it has been doing stand-up business.

New Boy For "Chester Gump"

In the new series of Gump Pictures for the 1927-1928 schedule, Universal will use a new boy actor to play the role of Chester Gump.

Owing to the necessity for Jackie Morgan's being in Canada for the next few years, due to the settlement of his parents' estate, it was necessary for Universal to look around for a new player for the role.

One has been found in seven-year-old Billie Butts.

Nancy Nash as she appears in Fox's "Rich But Honest."

Dorothy Devore, who will soon be featured in Dorothy Devore - Educational Comedies.

Norma in "The Dove"

Norma Talmadge is now making "The Dove" for United Artists with Gilbert Roland in the male lead. Noah Beery, Harry Myers and Eddie Borden are in the cast.

Jerry Madden and Lilial Lewis have a petting party in Fox's "A Dog's Pal," an animal comedy.

Many Changes In Kinograms Camera Staff

SEVERAL important changes and promotions in the camera and technical staffs of Kinograms Educational's newsreel, were announced this week by editors of Kinograms, effective immediately. The following additions have been made in the home office:

Fred Fordham, all-around cameraman; James Lyons, who has produced brilliant results during the short term of service with Kinograms, and Frank Dalrymple, a top-notch operator who loves to flirt with the dark-winged angel by teetering on the tops of high buildings or by performing other feats of daring.

George Doran, veteran Kinograms operator, is promoted to head cameraman in the home office. Charles Sanwald has been named camera technician because of the novel lighting effects he has designed and some of the magnificent photographic experiments he has made.

On the West Coast, J. L. Herrmann, one of the most widely known operators of Northern California, is placed in charge of the San Francisco district. Kinograms feels justly proud in welcoming Mr. Herrmann, whose friends are legion on the coast, and whose work is known to exhibitors from San Diego to Seattle.

In the editorial department, H. Butterfield, film editor, has been promoted to the assistant news desk which is presided over by H. E. Hancock. Forrest Izard remains in his position of managing editor. Announcement of further additions to Kinograms' staff will be made in the near future.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"Hiking Through Holland"

(Pathe—Two Reels)

This is the second of the series of two reeler comedy scenic illustrations featuring Will Rogers' recent trip abroad. This time he goes to Holland and the quaint costumes and manners of the people prove a fertile field for Roger's inimitable brand of humor. He appears in most of the scenes and jokes about the wooden shoes, windmills, dykes, and the heavy petticoats that the women wear. Volemdam, where they wear the old Dutch costumes, proves unusually interesting and there are a number of picturesque and attractive views. The subtitles, written by Rogers, is unusually amusing and their subject should prove a welcome attraction in theatres of all classes, from the first runs to the neighborhood houses. The first two offerings in this series promise well for those that are to come depicting the other European countries.

"Keeping His Word"

Universal—Two Reels

Charles King is featured in this Stern Brothers comedy, one of the fastest in the "Excuse Maker's" series. Charley takes Evelyn, his fiancée, and her robust mama, to the golf course, where he gets in bad with said mama when he hands her an explosive golf ball, by mistake (left by the villain!). His efforts to marry the girl are successful, however, but his mother-in-law puts him to work about the house, and it is only by a clever ruse that he manages to extricate himself from the "servant" class and enjoy the companionship of his charming little wife.

"Pathe Review 13"

Pathe—One Reel

HOW PIPE ORGANS are made, a Pathecolor section showing the picturesque and historic Battle Abbey, built in England about 1066 A. D., and the third installment of the Putnam Expedition to Greenland, make up this interesting screen magazine. Of greatest popular interest is the Greenland section, showing the explorers skirting the Northumberland Coast and arriving at Upernivik harbor and meeting the Eskimos.

"The Lunch Hound"

Bray—One Reel

CARTOONIST Walter Lantz has introduced some ingenious ideas in this Hot Dog Cartoon, making it one of the best of this new series. He lures Pete the Pup out of the woods by drawing a picture of a chicken and takes it away and then plays other tricks on the poor dog, who retaliates by blowing up a small fish and giving it to Lantz, who sees the joke when the fish blows up. Pete has an experience with a sausage and also with a policeman that should get the laughs.

"Smother O'Mine"

Universal—One Reel

Just because he did a good deed and tried to aid an old lady in distress by taking her to his home, Charles Puffy started something, as the old woman bossed the place and even turned Charlie's wife against him, but he had the satisfaction of seeing another chap get up against the same medicine when he kicked her out, and even welcomed jail as a relief. Elsie Tarron, pictured here, appears as the wife and Lydia Yeamans Titus is excellent and amusing as the old busybody. May be Charley was a bit rough with the old lady, and some patrons will not like to see him kick her, but she certainly merited drastic punishment.

"A Dogs Pal"

Fox—Two Reels

Little Jerry Mad-den, the cute and clever kid known as "Jerry the Giant," walks away with the honors in this clever and amusing Fox Animal Comedy, which should prove a riot with the children and amuse the grown-ups. The animals this time are dogs, a whole troupe of them, of all sorts and sizes, and they certainly mess things up generally. Jerry appears as a newsboy, who is befriended by a banker and is unjustly accused of stealing a little girl's pocketbook. With the aid of the dogs, a whole household is kept in an uproar and the arrival of the banker vindicates Jerry. It is a bright and enjoyable comedy and one of the best of this amusing series.

"The Medicine Man"

Pathe—One Reel

IT WAS LUCKY FOR Farmer Al in this amusing Aesop's Fable cartoon, that he was trying his hand at selling hair tonic, for when he accidentally invaded a bear's den the mouse came to his rescue. Little mousie poured the tonic on a tiger and the tiger grew a mane and by wiping off his stripes he looked like a lion. In gratitude he rushed in and saved Al from being devoured.

"Slipping Wives"

(Pathe—Two Reels)

Not one, but two well-known stars of feature productions are offered by Hal Roach in the cast of this two-reeler, Priscilla Dean and Herbert Rawlinson, with several of the familiar Roach comedians in support, making this an exceptional aggregation even for a Hal Roach comedy. The presence of the stars together with the good word of the supporting players, plus amusing situations and gags should make this a good attraction for any type of audience. Miss Dean is cast as a wife who is losing her husband's love. She hires another man to make love to her and between this and the fact that he mistakes another friend for the real husband, he manages to ball everything up for the merriment of the spectator. In the main it is farce comedy although Stan Laurel in the role of the paid lover introduces considerable slapstick.

"Kelcy Gets His Man"

Universal—Two Reels

Edmund Cobb again appears in his familiar role as a member of the Canadian Mounted Police in this story of fur thieves in the Northwest. The plot concerns the attempt of Cobb to arrest a pretty girl's brother. She begs a few minutes with him and apparently the boy tries to escape. It develops that it was a ruse and that it is the girl who has ridden away. She is kidnapped by the thieves and the boy and the mountie rescue her and the mountie wins the girl. An action story that follows along familiar lines.

"Smith's Surprise"

Pathe—Two Reels

A chronic "butinsky" started all of the trouble in this issue of the Smith Family series featuring Ruth Hiatt, pictured here; Raymond McKee and baby Mary Ann Jackson. Smith's wife decides to give him a big surprise by buying a flivver on his birthday. Of course, the salesman has to make several trips with her to teach her to drive it and here is where the "butinsky" puts in his work, making Smith believe his wife is proving unfaithful. Fortunately, this troublemaker gets it in the neck for his pains. There are a lot of funny situations and plenty of true-to-life touches and this comedy should prove a popular one. It is one of the best of the series.

"Forgotten Sweeties"

Pathe—Two Reels

A breezy little farce comedy idea serves as the foundation of this two reeler starring Charley Chase. It all happens because a former sweetheart of Charley's, married to a big jealous husband, lives just across the hall. Charley's wife and the big fellow get jealous and Charley's wife moves to another apartment, while the other couple move into his apartment. The note advising Charley of this goes astray and when Charley invaded the wrong apartment and proceeds to retire, things begin to happen in a rush. It is a capital little comedy.

"Pathe Review 14"

Pathe—One Reel

ALONG WITH A SECTION showing how sugar beets are grown, harvested and converted into sweetness, and another containing beautiful scenes in color of the French Riviera, is an exceptionally clever and amusing section that should especially delight the little ones. It shows the various animal actors in Jack Rounan's troupe engaged in making an all-animal movie. There are geese, monkeys, calves, etc. Clever as well as amusing. The views of the French Riviera show it to be a regular scenic paradise and explain its wide popularity as a pleasure resort.

NOTES ABOUT WIDE-AWAKE EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGE MEN FROM ALL POINTS

Pennsylvania

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Pittsburgh, Pa., Apr. 21.

WORK was started the past week on the proposed extension or addition to the Orpheum theatre building owned by the Hepinger Amusement Company at Clarion. The plans for the proposed addition were approved by the state authorities several weeks ago and the contract for the building has been awarded to John E. Trunk who will carry the work to completion as soon as possible, it being expected that the building will be completed by the middle of June. The house will have a capacity of slightly over 500 persons.

Jack Cohen, for the past year salesman of the local Universal branch, resigned his position last week, and states that he is going to take a two-week vacation, his first in six years.

Manager R. H. Haines, of First National, is back after a flying business trip to the New York home office.

Among the out-of-town exhibitor visitors to Film Row early in the week was H. E. Hammond, formerly owner of the Star, Union City, and who is to shortly open the Lyric theatre at Erie. Mr. Hammond, when in town, makes his headquarters at the offices of the M. P. T. O. of W. Pa., and W. Va., in the Hotel Henry, and urges brother exhibitors to emulate this example assuring them that by regularly visiting Secretary Fred J. Herrington, exhibitors may learn some things about the industry which they should know. He has always been a loyal supporter of the organization, and is putting forth every effort to bring to the convention a large crowd of theatre owners from up the Erie way.

Nat Barach, Division Manager for Warners, visited the Steel City branch the past week.

Mr. Thomas opened his beautiful suburban theatre, the Palace, at Parkersburg, W. Va., on April 4th.

Recent exhibitor visitors to Film Row included: Miss McGinley, Elizabeth; Samuel Haimovitz, New Kensington; Nick Anas, Wellsburg and B. E. Cupler, Washington.

Barnesboro

"Jake" Smith, popular theatre owner of Barnesboro, is the first exhibitor to make hotel reservations here for the exhibitor convention. "Jake" is bringing the "missus" along.

Harry Handel, owner of the Centre Square theatre, Pittsburgh, sprung a surprise on his many friends on April 12th when he journeyed to Jeanette, and was married to Miss Freda Lees.

Picture Showman Takes a Holiday to See Pictures

Albany, April 21.—Remember the story of the old cabby who came to town to see the sights, and then rode around and around? That's Alex Sayles, up-to-date, and manager of the Leland Theatre in Albany, N. Y. Mr. Sayles took a three-day vacation to New York City to see the sights. When he returned home, someone asked him what he had seen. Mr. Sayles replied: "I went to the Paramount Theatre, to the Rivoli, to the Strand, to the Capitol, to the Roxy and a few others. I saw a lot of pictures." It later turns out that many of the pictures have been booked for early showing at the identical theatre, of which Mr. Sayles is manager.

Mt. Washington

Henry W. Gauding, of the Lincoln theatre, Mt. Washington, is at present visiting at the home of a sister in Elwood, Indiana, accompanied by Mrs. Gauding who has been ill, and for whose benefit the trip has been taken. Mr. Gauding writes this column that his wife's condition is improving rapidly, however they will not return to Pittsburgh for at least another month. Mr. Gauding exceedingly regrets that he will be unable to attend the forthcoming exhibitor convention here.

New York

Moving Picture World Bureau,
Albany, N. Y., Apr. 21.

MOTION picture theatre changes, actual as well as prospective, include the sale of theatres in Hillsdale and Copake, by F. C. Adams, who has been conducting the houses, to MacIntyre and Ferguson, of Copake. G. L. Burdick, of Deruyter, is negotiating to sell the equipment of his theatre and will move to Syracuse. Negotiations are now on between Eli Rosenbaum, running a house in Ogdensburg, and C. P. Gilmore, of Syracuse, who recently acquired a theatre in Saranac Lake, and who may take over the Ogdensburg house.

The exhibitors are blossoming out this spring with some particularly beautiful cars, indicative of a good winter's business. Mike Kallet, of Oneida, who has been spending considerable time in Florida and Havana, arrived on the Row last week, with a chauffeur, driving a car as big as they come. Jules Berinstein, of Albany, also appeared during the week with a handsome car. Not to be outdone, Alex Herman, local manager for Pro-Dis-Co, and incidentally, second in the United States in the sales contest, will buy a new car next week.

Chris Buckley, owner of the Leland and the Clinton Square Theatres in Albany, spent Easter Week in Atlantic City.

After all— isn't "atmosphere" the heart of good Showmanship?

It makes a play; it makes a sketch, it makes a picture. And the "atmosphere"—the whole impression—of your show-house itself is most vital of all.

Here is a paint—a plastic paint—for your walls and ceilings that will produce for you any texture or tone, in any "period" or modern effect. It is Textone—time tried and perfected by a nation-wide organization of wall specialists.

Any competent painter-decorator can apply Textone and texture it in any of the many beautiful styles you may select.

The coupon will show and tell you all about it.

California Fears Ticket Limit and Censor

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Berkeley, Cal., Apr. 21.*

SEVERAL measures affecting the moving picture industry are under consideration by the State Legislature now in session at Sacramento and representatives of the Allied Amusement Industries of Northern California have had representatives on the ground to keep in touch with the situation. Measures proposing censorship and limiting sale of theatre tickets to seats immediately available have been side-tracked. Among the measures passed is one requiring the installation of toilet facilities with running water in connection with the operating booths of moving picture houses. This measure was unopposed, since theatre owners in general have long since provided such facilities.

A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., was a visitor at San Francisco early in March, coming up from Los Angeles.

G. A. Hickey, the newly appointed Pacific Coast district manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, paid the San Francisco branch a visit a short time ago and was taken on a tour of the San Joaquin Valley by branch manager G. E. Parsons.

C. N. Peacock, manager of the Paramount exchange at Los Angeles, paid the San Francisco branch a visit recently.

T. F. Tucker, of Kingsburg, Cal., paid a visit to San Francisco's Film Row recently. He was formerly connected with the Regent and Temple theatres of this city before seeking a rural retreat. Other recent visitors were W. F. Jacobs, of Auburn, and Charles Fraler, of Tracy.

Yuba City

Mrs. F. E. Smith, of Smith's Theatre, has been elected president of the newly organized Yuba-Sutter Business Women's Club.

Berkeley

H. W. Sherburne, for the past year in charge of the U. C. Theatre, has been transferred to San Jose, Cal., where he will have charge of the Mission Theatre, of the West Coast chain, and where he will also handle the press work for the new California Theatre. He has been succeeded as manager of the U. C. Theatre at Berkeley by William K. Mitchell, formerly manager of the Senator Theatre, Oakland.

San Jose

Some extensive improvements, including the installation of a new lighting system are being made in the American Theatre by James Beatty.

Merced

The Golden State Theatre & Realty Corp. is making preparations to expend about $20,000 in improvements in its Merced house.

D. S. Mitchell division manager for Universal, paid the San Francisco exchange a visit the second week in March on his way to the Pacific Northwest. Mr. Mitchell was for several years manager of the Los Angeles exchange, and took over his present position but a short time ago.

James Keogh, of the Keith-Albee Circuit, recently paid San Francisco a business visit.

Santa Cruz

H. V. Harvey, of Watsonville, Cal., has succeeded J. A. Harvey as manager of the Cameo Theatre at Santa Cruz, according to advices from the seaside city.

Tonapah, Nev.

The Butler Theatre, operated for years by Jules Smith, has been purchased by S. J. Kastner, who has been seeking a house in Nevada for some time. Tonapah is but about twenty miles from Weepah, where a gold strike was made recently, and is profiting by the mining rush.

Indiana

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Indianapolis, Ind., Apr. 21.*

WILLIAM FOX, head of the Fox Film Corporation, has announced that he will build a downtown motion picture house in Indianapolis. It will seat 5,000 and will be known as the Fox-Roxy, the second of a "Roxy" chain. According to plans the theatre will be completed by January 1, 1929.

Incorporation papers for the Western Indiana Theatre Company have been filed with the secretary of state. Capitalization is placed at $125,000. The corporation intends operating a theatre in Terre Haute. The members are Sieber R. Nicholson, William A. Brennan, and Russell T. Cook, all of Indianapolis.

The Colonial Theatre recently sold to the Capital Amusement Company of which Frank J. Rembusch is president, will re-open Sunday, with "Beau Geste" as its first attraction. Earl Cunningham, recently of Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation in New York, comes here as manager of the Colonial.

A motion picture theatre costing about $75,000 will be built by Albert B. Heady at Tenth and Bosart streets. It will have a seating capacity of 700, and will be completed in August. It will be known as the Eastland theatre.

Terre Haute

Theodore W. Barhydt, age fifty-seven, theatre owner and manager, died at his home last week. He was a former leasee of the Grand theatre, and belonged to the companies which built the Hippodrome and Indiana theatres. He was widely known in theatrical circles of the country.

St. Louis, Mo.

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
St. Louis, Mo., Apr. 21.*

A CONCERTED drive to put over Daylight Saving has been started in St. Louis by the Chamber of Commerce and special interests that would benefit through the changing the sun time in the Mound City and vicinity. Lon Sanders, chairman of the members' conference of the Chamber in a letter calling a conference, pointed out that St. Louis is at a disadvantage because most of the large cities in the East have officially adopted the daylight savings plan. Sam Werner, head of the United Film Service, spoke in opposition as the representative of the St. Louis Film Board of Trade, while Spyros P. Skouras, president of the Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company, also attended. The Skouras interests operate a number of airdomes that would be vitally affected if the bill is put through the Board of Aldermen.

Outdoors Calls Exhibitors

Albany, N. Y., April 14.—Every man to his taste, and so this month finds Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Stanley theatres in Albany and Troy, all pepped up with the opening of the trout fishing season and inclined to talk little else, even though the chances for getting along for a day or two along a stream, are rather remote. Chris Buckley, owner of the Leland and the Clinton Square Theatres in Albany, doesn't care a rap about fishing, but is now looking forward eagerly to the opening of the baseball season and the racing month at Saratoga.

Canada

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Ottawa, Canada, Apr. 21.*

A RATHER disastrous fire occurred at Low, Quebec, a lumbering town, 35 miles north of Ottawa on April 12, when seven business buildings were destroyed at an early hour. One of the structures was the local moving picture theatre which was owned by Harry Mencher. This theatre, which had been built last fall, had a seating capacity of 300. The theatre loss was estimated at $4,000.

The Canadien-Francais Theatre, St. Catherine Street East, Montreal, is the latest theatre in Montreal to be ordered closed by the Public Buildings Safety Commission. Nine local theatres have been closed permanently or otherwise because of alleged risks.

The appropriation of the Ontario Government this year for the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors, Toronto, is $24,400, largely for salaries, which include: Chairman, $3,500; vice-chairman $2,700; three censors at $2,500 each; censor of theatre advertising, $2,500; two projection machine operators, $1,800 each; stenographer, $1,100; and contingencies, $3,500.

Laurence Stuart, formerly manager of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, a Famous-Players downtown house, has become manager of the Regent Theatre in Sudbury, in Ontario.

Montreal

The twelfth theatre in the group operated within the city limits of Montreal by United Amusements Corp., Limited, of Montreal, has been opened in Rosemount district, this being the Rosemount Theatre, with a seating plan of 1,500. The Rosemount is largely a one-floor theatre, although there is a small balcony with loge accommodation, 350 chairs being located there. It is interesting to note that the regular policy of the Rosemount will be to conduct two-feature programmes, although the theatre opened with the one feature. Regular bills will also include short subjects and, on special occasions, there will be stage attractions. The manager of the Rosemount is J. E. Blaine of Montreal, while other officers of the company include Ernest Cousins, president; Isidore Crepeau, vice-president, and George Nicholas, managing director. E. Gobet of Montreal was the builder.

Christie Lake

Robert Marks of Red Cedar Inn, Christie Lake, in Eastern Ontario, has made a definite offer of $25,000 cash for a marathon swim in Christie Lake with George Young of Catalina fame as the star. Robert Marks is one of seven brothers who have been known throughout Canada for more than half a century for their Marks Bros. theatrical ventures. Robert Marks had his first show way back in the '70's. Ernie Marks, one of the brothers, is the proprietor of the Marks Theatre in Oshawa and, this year, was elected an alderman of that city.

Manager Leduc of the Casino Theatre, Ottawa, Ont., presented "The Passion," a religious film depicting the life of Christ, during the week of April 11. This feature, which had the approval of the Roman Catholic clergy, was taken in the Holy Land with a company of French artists. Ordinarily, the Casino offers moving picture attractions along with stock burlesque presentations.

The Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, formerly operated by Capital Amusements, Limited, has been reorganized and will be continued by the Brouse Estate, which owns the theatre building. J. T. Moxley will continue as manager of the theatre, it is stated. The Imperial was one of several theatres operated by the late Harry Brouse, charter director of First National.

Building Good-Will Is Best Asset the Live Theatre Manager Can Build Up

RECENTLY a movement was started in Torrington, Conn., to forward a local movement. The newspapers took it up, and with this accomplished the committee having the matter in charge decided to ask for the co-operation of the Alhambra theatre. They visited the theatre for this purpose and were surprised to see a slide on the screen showing a picture of the building it was desired to purchase and an urge that the citizens give their support to the movement. John J. Scanlon, who does the exploitation work for the house, had anticipated them and on his own initiative declared the house in Naturally the committee left the theatre feeling that the Alhambra stood for progress. It associated the house with the idea of civic service, and much favorable comment was made at the action of the theatre in making this unasked contribution.

The cost of the slide was trifling, yet it will do the theatre far greater good than columns of straight theatrical advertising. It will make direct ticket sales to persons who do not usually attend. It will give the house a prestige that may be needed some time should an fanatic seek to impose foolish regulations.

Scanlon knows, as all real showmen know, that the business of advertising a theatre is not confined to the announcement of the pictures to be shown on certain dates. He knows that he is selling the house as an institution as well as a place of amusement. He knows that a thoughtful courtesy such as this will do a good that cannot be directly estimated in dollars and cents values.

The other day H. M. Addison moved from Binghamton to Buffalo to take over the new Commerford theatre in the city on the lake. In Binghamton it is felt that his departure is a civic loss. As we have frequently reported in these pages, he was always first to be called upon when any civic movement called for theatrical cooperation. He named an imposing committee and then took off his coat and went to work to put it over single-handed. He knew that while our leading citizens like to see their names on committee lists, they seldom are willing to do the work involved, so he went at it alone and put it over.

As a result he made the Binghamton Theatres Company as much a part of the city as the Town Hall. They were not merely money grabbing private enterprises, but a part of the functioning machine of city government. His going is widely regretted, but he still leaves the theatres in the position he created. It's up to his successor.

These are but two outstanding instances. Several pages might be filled with as brief mention of others who have made themselves something far more important than "the feller that runs the movie theatre." They are solid citizens, often filling responsible positions. They belong to the town, and their position is reflected in the better position their houses occupy in public estimation.

Recently the New York Public Schools held their mid-year graduations. Two schools came to nearby theatres to arrange for the use of the auditorium for the graduation exercises; the school assembly room being too small.

In one instance the permission was cheerfully granted. The house was well warmed, service by a polite staff and the faculty went back to the school confirmed rooters for the theatre. Several times in the past two months the teachers have voluntarily called the attention of their classes to certain features at the theatre. The cash value of that mention had been well over a thousand dollars, and it still runs.

The second school was even larger. After he had sought to persuade the principal to charge an admission, to be split between the house and the school, the manager finally consented to loan his auditorium.

The exercises were held one particularly cold morning, but the steam had just began to come into the pipes when the house was opened. The doorman was surly, the assistant manager got into several small rows with the teachers, and the parents of the pupils were shoved and hustled about.

As a result the pupils are indignant and the house has lost patronage instead of gaining. It had a wonderful chance to win good-will—and threw it away.

Unless you are alert to profit by every opportunity to serve, you are losing out. Often service will cost less than a painted banner and bring in many times the cash return. Make good-will an asset, but back it with a genuine desire to serve. Feel that you are being favored, not giving one.

Edna Wallace Hopper Was All Round Advertisement

H. M. Addison has been playing Edna Wallace Hopper, and he writes that she was the biggest space stealer he ever had—and that's a lot, coming from Addy. He's a couple of space robbers himself. But here's the recapitulation. He got four and a half pages of solid reading notice and fourteen pages of advertising. This is not an advertisement for Edna. It's a boost for Addy. He worked the stunts.

It was very simply done. He knew that the 62-year-old woman who looks like her own grand daughter was certain to be interesting. So he capitalized that interest. He got a supply of cuts and gave them to advertisers. He arranged to have them advertise that she used, ate, wore or admired the wares of that particular advertiser. He even had her write an insurance company for permission to go over their home offices—and that was good for more than a quarter of a page. It was not that Mrs. Hopper carried the advertising. It was merely that her personality could be used to spring all sorts of stunts IF you knew how, and Addy does know how.

He says that she is a wonderful draw for three days in a town the size of Binghamton, but he would be afraid of a week. She drew 2200 women to a special matinee.

Mr. Addison seems to have made an unusual clean-up with this attraction, but that's because he knows how to go about it.

Pennants

M-G-M has prepared a flashy pennant for Slide, Kelly, Slide, that is decidedly useful in decorating the lobby. After they have served their purpose they should be distributed to the children. Even though their advertising possibilities are gone so far as Kelly is concerned, they will be treasured by the youngsters and will still serve as a reminder of the house.

TWO OF THE SCOREBOARDS USED IN LOS ANGELES

These were relics of last fall and were painted over to fit "Slide, Kelly, Slide." The man and girl went through all the motions of scoring the runs and made frequent megaphone announcements about the pictures and its players.

Here's A Lobby Card for Any Brand of Comedy

Hutchinson Has Design For Comedy Lobby Card

Here's a useful design for a lobby announcement for a comedy—most any comedy. It was designed by Bob Hutchinson, of the Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, for the Pathe-Mabel Normand comedy, The Nickel Hopper, but it can be used for any comedy or can be made a permanent frame for all comedies, the titles being changed, but the design retained as a sort of trademark. In time they will come to look for the clown when they look for the comedy title and the mere sight of the stand will serve to remind of the comedy.

HUTCHINSON'S DESIGN

The color scheme is not given, but we assume that bright colors were used, and a brilliant red should have been made the body color of the circle with a vivid blue or green for the base and top. It does not pay to be delicately artistic in announcing laugh features. Keep the subdued tones for the dramatic features and beat the color drum for the comedy section. That will pay better and carry over the idea.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

John Barrymore in "The Beloved Rogue" was the feature photoplay of a show which ran 2 hours and 18 minutes, the picture itself requiring 1 hour and 37 minutes of that time.

Besides this screen subject there were four other incidents, one of which was the Mark Strand Topical Review, running 6 minutes, leaving 35 minutes for musical presentations.

Each of the deluxe performances was started off with Vitaphone presentations: Roger Wolfe Kahn and his Orchestra and the quartette from the third act of "Rigoletto," sung by Marion Talley, Beniamino Gigli, Giuseppe DeLuca and Jeanne Gordon of the Metropolitan Opera Company. These two Vitaphone numbers took up 18 minutes.

After the Topical Review came the Four Admirals, novelty singers. Their selections included some of the new numbers embracing "Yankee Rose," "Nesting Time" and "Hello Swanec, Hello." They appeared on the apron of the big stage and took up 7 minutes, with lights as follows: light blue and magenta spots across ceiling; green foots on production stage; blue borders; green side strips; bridges orange, dome steel blue.

Incident No. 4 was programmed as "An Intimate Dance Revue and opened with 8 girls of the ballet doing a number to the tune of "When You're In Love You'll Waltz." From this the Revue went to Deenova and Berinoff, adagio dancers and then the Revue closed with 16 girls doing a Tiller routine to the music of "Kinkajou" and "Where Is That Rainbow?" The Revue took up 10 minutes and lights were as follows: 2 light blue, 2 amber, 2 green, 4 orange side spots across green satine drop; 2 deep blue, 2 deep green open box lamps; bridge No. 1 violet floods head high; bridge No. 2 amber floods head high and the dome 2 flesh pink head high. In the ballet number magenta and light blue borders and box lamps; all previous side spots on. As the girls came off the stairs on the production in the Tilley dance bridges and dome picked them up with steel blue floods; bridges and dome going a finish of number.

Two New Ones

Ralph Goldberg, of the Sun Theatre, Omaha, thought up a couple of new ones for "The Fire Brigade." His lobby display was a shadow box showing a block of buildings before which were stationed pieces of apparatus obtained from a toy store. Light effects back of the buildings and from a spot across the lobby made the show very realistic.

Across the street he placed a dummy fireman, holding a rag baby on top of a cornice, with an arrow pointing up the side of the building urging the reader to note the height from which Terry makes his jump in the picture.

The combination kept business at the top for eleven days.

Counted the Blondes

Of course it did not mean a darned thing, but W. S. Perutz got a lot of kick out of counting blondes and brunettes when "Blonde or Brunette" played the Lincoln Theatre, Lincoln, Neb.

As an example a local store advertised that more brunettes than blondes patronized its cafeteria with "By actual count on March 17 between 11:30 and 12 122 brunettes and 30 blondes came for the noon luncheon at our cafeteria." If they knew that the blondes were mostly dining with their men friends at more expensive places, they were too polite to mention the fact. Anyhow it served to work up interest in the picture. Getting a number of stores interested was what made a big stunt of it.

TWO SHOTS OF THE LOBBY OF THE STILLMAN, CLEVELAND, DRESSED FOR SLIDE KELLY

Five hundred pennants were used in this display with five sixteen-foot banners, ten photographic enlargements, an electric scoreboard and some lithographic cutouts. Slide, Kelly, Slide is a circus picture and needs to be put over with plenty of noise and display if it is to sell to the greatest advantage. The money is there, but you must dig for it.

Finds Pathe News Gets Actual Cash Customers

For a long time this department has been urging the playing up of the short features, contending that they mean real money to most theatre owners. More than once someone has written in to challenge the statement that the news weekly can actually sell tickets that the dramatic feature will not.

generally leave immediately after the News is screened.

That's not guess work or supposition. It's cold fact. Make your entire program work for you by giving it a show in your newspaper work and lobby advertising. If patrons cared only for the long feature there would be no sense in employing the shorts. But the shorts are money in your pocket, so play them up.

This Calendar Design Is Alive a Full Month

Only a few weeks ago someone wrote in to ask about calendar cards, and we had to dig away back in the files to discover an example. They are not as much used as they were some years ago and yet there is no good reason why they should be forgotten, for nothing else will keep alive a full month and so completely put over the day and date of attractions. These are good anywhere, but are particularly useful for neighborhoods and small towns, if intelligently distributed.

Universal sends in the first calendar we have seen in some time, and about as good a layout as can be planned. It is used by Charles L. Hyde, of the Strand Theatre, Pierre, S. D., and the rings, which are not a part of the original design, shows the Universal bookings.

The card is nine by six inches, with the month's dates in red. These are overprinted with the main titles and sometimes the comedies in black. The vacant spaces are filled in with house talk, and in the ears are the calendars for the preceding and succeeding months. A hole is punched for hanging.

Mr. Hyde issues a similar card every month, getting them out between the 28th and 31st. People come to look for them, they have a special nail on which they hang, and each time the calendar is consulted the person is reminded of the shows at the Strand. And the reminder comes by day and date.

It is cheap, it is permanent and it is of value to the recipient. If you have forgotten about calendars, think about reviving the idea. You can dress them up with thumbnail cuts, but give more than half the space to the current month and use large figures. If you do you will find that the calendar is at least 90 per cent effective.

A NEAT FORM OF MONTHLY CALENDAR DISPLAY

Here's an old-time idea that has been dropped of late, though it is as good as ever. This is from Charles L. Hyde, of the Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. The rings show the Universal attractions used during March.

Always Works

Here's another old reliable dug up by the Strand Theatre, Iowa City, Ia., for "The Midnight Sun."

It offered a $10 prize for the best advertisement on "The Midnight Sun." Hundreds started to read up on the picture, in order to be able to turn out the right sort of copy, and so many actually wrote advertisements that the business and advertising managers of the paper were sorry they had promised to act as judges. It is one of the best ways there is to get people to read in advance, and yet it has been little used of late.

Long ago one theatre had a standing offer of $5 for any bank of sales talk it used. Not many were used, but the house ran one occasionally just to keep the others pepped up, and found it well worth the investment.

Hustler Used Assembly To Sell Barbara Worth

Pin the blue ribbon on M. N. Hustler, who claims the Capitol Theatre, Sacramento, Cal., as his place of business. In addition to crashing the news columns of the daily press he horned in on the journal of the State Assembly to the extent of a third of a page. All that is left now is to go and break into the Congressional Record.

It was very simple when you had it figured out. Public interest was centered in the Boulder Dam fight, then on. Hustler took his pen in hand and wrote of the menace of "the unharnessed torrents of the mighty Colorado river" to the residents of Imperial, (nee Death), Valley.

He pointed out that the epic of the settlement was known to comparatively few outside of the State until Sam Goldwyn put The Winning of Barbara Worth on the screen. And so "to bring closer home to the hearts and minds of the people of Northern California and to the members of the State Legislature" the story of that accomplishment, the picture had been booked into Sacramento this wonderful picture and the management of the Capitol Theatre invited the Legislature to attend the Monday evening performance.

The letter was read in the Assembly and ordered printed. It was sandwiched in between a resolution approving a bill then under consideration and a message from the Senate, which is about as close to pure reading as even a press agent could ask.

It didn't just happen. Hustler had to think it out.

A COVERED WAGON PRAM FOR WINNING OF BARBARA WORTH
It did not cost much to cover a wagon with cloth and the only waste was the strips of sign cloth used for the banners; yet the wagon was a knockout for John B. Carroll, of the Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

Made a Local Fire Get Serial Off to Big Hit

One of the chief reasons why F. G. Spencer owns a lot of theatres in Nova Scotia instead of just one is his quick thinking and ability to be timely. Just before he was ready to open the Universal serial, "The Fire Fighters," at the Unique Theatre, St. John, the local paper came out with a streamer head about a fire in a rooming house. As soon as he saw that there had been no fatalities he telephoned the paper to hold the type for him.

Using only the first page, he red inked it with an announcement for "The Fire Fighters" and then took the back of the sheet; which was printed on ordinary news stock, to tell all about the serial, hooking in to the rescues at the local fire.

It was so timely that when he gave the first chapters the house was packed to the doors. It was better than the usual red ink, and gave him a chance to do a lot more talking.

He uses one halftone and one line cut, and while the former will not reproduce well, you can gather that the line cut is more forceful. The Durham paper uses a rather light impression and the halftone comes up very weak. It's a good plan to avoid halftones unless you have nothing else you can put in, for it is seldom that a halftone prints up with the strength of a line cut.

Mr. Nichols has made a very nice layout for his type, and the printer has followed him closely, but we think that cropping the name and title from the Chaney head would have improved the results very considerably. Here it is not needed, since it merely repeats what the type tells much more clearly, and at the same time it clouds up the title.

The pointing hand is a fine attractor, to get additional attention for the cut, and the bold lettering of star and title, unhampered by nearby type, gets the title and the cut over at the first look instead of requiring study. This should be the aim of every display, but it is not always achieved. The only weak line here is that "See the picture," which means nothing. That's what the entire space is supposed to say, and it does not require to be put into words.

GETTING CONTRAST

The figure is made as bold as black ink can do it, in order to gain the suggestion of strength. It needs a background, else it would be too heavy. With a background drawn in the same medium, the full effect of the figure would have been lost and it would have been necessary to mortise; and make an ugly mortise, at that, in order to get the title and names. Using benday overcomes this situation. It gives a sufficiently strong ground, against which both the white title and the black star names show with full force. It gives full value to the figure and strikes precisely the right color note.

Benday is comparatively little used in advertising spaces, but even where the benday machine is regarded as too costly, there are printed sheets which give the same effect with little more care. Here benday makes attractive what otherwise would have been an ugly layout.

Works Type in Nicely In Building on a Cut

Apparently taking a cut from the press book on "A Kiss in a Taxi," F. K. M. Plessner, of the State Theatre, Reading, Pa., has worked in his type announcements with excellent judgment, avoiding the temptation to fill in with a lot of handwork, and even avoiding over-large type faces, knowing that he will get as good a display from a twelve-point light as he could get from an eighteen point bold, and do it without getting the space all dirtied up.

If you have one of these messy artists who likes to spill ink by the bottle, show him this display and ask why he can't get as good. Probably he will be there with some alibi, but he don't take it. Plessner is fighting slightly larger spaces on either side of this, and getting the most attention because his space is the most attractive. He gets his announcement over in twelve and eight point, and does it neatly and effectively. He works a rather large space, for this drops eight and a half inches down three, but this is because he has to keep step with the other theatres, not because he needs all that space in which to get his message over. He could have done as well in two sixes were it not for the fact that he then would have suffered through contrast with the larger spaces he other houses are taking. It would be a good thing for the houses could they get together and agree on a maximum space. They are all wasting lineage and only the newspapers profit, but so long as one house makes the splash the others must follow suit or lose the moral effect of equal space.

The advertisement carries an ample type appeal, and is very nicely laid out. It demonstrates that an attractor cut does not necessarily have to dominate the space in order to help he selling.

Stepping This Cut Gives Attractive Open Layout

Here's another first-class space from Warner's State Theatre, Pittsburgh. It is not as large as it looks in the reproduction, since it is only two columns wide, dropping down about eight inches and getting just as much display as a three columns would have done with the space entirely filled with type.

EFFECTIVE LAYOUT

There is no expensive art work here. The cut has been notched and a panel laid into the space set in all type, and not too much type, at that. The special small features and the midnight matinee are cared for in a separate box, taking up no more room and yet getting at least double the display.

With plenty of white space at the top, the small house signature gets precisely the same playup as a heavy place clear across the space. More display has been gained with sixteen inches than some of the other houses achieve in the same issue with thirty inches or better, done in the usual hand work so dear to the Pittsburgh agents. This stands easily the neatest display on the page and the only one making proper use of white space and type in combination. It should be a simple matter to lay out advertising like this, but the other houses keep right on letting the State skim the cream. They do not seem to wake up; at least for any great length of time.

Effective Line Cut Is Improvement on Stipple

Most of the displays on "Flesh and the Devil" have been in half-tone, and many of them have been made to yield striking effects, but we know of nothing that equals the attraction value of this cut from the space of the Strand Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., on this M-G-M.

A DRAMATIC CUT

There is drama in this well-drawn pose, there is a vigor that even the most erratic of the half-tones lack, and it gets more attention and makes more of an instant impression than the best printed newspaper half-tone.

Half-tone has its uses, but it seldom works as well in a newspaper display as a really well-drawn line cut and backed by the solid type; which would have been too strong for a half-tone illustration, this three nines stands one of the best displays done on the Garbo-Gilbert offering.

There is a little too much type in the upper panel to make good display, but this is necessary to display the current program and still get over the coming feature, but the space given to "Flesh and the Devil" is unusually good.

Possibly line cuts would be more often used if they were better done. Too many of them are weak in drawing or lacking in proper contrast. This is the most common fault in the press book cuts. Most agents seem to feel that if there is "art" in the layout, it does not matter what sort of art it is, and it is but seldom that exhibitors are given a cut with so strong a sales value as that shown here. Good artists are employed, but they do not seem to study what constitutes good advertising art. If you will study this cut you will realize that the effect is gained through the use of comparatively few lines, but these are flowing and graceful, suggestive of original work and not of an inked over photograph. Most of the contrast comes from the dark coat of the man, which throws into greater prominence the light robes of the woman. There is vigor and motion to the pose.

Sometimes we feel that it would be a good thing if the art heads of the production companies merely showed their artists the stills and then hid them away before the poses could be exactly copied. This seems to be one of the main reasons for stilted and wooden art work. Since a single drawing may be used in several hundred papers, it would seem worth while to get the best possible drawing.

Does Most Selling On The Rather Snappy Cut

Generally a cut is mostly attractor, but now and then cut will sell better than type argument, as witness this three sevens from the New Theatre, Baltimore, on "Ankles Preferred." This display is frankly selling legs, to match the title, and eight pairs of legs does it very effectively.

LEGGY, BUT EFFECTIVE

This sort of cut would not serve a good purpose with many titles, but from ankles to legs is but a short span, and it is to be assumed that with legs as the chief sales angle, the greater the stress given the legs, the stronger the appeal. Probably this will act as a deterrent in the case of the patrons who want drama, but they would not care for the play if they did come and frankness is the best appeal, since it will sell the story to those who will be appreciative.

The single cut, just above the title, might have sold, but the smaller cuts do a great deal more than half the selling. The main cut gets the idea in motion, but the addition of these smaller sketches gives the emphasis that will complete the sale. You could not do the same thing with one cut, no matter what the size. It is the iteration that does the trick, which is something to remember, if you do not already know it. The copy has been written to match the cuts and the advertisement presents a very harmonious whole.

Reviewers' Views On Feature Films

Edited by C.S. Sewell

PROBABLY NO PICTURE ever produced has been awaited with such widespread interest or created as much discussion as "The King of Kings" the Cecil B. DeMille production based on the life of Christ.

The difficulties under which he labored were tremendous, for here is a subject that is so well known in every Christian land that every one has his own ideas and mental image of our Saviour, and that these are not all in harmony has given rise to various sects, which is not strange when we remember that the account of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, men who walked with Him are at times at variance. Then too, Mr. DeMille was faced with the deep-rooted aversion on the part of a great multitude against the impersonation of the infinite Christ by finite man.

In presenting Christ on the screen, Mr. DeMille chose not to follow in the path of previous films in making his picture a chronological biography, but to choose from the wealth of material open to him in this the most dramatic of all stories, the situations which he felt would best present the dramatic angle and at the same time not go counter to the highlights of the familiar sacred story.

That he has done his task well under the circumstances and turned out a magnificent and stupendous production; a masterly piece of craftsmanship, there can be no doubt. Artistically it is great, photographically it is beautiful to behold with some of the sequences made more striking by use of technicolor. The subject, too, has been handled with dignity and an air of reference and sincerity that is beyond cavil. From a dramatic standpoint, Jeanie Macpherson has fashioned a story that commands rapt attention, and emotionally there are many scenes that are deeply stirring and the general effect of the picture is spiritually uplifting.

In the very nature of things, here is a subject about which there is the maximum of divergence of opinion, and it is made more so by the fact that by no means all of the life of Christ as it is generally known is not shown, and no matter what highlights were chosen to be used, the picture is open to widespread questioning as to why this angle was subordinated or omitted in its entirety while another was inserted or played up. We believe that more than any other picture ever made, "The King of Kings" will be provocative of discussion, that it is a production which will cause widely different reactions with different people, hardly any two being identical and that it is impossible for any one person to foretell its reception with the general public.

"The King of Kings"

Magnificent Production of Dramatic Episodes
In Life of Christ, Produced by Cecil De Mille

Structurally, the picture is episodic with the emphasis on the dramatic highlights beginning with the showing of the Magdalene in her sumptuous palace and ending with the appearance of Christ before a gathering of his disciples after the resurrection. Expert weaving together of the dramatic material saved the story from being more episodic and while this is one of the most striking technical achievements in consolidating for dramatic effect we are shown in apparently related succession situations which in the average mind are unrelated or occurred under different conditions. In a word, considerable liberty seems to have been taken not only with the handling of the material but with the sequence of events.

What has been omitted is apt to cause as much discussion as what has been used. For instance, there is nothing about the birth or boyhood of Christ, St. John, generally known as the beloved disciple is subordinated with no reference to the scene on the cross in which Christ gives his mother into John's care; nor is there the entrance of Christ into Jerusalem riding on a donkey. The guardian angel at the tomb, the Sermon on the Mount, the baptism by John the Baptist and the descent of the Holy Spirit, nor the Transfiguration, are not shown and the Ascension is only handled in a symbolical way with Christ fading out of the room of the disciples and appearing in glory saying "Lo, I am with you always."

From the standpoint of drama, the climax naturally comes with the Crucifixion and reaches its greatest height in the storm and earthquake scenes which follow. While these are well done in a huge scale, they nevertheless seem rather mechanical and movie-sque.

Some of the sequences we believe could be shortened to advantage and especially is this true of those which depict the pain and suffering of Christ, such as the scourging, the mockery of the Roman soldiers, the crown of thorns, the bearing of the cross, and the Crucifixion. But not only from the angle of entertainment, but from the spiritual side, we feel that less of the details and fewer closeups would have been preferable.

Tremendous interest naturally centers in the rendition of the role of Christ and H. B. Warner gives a splendid and sincere performance, at the same time only in fleeting moments does his work approach the idea of the spirituality of Christ. His make-up is good but the gentleness and spirituality that is so marked a part of the rendition of this role in the Passion Play at Oberammergau is entirely lacking. To a lesser degree this is also true of the portrayal of Mary the Mother by Dorothy Cumming.

This brings up the point of the wisdom on the selection of well-known motion picture players to appear in these reverential roles. So familiar are the faces of the majority of the cast to the regular picture fans that it will probably be a hard task to accept these actors and actresses as the real characters they represent entirely disassociated from their previous roles. In our opinion this has a marked effect on keeping the production on the plane of a motion picture rather than as a masterful rendition of the story of Christ.

Among the other players, Rudolph Schildkraut is easily the best as the Jewish High Priest, with Joseph Schildkraut giving an excellent performance as Judas. The performance of Ernest Torrence as Peter is especially noteworthy and Jacqueline Logan is fine as Mary Magdalene. In addition to the credited roles there is an enormous number in the mob scenes including many well known performers.

This story has been handled in such a manner as to steer clear of anything that might offend any sect or creed. Considering the varied and enormous difficulties Mr. DeMille has done a big job well and the picture marks an achievement for the screen, at the same time, with unquestionably the most emotionally appealing and dramatic story of all time before him, in our opinion he has not succeeded in reaching the heights. Possibly this is because they are so stupendous that only in our faith and imagination can we even approach them.

"Matinee Ladies"

Jazz Story of Cigarette Girl and a Gigolo
Features May McAvoy and Malcolm MacGregor

Warner Bros. present
"Matinee Ladies"
With May McAvoy
Directed by Byron Haskins
CAST:

Sally Smith.....May McAvoy
Bob Ward.....Malcolm MacGregor
Mrs. Aldrich.....Hedda Hopper
Mrs. Smith.....Margaret Seddon
Mannion.....Richard Tucker
Madame.....Cissy Fitzgerald
Length—6,352 Feet.

Bob gets a job as dancing partner in a roadhouse where Sally is cigarette girl. They quarrel when Bob accepts help from a "matinee lady" but he rescues her from a boat to which Mannion has taken her, during a storm, and wins her. Comedy drama.

MAY McAVOY IN the role of a cigarette girl in a flashy roadhouse and Malcolm McGregor as a law student who accepts a job as paid dancing companion while attending school at night, are the leading players in Warner Brother's jazzy melodramatic story of modern life "Matinee Ladies."

The title refers to idle wives and flappers who frequent the cabarets in the afternoon and spend their time in flirtations with the gigolos or paid dancing partners provided for them. The first half of the picture is devoted almost entirely to the budding and building up of a romance between cigarette girl and gigolo with much footage devoted to their love making in a park. This slows down the story and could be trimmed drastically with a consequent speeding up of the action. With the innocent acceptance of aid from a matinee lady by the hero, his discovery that her motives are far from disinterested, the quarrel with the cigarette girl and her attendance on a wild party, the story speeds up, and following jazz party stuff of a familiar type in a road house and on a private yacht there is an exciting but improbable climax in which the hero easily finds a drifting yacht in a severe storm and after a fight with the villain, rescues the girl.

May McAvoy gives a good performance but is capable of better roles and the same is true of MacGregor. Neither of these characters are strongly sympathetic. The appeal of this picture will be largely to those who have not tired of jazz melodramas and it will probably rate as a fair program attraction.

A TYPICAL TOM MIX vehicle is the Fox production "Outlaws of Red River," and this, as the picture public knows, means that it is a rapid action western, with plenty of heroism, a pleasing romantic angle, touches that get it away from the cut and dried formulas of the type, and plenty of snappy stunts, together with a smashing climax.

This time, Tom appears as a Texas Ranger who in addition to his hazardous duties is continually looking for a girl whose parents were killed when he was a lad. In trailing a notorious gang of bandits he finds the girl who is the adopted daughter of the leader and eventually rescues her.

A novel angle to the story is the fact that the girl is shown as actually being one of the bandit gang even aiding them in tipping off a raid on a stage coach, and the fact that the leader recognizes Tom as a ranger when he poses as a bandit to join the gang.

Needless to say, such a role proves entirely congenial to Tom. He gives a performance that will satisfy his enormous circle of fans and prove a riot with the youngsters. While decidedly improbable, the climax is a corker with a brand new thriller. The rangers drag an armored coach up a hillside and with Tom on the box and ropes attached to the tongue, Tom guides it on a wild ride down a hill ending with the smashing of the bandit gang's stockade. There are also other good thrills including Tom's holdup of a coach to beat the bandits to it, which he accomplishes by lying in the road and letting the horses ride over him and then grabbing the under side of the stage coach.

This is a Western action-thriller if there ever was one.

Length—4,794 Feet

Bill, a cowpuncher, plays a joke on his dad and is banished to an outpost of the ranch where he finds Pat's sheep grazing on his land. He saves his dad from a villainous scheme of neighbors to send him to jail and win's Pat's love. Exciting action western.

IN "THE RIDIN' ROWDY" Buffalo Bill Jr.'s newest western for Pathe, the eternal enmity between cattle and sheep men once again is brought to the fore. In addition, a couple of crooked lawyers working with another cattle man manage to enmesh the hero's father in legal complications and the results of the plots and counterplots is an entertaining program western.

Despite the familiarity of the basic theme, the romantic element is given a touch of novelty from the fact that the girl, a sheep owner, cheated out of her lands, camps with her flocks on the hero's ranch. He retaliates by forcibly kissing her and although she starts out by hating him you know that before the last flash he will win her. In fact she turns about and aids him when she finds both are the victims of the same pair of crooked lawyers.

There is plenty of typical action, the story moves at good speed, and contrary to a lot of cattle pictures, there are shots not only of large herds and immense flocks of sheep. Harry Todd as a fake deaf man furnishes considerable comedy and Buffalo Bill Jr. not only has a likeable personality but a role that is more human than the usual western here, he even plays a rather mean trick on his blustering dad. Olive Hasbrouck is excellent as the girl. This is one of the breeziest of this series and western fans should find it satisfactory.

AS HIS FIRST PRODUCTION for release through Universal, Emory Johnson has produced "The Fourth Commandment" which as the title indicates, deals with the theme "Honor thy father and thy mother."

Mr. Johnson has concentrated on the mother angle and uses as an example a young mother who resents the presence of her husband's mother in their home, leaves when the husband is averse to turning his mother out, is divorced and remarries and years later finds herself in the same situations when her own presence is resented by her son's wife.

This picture has the distinction of the presence of two of the best known portrayers of mother roles in the cast. Mary Carr as the elderly mother and Belle Bennett as the younger one and both give excellent performances. While Mrs. Carr has the more sympathetic role, Miss Bennett's is the dominating one.

The story is strongly sentimental and plays upon the emotions in the angles of mother love and sacrifice and contrasted with it is jealousy and selfishness which brings its own punishment. It is really more of a narrative or character study than a drama and is built up along predetermined lines rather than developing according to the logic of events and is emotional melodrama rather than drama and is rather slow in getting under way.

While never strongly dramatic, it is interesting with strong heart interest, and like all of Mr. Johnson's pictures it is strong in situations that have proved their strong box-office appeal and it should prove a popular attraction with the majority of audiences.

"Afraid to Love"

"Afraid to Love"

Fred DeGresac and F. de Croisset
Directed by Edward H. Griffith
A Paramount Picture

CAST:

Katherine Silverton.....Florence Vidor
Sir Reginald.....Clive Brook
John Travers.....Norman Trevor
Helen.....Jocelyn Lee
Rafael.....Arthur Lubin

Length—6,199 Feet.

Sir Reginald must marry at once to obtain a legacy but is forbidden to marry the woman of his choice. A dummy marriage is arranged with his god-daughter who falls in love with him and foils the adventuress. A light comedy from a French source.

DERIVED FROM the French farce, "The Marriage of Kitty," Paramount's production of "Afraid to Love" follows a familiar line but offers a series of lively complications that amuse without taxing the tired business man.

The theme of the hurried marriage to obtain a legacy is far from new, but the situations are cleverly built up to provide many amusing complications and plenty of clean comedy. The development of the continuity is smooth and well-timed, and the interest climbs to the peak situation in which Kitty finally triumphs over her adventuress rival. It differs from much of the recent comedy product in that most of the humor arises from the situations rather than from the sub-titles, and while the main theme is old, the business is not hackneyed and the movement of the plot does not follow cut and dried lines. It is thoroughly good light entertainment.

Miss Vidor plays with certain touch and commands every situation. Much of the success of the play is due as much to her personal charm and the interest she excites as to the story itself. Jocelyn Lee, as the adventuress makes an excellent foil as the catty South American and adds not a little to the effect. Clive Brook is personable as the object of their affections, but is given comparatively small opportunity to shine, and Norman Trevor is excellent in the small but important role of the solicitor. The production is in every way adequate.

"Afraid to Love" is not important screen literature, but you will enjoy it thoroughly and probably promptly forget it.

"Frisco Sally Levy"

Newest Addition To The List of Hebrew-Irish
Comedies Offers Sally O'Neil In Leading Role

AS WILL BE GUESSED from the title and the fact that Sally O'Neil has the title role, "Frisco Sally Levy," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production directed by William Beaudine is another addition to the growing list of Hebrew-Irish offerings.

In this instance a slightly different angle has been found. The story starts out with Sally as the daughter of an orthodox Jewish father and an intensely Irish mother, and these roles are capably handled by Tenen Holtz and Kate Price. This interracial idea is carried out throughout and Sally's admirers are an upstanding Irish motorcycle cop and a flashy Hebrew who turns out to be a cad.

The story interest is very slight. Most of the footage is used to get laughs, with a touch of heart interest thrown in here and there, and two younger brothers of a decidedly mischievous type and a little sister are utilized extensively. The pranks of the kids and the playing up of the opportunities for both Jewish and Irish brands of humor in this family are the cause of much merriment and the picture should prove a fairly amusing offering with the average audience.

Sally O'Neil is peppy and vivacious and gives a pleasing performance, but she is typically Irish with no suggestion of her screen father's Hebraic influence. One of the kids is however decidedly of this type.

Length—6,900 Feet.

Colleen's mother is Irish and her father is Jewish and her steady is Pat a motorcycle cop. She becomes infatuated with Gold a swell Hebrew who turns out to be a cad and Pat rescues her and all ends happily in the Hebrew-Irish family. Character comedy.

J. P. McGOWAN, the prolific director of railroad stories and melodramas, is in his element in handling the megaphone for the F. B. O. production "The Outlaw Dog," starring the police dog Ranger, and the result is a good audience melodrama that should please all who like exciting entertainment and dog stories.

Not only is "The Outlaw Dog" a melodramatic story involving the hunt for the dog hero accused of injuring his master, but there is plenty of railroad atmosphere as the animal makes friends with an agent at a lonely station. The dog repays the kindness of his new friend and the friend's sweetheart by saving a payroll when thugs invade the station and later in the climax saves a train from being wrecked when the thugs blow up the bridge, by racing up the track with a warning flag in his mouth.

Some of the situations are quite improbable, but they make for exciting melodrama, and there is a good sympathetic angle in the fact that this fine animal is being sought after continually as a killer. This leads to good suspense in the situations where the sheriff comes to take the dog away and there are attempts to kidnap him to obtain a reward.

Ranger proves to be a likeable animal that can take his place with the other dog stars of the screen, and the human roles are capably handled by Rex Lease as the agent and Helen Foster as the girl. Bruce Gordon makes a good villain.

"See You in Jail"

Amusing Farce Comedy of Man Who Serves Jail Sentence for Another Features Jack Mulhall

"See You in Jail"

With Jack Mulhall

Directed by Joseph Henabery

CAST:

Jerry Marsden	 Jack Mulhall
Ruth Morrissey	 Alice Day
Slosson	 Mack Swain
Marsden	 George Fawcett
Morrissey	 Crauford Kent
Inventor	 William Orlamond
Valet	 Leo White
Judge	 Burr McIntosh

Length—5,800 Feet.

Jerry, disowned by his father, impersonates Marsden, a capitalist and serves a jail sentence. Persuaded to back an invention he is accused of being a crook, but everything comes out O. K. and he wins Marsden's sister Ruth. Amusing farce comedy.

WHEN A PEPPY YOUNG spendthrift agreed to impersonate a millionaire and serve a jail sentence for speeding for him, he started in motion a chain of circumstances that resulted in a romance and a fortune as well as bringing him intense satisfaction by putting one over on the gruff old father who had cast him out because of his wild habits.

This is the basis of "See You in Jail" and utterly improbable but amusing comedy offered by First National with Jack Mulhall in the leading role and Alice Day playing opposite. The story interest is slight, and except for the jail idea and its results following along familiar lines. Joseph Henabery, an experienced director, has handled the script so that it holds the interest and provides pleasing entertainment and there are several good gags, such as the familiar runaway elevator stunts, and the courtroom scene where the hero persuades the judge to give him fifteen days instead of five that while not especially hilarious, are good for smiles and chuckles.

Jack Mulhall makes a good impression in the leading role, and Alice Day is not only very attractive as the girl, but her experience in short comedies stand her in good stead here. Mack Swain also adds comedy as a pompous fellow who likes to claim friendship with the wealthy folk. Crauford Kent is satisfactory as the millionaire and Leo White has an amusing bit as a valet.

"Knockout Reilly"

Excellent Direction and Fine Acting Help To Make "Knockout Reilly" Better Than Usual

WORKING WITH a familiar theme, Malcolm St. Clair cleverly pilots Richard Dix to a double knockout in "Knockout Reilly." He wins the title and he wins the audience decision.

It's the same old theme of the ironworker who winds up as world-champion, but the story has been so well developed in the direction that it looks new and brings more than the usual number of thrills. Reilly's rival puts him into prison on a very filmy frame-up, and Reilly serves his term on the rockpile, developing his muscles and his determination. Through a ruse he gets into the ring with his rival, but the latter's superior weight is telling when the girl tells him that it was Agerra who framed him and who forced his mother to work as a charwoman. That gives Reilly the necessary spur and the title changes hands in the early part of the next round. The story is simple, but it moves convincingly to its appointed end, and there are many clever touches which mark this as above the average program offering. There are no trick shots. The devices are all legitimate direction as when the ruse by which Reilly gets into the ring is uncovered by the simple but effective device of having the original opponent strip the fake bandage from his wrist in his excitement.

Richard Dix is his most personable and unaffected self, and Mary Brian is clever as the girl. The entire cast has been well selected, and the result is a genuinely entertaining offering. It should prove acceptable in all classes of houses.

A Major Differs From a Sergeant

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

F. B. O.

BREED OF THE SEA. Star, Ralph Ince. Good, strong plot; fine direction; splendid acting; excellent photography makes this a wonderful attraction. Heard more good comments than on any picture since we've shown Three Bad Men. It's a sea story with a novel theme and Ralph Ince does some really creditable work both as star and as director. Hope to see him again in some more sea stories. Advertised in advance as a strong, human story, and drew a fair crowd. Tone O. K. Strong appeal. Sunday yes, special almost. Draw all classes, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DON MIKE. Good outdoor picture. Pleased patrons. Moral tone good, yes for Sunday. Box office fair. Special no. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WHEN A DOG LOVES. Good program picture. Tone, Sunday O. K. Fair box office appeal. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FLAMING FURY. Star, Ranger (dog). Just another canine picture with too much dog in it. As is usual in all hound pictures the animal has a love affair and raises a family. Rin-Tin-Tin has played this angle so much that it is old. Suppose the producers change about a little and give some variety. Can't say otherwise than that this was a weak program affair. Human actors all unknowns. Tone O. K. Weak appeal. Sunday, yes here, special no. Draw all colors, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MAN RUSTLIN. Star, Bob Custer. Plot no good, Bob has made better pictures. No tone, fair appeal. Sunday, special no. Draw farm class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

KOSHER KITTY KELLY. Star, Viola Dana. A good comedy. As well liked as Cohens and the Kellys. Comedies of this type draw better than specials (so-called). Book it and sit back and watch 'em come in. Tone fine, appeal 100 per cent. Special yes. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

MIDNIGHT FLYER. Star, Cullen Landis. This had all the earmarks of a good production and interest was sustained throughout. Character acting very good. Somewhat rough in places but nothing really objectionable. Tone O. K. General appeal. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 15-30, specials 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

NO MAN'S LAW. Star, Bob Custer. A fair western program picture; however, not quite up to Bob's standard. Good tone. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

NON-STOP FLIGHT. A knockout story: had everything—photography, scenes, acting and everything. Good business. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Draw general class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

OUT OF THE WEST. Star, Tom Tyler. Good for Saturday, tone good, appeal good. Sunday, special no. Draw town, country class town 896. Admission 10-25. Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre (200 seats), Neola, Iowa.

SECRET ORDERS. Star, Evelyn Brent. Our first Brent picture and gave very good satisfaction. Patrons entirely pleased with the work of this excellent actress and interest maintained throughout. Tone O. K. Appeal general. Sunday yes, special no. Draw rural class, town 300. Admission 15-

"It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man." That is our slogan, we exhibitors who send unbiased reports on pictures we have played.

Our Gang is held together by the bonds of common interest and mutual good will. We welcome you into our circle, you will automatically become one of us by the free-will act of sending picture tips to this dependable tip department.

OUR GANG

30, specials 15-40. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (250 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

TWO-GUN MAN. Star, Fred Thomson. Good. Thomson is a sure bet here. We like him more and more. Appeal fine, Sunday, special no. Draw farming class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

WHEN A DOG LOVES. Star, Ranger (dog). A regular kid show which the adults will like too. This dog, if given good stories, will make some of the so-called star dogs sit up and take notice. Sunday yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

First National

IT MUST BE LOVE. Star, Colleen Moore. Good as hers always are. Enjoyed by all. Tone good, appeal 60 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. K. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

JUST ANOTHER BLONDE. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. A good program picture. Pleased majority. A good cast, and well acted picture. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

KIKI. Star, Norma Talmadge. Splendid. Everybody thought it was fine. She got away with it and we didn't think she could in this type of picture. Everybody pleased. Tone fair, appeal 80 per cent. Sunday no, special yes. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

KIKI. Star, Norma Talmadge. The refined, emotional Norma in a cheap story of the Paris streets. Why do they do it? Fans were disappointed, as they have learned to expect the beautiful star in pictures suited to her type, high class dramatic features, and they did not fail to express their opinion of this number. Let's have Miss Norma in pictures of the Smilin' Tru and Ashes of Vengeance type. Tone fair, appeal weak. Sunday perhaps, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LUNATIC AT LARGE. Star, Leon Errol. This was the poorest show that we have shown this season. Patrons all said it was too silly. Tone good, appeal poor. Sunday yes, special no. Draw mixed class, town 1,800. Admission 25. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

MIDNIGHT LOVERS. Star, Lewis Stone. Too bad that such a fine actor is miscast so many times as a lover. Fans want a youngster to do the loving but First National doesn't seem to realize this, and they are thereby causing attendance on this star's pictures to fall down. Midnight Lovers is a very weak feature and the few who came gradually left the house before the final fadeout. If Stone must be cast as a lover, let's let a younger rival get the girl. Tone weak, appeal none. Sunday maybe, special no. Draw all sorts, town 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MISMATES. Star, Doris Kenyon. A nice little program picture that went over very good. Don't make expenses but no fault of the picture. Don't think you will make a mistake in playing this one. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

NEW COMMANDMENT. Star, Blanche Sweet. A good romantic drama with war scenes. Well liked. Tone good, appeal 40 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

OVERLAND STAGE. Star, Ken Maynard. Good. First one by this star that I have played. Girls are raving about him; men like him. "Oh—Min!" what a horse! And he can ride. Try him out, boys. You won't be sorry. Appeal 60 per cent. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

OLD LOVES FOR NEW. Star, Lewis Stone. Very good story; pleased the patrons. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm, merchant class, town 1,650 widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PLAYING WITH SOULS. Stars, Mary Astor, Jacqueline Logan. This picture, which was fair and created a lot of heart interest, failed to click at the box office. The advertising and stars meant nothing and they just

Fox

AUCTIONEER. (6 reels). Star, George Sidney. The best Jew "poppa" of the screen is Sidney. He's great in this one. But some way or other we couldn't get a crowd in on it. Nice and clean for a Sunday. Paper is only fair. Good moral tone. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

BLACK PARADISE. Good picture but failed to get business for us. Tone fair, appeal 75 per cent. Special no. Draw mixed class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

GREAT K. & A. TRAIN ROBBERY. Star, Tom Mix. Mr. Thomas Mix does not show up in this number: in it, however, we find Tom Mix of old—the dashing, hard-riding son-of-a-gun, who carries a wallop in either hand and who is capable of whipping a whole den full of thieves without getting as much as a scratch himself. The patrons eat this kind of stuff, and we heard more praise of Tom in the Great K. & A. Train Robbery than we have heard since the Deadwood Coach. Would like to shake Tom's hand after this one. Wonderful scenery. Tone O. K. Appeal 100 plus. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MARRIAGE LICENSE? Star, Alma Rubens. A long drawn out affair with fine acting and splendid photography but poor entertainment value. The story of a mother who sacrifices her love in order to give her son an education. No comedy relief. Too heavy for most small town audiences. Paper fair. Several walkouts. Tone fair, appeal weak. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all classes, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MUSIC MASTER. Star, Alec Francis. An old people's picture; brought them in and pleased them. Strong love moral. A bit long and rather sobby, but a happy ending. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

TONY RUNS WILD. Star, Tom Mix. I think it one of the best Mix subjects I have run here in some time. Anyway, pleased houses. Tone good, appeal 95 per cent. Draw general class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

THE WAR HORSE. Star, Buck Jones. Everyone who likes horses will be strong for this one. There's pathos when they take his horse from the ranch: good comedy situations over across; and a big dramatic moment when the U. S. troops are about to cross the mined bridge. Good all the way through. The leading lady, Lola Todd, has charm and personality as well as looks. Dave Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

Metro-Goldwyn

DESERT'S TOLL. Very good picture. Tone and for Sunday yes. Box office fair. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

EXIT SMILING. Star, Beatrice Lillie. Slow moving comedy that never gets anywhere. Tone, appeal fair. Sunday, special no. Draw farm class, town 412. Admission 10-25. Leveck & Garner, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

FAUST. Star, Emil Jannings. A special of its kind, just drew a certain class. It's entirely different from the usual run of films and should have its play on all screens. Keeps one interested from start to finish. Played during Lent, and glad we did. Suitable for a Sunday. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

SLIDE, KELLY, SLIDE! Star, William Haines. The M.-G.-M. trademark stood out big on this one and so did I, when my crowd went out smiling and saying how good it was. Haines, as the wise guy, was as dumb as he was wise, and what good work he did! Carey and Dane great. This picture can stand a raise and they won't kick, either. Good paper, print and service. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

TIN HATS. Star, Conrad Nagel. Here is an A-1 war comedy. Tied up with the local post of the American Legion, and it went over in fine shape, considering the weather. Boys, this is one that you can step on. It will stand all the advertising you can give it. Nagel and Windsor fine, and we mustn't forget Bert Roach and the rest of the cast, as they all did fine work. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

UNDERSTANDING HEART. Peter B. Kyne story. Star, Carmel Myers. A wonderful picture recently released. The audience was pleased and could have cleared a nice little profit by exhibiting it the next night. The whole town (750 population) was talking about it after the performance. Exhibitors of small and big theatres will not be disappointed in showing "Understanding Heart." J. G. Attanasio, Manager, Columbia Theatre, La Belle, Florida.

VALENCIA. Star, Mae Murray. Good little picture, well directed and acted; not a small town picture. Tone, appeal fair, Sunday yes, special no. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WANING SEX. Star, Norma Shearer. Sure glad to give one M.-G.-M. a good report. This was a good one. I hope they don't do to her what they have to some of the others. Tone good, appeal 40 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-30. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

WINNERS OF THE WILDERNESS. Very good outdoor story with good tone and appeal. Sunday yes, and is just above program schedule. Draw merchant, farming class, town 1,650, widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WISE GUY. Very good story. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw merchant, farm class, town 1,650 widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Paramount

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. Star, Jack Holt. Good program picture, almost ruined by a poor print. Tone good, appeal 40 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

DESERT GOLD. (6,886 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. As good a picture as we have ever seen. Pleases a hundred per cent. Book it and you won't go wrong. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 15-25. New Cozy Theatre, Springfield, Kentucky.

FASCINATING YOUTH. Junior stars. Not a good drawing card, but it is a pleasing little picture. There was some promising talent shown in this one. Tone good, appeal fair, not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FASHIONS FOR WOMEN. Star, Esther Ralston. The director seemed to be an immoral person and didn't have a sense of the right amount of clothing. One of the most forceful arguments for a censor I have seen this year. A decent person with the authority to handle a pair of shears could have taken fifty feet out of this picture and make a dandy picture of it. When they show nude women they make some of your best customers get up and leave. I'm not a prude! I'm a business man, trying to sell decent people entertainment and I feel that an organization as big as Paramount could afford to spend a little on a salary to some decent person to check up on the work of their Hollywood staff and avoid any hint of degenerate minds. Four out of five of their late pictures have needed it badly. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

GOD GAVE ME TWENTY CENTS. Star, Lois Moran. A rather heavy picture with the cast doing all good work. No extra drawing power. Picture deserved more patronage than it got. Good paper and print. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

GRAND DUCHESS AND THE WAITER. (7 reels). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Maybe Adolphe is all right and maybe this is a good picture. I dunno. But this I do know—that we cannot get them in on this star and that we lost plenty on this one. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

HOTEL IMPERIAL. Star, Pola Negri. This is less objectionable than most of this star's pictures, but her picture outside is about the same as a measles sign for my box office. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

IT. Star, Clara Bow. This is one wonderful picture; it is just what the people want. Ranks above The Campus Flirt as a box office attraction. Broke my house record for second night's business and that is the true test of how really good a picture is. Clara Bow is in a class all by herself. Run this picture—and then hunt up the State Rights picture, The Plastic Age, and make a lot of money and a lot of friends. The latter picture is almost as good and will cost you say one-quarter the price because of its age. However, it is new until played. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

A KISS IN A TAXI. Star, Bebe Daniels. This is a fair picture: five minutes cutting would make it good. It entertains all right and for those who can understand the French code of ethics and morality it is O. K. However, we have to deal with a lot of people who do not care for "French" morals, and pictures should be made accordingly. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

KISS IN A TAXI. Star, Bebe Daniels. I know this isn't quite up to Bebe's standard and think quite a few exhibitors will agree with me. Her pictures cost me plenty and I expected plenty. This drew only fair, but those who came got a kick out of it. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

NEW YORK. Star, Lois Wilson. This was a good picture with a nice star and a clever plot. I would have liked it better with more New York scenes in it instead of being all studio stuff; they should have given us more shots of the actual city, as we used that advertising with the title. It also could have been improved a lot by a few more laughs. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

Pathe

DEVIL HORSE. Star, Rex. Very good story. Fine scenery. Acting of Rex great. Plenty of atmosphere. Tone, appeal good. Sunday, special yes. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Prevost and others in cast making it a happy-go-lucky picture. Played one day to good house, but profit was slim because of high rental price. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

SILENCE. Star, H. B. Warner. A very fine picture, but it failed to draw at the box office. It will please any audience, however, if you can get them in. Appeal 80 per cent. Not a special. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

United Artists

EAGLE. Star, Rudolph Valentino. Valentino and Banky did splendid work in this picture. On the Robin Hood type of story. Pleased our patrons very well, but was not as good as Son of the Sheik. Tone, appeal good. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

GARRISON'S FINISH. Star, Jack Pickford. A very good program picture and went over fine to a fair Saturday night crowd. Think it pleased most everyone. Made a little money on this one. A little old, but you will make good. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

LOVING LIES. Star, Monte Blue. A very good picture and went over very good for a small Saturday night crowd—on account of bad weather. Made just a little above expenses. Picture a little bit old but believe you can make good. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

WINNING OF BARBARA WORTH. Star, Vilma Banky. Here is a picture that pleased 100 per cent. Patrons voiced their praise. Think it should be played everywhere. Splendid offering. Tone, Sunday and as special yes. Mrs. J. B. Traveled, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Universal

BORDER SHERIFF. Star, Jack Hoxie. An average Hoxie picture that seemed to please our Saturday night fans. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

BUTTERFLIES IN THE RAIN. Star, Laura LaPlante. This was a good picture. The star is very attractive and the story is good. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

CALGARY STAMPEDE. Star, Hoot Gibson. Good western story; plenty of action. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Mrs. J. B. Traveled, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BUCKAROO KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. Pretty fair, but they lack speed and pep. Smatter, anyway, Hoot? Appeal 30 per cent. Draw general class, town 2,200. A. E. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

DEMON DUDE. Star, Hoot Gibson. A-No. 1 semi-western. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DOWN THE STRETCH. This was a good horse race picture and pleased those that I got in to see it. The exchange switched pictures on me without notice, so this didn't go for me. No matter how good a picture is, if they plan to see one and then come and see another, they are disappointed. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

FLAMING FRONTIER. Star, Hoot Gibson. Just an ordinary program picture; usual amount of action. Nothing big. Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

FLAMING FRONTIER. Star cast. This is a very fine western and did a good business. If your audience likes western features this will do the business, and please them fine. Appeal good. Special yes. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

HIDDEN LOOT. Star, Jack Hoxie. Too small for our trade press unless we played it with another feature. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

OLD SOAK. From stage play. This was a good entertainment. The name seemed to worry some for a Sunday picture, but the picture is O. K., and doesn't need to worry you. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

OLD SOAK. A good comedy-drama. Well liked. Tone fair, appeal 40 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

POKER FACES. Star, Laura LaPlante. It is a whiz! Just try it once and see. Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

SKINNER'S DRESS SUIT. Star, Reginald Denny. I think this is the weakest Denny I ever played; nevertheless, they got a few good laughs out of it and business was good, so we have no kick coming. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

TAXI! TAXI! Star, Everett Horton. By gosh! This feature comedy had them all saying they wanted more like this. Miss Nixon was sure great. Played on a special matinee. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Miscellaneous

THE KICK-OFF. Star, George Walsh. I make a habit of playing some State Rights pictures and this one from Screen Classics in Minneapolis and a very good entertainment. Not on the scale of The Quarterback, but a better picture than One Minute to Play, as this really shows some football. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

THE LAST CHANCE. Star, Bill Patten. Very good western subject; about the usual picture. Tone fair, appeal 75 per cent. Draw general class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (300 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

PLASTIC AGE. (Preferred). Star, Clara Bow. This is a jewel—very seldom we have a picture as good as this one. A wonderful story of college life. Owing to bad weather didn't do much on it but no fault of picture. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

SIGN OF THE CLAW. Star, Peter the Great (dog). Just a fair program offering. While the dog does some good work, it is not nearly as convincing as his work in The Silent Accuser a couple of years ago. I understand this dog is dead. He is in a picture called Wild Justice, which I intend to run. Tone fair, appeal 70 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

THAT GIRL OKLAHOMA. Star, Ruth Mix. She did fair for her first appearance. Got by without losing and that is something for me just now. Tone none, appeal 60 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 2,900. Admission 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

WIN, LOSE OR DRAW. Star, Leo Maloney. A Clarion photoplay and it's some tooter. As a knock-'em-down-and-drag-'em-out western its all right and you can cash in on about one a month. Tone fair. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Neuman, Moose Theatre (500 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

ALICE IN THE ALPS. (F. B. O.). This Alice cartoon, and the collegiate one, are the two best to date. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

ALICE'S RIVALS. (F. B. O.)—Alice-Krazy-Kat). This was a dandy comedy. They all like the Krazy Kat because they are short and funny. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre, Stark, Kansas.

BUSTER'S HUST UP. (Universal-Buster Brown). A two-reel comedy; this is a good B. Brown. Tone O. K. Appeal 65 per cent. L. L. Like, Dreamland Theatre (150 seats), Drummond, Montana.

CHIPS OFF THE OLD BLOCK. (Educational—one reeler comedy). You'll go a long ways before you will find as good a filler—short subject as these one reel Hodge Podges. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

A CLOSE CALL. (Universal-Gumps). Andy is as crazy as he looks in this one—and the crazier he acts (which he does naturally) the more howls he gets. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

FELIX THE CAT. (Educational). Always good for a one reel short subject cartoon. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FIGHTING HEARTS. (F. B. O.—Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. Played last chapter of this series March 4-5, and just want to tell you exhibitors if you have not played this series, buy it at once and make yourself some money as every chapter is mighty good. You can't go wrong on it. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

HIRE A HALL. (F. B. O.—Krazy Kat). In this, the cat, with a bunch of other animals, tickles the kids. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HOWDY, DUKE. (Educational-Lupino Lane). Okay in every way, including paper, print, service and picture. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

A KEYHOLE CRUISE. (Educational—one reeler). And that's what this one reeler contains. It's good, and real good for a Sunday short subject. R. A. Preuss, Arvada, Colorado.

LITTLE MISS BLUFFITT. (F. B. O.—Bill Grimm). We don't run these Bill Grimm's Progress series in rotation, but they hit, no matter how or when they are shown. This one is extra good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MIN'S AWAY. (Universal-Gumps). All the series that we have played so far have been good; this comedy was up to the standard. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

OLD TIN SIDES. (F. B. O.—fat men). These three fat Willies always supply laughs. I guess this one is on a par with their previous releases. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

"Pandora"

A Moving Picture World Presentation Devised by O. T. Taylor

ONE of the best known stories of Greek mythology is that of Pandora. A beautiful woman (the all-gifted), whom Zeus caused Hephaestus to make as punishment for the human race because Prometheus had stolen fire from Heaven. Zeus gave her a casket (Pandora's Box) containing all the blessings of the gods, which escaped and were lost to men when the box was opened by her out of curiosity.

The scene is a garden enclosed by a high, decorated wall in the center of which is a large circular gate-way, closed with decorated silk hangings. A large fantastic tree rises above the wall to the left; to the right a large urn is balanced on the wall. In front of the wall are a number of large urns or vases and trailing flowers. A Nubian slave guards the gate and, sitting 'neath the wall, a dark-skinned musician strums his lute. The time is early morning with the blue light slowly yielding to rose and amber. Soft stringed music is heard. Suggested music "Reves D'Orient" Baron.

Pandora, picked up by pink spot from projection room, dances on from left. Introduce Grecian Classic dance number. Hesitating she claps her hands and the gate hangings part to reveal a vista of distant sea and towering cliffs. A sunbeam, coming from the right, picks its way with dancing reflections, across the water.

A ship, sail bellying in the breeze, moves slowly across the water in the distance. Pandora, finishing her dance, comes to rest under the tree. A gong sounds. Music segue, No. 3, suite from ballet "Salamambo." Lights behind wall to blue. Front stage to red. Gate drapes close. A bevy of girls, brandishing swords, dance on from right, followed by an envoy carrying a decorated box which he presents to Pandora. Song may be introduced by envoy. Music to No. 4 Suite from Ballet "Salamambo" as the girls go into fast sword dance. Red Flood. Girls and envoy exit. Magenta spot on Pandora dancing around the box to "Vision of Salome," until at last, overcome by curiosity, she opens it. A flash of light, peal of thunder; frightened, Pandora draws back from the box. Vapor tinged with light rises from the box. The slave lies prostrate on the ground. The gate hangings open mysteriously to reveal a group of acrobats posed in amber and green side floods against a decorative panel picturing a centaur. A variety of poses may be used, the drapes closing and reopening for each new pose, after which acrobatic routine is introduced. Gate drapes close. Acrobats exist.

Again a flash and a puff of vapor as the drapes part to reveal a huge, glittering sea-shell in which poses four dancers illuminated in bright light from underneath. The dancers step through the gate, hangings close, flood to dancers introducing rhythmic, classical dance number. Suggested "Danse Macabre," Saint-Saens. Drapes again part. This time to a group of ultra-modern dancers who enter for a fast, hot finish. Pandora closes the box.

Interpolated action, such as that of slave and musician, and of Pandora, during girls' dances, is left to the imagination of the producer, who will also make such changes in action and plot as become necessary to meet his requirements.

THE SETTING

The wall, B fig. 1 and 2, forming the main portion of the setting, is of frame and blue plaster board or wall board construction. The framing is indicated by dotted lines in fig. 1. The wall is in two, or more, sections, depending on the size of the stage. Coat with plastic paint to obtain a rough texture and finish in light shell pink, with decorative stuff in light green and blue. Two steps lead from the platform, through the circular gate opening to the stage in front of the wall. The opening is hung with blue silk or sateen drapes, k fig. 5, appropriately decorated, and operated, from off-stage, on iron rod tracks as shown in fig. 5, j; the operating device consisting of pull cords running through small pulleys or screweyes. The hanging is split in the middle, one-half traveling to each side, and weighted with chains placed in bottom hems.

The large tree can be a set or a profile. Paint trunk and branches in bright orange, red, magenta, turquoise and purples; foliage in light tuscan defined in orange, blue and purple.

Parts of the garden wall is covered with bright artificial flowers, or with natural greens in which flowers are interwoven.

The large urns or vases may in some localities be borrowed from tile works or landscape gardeners, or they can be fashioned from papier-mache. Apply Grecian decorations.

The large shell, fig. 1 plate A, is made from wall board or it can be of papier-mache over a wire-screen frame. The shell is reinforced with a batten frame as indicated by dotted lines fig. 1 and by (a) fig. 2 and 3. A heavy plate glass, b, is fitted into the platform directly under the lower shell and an opening in the shell admits light from a bank of floods or reflectors, c. Do shell in aluminum bronze, headlight with metallics and shade in colored bronzes. Operate the lights on wipers and use color mediums to produce a changing color effect. Fig. 1 is a front view, fig. 2 and 3 side and top, respectively.

The first gate tableau, that of the ship sailing across the water, is shown in detail in the cross section fig. 4. d and e denote the distant cliffs, which are cut from wall board. The water, g, is also a wall board panel with a slit through which the ship, f, glides. The ship may be a small model or merely a cut-out from wall board equipped with mast and sail. The ship is carried along on a piece of tin, placed vertically through the water-panel slit. Screw-eyes, attached to the lower part of the tin, guide the ship over taut wire or iron rod tracks. The sail is of light, airy material, such as Georgette, and is blown by a fan placed off-stage.

Do distant cliffs in blue and purple with highlighting in pink and lavender. Water deep blue with wave definitions in turquoise. Highlight in silver metallics to take and reflect sunbeams. Ship in gold, vermillion and white. Sail in white.

Figure 5, plate A, shows the panel against which the acrobats are posed. The centaur, cut from wall board, is set two or three inches in front of the palisado backing, i. Do the latter in imitation bronze, using copper bronze for coating and brown, green and orange for shade and highlights. The centaur gets aluminum bronze. In figures 1 and 5, plate A, the circular gate opening is indicated by dotted lines to show the comparative sizes of the set pieces.

The Pandora Box is easily made from an empty apple box or similar packing case. A block under each of the four corners will serve as legs. Cut the sides and ends to desired shape from wall board and fasten to the box. The top is a wood frame covered with wall board and hinged to the box. Paint a bright Chinese Vermillion with decorative motifs in gold and black. This should be done in "flat" colors (colors ground in japan dryer and thinned to working consistency with turpentine) and varnished to resemble lacquer. The entire setting is viewed through an arch consisting of two grecian columns, D fig. 1 and 2, supporting the beam (border) E. Do the arch in light pearl grey or white, with decorative motif in darker gray and black to suggest relief.

Novelty Suggestion

"BLEEDING" COLORS

In repainting old scenery some colors are found to "bleed" or "strike through" the coating applied over them. These colors are usually found to be reds or blues and are made from materials containing or mixed with aniline.

A coat of orange shellac over such spots will usually remedy the trouble. For more severe "bleeding" coat with shellac bronze paint. (Aluminum bronze mixed in shellac.)

CUTTING WALL BOARD

For cutting wall board a picture framer's mat knife will be found very serviceable. This knife consists of a hollow handle with an adjustable blade. Have a small emery wheel handy to grind the blade to a point, then sharpen on oil stone. Good hard blades are essential, a soft blade dulls too soon. Where much cutting is done it will pay to install a cutting machine. A machine especially made for this work is now on the market. It consists of an electric motor driving a cutting chisel, much the same as a sewing machine drives the needle, and is portable and adaptable to large or small work.

FRAMES

In building heavy or large temporary frames for flats or special scenery use scraps of wall board for "scabs," nailed to back of frame, over joints. Three ply wood veneer makes excellent "scabs" for permanent frames that are used and recovered frequently.

PASTE

Prepared cold water paste is, as its name implies, a dry paste prepared for use by simply adding the necessary amount of hot or cold water.

If prepared paste is not obtainable a small quantity of excellent paste may be made as follows: In a gallon receptacle, empty lard pail or clean paint pot, place a cupful of white flour. Add enough lukewarm water to make to consistency of thick batter; beat until smooth and add boiling water gradually until the paste cooks or "turns" thick. Stir with a flat paddle while adding the boiling water. Thin to working consistency with hot or cold water.

Note: The water must be boiling in order to "turn" the paste. Unless the paste "turns" it will have no strength. To keep the paste sweet, add a pinch of bluestone (blue vitriol).

If you have Variety booked, be sure to get some of these specials. They are decidedly useful and a real novelty.

One or more of these tree stumps will be found handy and effective for use in wood sets, gypsy camps and many other outdoor scenes.

Set rocks can be built in much the same manner by using empty packing boxes. Nail irregular shaped pieces of wood and wall board around bottom of box and taper to top. The top is treated the same way unless the rock is also to be used for seat. In this case take a plank about two inches thick and large enough to nearly cover the box top, chip off edges unevenly before nailing in place.

Cover with muslin and paint to resemble rock.

How to Make Hats

Window screen will be found ideal for foundation or frames for head pieces, hats, helmets, etc. This sort of screen can be given almost any conceivable shape by bending or punching; or by cutting and tacking together overlaps. Fine for base forms for plaster or papier-mache props such as vases, stands and other ornamental nic-nacs, trunks for set trees, lamp posts, masks, armours, et cetera.

Better Projection Pays

Wants to Live Up to His Title of "Projectionist"

FROM a large city comes this one: "Inclosed find check for the new Bluebook. Have seen earlier editions and feel that I must have the new one myself. Am projectionist at the Lyric Theatre, this city. At least I call myself a projectionist and do my best to live up to the title (do you get that last? It is the answer to the whole Projectionist-Operator argument. The man has adopted the title Projectionist and feels he HAS SOMETHING TO LIVE UP TO!—Ed.) so far as the equipment provided will permit.

Am using A. C. at the arc, through A. C. to A. C. Compensars. Get a pretty fair light, but am troubled by the breaking of the 6½-inch focal length collector lens. A new one lasts but a day. Could you suggest a remedy?

Arc is about three inches from the collector lens. Condenser lenses spaced ¼ inch apart. Converging condenser lens to aperture 15 inches. Projection distance 125 feet. At what angle should the ¾ National carbons be set to get best results? Have followed the Bluebook school for a long while. Have gained a lot from it.

SEVERAL OF MY PROJECTIONIST ACQUAINTANCES AS MUCH AS RIDICULE ME FOR STUDYING AND TRYING TO LEARN. THEY SAY IT WILL DO ME NO APPRECIABLE GOOD. THEY SAY IT IS ONLY ESSENTIAL FOR AN "OPERATOR" (AS THEY TERM THEMSELVES) TO PUT A PICTURE ON THE SCREEN AND KEEP IT THERE. So when I attempt to discuss the principles of electrics, optics, etc., with them, they show no interest whatever and I am lost among them. ALSO MY EMPLOYER DOES NOT REALIZE THE VALUE OF GOOD EQUIPMENT, HENCE I MUST, FOR THE PRESENT AT LEAST, PUT UP WITH WHAT I HAVE, ALTHOUGH IT IS IN SAD CONDITION. HOWEVER, SO LONG AS IT WILL FUNCTION WITHOUT ACTUAL BREAKS AND STOPS THE "BOSS" IS SATISFIED. I want to thank you for the help I have had from our department. Please do not mention my name or location.

Gentlemen, I could consume at least ten pages in answering this letter in commenting upon the utter foolishness of the policy described—foolishness on the part of both the men and the employers.

First of all the very fact that your employer understands the moving picture theatre business so little that he still permits the use of A. C. at the arc for projection purposes in a large city where he is in competition with many other theatres, is proof positive that he is NOT a good man to work for, because he does not know enough about projection to appreciate high grade work. The sooner you equip yourself with practical and technical knowledge enabling you to handle a better position, the better. It is a sorry, discouraging business working for such a man. Also IT IS DISCOURAGING TO HAVE FOR YOUR ASSOCIATES MEN WITH SO LITTLE UNDERSTANDING OF, AND PRIDE IN PROJECTION THAT THEY CONSIDER THE ACQUISITION OF TECHNICAL KNOWLEDGE TO BE FOOLISHNESS. I can understand your position, and can and do sympathise with you.

I am truly sorry for your "machine operator" colleagues. Such men are of the type who never get much of anywhere. Appreciation for work well performed means nothing to them. All they can ever hope to get in the way of monetary reward is what the union can force out of an unwilling boss, who rather naturally objects to paying much for men merely to "operate a machine" which they regard as pretty nearly semi-automatic anyhow. They never amount to anything, and finally drop down and out, neither missed or regretted by any one except their little clique of personal friends on their own level.

As for employers of the type you are now working for—well, the motion picture ship has many barnacles clinging to its hull, but of them all he is perhaps the worst. He and the machine operator make a bully good team. They should by all means be together.

And now as to your troubles. You have not advised me as to your amperage. I think your carbons are too large. A carbon of too great diameter makes the arc relatively easy to handle and burns away slowly, BUT it won't produce the light per watt of electric energy a smaller one will. Unless your current is in excess of sixty, a ⅝ White Flame carbon is plenty large enough. I am a bit rusty on A. C. carbon combinations, as there are relatively so few A. C. arcs used for projection now, but this rule may be relied upon: any size carbon which does not pencil (burn to a long slim point) appreciably is NOT too small.

As to the collector lens: Be certain that the flame from the arc don't touch its upper edge, or come too close to it. If it does it will break the lens. If it does you must either manage to protect the lens from it by suspending an asbestos baffle plate to intercept the flame without interfering too much in the light, or else pull you light source further from the lens. That latter means heavy light loss, however, and should be avoided if possible. That effect will be explained to you by Fig. 36H in the first volume of your new Bluebook.

Make sure that your lamphouse has free ventilation. Stoppage of the ventilation will create high temperature inside the lamphouse, superheat the collector lens, and induce breakage. If you can't stop the trouble, then advise me as to your amperage and send a couple of upper carbon stubs and I will advise you further.

You will have the best general results by using the same set for A. C. that you would use for D. C. However, some prefer setting the lower carbon more or less straight up and down, angling the upper carbon to meet it. I don't believe in this, or agree with it, however fairly good results may be had that way.

Two Bluebooks Really at This Office—Soon Now!

Last Saturday, April 16, I nearly had the papsy lal for when I entered the office they actually showed me two completed Bluebooks and informed me that the first shipment was on the way from the bindery, arriving not later than Monday, or Tuesday, at the very latest.

Gentlemen, the delay has NOT been my fault, or the fault of the Chalmers Publishing Company either. There have been times when I think had I had the combined necks of the printer and binder in a noose I'd have—well, they'd have stopped breathing.

When I told you the book would be out about January first I had every reason to believe it would be. I told you exactly what I believed to be true.

Well, men, I'm sure when you get it you'll agree it was worth the wait, for it certainly is one handsome job. The two volumes are of practically equal thickness, handsomely bound in a rich blue flexible cover. The inside—well, you've all approved of the four previous editions and I think you will of this one, too. The first volume is designed to be permanent. You will only have to get the second volume hereafter in order to keep right up to date. What is in the first volume is permanent, unchangeable matter.

Detroit Local Starts Educational Campaign

LOCAL 199, Detroit, Michigan, formally announced to its members, members of sister locals, and permit men now operating under its jurisdiction, a plan for holding regular educational meetings once each month, for the purpose of aggressively promoting educational work among projectionists in the Detroit district.

The first of these regular meetings was given over to Brenkert Light Projection Company, Detroit.

Before a gathering of projectionists which numbered considerably over two hundred, Karl Brenkert and J. H. Kurlander, president and engineer, respectively, of the Brenkert Company, gave illustrated lectures followed by practical demonstrations, on the subjects of "Effect Lighting and Spot-lighting."

The total time consumed by these talks was four hours and intense interest evinced by the projectionists was proved by the innumerable questions asked and by the fact that from midnight, when the meeting was called to order, until 4 A. M., thirty or more men, unable to find seats in the auditorium, patiently stood in a rear hall and listened to the talks through an open door.

In pursuance of the program thus started by the Brenkert Company, the next regular meeting will be held Wednesday evening, April 20, at which time the representatives of the National Carbon Company will describe the operating characteristics of the various types of arc lamps.

Bluebook School Answers 560 and 561

Note:—This "School" is designed to arouse interest in the study of those many problems which constantly arise in motion picture projection, AND to cause men to really study the Bluebook and assimilate the vast amount of knowledge contained within its covers.

Question No. 560—Suppose you were sent out to put on a show in a country place. Arriving late you found the current to be 110 volt D.C., but that no rheostats had been provided. You were able to secure three 50-volt, 90-ampere rheostats. The highest amperage available from the local power lines is fifty. What would you do?

Really I was a bit surprised at the rather weird assortment of answers to this rather simple problem. Some very competent men made a basic error in that they did not stop to consider that rheostats such as described, found in a country town, naturally would not be rheostats built to work with a projection arc, but just what they are called, Viz 50-volt, 90 ampere rheostats—rheostats which will pass that amperage when connected directly to that voltage, hence these men very greatly underestimated or under calculated the resistance they would offer. That "catch" was deliberately planned and you fell for it. I blush for you!

There were only three men who made good on this one. One of them is brother W. R. Gwynn, of Longmont, Colorado, whose answer I shall publish, C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa and Allan Gengenbeck, New Orleans, La. In addition G. L. Doe, Chicago, Ills., W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, N. Y., Frank Dudiak, Fairmont, Va., and S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H., had the right general idea, but were careless in their "figgerin." or guessed at the arc voltage. Brother Gwynn says:

"Before deciding how the three available rheostats should be connected to deliver sufficient current for a good light without exceeding the maximum capacity of the supply service, it will be of advantage to know just what resistance is necessary at the rheostats to prevent a flow of current in excess of 50 ampere, the maximum amount of current available as stated in the problem. After the necessary resistance figure has been determined and the resistance of each rheostat has also been calculated, a glance at the resultant figures will give the clue as to which of five possible connections will be nearest to the result desired.

It must not be forgotten that the arc itself will offer resistance, and this must be taken into consideration in calculating the resistance necessary in the rheostat hook-up. With the above points in mind, the problem may be approached as follows:

What is the total resistance necessary to limit the current flow of the circuit to 50 amperes when the pressure is 110 volts?

$$\text{Applying Ohms law: } R = \frac{110v}{50a} = \frac{11}{5} \text{ or}$$

2.20 ohms, which is the total resistance required.

The real question is: of the 2.20 ohms resistance necessary to limit the current to 50 amperes, how many will be supplied by the arc itself?

Turning to page 400 of the Bluebook, we find that 56 volts is approximately the correct pressure for a D.C. arc of 50 amperes. Again applying Ohms law it is found that:

$$R = \frac{56v}{50a} = 1.12 \text{ ohms, which is the arc resistance, and subtracting the arc resistance (1.12 ohms) from the total resistance (2.20 ohms) it is found that the rheostat must supply a resistance of 1.08 ohms.}$$

What is the resistance of a 50 volt, 90 ampere rheostat?

$$R = \frac{50v}{90a} \text{ or } \frac{5}{9} \text{ ohms}$$

The question now is, shall the rheostats be hooked in a series of three, multiple of three, one series and two multiple, two in series, or two in multiple?

Since slightly over 1 ohm resistance is all that is required of the rheostat, and since each of them has a resistance of 5/9 ohms, or slightly more than 1/2 of an ohm, it is apparent that a series of three would cut the current below the amperage maximum available. Three in multiple would offer 1/3 the resistance of one rheostat or 5/27 ohms, which is far below the resistance required; two in multiple would offer half the resistance of one rheostat or 5/18 ohms which also is less than the resistance required of the rheostats.

Out of the five possible connections only two have promise of giving the result desired (1.08 ohms). These are the two in series connection and the two in multiple and one in series connection. Of these two, the two in series connection looks the more promising and will be worth working out.

"Resistance in series equals the sum of the separate resistance unit so connected," hence

$$R = 2 \times \frac{5}{9} = \frac{10}{9} \text{ or } 1.19 \text{ ohms.}$$

It has already been determined that the resistance of the arc is 1.12 ohms. Adding the resistance offered by the two rheostats in series to the resistance of the arc, it is found that the circuit now offers a total resistance of 2.27 ohms. Again applying ohms law it is found that this resistance will pass a current of 48.89 amperes as follows:

$$C = \frac{100v}{2.27a} = 48.89 \text{ amperes}$$

Note: Don't freeze the arcon such a hookup, since the resistance offered by this member of the resistance family when it is burning is a vital factor. Its elimination would quickly set off the fireworks.

As to the three rheostats in a series-multiple hookup, it will be found that such a combination will pass 56 plus amperes, which is slightly over the maximum permitted in the problem."

Question No. 561—Explain just why two 110 volt rheostats cannot be used in multiple on 110 volts.

This was obviously a miscabobble. "On 220 volts" was what was meant. Brother George Lawrence, Sackville, N. B., S. F. Cooley, and W. B. Budge were the only ones who seem to have sensed this. Lawrence says: "I see no reason why they could not be used in multiple on 110 volts, but if it were attempted to connect them in multiple on 220, their resistance elements would be overloaded to such an extent that they would burn out very quickly, meanwhile delivering an amperage far above their normal capacity."

Title Referendum

I WAS a bit amused to see a monthly paper with a small circulation recently seriously proposing something this department considered and discarded as impractical years ago. It, with much less than a thousand paid circulation, proposed to "conduct a nation-wide referendum" on the question: Are you in favor of the term 'projectionist'?

Well, well, well! This little paper proposes to jump in after all these years and undertake to conduct a "nation-wide" referendum (Canada apparently entirely ignored) covering about 18,000 theatres and say, anyhow, 25,000 machine operators and motion picture projectionists with less than a thousand circulation.

Of course, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has, after due deliberation, officially adopted the title this editor proposes to question, but after all, what is a mere authoritative body such as the Society as compared with a "nation-wide" referendum.

How Did She Swim So Long?

BRO JAMESON, St. Louis, Mo., asks: "Some time ago I projected a picture in which a woman swam under water longer than any one could possibly do so. It was a tank with a glass side. Will you please tell me how it was done."

I don't know, Friend Jameson, but here is one method. A motion picture is taken of a glass tank in which the water is kept in movement. There is no one in the tank.

Next, a swimmer is either placed on a strip of black velvet on the floor of the studio, where she simulates the motions of swimming while the same length of film is again exposed, or the swimmer is suspended by a suitable, invisible set of fine wires and simulates the motions of swimming while he or she is manipulated by stagehands from a platform above, the camera being, of course, directly over the swimmer in either case.

When the film is developed, through double exposure, we have the swimmer apparently in a tank of water. I am not certain whether the swimmer or the tank picture is shot first, or whether it makes any difference which is shot first. I am not a cinematographer or a studio man.

Glasgow Builds 4,200 Seat House That is to Vie With Finest Here

G LASGOW, Scotland, April 9 (Special to Moving Picture World)—When Green's Playhouse, in Renfield Stret, Glasgow, is opened late in the summer or early in the Fall, Scotland will boast of a 4,200 seat motion picture theatre which will be comparable to the finest in the United States and, at least in size, the peer of any other in Europe exclusively planned for motion pictures.

The Playhouse, now under construction, is to seat 4,200 persons, 2,000 of them in the stalls, and the balance in the boxes and two balconies. The seats will be spaced for comfortable egress and of the finest type in construction and upholstery.

There will be three elevators, of the speed type, each capable of carrying 27 people, although the first balcony can be reached by ascending only twenty easily-mounted steps of the grand stairways.

It is believed that in America there are not over six theatres of more generous seating proportions, when it is considered that besides the theatre proper there are to be provisions made for a dancing ballroom in which 1,500 people can dance in comfort, and be seated between dances. Also there is to be spacious provision for tea rooms at either side of the magnificent entrance, and separate entrances are to be arranged for the theatre proper, the dance floor and the tea rooms.

Splendid Equipment Provided

The latest innovations in ventilating, heat, and cooling systems are being arranged.

Special attention will be paid to the comfort of the patrons, elaborate retiring room systems and a well drilled staff of employees being among the features which will place this real motion picture palace on a par with any ever opened.

ANGLETON, TEXAS.—Gayle Theatre is being renovated and repaired.

DECATUR, ILL.—James J. Redding & Company, 10 North Clark street, Chicago, has general contract for six-story theatre, store and office building, 200 by 230 feet, at southeast corner Franklin and North streets.

Taunton, Mass., To Have New Theatre Of Modern Splendor

The Donovan Amusement Company announces that after plans prepared by John Edmund Kelly, Boston architect, had been approved, contracts have been let for the construction of a theatre that will be the very latest type in architecture, of Spanish motif, with equipment that cannot be improved upon.

Seating arrangements of the wide-spaced comfort-type, high grade ventilation, plenty of exits, heating and cooling apparatus and quality music are among the features which the Donovan Amusement Company claim will market the new Taunton Park a theatre of the true community-service type.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, 485 Fifth avenue, New York, has awarded contract to Thompson-Starrett Construction Company, 250 Park avenue, New York, for theatre and office building to be erected at Third avenue and 18th street. Estimated cost, $1,000,000.

APPLETON, WIS.—Saxe Amusement Enterprises, 530 Grand avenue, Milwaukee, plans to erect two-story brick and concrete theatre on North Oneida street. Estimated cost, $350,000.

Has Long List of Theatres Using The Hertner Transverters

Possibly one of the most accurate barometers of increasing motion picture theatre construction is to be found in the orders for projection equipment as such equipment is an absolute essential in every new theatre.

The Hertner Transverter because of the fact that it has been on the market since 1915 and is, therefore, universally known, is showing even greater sales since the first of January than the remarkably high sales record of 1926.

Mr. Hertner, president of the Hertner Electric Company, manufacturing the Hertner Transverter, states that all sizes are being ordered up to and including 500 ampere capacity with special preference for the horizontal and multiple types.

Recent orders which they have received include the following theatres:

Roosevelt Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.; Capitol Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.; Municipal Auditorium, Tampa, Fla.; New Capitol Theatre, Waverly (Tioga County), N. Y.; Capitol Theatre, Somerville, Mass.; Fernando Garcia, Laredo, Texas; Rialto Theatre, Newark, N. J.; New Theatre, Flushing, L. I., N. Y.; Fellsway Theatre, Medford, Mass.; Loew's New Theatre, New Rochelle, N. Y.; Loew's Fordham Theatre, New York City, N. Y.; New Rialto Theatre, Granite City, Ill.; Hudson Theatre, Kearney, N. J.; New Sunnyside Theatre, Woodhaven, L. I., N. Y.; Parkway Theatre, Bronx, New York; Washington Theatre, Washington, N. J.; New Glen Theatre, Glen Ellyn, Ill.; Bagdad Theatre, Portland, Ore.; Holland Theatre, Holland, Mich.

Nat'l Engineering Staff Is Being Worked Overtime

Increasing activity in both theatre construction and installations of new and improved equipment is reflected in the demand for the services of Alvin Seiler, recently appointed director of the engineering department of the National Theatre Supply Company.

Mr. Seiler's department, which has been recently augmented by additional draughtsmen, is working both day and night shifts and a continual stream of inquiries and requests for service is reported coming into the Chicago offices.

In addition to the services being rendered to architects and builders of many new theatres, the department is also executing plans and cooperating with exhibitors who are remodeling and rebuilding.

The company reports a steady increase of rebuilding and remodeling with many individual theatres and circuits taking steps to increase the attractiveness and efficiency of their theatres and the equipment.

ROBERTSDALE, ALA.—L. Glendenning, Pennsylvania avenue, has awarded contract to John Adams for completion of one-story brick and tile theatre, 40 by 90 feet. Equipment and furnishings to cost $5,000. Building estimated at $6,000.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIF.—Title Holding Company, 318 Chapman Building, Los Angeles, has contract for two-story reinforced concrete theatre and store building, 135 by 130 feet, to be erected on E street, for C. E. Moomau. Estimated cost, $180,000.

TORONTO, KANS.—Hammond Construction Company has contract to erect theatre and office building for Dr. M. C. Newman. Estimated cost, $15,000.

New Organ For Pert

Ray Peart, owner and manager of the Pert Theatre Circuit in Illinois, announces that with the addition to the Eagle and White City Theatres, of the New Pert Theatre, a massive organ has been secured to furnish the music both for solo and for picture playing. The console is on an elevator-platform at right of the stage, the organ itself being behind an artistic grille. It is stated that the patrons have become very enthusiastic about the splendid music provided for their entertainment.

OAKLYN, N. J.—Wills-Bill & Company, 1708 Sansom street, Philadelphia, has contract for brick theatre to be erected for William Butler & Son Amusement Company, Belgrade and Clearfield streets, Philadelphia. Estimated cost, $150,000.

ARDMORE, OKLA.—T. R. Isley, of Oklahoma City, has leased building at 6 East Main street, and will convert it into moving picture theatre.

MARLOW, OKLA.—Briscoe Building is being converted into an up-to-date moving picture house. Frank Miller, owner of Whiteway, will continue to operate present theatre and also new one.

ROCKPORT, TEXAS.—W. H. Smith is erecting fireproof moving picture theatre.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—Orpheum Circuit, 844 South Broadway, plans to erect theatre on Hollywood boulevard. Cost to exceed $150,000.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—P. N. Snyder, 5625 Whittier Boulevard, has plans by Balch Brothers, 934½ South Figueroa street, for reinforced concrete theatre, store and office building to be located on Whittier Boulevard. Cost to exceed $350,000.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF.—Orpheum Circuit, 844 South Broadway, Los Angeles, plans erection of theatre. Cost to exceed $150,000.

1,624,096. UNIVERSAL PANORAMIC TRIPOD. Frank E. Garbutt, Los Angeles, Calif., assignor to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Sept. 2, 1925. Serial No. 54,076. 11 Claims. (Cl. 248-47.)

A tripod comprising: a traversing member; a tilting member supported by said traversing member; means for permitting only a harmonious motion of said traversing member; means for permitting only a harmonious motion of said tilting member; and devices for selectively disconnecting either of said means.

1,624,667. MOTION-PICTURE MACHINE. George H. Kern, Los Angeles, Calif., assignor to The Producers Pictures Corporation, St. Louis, Mo., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed Dec. 2, 1921. Serial No. 519,461. 21 Claims. (Cl. 88-16.)

In a motion picture machine, a holder for receiving pictures, a screen, means for projecting said picture onto said screen, means for revolving said holder, feeding means for moving said holder in axial direction, means for actuating said revolving and said feeding means intermittently in one direction and at a constant speed in the opposite direction, and means for disabling said projecting means during the return movement of said holder.

1,624,732. MOTION-PICTURE PROJECTING MACHINE. Albert S. Howell, Chicago, Ill., assignor to The Bell & Howell Company, Chicago, Ill., a Corporation of Illinois. Filed Aug. 16, 1924. Serial No. 732,469. 14 Claims. (Cl. 88-17.)

In a motion picture projecting machine the combination with a driven film feeding mechanism, of means for reversing the direction of operation of the feeding mechanism, a pivoted member for operating said reversing means, a revoluble stop gear disposed coaxial with the pivoted member, a second revoluble stop gear carried by the pivoted member and meshing with the first mentioned stop gear and cooperating therewith, and means for driving said first mentioned stop gear with the film feeding mechanism whereby to operate said pivoted member to operate said reversing means to effect reversal of the direction of operation of the feeding mechanism at opposite ends of a predetermined travel of a film fed by said feeding mechanism.

In a motion picture projecting machine the combination with a driven film feeding mechanism, of a shutter movable into and out of position to interrupt the projecting light on a film fed by said feeding mechanism, an air impelling device driven with the feeding mechanism, means for automatically reversing the direction of operation of said feeding mechanism and said impelling device at opposite ends of a predetermined travel of a film fed by said feeding mechanism, and pneumatic means responsive to air affected by the operation of said impelling means for causing the shutter to be closed during reversal of the feeding means and to be open during operation of the feeding means between reversals thereof.

1,624,730. MOTION-PICTURE APPARATUS. Albert S. Howell, Chicago, Ill., assignor to Bell & Howell Company, Chicago, Ill., a Corporation of Illinois. Original application filed July 1, 1922, Serial No. 572,170. Divided and this application filed Apr. 24, 1924. Serial No. 708,707. 4 Claims. (Cl. 88-18.)

A motion picture machine including a film sprocket, a support member mounted for sliding movement normal to the axis of the sprocket, a film retaining member mounted on said support for movement therewith into and out of film retaining relation with the sprocket, a cam formation in the support member extending transversely of the movement thereof, and an actuating member engaged in said formation and movable transversely of the movement of the support member for effecting movement of the support member.

Sharp Price Reductions On Many Supply Items

Prices on staple supply items and many accessories used in and about the theatre are now lower than at any time since before the war.

According to an officer of the National Theatre Supply Company, a leading equipment and supply dealer, the downward trend of supply prices is due principally to quantity buying and a more stable condition in manufacturing circles.

He further states that it is the policy of his company to pass such economies along to the users just as rapidly as they are effected and that the readjustment in prices on many staple supply articles has already become apparent.

KEWANEE, ILL.—Peerless Theatre Company, J. Pierce, 109 North Chestnut street, has plans by Hewitt & Emerson, Peoria Life Building, Peoria, Ill., for remodeling interior Peerless Theatre.

MARYSVILLE, KANS.—Turner Theatre Company is preparing plans to repair and redecorate Liberty Theatre, recently damaged by fire. M. J. Boyle holds lease on theatre.

HOUSTON, TEXAS.—American Construction Company, Gulf Building, has contract to remodel lobby and office of Majestic Theatre. Estimated cost, $20,000.

MOUNDSVILLE, W. VA.—M. A. Seybert has awarded contract to Thomas Shimp & Son to remodel Park Theatre on Jefferson avenue, including new front. New equipment, etc., will be installed. Estimated cost, $10,000.

AUBURN, WIS.—Mission Theatre, Frank A. Graham, owner and manager, will be remodeled and seating capacity increased from 500 to 700.

Tulare

The opening of the new Theatre Tulare proved one of the most successful events of the kind ever held in the San Joaquin Valley, with a large attendance of theatre and film exchange men from San Francisco. M. E. Cory, manager of the San Francisco branch of the Producers Distributing Corp., arranged for the personal appearance of Marie Prevost, star of "Getting Gertie's Garter," which was the screen attraction. The new theatre has a seating capacity of 1,430 and represents an investment of about $250,000. Tulare has a population of 4,000, with a good country from which to draw. Robert Hazel is house manager.

Fairmont, Minn.

The State Theatre, which is being constructed at Fairmont, Minn., by H. E. Gilbert, is to have a Page theatre organ installed, according to L. E. Zweig, Northwest representative of the Page Organ Company.

The Palace Theatre of which Paul Mueller is manager, is planning a new house at Ashtabula, Ohio.

Nebraska

The Hostettler Amusement Co. recently opened two new houses in Nebraska—the new Capitol at Grand Island, and the Rivoli at Hastings.

C. J. Lexley has built a new theatre at Carroll, Neb. The Owl Theatre at Hornick, Ia., is reported temporarily closed. W. D. Kale has bought the Crown Theatre at Truro, Ia. The Strand Theatre Boone, Ia., has been closed recently.

M. Biemond, Loup City, Neb., is placing new seats throughout his theatre. The Paramount Theatre at Harrisburg, S. D., has closed its doors for the time being. The Scenic Theatre at Correctionville, Ia., has been damaged by fire recently, and has been closed for repairs.

Nate Dax, who had been in partnership with I. Miller at Sioux City, Ia., in running the World Theatre there, has bought out the Miller interest. The Elm is to be the name of a new theatre now being constructed at Elm Creek, Neb., by Mrs. Ross.

Erie, Pa.

H. E. Hammond, who recently sold his Star theatre, Union City, has built a new theatre in Erie to be known as the Lyric and plans to open the house on April 18th. The Lyric is situated at 548 W. 18th street, and is a two story brick structure, with apartments over the theatre proper. The house seats 450 persons, and is a model one of its size, thoroughly modern in every respect.

LETTER FROM

EDDIE CANTOR

EDDIE CANTOR
PARAMOUNT FAMOUS LASKY STUDIOS
HOLLYWOOD CALIFORNIA

Dear Mr. Exhibitor:

My first Paramount Picture, "Kid Boots," was so well received that Adolph and Jesse (Mrs. Zukor's and Mrs. Lasky's boys) asked me to make another one. They wanted a big comedy "special" to deliver to you, so I made "SPECIAL DELIVERY."

It's about a mailman, and does he have trouble? Say--did you ever try removing a porous plaster with boxing gloves? I picked this character because he is human, helpful, lovable, and has a whistle.

I wouldn't be a bit surprised if after he sees "SPECIAL DELIVERY," the Postmaster General puts my picture on the two-cent stamps. Can you imagine the sale in my neighborhood?

Jobyna Ralston is my leading lady. She used to be with Harold Lloyd. He is a good comedian, too.

If you played "Kid Boots," of course you'll play "SPECIAL DELIVERY." If you did not--for goodness' sake, let's get together. Look--I'm willing!

Love and kisses, and lots of stamps.

The Trade Mark That the Public Knows

A film salesman may be able to sell you another news reel—

BUT

Will he be able to sell your public?

Why is it that Colgate's toilet preparations, Shredded Wheat, Gillette safety razors, Ivory Soap and a multitude of other commodities continue to increase their sales year after year, in the face of greater and greater competition, in spite of extravagant claims by competitors?

Because the public knows them, knows they are good, knows their quality is backed up by powerful organizations with reputations to sustain, and knows the fallacy of the competing salesmen's argument, "something just as good."

The public knows the Pathe News, wants it, loves it. We know of a number of instances where an exhibitor has attempted to substitute "something just as good," and has received public protests of a number and vehemence that have amazed him.

The staunchest customers that Pathe News has are the exhibitors who have taken the trouble to find out what the public thinks of the world's first news reel. Pathe News has always been just as good as money and the best brains could make it. It will continue to be the best.

The public will continue to want to see the reel that they know.

It will continue to be the standby of the exhibitor who wants the best.

Columbia's Past Record Is a Guarantee of Future Performance

BOX-OFFICE records of the past year testify to the fact that Columbia delivered pictures upon which exhibitors of all ranks could depend for Quality and Profit. The "Big Twenty-Four" were acclaimed internationally as the most consistent program of the year. They were booked by leading circuits and first-run theatres from coast to coast. Encouraged by increased exhibitor support and confidence, Columbia plans to go further than ever before with THE PERFECT THIRTY, which are to be produced on an elaborate scale with prominent stars and worthwhile casts.

Columbia's pledge to the exhibitor is to continue to make the kind of pictures the public want to see, and that the theatre can play with profit, prestige and satisfaction.

The best production brains in the industry plus an experienced and well seasoned producing organization guarantee that THE PERFECT THIRTY will be a series of attractions worthy of a prominent place on the booking sheets of every theatre.

Columbia Offers 100 Per Cent Showmanship Service to Exhibitors

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION, in announcing THE PERFECT THIRTY for the Season 1927-1928, earnestly desires to impress on the mind of every exhibitor its ability to make pictures on a par with any producer in the industry. It prides itself on having as complete a production studio and as efficient an executive and sales organization as any company in the business.

During the past year, Columbia has succeeded in establishing a closer contact with exhibitors than ever before, both through its personally owned exchanges and through specially selected franchise holders who are pledged to give exhibitors 100 per cent service in each of their respective territories. Theatre owners are therefore guaranteed not only a high standard of production, but efficient distribution as well.

Columbia Pictures is solely a producing organization. It owns no theatres and is not in direct competition with any theatre owner. It has no interests apart from producing the best pictures it knows how to make, and is amply financed. Thus exhibitors are assured beyond question that THE PERFECT THIRTY for the Season 1927-1928 will be a high class, dependable product, with the utmost in box-office value.

The One Big Feature That Always Pulls

The public has put the stamp of its approval upon the theatre which by means of air conditioning and cooling apparatus delivers to its patrons a never ceasing flow of fresh, purified, invigorating and mechanically tempered air—cool in summer—warm in winter—comfortable always.

In the field of air purification and refrigeration Wittenmeier-Vitolyzed-Air installations are pre-eminent. From coast to coast, in hundreds of theatres and other public buildings, Wittenmeier-Vitolyzed Air equipment operates smoothly, quietly, efficiently — economically delivering a steady flow of comfort to patrons and profits to proprietors.

No installation too large, none too small to receive our utmost care and consideration.

Entirely at your disposal is our great organization backed by our nationwide experience, our specialized knowledge, our skilled engineering service. Please feel free to call upon us at any time for any information you may desire in connection with your problems of ventilation. It will be furnished gladly and without cost to you.

New York City.

Gentlemen:-

I want to take this occasion to thank you and compliment you on the refrigerating machinery installed by you in the Capitol Theatre -- not only for the superior results obtained, but the admirable spirit shown by your organization in the entire handling of the matter.

It was never a question of expense to you but solely a desire on your part to accomplish the most perfect result.

Furthermore, it will interest you to know that the increased receipts as a result of the excellent cooling system has far exceeded our most optimistic anticipations.

With thanks, and kind regards,

I remain,

Very truly yours,

NOW— Answer This One

If any other paper in this field really has a higher percentage of exhibitor subscription renewals (the highest evidence of reader interest) and also a higher exhibitor circulation than has MOVING PICTURE WORLD, then why don't they come clean and let the Audit Bureau of Circulations prove it? ☆

Every paper in this field is prejudiced in favor of itself—including ourselves.

The enlightening difference is, that of the many papers soliciting business, only MOVING PICTURE WORLD and one other weekly possess enough advertising value, reader interest, exhibitor circulation, and publishing pride to give their advertisers the even break and co-operation of having the National Circulation Authority—the A. B. C.—substantiate their claims.

Answer: No other paper has it.

Everyone in the industry knows Samuel Zierler. He has a remarkable record over a period of many years. A year ago he added to his many motion picture activities the guidance of Excellent Pictures Corporation; and already has brought it to a commanding position among the leaders in the Independent field.

Mr. Zierler is an executive who knows his stuff; he has a record of past performances that inspires confidence. Louis Baum, who recently joined Excellent Pictures as Vice President, should prove a tower of strength to the organization. Watch Excellent, not only this year, but right along, because its three year franchise plan brings a new note in Independent distribution.

There is every reason for watching Excellent's forthcoming 18 pictures.

Northwest Hears Finkelstein and Ruben May Quit

Expect Reorganization Soon—Is Publix in?

Much interest is shown in Minneapolis and throughout the Northwest in reorganization announcements which are expected to be made by Finkelstein & Ruben following shortly after the return of I. H. Ruben, William Hamm, M. L. Finkelstein and Edmund Ruben from the annual convention of First National franchise holders at Atlantic City.

It was announced that the future of the company would be decided after the convention and there have been rumors that a complete reorganization of the firm is to be made, involving the retirement of I. H. Ruben and M. L. Finkelstein.

The Finkelstein & Ruben holdings include 129 houses in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin. According to the most recent rumor, Publix has bought a 25 per cent. interest in these holdings and F. & R. is to take over and complete the construction of the new $2,000,000 Publix Theatre which was started in Minneapolis several weeks ago.

F. & R. officials have failed to confirm this report, however, and said that announcements concerning the company would be made in the near future.

Vita. Signs Weber-Fields

Vitaphone has signed the famous team of Weber and Fields for one number.

Tax Comes to Life

Thought dead, the 10 per cent amusement tax has bobbed up again in the County Affairs Committee, Cleveland reports. Latest belief is that it will come up for discussion early in May and that the industry is seriously threatened by its possible passage.

Late Chicago News

James Williams will build a 1,000-seat theatre at Seventy-ninth and Exchange avenue. The house is leased for ten years to Frank Seims. A $5,000,000 theatre and office building is planned for the northwest corner of State and Lake streets. The Willoughby Company is handling the project and Samuel Crown is drawing the plans. Another theatre is projected for Wacker drive near State. William Waller and Washington Porter are handling the project, which will be one of the largest Loop houses. Explosion of films in a brick vault of the Bland Brothers exchange on South Wabash avenue resulted in nine being injured.

Balaban and Katz report for the first three months of the year shows the best receipts in the history of the company. Garfield Sullivan has been arrested as head of a ring robbing theatres here. Floods close theatres at Beardstown, Ill. Picadilly Theatre is robbed of $7,800. The two robbers escaped in the crowds. The Tower Theatre of the Orpheum Circuit was robbed of Sunday night receipts.

Movietone at Roxy

Fox's Movietone will first be seen by the public this Saturday at the Roxy Theatre, New York, when it will show a West Point parade. As Roxy has Vitaphone, this gives his house two talking devices.

Warner Bros. Divide Country Into Two Great Sales Zones

THAT WARNER BROS. sales organization will hereafter be divided into an eastern and a western territory, Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution, announced at the opening of the company's annual convention at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, this week.

Fifty members of the Warner selling force, comprising division and branch managers from all over the country, are assembled on the roof of the hotel for a three days' meeting which will last until Sunday evening, May 1.

Picture Industry Rises to Aid Flood Victims of Mississippi

Benefit Shows Begin All Over Country As Hays and Woodhull Issue Appeals— Quick Action Imperative

By Merritt Crawford

MOBILIZED and fully functioning already, although the first calls for aid are barely a week old, the motion picture industry is today co-operating almost as a single unit with the American Red Cross in the relief work for the flood sufferers in the Mississippi Valley. From all sections of the country come reports of benefits and special performances and appeals for funds through the news reels and other sources organized almost overnight and made possible only through the medium of the screen.

Producers, distributors and theatre owners, alike, are bending all their energies to bring aid swiftly and in increasing volume to the devastated areas through the agencies of government and Red Cross officials now on the ground or on their way to the danger zones.

Montreal Bans Heralds, One Exhibitor Arrested

Recorder Semple of the Montreal Police Court has ruled against the distribution of heralds or handbills which might be thrown around in the street after they have been given out. In the Recorder's Court on April 23 he fined James Alvinson $10 and costs when the latter pleaded guilty to distributing handbills in front of a local theatre.

Money is what is needed and needed more urgently with every passing hour, and money is what the motion picture industry has pledged itself to get and get quickly in ample amounts for the supplies which must be had immediately, if this national calamity is not to become such a catastrophe as has never been known in the nation's history.

Americans to Help Make Russian Revolt Picture

American writers and film experts are asked by the Soviet Government to assist in making a spectacular motion picture of the Bolshevik revolution in 1917, according to an Associated Press dispatch.

Chief among them is Albert Rhys Williams of Boston, now living in Moscow. Sergius M. Eisenstein, director of "Potemkin," will direct the spectacle. Eight thousand people will be employed and the film will require nine months to make. The actual murder of Emperor Nicholas and his family will not be reproduced.

Williams was in Petrograd during the revolution and has written several books on his experiences.

Two Warner Zones

will make their headquarters at Warner Bros.' home office.

Other important announcements concerning the distribution and production policies of the company will result during the convention.

Cameramen Drown

T. G. Randolph, International Newsreel cameraman; F. H. Randolph of Seattle, his brother, and Arthur Bassett, an amateur photographer, were drowned on April 22 in the Columbia River, Stella, Wash., when waves from a huge blast of rock swept them off the ledge on which they had set up their camera.

"U" Product Described At Chicago Convention

Universal's twenty-first year started in Chicago this week. Three hundred salesmen from all of Universal's thirty-seven domestic exchanges, its six Canadian exchanges, and from London, Paris, Berlin, Tokyo and Argentine offices are meeting, under the direction of L. B. Metzger, general sales manager, in the first executive session of Universal's four-day convention at the Drake Hotel, to be officially welcomed by Mayor Thompson.

During the four days, announcement will be made to the salesmen of the product Universal has to offer for the photoplay year 1927-1928, starting on September 1.

The product discussed is estimated to be valued at $10,500,000.

New Chicago Theatre Co.

H. J. Marlowe, Arthur R. Hall and Thomas G. Gilmore have organized the Greater Pullman Theatre Corp., with a capital of $400,000, to equip and build picture theatres in Chicago. The offices are at 10 South LaSalle street.

Roxy Grosses High

The Roxy Theatre, New York, reports an attendance of 58,580 and a gross of $129,524 for the week ending April 22.

Looking for a Lorelei

Jesse L. Lasky is looking for an actress to play Lorelei in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

Harry S. Marion

Harry S. Marion, traveling circulation man for Moving Picture World for several years past, died suddenly, Saturday, April 23, at his home in Brooklyn. Taken suddenly ill with an attack of acute indigestion, he sought a home remedy, thinking it but a momentary attack. He died within a few minutes.

Mr. Marion was born in New York City in 1872, and was the son of a well-known lawyer. He early took to a stage career and, as he told in the Anniversary Issue of this paper, he was one of the first to stage an act of illustrated songs. For many years he was a stage favorite, and filled many important engagements. For several years he was stage manager of a series of Sunday night concerts given at the American Theatre.

Of late he has been with this publication and has covered practically the entire United States, making a host of friends for himself and the paper.

Funeral services were held on Tuesday evening, and the body was privately interred Wednesday.

News of the English Film Trade

(By Special Correspondent)

NO one in the trade was surprised by Mr. Bundy's purchase of British Instructional Films, Ltd. Negotiations were running for some time, and it is pleasing to learn that the purchase does not imply any substantial change in policy. So far the company has been remarkably successful. Production on the now famous "Secrets of Nature" series began so far back as 1919, while "The Battle of Jutland" later laid the foundation for even better-known pictures, such as "Armageddon," "Zeebrugge," "Ypres" and "Mons." The company intends to build large studios on the site at Surbiton.

Four of London's best-known halls have been acquired by the Gaumont-British Picture Corporation, Ltd., at a price that is mentioned as £550,000. The halls concerned are the Marble Arch Pavilion, Shepherd's Bush Pavilion, Lavender Hill Pavilion and the Avenue Pavilion, Shaftesbury avenue.

The corporation already owned eighteen cinemas in London and the provinces. In addition to the ownership of these halls the merger includes Gaumont, Ideal and W. and F. The companies concerned will continue to act separately and independently, but it is hoped to save a great deal of expense and to attain a greater degree of efficiency by means of the merger.

The largest of the share issues appearing this week-end is the Gaumont-British Picture Corporation. This is for 1,000,000 7½ per cent. Cumulative preference shares at 20s and 100,000 ordinary shares at 10s. each.

The advertised particulars show that the dividend on the 7½ per cent. preference shares, after meeting full debenture charges, is covered three times over, and in the opinion of the technical directors, the profits for the current year should exceed those of 1926.

Arrangements have been completed for the presentation of the latest Maurice Elvey picture, "Roses of Picardy," at the New Gallery, London, in about a fortnight's time.

Fascinating Evelyn Laye, queen of musical comedy, has undergone a film test which may be responsible for her making a big British film at Elstree. Film producers have had their eyes on Evelyn for a long time, but her stage engagements have prevented her from attending the studios. Now, however, a company has been bold enough to capture her.

There seems every prospect that Charles B. Cochran will again run a film show. This time it is likely to be "The Miracle," which I hear may be put on at the Royal Albert Hall. I must comment upon so obvious a box-office proposition as this coming film, for it is a title which is known throughout England and America, particularly in its association with Lady Diana Manners.

Who is the most-telephoned man in London? I fancy that Ralph Pugh, the man who is responsible for managing the great £1,000,000 British film scheme, for which big new studios are being constructed at Wembley, must come very near to possessing that distinction. Nowadays, he answers the 'phone in a tone suggestive of fatalistic resignation.

The most interesting British picture now being made is "The Ghost Train," in which Guy Newall is the star and for which the Southern Railway have provided a completely white-washed train.

The production of this film is due to the enterprise of C. M. Woolf of the W. and F. Film Service, who in the past few years has been responsible for many of the best pictures made in this country.

The Cinematograph Film Bill is still being considered by a Parliamentary committee, who are altering clauses here and there, as is the way of Parliamentary committees, so that nobody, certainly not the promoters, can know exactly what will be the final form of the Bill.

Exhibitors are still holding meetings in London and to provinces to consider the measure. The reports of these meetings make monotonous reading, for, at all of them, the majority of the speakers express uneasiness that the Bill is concerned solely with the quantity and ignores altogether the quality of British films.

And at all, or nearly all of the meetings, there is the odd individual or two who is in favor of the whole Bill.

That public interest in the picture industry as a medium of investment is spreading is proved—if proof is needed—by the serious manner in which the finance of the trade is treated by city journalists. It is generally agreed that the passing of the Government Bill will be followed by the flotation of a number of companies for the production of British films.

Denny in Drama?

Carl Laemmle is said to be seriously considering using Reginald Denny, Universal comedy star, in dramatic roles. Several Universal executives and players, including Denny himself, have broached the proposition to the president, and though said at first to be loath to even consider the experiment, Laemmle at last decided to give it a thorough examination as to merits. One trial picture may be made, with some comedy relief in it for the star.

E. B. Hatrick Sails to Perfect Newsreel

Edgar B. Hatrick, who has charge of all of the motion picture interests of William Randolph Hearst, sailed for Europe Wednesday morning, accompanied by Mrs. Hatrick.

The primary object of the trip is to complete the elaborate plans that have been in progress for blanketing Europe with representatives of M-G-M News, the new newsreel to be produced by Hearst News Service, Inc., and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Mr. Hatrick emphasized that the staffs of M-G-M News and International Newsreel will be entirely separate and complete units, just as each of the twenty-six newspapers and nine magazines of the Hearst organization are separate, yet each an integral part of the great whole. He will be away about six weeks. Mr. Hatrick also expects, during his absence, to secure some material for Cosmopolitan Productions.

Raives Heads T. O. C. C.

The eighth annual meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce was held at the Astor Hotel, April 26. Charles L. O'Reilly, who has presided over this body for five years, declined the nomination of the presidency and the following officers were elected:

President, Sol Raives; vice-president, J. Louis Geller; treasurer, Max Barr; secretary, James Matthews. Board of Directors: Hy Gainsboro, J. Arthur Hirsch, Hyman Rachmil, Rudolph Sanders, Harry Suchman.

Fox Scouts Northwest

It is rumored that Fox Film is scouting the Northwest for theatre locations. If one of the big producer-theatre chains should obtain possession of F & R's 129 theatres in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin, Fox would of course find itself without proper representation in the territory. A Fox theatre is already planned in Milwaukee and it is thought likely that more may be decided upon in this district.

Kleine Asks $20,300 Of Ritz-Carlton Co.

Application has been made to Justice Levy of the New York Supreme Court on behalf of the Ritz-Carlton Pictures, Inc., and J. D. Williams, for an order requiring George Kleine to furnish them with a bill of particulars giving the facts regarding an alleged agreement made on August 25, 1923, concerning the employment of Kleine as vice-president and treasurer of Ritz-Carlton, and showing whether the alleged agreement was oral or in writing.

Defendants say that Kleine alleges in his complaint that they agreed to pay him for his services a sum equal to that paid by them to Williams, the corporation's president. They say that Kleine claims to have served the corporation from September, 1923, to June, 1924, and claims there is due him $20,300, based on the services rendered by Williams. The corporation and Williams, in their answer to the complaint, makes a general denial.

Fox Wants Albany Site

It now looks as though Fox would erect a large theatre in Albany, N. Y., as attorneys who are conducting negotiations for the acquisition of a site in the business center of the city, admit that a deal has practically been closed. It is said that the property will cost the Fox people more than $500,000.

Alla Seeks Citizenship

Alla Nazimova has applied for final citizenship papers. Ninety days must elapse before she can take the oath. Her application said that she was born in Crimea in 1879 and that she came to this country in 1905, taking out first papers two years ago.

Lupino Lane, Educational comedy star, signs a new contract with E. H. Allen, general manager of the studios, presiding. Eight more Lane two-reelers will be released in 1927-28.

IN FULL CHARGE

H. H. Thomas takes new responsibilities.

Griffith Visits Trial

For Picture "Copy"

Not only David Belasco attended the Snyder murder trial on Monday, making copious notes, but our own D. W. Griffith sat at his right elbow doing the same. Neither commented on the reason for their presence, but that it was in the interest of "copy" cannot be doubted.

Griffith leaves this week for the West Coast, taking members of his New York staff.

H. H. Thomas Head of Division, Inc., Succeeding Merit

To Handle All Chadwick, Gotham, Rayart Films

Harry H. Thomas, for many years associated with I. E. Chadwick in the capacity of vice-president and general manager of Merit Film Corporation, now heads First Division Pictures, Inc., a new organization which has been formed to take over the business and goodwill of Merit Film Corporation.

According to Mr. Thomas, the new company will retain the entire Merit personnel and has the wholehearted support of Mr. Chadwick, whose only reason for withdrawing from exchange operation in the New York territory is to permit himself more time for production and national distribution.

Mr. Thomas' new company will continue to release the Chadwick product, which this year will consist of twelve special features. It also has acquired the Gotham franchise for New York and Northern New Jersey, which comprises twelve special productions and two super-specials starring Mrs. Wallace Reid.

A deal also has been consummated between Mr. Thomas and W. Ray Johnston, president of Rayart, under the terms of which First Division Pictures, Inc., will release, as heretofore, the eighteen specials—six Superior Melodramas, six "Famous Authors" and six Imperial Photoplays—on the Rayart franchise.

Swedes Plan 6 Films

Svensk Filmindustri of Sweden, with the assistance of UFA, will make six pictures in Sweden this year. Only interiors will be done there, exteriors to be made in other countries.

New Work For Savin

Edwin Savin has been made Vitaphone studio business manager and assistant to S. L. Warner. He was assistant comptroller.

Pick Sound View

The Spring Film Golf Tournament Committee has picked Sound View Golf Club, Great Neck, L. I., as the site. The date is Wednesday, May 11. The autumn event will be held at Winged Foot, which was the first choice, but which was not available for the spring affair.

Industry Rises To Aid Mississippi Flood Victims

uting companies forming that organization, issued an urgent appeal to all branches of the industry in the United States and Canada to aid the Red Cross in gathering funds.

R. F. Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, on Wednesday broadcasted a call to all the state organizations of the national body, urging them to form flood relief committees at once to co-operate with their local Red Cross chapters, to arrange special performances and set aside days for collecting relief funds directly at the theatres in their territories. Replies in many instances stated that the theatre men were already co-operating with the civic and charitable organizations in their localities for the emergency.

President Woodhull announced that at the convention of the Pennsylvania theatre owners in Pittsburgh on Tuesday, a resolution had been unanimously adopted to set aside a special day for all theatres in the state to collect funds for the flood sufferers and urged similar action by all other state units.

At the offices of the Hays organization it was stated that the Film Boards of Trade in the United States and Canada had been instructed to assist and aid movements to raise relief funds and to contribute pictures free to exhibitors giving benefit performances under the auspices of the Red Cross or other relief organizations, in instances where all the receipts were to be given to the cause.

Sam Katz, president of Publix Theatres, announced that he had received word from E. V. Richards, vice-president of the Saenger Amusement Company, that 95 theatres in this circuit throughout the South were arranging special performances for Saturday night or Sunday at advanced admission prices, giving the entire receipts to the Red Cross. The best local talent available will appear at these special performances.

General Hays, in commenting on the seriousness of the situation, said: "We have suggested to motion picture theatres throughout the United States and Canada that they aid the American Red Cross promptly in gathering funds for the sufferers in this terrible emergency. The directors of our association have pledged the assistance of the motion picture producers and distributors for this relief work and their hundreds of theatres have been enlisted in the cause. Special performances will be given at many theatres.

"The news reels are carrying to every motion picture theatre patron in the country an appeal for funds for the Red Cross and through actual scenes of the disaster are bringing vividly to the public the urgent need for relief."

General Hays gave out the following telegram, received from Homer V. Guy, owner of the Apollo Theatre in Dayton, Ohio, a city that knows what flood suffering can mean:

"Have turned over entire theatre to Dayton Automobile Club, Thursday night, for benefit of flood sufferers. Mayor of city, City Manager Chief of Police, Congressmen, Directors of Automobile Clubs will act as ticket sellers, doormen and ushers. Getting up special display in front of theatre, using old boats of Dayton's 1913 flood as an appeal and object-lesson."

In Los Angeles a special benefit performance will be held tonight (Saturday) at the Metropolitan Theatre to raise funds for the Red Cross, which has the enthusiastic support of the entire local industry. Arrangements for it were made upon briefest notice, acting on a suggestion wired by Harold B. Franklin from New York to Fred M. Beetson, representative of the Hays organization on the Coast.

These are but isolated examples of many that might be cited, showing how quickly and spontaneously the industry is responding to this latest demand upon it as a means of reaching the greatest possible number of people in the shortest possible time and with the strongest appeal to their hearts and pocketbooks.

That the industry generally is doing its "bit," is evidenced by the responses received by General Hays to messages sent by him to Herbert Hoover, Henry M. Baker, Director of Disaster Relief of the American Red Cross, other Red Cross officials, and to the Governors of the states including the flooded area.

General Hays' telegram to the foregoing named and other Red Cross officials follows:

"In behalf of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America we express deepest sympathy for the flood sufferers. Our news weeklies are carrying appeals to the public to subscribe to Red Cross at nearest Red Cross chapter. Can you suggest any other effective means for the motion picture industry to be of service in this emergency?"

It is sufficient to reprint a single reply to the above wire, that of George E. Scott, of the Central Committee of the Red Cross, which follows:

"We deeply appreciate quick and generous co-operation by motion picture industry and motion picture theatres throughout United States with Red Cross disaster relief fund campaign.

"In accordance your request, only additional suggestion we have would be possibly special collection in all motion picture theatres or special benefit performances behalf fund by motion picture theatres. This procedure now being done in many cities.

"Wish to assure you, however, greatest possible co-operation by motion picture industry is continued use in connection news weeklies flood pictures adequate Red Cross captions and appeal to public to subscribe to Red Cross at nearest Red Cross Chapter."

The following telegram was sent from the headquarters of the Film Boards of Trade, New York City, to the presidents of all Film Board of Trade in the United States and Canada:

"At meeting today of general sales managers of all national distributors represented in the membership of the Film Boards of Trade, it was resolved to assist and aid movements to raise funds for the relief of sufferers in the flooded area.

"Members representing national distributors are authorized to co-operate with exhibitors by contributing pictures in specific instances where exhibitors undertake benefit performances under auspices of Red Cross or other relief organizations, provided all receipts are contributed to the cause.

"Recommend that exhibitor arbitrators be asked to act upon the committee with your members in promoting this plan. Advise your local exhibitors' organization to this effect."

Text of M. P. T. O. A. Appeal

THE text of the appeal issued by the M. P. T. O. A., through President R. F. Woodhull, Joseph M. Seider, chairman of the Administrative Committee, and M. J. O'Toole, business manager, follows:

"The appalling loss of life and incalculable property damage caused by the terrible flood in the Middle West and South, with the attendant acute suffering and distress and the danger of disease always associated with these catastrophes, is such as to enlist the attention of every person in the United States.

"No other group can do more in any crisis than the Motion Picture Theatre Owners because of the community character of the theatres and their close daily contact with millions of people in all parts of our country.

"We therefore desire to call the attention of all motion picture theatre owners to this deplorable situation confronting so many thousands of men, women, and children in all of the cities and towns affected by this flood, and earnestly urge every theatre owner to do everything possible to help raise funds to alleviate this acute distress and help our afflicted fellow citizens to restore normal conditions in their home centers.

"To this end we suggest that the shortest possible cut be taken by all theatre owners to achieve immediate results, as the need is pressing and must be met at once.

"Let the state and regional organization officers act on this matter without delay, and individual theatre owners take upon themselves, either in direct co-operation with these officers or others, to put such plans into practice at once as will create funds for the flood sufferers.

"We suggest one of two ways to effect immediate results. One is to give a portion of a specified day's receipts. Another, to use the World War plan of four-minute speakers and take up a collection in the audience.

"Time is the most essential element. If your organization has not had the time to act officially in this matter and appoint a custodian of these Flood Funds, then take the money to the Mayor or other executive officer of your community and have him forward it with all possible speed to the flood sufferers.

"The big thing in this movement is SPEED. Act at once. Collect all the money you possibly can.

"Remember that a 'friend in need is a friend indeed,' and act with all possible haste."

Cameraman Drops Food For Flood Sufferers

Dropping food from an amphibian plane to refugees marooned on tiny high spots of land completely surrounded by miles of water, has been part of the work during the past few days of Norman Alley, chief of International Newsreel's Chicago bureau. When he is not succoring the unfortunate refugees, Alley has been making remarkable pictures from the air of the great flood that covers the entire Mississippi delta.

London Jobs Open?

A Broadway story this week was that Paramount will make two news reels. One of them would be a British edition specially edited. It is said a London office will be inaugurated and that shortly there will be several jobs open in the city where ice is scarce but liquor is good.

Strands Play Day and Date

The New York Mark Strand and the Brooklyn Mark Strand departed from their usual policy when they played Warner Bros., comedy special, "The Better 'Ole," day and date this week. As a rule the Brooklyn house follows the Broadway run by a week. The film was presented to the metropolitan public for the first time at popular prices, it having recently played an extended run of twenty-five weeks at the Colony Theatre at $2 top.

Siegel Now Has Six

Henry Siegel, theatrical partner of Phillips-Jones & Co., the collar people, this week acquired three houses in Brooklyn from Katz & Rosenzweig. The houses are the Beverly on Church avenue, the Culver, at Culver and New Utrecht avenues, and the Leader. This makes four theatres which Siegel has acquired within a fortnight.

Burr Buys Stage Play

C. C. Burr has purchased the film rights of Edward Peple's stage play, "A Pair of Sixes," for Johnny Hines, and it will be the comedian's next vehicle under the First National Banner.

Coming Events

May 2-5—Paramount Eastern Sales Convention, New York City.

May 2-6—Annual convention, Educational Film Exchanges, Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles.

May 4—First Annual Movie Frolic Exhibitors' Association of Chicago, Stevens Hotel, Chicago.

May 6—Paramount Middle West sales convention in Chicago.

May 11—Fox sales convention, Hotel Ambassador, Atlantic City, N. J.

May 19-24—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales convention, Hotel Biltmore, Los Angeles.

May 19-23—First National sales convention, Burbank Studio, Burbank, Cal.

June 7-9—National convention, M. P. T. O. A., Columbus, Ohio.

Suburban House to Use the Vitaphone

Plans were completed last week for a theatre in a Minneapolis suburb that will be equipped not only for motion pictures, but also for Vitaphone, vaudeville and regular theatrical productions. The theatre will be in Richfield, the newest addition to Minneapolis, at Nicolet avenue and Fifty-fourth street, formerly Diamond Lake road.

The theatre, which will cost $125,000 and seat 1,500, is to be built for Joseph W. Cohen, owner of the Lagoon Theatre Building at Hennepin and Lagoon, where the movies are operated by Finkelstein & Ruben.

Salesmen Set Ball Date

At a meeting this week of Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., it was decided to hold their Second Death Benefit Fund Dinner and Ball at the Hotel Commodore, November 26. Meyer Solomon of P. D. C. was appointed chairman of the Committee of arrangements. The committee includes: Jack Goldstein, Saul Trauner, Sol Solomon, Sol Teitel, Sol Kravitz, Matty Kahn and Moe Sanders.

Weber Secretary of Lumas

Floyd Weber, auditor and controller of Lumas Films at a director's meeting last week was elected secretary. The new secretary is a brother of John Weber, general manager of Tiffany Productions. He is married and is the proud father of Floyd Weber, Jr., whose recent appearance was made public a short time ago.

The Babe Entertains

"Babe" Ruth, through the Christy Walsh Syndicate, entertained at a "moving picture party" at the Friars Club on Wednesday. First National showed "Babe Comes Home." The affair was widely attended by newspaper folk.

A Busy Executive

Jack Bellman, president, Hollywood Film Exchange, will distribute Columbia product in New York, Northern New Jersey and Westchester County.

Hollywood Adds Two

Jack Bellman, president of Hollywood Pictures, has signed Saul Trauner and Morris Markowitz to the sales force. Mr. Trauner will be managing supervisor of the Brooklyn territory. Mr. Markowitz will handle the New Jersey sales.

O. K. Classroom Films

Classroom pictures, being made by Eastman Kodak, were shown this week in Rochester, N. Y., to twelve well-known educators and won much praise. They will become part of school curricula in the autumn. Announcement of specific release dates is expected soon.

Louis B. Mayer welcomes Charles M. Schwab and Mrs. Schwab to the M.-G.-M. studios at Culver City.

World-Wide Cable Service Is Opened By United Artists

Simultaneous Release Of News Planned

Immediate inauguration of a world-wide cable service on all major news stories is announced for United Artists' Publicity Department. News cables are now being sent from United Artists' home office in New York City to London, Buenos Aires, Sydney and Tokio, one day before stories are released for simultaneous publication in Los Angeles and New York City.

By the decision reached last week at a conference between Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president and general manager of foreign distribution (who has left for England), and Victor M. Shapiro, advertising and publicity director (who has left for Los Angeles), it is now possible for film announcements of public interest to be read on the same morning in England, Argentina, Japan, Australia, Algeria and Singapore. The first announcement so cabled throughout the world was the story of D. W. Griffith's return to the United Artists' ranks of active independent producers.

The new cable sent to London will be relayed to United Artists' exchanges in key cities in England and continental Europe. Buenos Aires will relay to South America. Tokio will relay to the Orient. Sydney will relay to the Antipodes.

Color Photos By Wire

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. may add color reproducing apparatus and send color photos over telephone wires. It claims ability to deliver finished color prints just as black and whites are now handled.

To Invade America

National Film Aktiengesellschaft will send twelve German films annually to the United States through Walter Kofeldt, Inc.

A Fine Victory

Such is the popularity of G. W. F. Griffin, Centralia, Ill., exhibitor, that 3,000 voters wrote in his name, not originally on the ballots, at the municipal election and defeated John McNeil, candidate for re-election for the four-year term under the commission form of government.

F. N. Sues M-G-M

First National, not M-G-M, owns screen rights to "The Miracle," according to complaint in a suit filed by the former this week, asking a preliminary injunction. The case will come up May 5. The plaintiffs are First National, Albert H. Woods and Rose B. Woods and the defendants are M-G-M, Joseph Menchen and Madge Menchen. The Woods say they are sole owners of the film rights and that on January 24 these were transferred to F. N., whose production plans are well under way.

Three Sales Meetings To Hear F. B. O. Plans

F. B. O.'s production program will be presented to the company's field forces at the annual sales convention which will be held this year in three cities, opening May 1 at Atlantic City, May 5 in Chicago and May 15 in Los Angeles.

Joseph P. Kennedy, president of Film Booking Offices, and Joseph I. Schnitzer, senior vice-president in charge of distribution, will attend the three meetings and will address the field forces at each. All meetings will be presided over by Lee Marcus, general sales manager.

Among the home office executives who will attend the three meetings are E. B. Derr, treasurer; C. E. Sullivan, assistant treasurer, and Hyatt Daab, director of advertising and publicity.

Fox to Supervise

Empire Pictures Corp., new comedy unit, announces the appointment of Charles Donald Fox as supervisor of production for a new series of juvenile comedies to feature well-known child players. Production will begin soon in Hollywood, it being planned to have the first series of thirteen two-reel subjects ready for fall.

New Field Representatives

The Lumas Film Corporation, on behalf of Gotham Productions, has added two special sales representatives. M. C. Howard will represent Gotham in the Middle West. J. W. ("Jimmy") Sper has been assigned to Washington, D. C. A new Gotham exchange has been opened in Cincinnati by Security Pictures Corporation of Cleveland. This will be managed by Victor L. Schramm.

Writer Now Acting

Virginia Bradford, writer, of Memphis, Tenn., has been signed by Cecil B. DeMille to a five-year contract and assigned to the featured feminine role in "The County Doctor."

M-G-M Asks Duell to Verify Facts in Suit

Application has been made to Justice Levy of the New York Supreme Court for an order directing Charles H. Duell, Inc., to serve a verified reply to certain portions of the defense, set up in the answer to a suit brought by it against Metro-Goldwyn, Robert M. Schenck, J. Robert Rubin and Louis B. Mayer.

The suit is similar to one brought in the U. S. District Court for damages, alleging Metro-Goldwyn and the other defendants were responsible for Lillian Gish breaching her contract with Duell. This suit was dismissed by Judge Mack of the Federal Court, who found Miss Gish was free to disregard the terms of the contract, on the ground that it was not her that breached the contract but Duell.

The defendants contend that if the Duell corporation is directed to file a verified reply to the portions of the defendant's answer, which refers to the facts adduced in the Federal Court case, "it will insure an adjudication of the whole matter under such circumstances that there will be no necessity for a trial."

DeMille Re-Signs Rod

Rod La Rocque will not leave the DeMille organization at the termination of his last year's contract. A statement from William Siström, general manager of the DeMille Studio, announces that he has been signed to a new agreement.

New Work For Savin

Ed Savin has been appointed studio business manager for the Vitaphone Corporation. Savin has been with the Vitaphone since its conception as assistant controller.

COMING AND GOING

CECIL B. DE MILLE, who has been watching the reactions of New York audiences to his "The King of Kings" at the Gaiety Theatre, left for Los Angeles on Thursday. The Hollywood premier of this production will be held within a few weeks in Grauman's new Chinese Theatre. Returning with Mr. De Mille and his family will be John C. Flinn, vice-president of P. D. C., Arthur Whyte, general sales manager; William Siström, general studio manager; Jeanie Macpherson, adapter of "The King of Kings," and her mother, and Mrs. E. K. Adams of the De Mille story department.

Cresson E. Smith, general sales manager, Middle West Division, United Artists, left New York City on April 21 for an extended trip in the Middle West.

Edgar B. Hatrick, supervisor of all Hearst film interests, and Mrs. Hatrick sailed for Europe this week.

"Doc" Shallenberger has returned from the Middle West.

Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president and general manager of foreign distribution of United Artists, sailed Tuesday on the first leg of a three months' tour of inspection of foreign exchanges in thirty-five countries. He is accompanied by Mrs. Kelly.

Clayton P. Sheehan, manager of the Fox Foreign Department, returned this week from an inspection tour of Cuba and Mexico. He made the trip to Havana by steamer from New York. After conferring with S. S. Horen, the Fox Cuban manager, Mr. Sheehan sailed for New Orleans and traveled the remainder of the distance to Mexico City by train.

Sam Morross, head of United Artists' Department of Play Dates, returned to New York on April 19 and left on April 20 for Minneapolis.

Budd Rogers, vice-president of Lumas Film, started last week on the first leg of transcontinental trip during which he will visit nearly every exchange center from Coast to Coast in the interests of Gotham Productions.

Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent of Fox Films West Coast Studios, left for Hollywood Tuesday, April 26, to pick up the reins of production activity where he left them six weeks ago when he began the first vacation he has had in fifteen years.

William Le Baron, recently appointed vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of production, left New York for Hollywood on Thursday. He will work at the Coast in conjunction with Edwin King, vice-president in charge of the studios.

George H. Eaton of British National National Corporation has arrived here to remain until the end of next week.

Will H. Hayes is due on the West Coast on May 4 for a six weeks' trip.

E. B. Derr, treasurer of F. B. O., returned to New York this week after a three months' sojourn at the Hollywood studios of the company.

Fred A. Cruise is back to manage the Rivoli, New York, after opening the new Paramount at Palm Beach for Publix.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, visited Boston this week to address Harvard students on pictures.

B. P. Schulberg and Walter Wanger of Paramount are in New York from the West Coast.

William Randolph Hearst is due in New York from the West Coast this week-end.

Arthur Loew, M-G-M foreign manager, has returned from abroad. With him was Harry Portman, Paris man.

Theatre Burns

The Boulevard Theatre, Montreal, was destroyed by fire early in the morning of April 22 from an unknown cause. The loss is estimated at $85,000. It was one of the eight Montreal theatres ordered closed because of alleged unsafe conditions. It has been closed for six weeks and extensive alterations had been practically finished. D. Berzan is the proprietor.

Gala Show For Patheites

The Pathe Clubs of New York and Philadelphia will have a gala entertainment at their joint dinner and dance at the Knickerbocker Hotel, New York, Saturday evening. The entertainment provided by Rutgers Neilson, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, will offer Naomi Winter of the Theo Creo dancers in Spanish and oriental numbers; Muriel Gibson of the Gibson and Swift Revue in Songs and dances; Jean Block of the Mansfield Dancers in eccentric and acrobatic numbers; the Helvetian Male Quartette and others. Music for dancing will be provided by the Pathe Club Orchestra under the direction of Ray Eckerson.

Canadian Heads Attend

All branch managers of the Film Booking Offices of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, will attend the large regional conventions of the F. B. O. in the United States during May, according to the official announcement of P. C. Taylor, Canadian general manager. Those in Eastern Canada, headed by Mr. Taylor and Manager Barney Murphy of the Toronto branch, have left for the eastern convention at Atlantic City on May 1 to 4, while those of the Canadian West will proceed to Chicago for the convention there.

Incorporations

The slump in the number of motion picture companies incorporating in New York State continued this week, when only four companies were chartered by the secretary of state. These companies included the Majestic Screen Productions, Inc., $500,000, with J. C. DeBronville, Samuel M. Fink, and Helen Marsak, of New York City; Vocafilm Corporation of New York, capitalization not stated, Stefan K. dePomierski, Philip J. Philbin and James G. Crespo, New York City; Congress Operating Corporation, capitalization not specified, Freda Freeman, Jennie Kalish, Joseph Russakow, Brooklyn; Fredwalt Amusement Corporation, $10,000, Esther Abend, Dorothy Gerber, Ralph Elmer, Brooklyn.

Meyers Adds Another To Chicago Circuit

The Meyers Circuit, which controls the Marquette and Highway theatres on the South Side, Chicago, has added the Teatro del Lago at Kenilworth on the north shore to their chain, George King, formerly of the Marquette, has been named house manager. The theatre seats 1,500. Henry Stern, formerly manager of the Highway Theatre of the Meyers Circuit, has succeeded King at the Marquette and in turn has been succeeded at the Highway by Marshall Dooley. Howard Struble has been named assistant manager of the Marquette and Joseph Stern will buy the films for the circuit, with headquarters at the Highway. Sam Meyers is managing director of the circuit and will give the new Teatro del Lago his personal attention.

Northwest Buys Rayart

The Northwest M. P. T. O. has gone further into the film exchange business through the purchase of part of the Rayart group of pictures for the coming season. The part purchased is said to include 18 features. This is said to be only half of the product which will be bought for the coming season, as the business has been much better than some expected and indications are that the exchange will prove a profitable venture.

To Teach Film Scoring

The Cleveland Institute of Music will give a course in motion picture scoring to be conducted by David Mendoza, conductor of the Capitol (New York) Grand Orchestra. The class is the first in the history of the conservatory curriculum.

Stanley Buys the U. S.

The Stanley-Fabian Co. has bought the United States Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., from Bernstein & Botjer. The house, which is the largest in Hoboken, seats 1,200.

Beauty Sails In

Senorita Maria Casajuana arrives to compete for world beauty title and a place in the Kleig sun. The latter seems assured her.

Sells 8 Films Abroad

Edwin Miles Fadman, president of the Red Star Pictures Corporation, 38 bis Avenue de la République, Paris, has sold the following pictures for Hungary, Yugoslavia and Rumania to Gomchi Films: "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," "Parisian Love," "With This Ring," "The Other Woman's Story," "Lawful Cheater," "Free to Love," "The Plastic Age," and "The Charleston in Six Lessons."

New Dock For "Ironsides"

After twenty weeks and a half at the Rivoli Theatre, "Old Ironsides" on Wednesday night pulls up anchor and sails down Broadway to the Criterion, where Wallace Beery, the sea-going clown, will entertain summer visitors to Broadway, and Esther Ralston and Charles Farrell will continue their deep-sea romance.

Governor Alvin T. Fuller of Massachusetts welcomes Editor Ray Hall of Pathe News to the Bay State and promises him co-operation in coming news events.

"Miss Spain" Here For Beauty Trials And Fox Contract

Maria Casajuana Picked By Ed. Hill Abroad

Senorita Maria Casajuana, chosen from among 1,000 contestants as the most beautiful girl in Spain, arrived aboard the French Liner Suffren this week to enter the "International Pageant of Pulchritude" as "Miss Spain" and to start work in Fox pictures.

Senorita Casajuana's contract with Fox Films is the result of the ambition of William Fox to introduce fresh and attractive types of Latin beauty in Fox pictures. With this in mind, Mr. Fox sent Edwin C. Hill, now director of Fox Varieties, to Spain last year to conduct a countrywide beauty contest.

Miss Casajuana is 21 years old, and just 5 feet in height. She weighs 108 pounds and has a slim and graceful beauty. Her eyes are dark brown with true Spanish brilliance. Her hair is dark brown, almost black.

Pathe Aids Health Men

State officials, child welfare workers and committee chairmen of the American Child Health Association are expressing praise and appreciation to Pathe for its contribution of a special film trailer focusing the attention of the public to a nation-wide drive for the celebration of Child Health Day, or May Day.

Ask $1,900 Commission

George Jessel this week appeared in the New York Supreme Court as defendant in a suit brought by Edward Davidow and Rufus Le Maire, theatrical agents, who are suing Jessel to recover $1,900 commission.

Wanted: A President

When the Northwest M. P. T. O. holds its annual convention in St. Paul early in May it will be confronted with a novel situation. It will be necessary to choose a president with apparently no one willing to run for the office. W. A. Steffes has been president since the formation of the organization but has refused to consider another term. There has always been a group to support an opposition candidate to Steffes, but this year no one seems ready to accept the job.

Suit Does Not Affect Pathe Merger Future

The following statement was issued from the offices of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., concerning the $1,500,000 suit brought by Zach M. Harris against the Cinema Corporation of America:

"The action which the newspapers announce has been brought by Zach M. Harris against the Cinema Corporation of America and Producers Distributors Corporation has nothing whatever to do with Pathe Exchange. Pathe is not a party to the suit and is in no way liable for any judgments or other indebtedness of Cinema Corporation of America or of Producers Distributing Corporation.

"Furthermore, this suit has no bearing or influence whatsoever on the proposed Pathe-Keith-De Mille recapitalization plan, and under this plan the enlarged Pathe Company will not assume any of the debts or liabilities of either of the defendant companies."

Last Minute News Flash

An Associated Press dispatch reports completion of a $270,000,000 theatre merger, placing 300 Western theatres under the direction of West Coast Theatres, Inc. West Coast takes over direction of Publix houses on the Pacific Coast and the holdings of North American. This evidently means that the Publix New York home office is deemed too far distant to manage the western houses to the best advantage.

From the Hollywood Bureau, of Moving Picture World

April 28, 1927.—Hollywood—Telegraphic advices received here today in the headquarters of West Coast Theatres from the corporation's vice-president, Abe Gore, now in New York, confirm the alliance which is described in the wire as including:

"West Coast Theatres, Inc., Marcus Loew, head of the country-wide Loew theatrical chain; Louis B. Mayer, executive head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio at Culver City; First National Studios; Adolph Zukor, head of the Famous Players and Publix Theatres; Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists; William Fox, head of the Fox chain of theatres and studios; John Dillon, of the Hayden Stone Banking Co. of New York; Harold B. Franklin, former vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky, as well as other prominent leaders of the film industry."

Sports Notes

In the past year there has been intensive activity in the field of motion picture sports, conducted under the auspices of the Motion Picture Athletic Association. The Pathe Club members have participated in every branch of this activity, emerging triumphantly with five trophies to their credit, two for bowling, two for tennis and one for basketball.

The spring has ushered in an elaborate program of sports for the coming months, and the motion picture baseball and tennis leagues will command considerable attention. In a practice baseball game played by the Pathe nine and the team of Warner Bros. at P. S. A. L. field in Brooklyn, Pathe defeated its opponent to the tune of 2 to 0. Pathe met First National on the diamond at Van Cortlandt Park, Saturday, April 23 in another practice contest and lost 5 to 2. The official "movie" baseball tournament embracing teams of the leading motion picture companies will open on May 14.

The men that will represent Pathe in the coming film tennis tournament will be Jack Level, P. A. Parsons, Merle Johnson and Martin McAndrews.

The Pathe bowlers in a playoff of a tie for third place in the bowling tournament at Dyer's alleys on Broadway, April 20, swamped Universal with a three straight-game victory and were awarded a cup and a plaque trophy.

As a follow-up to the inter-Pathe bowling contest, in which the bowlers of Pathe's Philadelphia exchange defeated the crack home office teams at Philly, the Quakertown folks will invade New York on Saturday, April 30, at which time the first and second men's teams of both offices and the girls' teams will hold bowling contests at Dyer's alleys. The Pathe Club has appointed a special committee of welcome to greet the Philadelphia crowd, and following the bowling, a dinner dance and entertainment will be held at the Knickerbocker Hotel Grill.

Wagner Tells A. M. P. A. He's Against Censorship

United States Senator Robert H. Wagner addressed the A. M. P. A. members at the regular Thursday luncheon at the Hofbrau House and among other things declared himself to be unqualifiedly opposed to censorship, Federal or otherwise, of motion pictures.

Senator Wagner, who attended the luncheon at the invitation of A. L. Selig of Tiffany, an old personal friend, was introduced by Arthur James, toastmaster.

Record Attendance At Picture Engineers Meet

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Norfolk, Va. (Special wire).—The meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers here drew a record attendance and produced a wonderful program of exceedingly valuable papers. Vitaphone was much in evidence as a subject of discussion, both in the program of the papers and in the entertainment. The attendance at the sessions evidences an increased interest in the society. The papers covered every branch of activity in the industry. Exhibitors and projectionists of Norfolk are co-operating in every way to assist in making the meeting 100 per cent successful. My detailed report will appear in Moving Picture World next week.

Harry Cohen to Make Clare Briggs Cartoons

Clare Briggs, famous cartoonist, of the New York Herald-Tribune, has at last consented to put his favorite comic character into films. "When a Feller Needs a Friend" is to be photodramatized in two reel features, according to a contract signed this week.

Harry Cohen, foreign representative for Metro before its merger with Goldwyn, and S. George Ullman, manager and personal friend of the late Rudolph Valentino, will be the producers of the new series.

No distributing arrangement have yet been announced, it being planned to make at least three of the series on the Coast before definite releasing connections are completed.

The series will be two-reel dramatic comedies built around stories suggested by the famous Briggs cartoons, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," which have long been a feature of the New York Herald-Tribune and the newspapers included in its syndicate. Mr. Briggs will supervise the stories produced.

Seek Seattle Censors

Seattle, Wash.*

Seattle is slated for a new theatre censor board, to be known as the Board of Theatre Supervisors, if a new ordinance which has been drafted by Counsel T. J. L. Kennedy for Chairman W. T. Campbell of the Public Safety Committee passes. Mayor Bertha Landes is said to be responsible for the suggestion and the supervisory board would act in a supervisory capacity with her.

Murder Jury Sees Movie

Our Stock Market

By Ervin L. Hall

The Stock Market this week has had to withstand considerable pressure and the result has been a slight falling off in quotations. This condition is quite natural as the market has been moving steadily upward for three weeks. With business in general going along nicely and plenty of money in the country for every purpose, we can see no reason at the present time for what is called a major reaction. Money remains at 4% and as we have said before, the ease in the money market is the backbone of high security prices. Film stocks in general gave a good account of themselves, there being no decided break, even among the more speculative issues.

The Kodak Pathe merger probably means control of the raw stock film production of the world. The situation at present leaves 60% of the output credited to Kodak and 15% to Pathe. The only other competitor after the amalgamation is the Agfa in Germany, which supplies about 20% of raw film production. Full details are not thoroughly settled at this time, but it is known that Kodak of France and Pathe Cinéma will unite to form a new Pathe Kodak Company, and that Kodak will hold control. This has stimulated the shares of Pathe Cinema on the Paris Bourse.

Warner Brothers Class "A" common continued active this week but made no appreciable gain. This stock continues to be quite popular with the speculators. As there appears to be no immediate prospect for a dividend the price is largely governed by rumors and pool activity.

Fox Film "A," after dropping several points on account of the recent unfavorable statement, appears to be holding around 57. At this price it is close to the low for the year and yields about 7%. It still appears high in price and may be subject to further reaction.

Paramount has shown little activity lately but has refused to be depressed much below 106. The yield is around 7½% and although there is not much chance of an increase in the dividend rate, the present price holds on account of the ease of money. With money as cheap as it is, a stock yielding 7½% where the income is fairly safe is attractive.

UNIVERSAL'S Supreme Achievement

I HONESTLY believe, and state with all the sincerity and power in me, that this announcement covers the greatest array of outstanding motion picture entertainment ever offered by Universal—OR ANY COMPANY—in a single year!

I cannot state my faith any stronger. I CANNOT MAKE IT TOO STRONG!

Carl Laemmle

Universal has the BIG

CARL LAEMMLE ASKED PROMINENT EXHIBITORS, one after another, hundreds of them, "What do you want, above all things, in Universal Pictures to make them the outstanding money-making and entertainment-bringing productions on the market—BAR NONE!"

They said: "Give us the best-selling novels and magazine stories that millions are reading; give us the successful Broadway plays that everybody knows about. Give us 'Show Boat,' 'The Chinese Parrot,' 'Alias the Deacon,' 'We Americans,' 'The Small Bachelor,' — others like that—and then give us ANOTHER 'COHENS AND KELLYS!'"

CARL LAEMMLE DIDN'T REPLY BY OFFERING "SOMETHING just as good." He went into the market with hundreds of thousands of dollars—and BOUGHT!—BOUGHT!!—BOUGHT!!! Until it became common knowledge in higher film circles that for anything Universal felt the public wanted—UNIVERSAL OUTBID THE FIELD!

Then Carl Laemmle moved his home TO THE STUDIO. And built around the greatest production facilities and organization in the world an array of directorial talent that is amazing. On top of that, he added to famous plays, novels and stories—casts studded with STARS!

TODAY, CARL LAEMMLE CHALLENGES THE ATTENTION of every exhibitor in the world, no matter HOW BIG. Study the pictures—title by title—THERE HAS BEEN NOTHING LIKE IT IN THE HISTORY OF THE MOTION PICTURE! Universal is at its peak — Universal's place is at THE PEAK OF THE INDUSTRY!

Go to your nearest exchange. Say, "I want to see some of those NEW Universal Pictures." WE KNOW THE PRODUCT! No guesses—no mere hopes—we have SEEN the pictures that Universal City is turning out today. WE WANT YOU TO SEE THEM!

CARL LAEMMLE ENTERS HIS TWENTY-SECOND YEAR as a picture man with UNIVERSAL AT THE PEAK OF THE INDUSTRY! "Long Run Specials" of startling strength; thirty-three BIG GUN GROUP JEWELS crowded with pictures that in any other year and with any other company would be automatic super-specials; sensational THRILL pictures and action dramas; and a line-up of SUPER-SHORTS even out-distancing the terrific pace set by Universal this year in the short subject field.

The rumors started months ago—the word sped. With this first complete, amazing disclosure of the whole story, with the showings of the pictures—it will flame across the country like wild-fire: "Universal Has The BIG PICTURES This Year!"

RUN SERIALS

"THE SCARLET ARROW"—All the glamor and glory of the famous Northwest Mounted—all the speed and action of the great open spaces—all the thrills and suspense of bad men in rough country—of strong men in the wastelands and the wilderness torn between love and duty with the rush and turmoil and surging action of hunted men and hunters of men. Featuring Francis X. Bushman, Jr.—and watch this new star click!—Made from the story by Howard Clark in 10 thrilling episodes that will bring them back again and again! Directed by Ray Taylor.

"THE HAUNTED ISLAND"—What a mystery title! What a chance for romance in it! What a world of thrill and drama in the name alone! And it is all of those things combined with a marvelous cast starring Jack Daugherty and directed by that ace of serial directors Henry MacRae. Made from the famous novel by the widely known Frank R. Adams into a gorgeous, thrilling, bewildering mystery serial with ten big thrill punch-climaxes to keep them guessing and impatient for the next episode!

"THE VANISHING RIDER"—Starring William Desmond, King of the serial stars in a wild, tempestuous mystery rider story that starts with a roar of action and ends every episode with a hair-raising thrill. Desmond has been getting enormous publicity touring the Keith Orpheum Circuit in vaudeville and he's a bigger bet than ever for you to cash in on! Remember him in "The Riddle Rider" and "The Return of the Riddle Rider"? Great box office serials, both of them, and this is even better! 10 Episodes.

"THE TRAIL OF THE TIGER"—The greatest circus serial, taken from the Saturday Evening Post story by Courtney Riley Cooper, who knows his circus like Barnum knew his stuff! There are more thrills and big scenes than a three ring circus and a story of love, villainy and intrigue in the atmosphere of the tanbark that is a marvel of suspense and realism! 10 hectic episodes jammed with circus atmosphere! Directed by Henry MacRae, featuring Jack Daugherty.

Tom Gives the Wife Some Spending Money

Tom Mix, Fox western star, made certain that his wife would not find herself short of cash at Carlsbad or when she takes a look at the Westminster Abbey on her forthcoming trip abroad. At a little dinner party given by Mrs. Mix's mother, Tom presented his wife with a check for $25,000 to cover expenses and another for spending money. The latter was for $100,000, which should buy a flock of souvenirs.

Mrs. Mix, who recently underwent a serious operation, will leave Los Angeles on May 12 for New York, where she will embark on her European jaunt.

Arbuckle Wins Much Applause

Fatty Arbuckle this week stepped back into the flare of Los Angeles popularity. In one of his first official appearances out here since he ceased his activities as a screen comedian, Arbuckle held the attention and won the lengthy applause of all audiences at the Pantages Theatre this week. After this engagement it is said that he will leave for Europe.

Back To Legit?

Barbara Bedford, who had an important role in "The Notorious Lady," which Sam Rork produced for First National, has been tendered an offer to return to the stage in a comedy-drama written by Willard Keefe. Miss Bedford is now being featured by Tiffany Productions in "Backstage," in which Buster Collier, Jr., has the male lead.

Mr. Curtiz is heralded as one of the few directors who is headed toward the new and modern direction, that is to illustrate the inner life and emotion with the help of the unlimited technical possibilities of the camera. All those who are acquainted with his work done so far in Europe and in America, predicting great and important position for him in the American film industry.

Lubitsch Going Abroad

Ernst Lubitsch, director of "Old Heidelberg" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will sail for Germany on May 12, where he will film final scenes on his production. Student action at the Heidelberg University will serve to lend a colorful touch of reality to the picture.

Vancouver Capitalists Organize National Cinema Studios—Move is Result Of Parliamentary Legislation

By JIM POWERS
West Coast Staff Writer

THE first real thrust of British interests to cut in on the domination of American films on the market was inaugurated in Hollywood this week by Jack Andrew Anderson, representing Vancouver capitalists. Nils Olaf Chrisander, former DeMille director, has been signed as director-general of the Canadian venture and has left with Anderson on a two-week trip to Vancouver, where he will institute a careful survey of the situation.

THE organizing of the National Cinema Studios, with headquarters in Vancouver, comes as a direct result of the legislation now before the British Parliament forcing British theatres to use at least 7½ per cent. of British made films and placing heavy duties on American productions.

Sir John Vaughn and other prominent Canadian capitalists are sponsoring the National Cinema Studios, according to Anderson. Among others interested in the financial end of the venture are Lord Beaverbrook, Sir Robert Kindersley, president of the Bank of England, and Major L. C. Fordham.

When interviewed by the Moving Picture World, Anderson declared that there was plenty of capital behind the venture and that there was no question in his mind but that the British company would offer serious competition to American rivals.

"Chrisander was selected after several months' negotiations to fill the post of director-general because of his knowledge of pictures from a European viewpoint," declared Anderson. "As you know, Chrisander was formerly director-general of UFA, the German producing organization, before coming to the United States to direct for Cecil B. De Mille. For this reason we feel that he is admirably equipped to act in the capacity for which we signed him."

When the signing of Chrisander to head the British company was announced it exploded a bombshell in the local film colony. Anderson informed the writer in his room at a local hotel that the 'phone has been buzzing continually ever since the announcement, with calls from Hollywood individuals anxious to put money or otherwise affiliate themselves with the proposition.

While interviewing Anderson he was in receipt of a wire from his associates in Vancouver informing him that they would not consider the injection of outside money in the venture. This leads one to believe that there must be sufficient capital in back of the venture to make the whole affair worthy of more than passing comment.

Fred Beetson, Will Hays' representative on the coast, was in the dark as to the entire matter. When questioned by the Moving Picture World as to his knowledge of Anderson or the persons he represented, Beetson declared "he knew nothing."

Howard Bretherton

HOWARD BRETHERTON

By Tom Waller

West Coast Representative

AWAY from Hollywood there is a fan tendency to size up the director as the "bird" who has the pick of the world's most beautiful women and the "guy" who has the fattest bank-roll. How he gets the job seems to be attributed by many to some kind of luck for which there is no adjective.

In Hollywood there are some who figure that it is simply knowing what tree to shake and how to shake it that causes the directorial plum to bounce right into a lap. Such "Hollywoodians" are not only the tourists who are making the film capitol their place of residence for a couple of days or weeks. Those who know about the inside workings out here agree that a tree has to be shaken and that the tree is no sapling, but a piece of timber quivering its leaves only, in the vast majority of cases, to the strongest hands.

How Howard Bretherton shook his tree on the Warner lot is our story. It took him thirteen years of the toughest kind of a struggle to get his hands in shape for the proverbial megaphone. Now he not only has the well earned plum, but a long term contract with Rin Tin Tin's "Hills of Kentucky" as his directorial debut and a Monte Blue humdinger just coming out of the cutting room titled "The Black Diamond Express."

Bretherton's colorful career began near Gallup, New Mexico, where his father owned a coal mine and where Bretherton commingled with Navajo Indians for eight years. Becoming a director he has realized only one ambition for this man. What he is hoping to do now is to be able to take some cameramen to his boyhood haunt and work the story tellers of years ago into a series of pictures based on their own legends as they were told to him. In this picture he would not have Indians in buckskin and feathers with faces splotted with paint, but the Navajos as they really are, with velvet shirts cut V-shape at the neck and with hair tied up in a knot at the back of the head.

Graduating from California's Stanford College, Bretherton reversed Greeley's adage and went to New York. There he learned the first essential for a good percentage of the stuff that spells success in the picture game—salesmanship! But it was not as a film salesman. Bretherton sold high explosives.

After a spell of New York's good old dust and elevators, Bretherton felt the urge for the wide open spaces, so he trotted westward; this time, however, to Hollywood. He stepped off the train here with the idea of continuing his salesmanship, but the opportunities for the explosives line were not so many as they were in the East, he solemnly avers, so he took what he then thought was the next best thing—the movies.

Bretherton made his debut in 1914, when Harold Lloyd was an extra. More than once he says he ran into Lloyd trying to get a job at the same studio. Those were the days when Bretherton carried his mustache in his vest pocket. That bit of thatchery contributed largely to his ability for earning three bucks per day. Incidentally, a dress suit plus the mustache meant two additional singles.

In the six months that he "extra-ed" Bretherton recalls what some real cowboys did to one of those known out here today as the "drugstore" brand. It seems that Allan Dwan was directing a western for Uncle Carl in the good old day before there was such a place as "the strangest city in the world." This particular gentleman was showing off skill that he had never obtained on any ranch. While prancing about, Bretherton noticed the real horsemen clustering together and now and then pointing in the direction of the imitation knight of the range. After the show this lad was suddenly pulled off his horse and given a "chapping," which, for the benefit of New York and Hohokus readers, is a sound beating over the rear end with tough leather cowboy pants as a whip, this in turn, wielded by a tough cowboy, while a couple of hard-timers were holding the victim spread-eagle over what used to be an adult beer keg.

In those days saluting took precedence over handshaking. And director's didn't go to a central casting office, as there wasn't any. Instead, each megaphoner had his own list of extras, and it was up to an embryonic star to use his own ingenuity to get on the right side of a director's pencil.

Bretherton told us how he used to chauffeur Al Christie back and forth to his studio all so that the necessary contact might be effected.

Eventually Bretherton got disgusted, to put it in his own language, with "acting." He decided to take a man's job and became a "swamper" for Christie, or the individual who was the property man's lowest rated but most essential aid. This work was driving the truck down to Los Angeles to get "property" or anything from a tin pail to a broken couch to use on the set, since, in those days, the studios all shopped in the same property warehouse downtown. This job netted him a weekly return of twelve dollars. Then one day he became a regular property man.

The life of a property man then, as Bretherton recalls it, had just about twice the amount of fuss and worry attached to it that such a position has today. Not only to get the "props," but to dress the sets was Bretherton's job. He dressed as many as nine a day starting out with one suite of parlor furniture, then covering it and uncovering it and moving it around in a half dozen ways so as to disguise in each picture in which it was used. At the same time Bretherton worked himself into the side job of assistant cameraman. And before his four years with Christie were up he had also edged in for himself the title of assistant director.

Bretherton's next experience in the department of production was in the Universal cutting room where he worked on three pictures.

In 1920 Bretherton found himself back in New York; this time not as a salesman of high explosives, but as one of the crew in the old Selznick company. The same year he left Selznick to go to Rome as cutter and assistant director for Italy's UFA. There he got the kind of a slant on production methods which caused him to express to us the other day why he can sympathize with many continental picture people when they first land in Hollywood.

"Then they had no lighting to speak of," he said. "In America our job is our life, but in Rome I found that the average Italian considered his job as just a necessity for life. Consequently Italian electricians sitting in the rafters more than once let a light burn out and stay out while their mind wandered back to the little garden, violin or a sweetheart."

His last three years have been on the Warner lot where he spent practically all of that time up to his recent elevation to a directorship cutting pictures. Bretherton believes film cutting experience is the finest end for a man in the picture game hoping some day to be tendered a megaphone. This is one of his reasons:

A cutter gets all of the footage from the original shootings. It is up to him to eliminate the superfluous; to get to the meat of the picture's story. After cutting a few pictures the quickest way to a best built up climax followed by a mellowed or stirring finish just becomes automatic.

Bretherton, incidentally, has cut 200 pictures and now he's cutting the pictures he directs!

Newspaper and Magazine Editors are welcome to use this material in whole or part with proper credit.

Howard Went Through The Mill

RICHARD MAITLAND

*Who Turned From The Oldest Arts
To The Newest*

By Tom Waller
West Coast Representative

THE ultimate aim of the Hollywood actor with a good business sense and an appreciation for technical things is a directorial berth. Of course there are today well over twenty such actors to every director. But a man who studied archaeology in school, flew in the war and later helped the Ruler of Iraq retain his throne, told us in the West Coast headquarters of Moving Picture World one afternoon this week that within the next four years he will be successful in Hollywood's twenty-to-one game.

This tall sunburnt Englishman came to Hollywood three years ago. He made up his mind shortly after his arrival to establish a record for himself in the picture game. It was just a few weeks after that decision that he learned what many intelligent people that come here every day with the highest cinema aspirations often exhaust their resources before it strikes home—that an unknown face must become known at each and every Hollywood studio before it can hope to even flash itself before the American screen public.

So this Englishman, who, between soldiering in Europe and Asia, had indulged in his favorite pastime of hunting big game, set himself for a systematic exploitation of the name and face of Richard Maitland in the world's biggest hand-shaking town.

Exclusive of appearing in a few amateur theatricals while attending Harrow College in England, Maitland had no experience whatsoever, in the land of make believe. He was trained to function professionally as an antiquarian. But the war broke out just as he was completing this study and his first money came to him from the British government in 1915. Discharged in 1919 as a lieutenant in the Royal Air Force, Maitland found practical experience in archaeology still postponed for an official post in Constantinople as assistant commissioner in charge of relief work for Russian refugees in the vicinity of the Black Sea.

Even in 1920 the romance and color of previous official assignments lured him back into King Edward's service. The next two years were spent at Mesopotamia "keeping King Feisul on the throne," as he describes it. Incidentally he is responsible for the spelling of this royal acre's cognomen.

The next thing Maitland experienced was the trip back to London, another set of discharge papers, and then the ship to Canada. To browse about, now prospecting, now hunting, was what he told us prompted him to come to America. The man's earnestness and clear-thinking impressed us that this mission, however, was only secondary to that of the soldier out of uniform feeling his way for a niche in the civilian world.

It was a much-traveled, much-soldiered and scholarly type of man that found himself in California in 1924. It was a man whose natural tendencies for organization and ambition were only increased and thoroughly systematized by the war. A man whose appreciation of things economic had been further broadened by supervising and feeding for an entire year thousands of the war's most miserable waifs. And yet a man who had been theoretically groomed for endeavors in one of art's highest fields.

With all of the reserve of such an Englishman, it took us quite a while to get him in that homey frame of mind when formal conversation lapses into chatter, and then the nuggets of spontaneity which make this page the most worthwhile and authentic on the real activities behind the screen right along the boulevard and sign for a role with one of Hollywood's biggest producers, who will add a couple of ciphers to his weekly income. It meant that the macadam of a Hollywood career which he mapped out for himself in 1924 is shaping up in material form.

Then we learned how Maitland systematized himself in Hollywood. How, once having made up his mind to become a part of the American film industry, he had spent his initial experience walking daily from studio to studio. Going even when he knew there wasn't a job there that day. Going tomorrow. Going the next day. Plugging and pushing in the hot sun. Shaking hands when they were extended but not depending upon the gesture. Following. Checking up.

About Hollywood being the "world's smallest big town" and about the personality-plus before ability and ambition which is in the air here at every street corner, Maitland says that he has found and is finding politics. He, however, observes with some others and at the fireside in the lives of Hollywoodians. In fact, we had almost given it up for a bad job since we had been forced to probe for a few meagre facts in the hope that wrath or mirth would "open up" our friend.

Just at this point the telephone rang. Some one had traced Maitland to this office.

"Yes, this is Maitland," he mouthpiece quite formally. Then as suddenly he exclaimed: "That's very fine!"

Banging back the receiver with the zest of an American and the flash of an excited Irishman, Maitland only waxed English in "Oh, Boy! Wonderful!"

What he told us is decidedly confidential. It meant that after he had left us he was going to step that there is politics in every industry. That politics is necessary in every walk of life because he believes that politics, when thoroughly analyzed, is largely diplomacy.

That there should be more politics in the motion picture industry than most of the other industries, Maitland concedes. He qualifies this by his observation on the set while an extra and bit player that the American film world is made up practically in its entirety of representatives of all industries, businesses, trades and professions.

And while an extra and bit player Maitland had the opportunity to study some of the little things that happen in a studio while a picture is being shot. That the better acquainted the chief electrician is with human nature the better the picture. Further yet, that the chief electrician should share the sympathetic understanding of the director. That the actor's expression; the woman's symmetry—all can be enhanced or depreciated by the chief electrician's interpretation.

Maitland has also found out for himself why casting directors do not seem so enthusiastic over the average actor from the legitimate stage looking about for a screen debut. He has seen many of such actors come and go. From working beside a few of them who have been in one or two pictures and then have drifted back to the stage, Maitland observes that this has occurred because, in their enthusiasm they have studied their part and attempted to act it not realizing, if ever, or until it is too late, that they have the part simply because they are a type.

Up to date Maitland considers his own best work in the role of Major Fitz in Fox's "Is Zat So." Other recent pictures of his also include "Camille" and "The Branding Iron."

The keenest moment in our talk with this actor came after we had discussed politics, system, ability and experience.

"Do you know the surest way to success in Hollywood?" he finally interviewed. We had to remind him that he was answering all questions.

"It's clean living in Hollywood, and—" he looked straight at us, "making up your mind you want something and really kneeling down. It has been my experience that the right kind of a prayer for something within reason will always be answered."

Rudolph Schildkraut Cops The Honors in "Turkish Delight"

Cast as Turkish Storekeeper Residing in U. S.—
Brother is Sultan of Tambostan Who Dies—Then Fun Begins

By JIM POWERS
West Coast Staff Writer

IRVIN COBB's original story for the screen, "Turkish Delight," produced by Cecil B. DeMille, has had its Hollywood preview and went over more because Rudolph Schildkraut was in the cast than anything else.

There is little, if any story, and it required all the artistry of Schildkraut and the excellent titles of John Krafft to put over a rather entertaining picture.

The elder Schildkraut is cast as a Turk, residing in the United States and the proprietor of a little store in New York. When his brother, the Sultan of Tambostan, passes out of the picture, Schildkraut becomes sultan and sole lessee of an extensive harem. However, his enjoyment of the privileges of being a sultan are curbed by the pestiferous wife of the dead sultan, played by May Robson, and he is glad to quit the palace and return to his little store in the end.

Julia Fay and Kenneth Thomson have the romantic leads and neither have very much opportunity in the story to do much that is noteworthy. As it was they did well what they were called upon to do.

Louis Natheaux played the sleek villain with his usual finesse, although the part was weak and provided little scope for histrionic effort. Toby Claude took a "bit" and made it stand out. As Fatima of the harem, she ensnares Rudolph to the extent of marrying him and returns with him to the United States.

The sequences in the Turkish harem are lavishly done and have a spectacular touch.

Paul Sloane directed the production and when it is realized that he had little in the line of story to start off with he did exceptionally well and turned out a picture with the aide of Schildkraut, that will prove good entertainment.

Too Many Women

Lee Moran is now working in "Too Many Women" with Norman Kerry and Louis Moran at Universal.

To Adapt "Baby Face"

Winifred Dunn will do the adaptation on Colleen Moore's next First National starring vehicle, "Baby Face."

"Game of Chess" At Writers Club

Winthrop Kelley, prominent writer and dramatic director, will produce "A Game of Chess" as the third dramatic venture of the 'season on the Writers' Club program. It will be presented in the Writers' Club Little Theatre on April 22.

Kelly is the director, who first introduced dramatic plays in the Hollywood Bowl, where in 1921, he staged "The Tempest," "A Midsummer's Night's Dream" and "The Taming of the Shrew." Henry Kolker will appear in the leading role.

Mystery Shrouds "Secret Studio"

Considerable mystery enshrouds "The Secret Studio," which we learn was completed some time ago by Director Harry Beaumont for Fox. Since that time Beaumont has left Fox's fold.

Just before press time we learned that Victor Schertzinger has been assigned to remake the entire picture and that he has sent out a call for practically all members of the cast in the original picture to report at the Fox studio early next week.

Fox officials refuse to make any statement on the status of "The Secret Studio." The Publicity Department failed to avail itself of the space which it usually seeks, stating that they "knew nothing about it."

Sills a Rough Diamond

Milton Sills and his company, at present engaged in filming "Diamonds in the Rough," for First National, are at Laguna Beach on location. Charles Gerard, Natli Barr, Edward Peil, E. J. Ratcliffe are among those in the cast.

Sol Lesser May Merge With F-N

Sol Lesser's appearance around Burbank these days may not be officially significant but there was a report from more than one source in the First National studios that he would not be disinclined to merging his newly organized production company with First National.

Lesser's first picture incidentally will be based on Harold Bell Wright's "The Shepherd of the Hills." Raymond Schrock, it is said, will produce this picture for Lesser. While, at the same time, we hear it will go under the direction of William K. Howard.

Wampas to Fete Eastern Ad Men

A committee of Wampas members are arranging a program of entertainment for one hundred and twenty-five advertising men from the East, scheduled to arrive in Hollywood by special train early in July. The ad men will come here from Denver, where the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World will be held this year.

Fred Hamlin, publicity representative for Sam E. Rork Productions, is chairman of the Wampas committee in charge of the entertainment. Publicity directors of the other studios will serve on the committee with Hamlin.

Inroad of British

A check-up at the De Mille studio uncovered the information that Chrisander had only been signed for two pictures (which he has completed) and his contract had not been renewed. When Chrisander was asked as to the severing of his relations with De Mille he told the writer that he had been offered a new five-year contract following his last picture, but had decided not to sign. This discounts stories in local papers to the effect that he would do one more picture for De Mille before definitely associating himself with the British company.

It is understood that Chrisander turned down a contract calling for $1,000 a week for 52 weeks with De Mille, calling for a $500 increase semi-annually during the remaining four years of the five-year contract.

"Topsy And Eva" To Be Finished In Three Weeks

Actual shooting on "Topsy and Eva," starring the Duncan sisters, will be completed within three weeks. The picture for a time had Imogene Wilson in the cast.

Stories from an authentic source reaching us say that Vivian as "Eva" tempestuously opposed Miss Wilson's affecting a blond wig similar in color and style to the actresses own blond hair.

It is said that the battle reached the ears of John Considine, who was previously reported as having signed Miss Wilson in Germany and that it went from him to Joseph M. Schenck in New York.

At any rate the picture, we hear, will conclude with Miss Wilson not in the cast and Marjorie Daw in her place.

So far as Rosetta Duncan is concerned, we hear that she had little to say about Miss Wilson. Her role as "Topsy" necessitates a black wig covering her blond head in the picture.

Incidentally upon the completion of the picture the Duncan sisters plan a tour of personal appearances in Los Angeles and New York, after which they intend taking their stage production to London and Paris. According to present information, their return to Los Angeles will mark the opening of a musical production.

Cinema Studios is also provisional and depends entirely upon the result of his investigations while in Vancouver looking over the proposition as it will be laid out for his study.

If he is satisfied with everything, according to Anderson, his contract then becomes effective and he will immediately set about organizing his staff on his return to Hollywood in two weeks. Technical aides, screen players and other individuals essential to a producing company will be signed here and sent to Canada.

"Eight hundred acres bordering on Horseshoe Bay have been set aside for the establishing of a film colony in Vancouver," said Anderson.

More complete details on the venture will be forthcoming on the return of Anderson and Chrisander to Hollywood.

Harlan is Acquitted

Kenneth Harlan, screen actor, was held blameless by the Los Angeles police for the accidental death of Mrs. Eleanor Bishop, 866 Tremaine street, who died as a result of injuries sustained when she was struck by an automobile driven by Harlan.

According to the actor's statement to the police following the accident, the woman ran from behind another machine into the path of his car. Harlan was riding alone at the time of the fatality.

Schenck Gives Up Position As Street Arbiter

Joseph M. Schenck has relinquished the power recently conferred upon him by local police through Will Hays' West Coast Office. Now it is up to Fred Beetsen to decide who will have the privileges of using Hollywood thoroughfares and street corners for exterior shooting.

Police authorities, several months ago, decided it would be necessary for some executive in the film capitol to pass upon the merits of all producing units applying for permits to use roadways as studios. It was reported at the time that this had been brought about because of many "kluck" outfits deliberately congesting the street for advertising purposes.

Schenck was named for the job of enlightening the police of recognized film companies seeking highway locations within the city limits. That Schenck is no longer in this capacity was revealed recently when a company calling his office for a permit was referred to the Association of Motion Picture Producers.

It was said that Schenck's resignation was because of the demands made upon him by his own huge interests and also because the Hays organization was better equipped with a complete knowledge of all Hollywood production activities.

Sock Rolling in Berkley

Members of the unit making "Rolled Stockings" for Paramount went to Berkley, Calif., for exterior "shots," taking advantage of the annual boat race between the University of California and Washington.

Betty To Leave Paramount

Moving Picture World from an authentic source learns that Betty Bronson's position as a leading woman at Paramount-Famous-Lasky, is showing signs of wear and tear and that she will be definitely out of the picture with the expiration of her contract in December. We learn that she will not appear in any future pictures with the company that gave her her initial chance in "Peter Pan."

Her last picture was opposite Richard Dix in "Paradise for Two," and apparently it was her final appearance at the Paramount studio, judging from the information at hand. Miss Bronson is said to be receiving $2,000 per week under her present contract, and according to our informant Paramount finds it impossible to even loan her out at less money than they are called upon to pay her weekly.

Hines Next Is Most Ambitious

From the standpoint of lavishness in sets, it looks to the observer as though "White Pants Willie" would be one of the most elaborate efforts of Johnnie Hines since becoming a star.

Hines and his company are now about half way through on the production and the star and his producer, Charles Burr, are more than elated by the early "rushes."

Incidentally, it seems as though Hines had decided to quit New York permanently for Hollywood. He has just purchased a site and is building a new home near Griffith Heights, overlooking Los Angeles. Robert Finkelhor, the architect who drew up the plans for the structure, also was responsible for the plans for the homes of many of the better known screen stars now making Hollywood and Beverly Hills their habitat.

Cast Gets Together

The entire cast of "The Trail of '98" company is together on the M-G-M lot for the first time since the picture went into production. Ralph Forbes, Dolores Del Rio, Harry Carey, Tully Marshall, Emily Fitzroy, George Cooper, Caesar Gravina, Tenen Holtz, Karl Dane, William Orlamond and Johnny Downs are in the cast.

"Louisiana" Fitzmaurice Next

George Fitzmaurice has already decided upon his story to follow the filming of "The Rose of Monterey." "Louisiana" adapted from Edward Childs Carpenter's play, "The Barber of New Orleans," has been assigned Fitzmaurice by First National.

"Bar Sinister" Vera's Next

"The Bar Sinister" is the tentative title for Vera Reynolds' next starring picture for DeMille and Alan Hale will direct it.

Henigson Will Remain With U

The arrival of Carl Laemmle in town put a quietus on the report that Henry Henigson, General Manager at Universal, was on the way out and a new G. M. on the way in. According to a statement from the studio, Henigson will not only remain on the job but has numerous interesting production plans for the coming year.

"The Chinese Parrot," "Back to God's Country," "The Small Bachelor," "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and "Surrender" are only a few of the bigger productions under production or finished at the present, under the Henigson regime. At Universal the five named here are expected to be listed among the big pictures of the year.

One For U.F.A.

Before returning to this country to fulfill a contract to direct exclusively for Fox, F. W. Murnau, who made "Sunrise" for the latter company previous to going abroad, will direct a story title "From Nine to Nine" for UFA in Berlin for release through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Paramount Builds Jail

A commodious jail that will accommodate 200 prisoners has been constructed on the Paramount lot for use in the production of "Underworld," Ben Hecht's famous story on the screen. Josef von Sternberg is directing a strong cast in the picture which includes Clive Brooke, Evelyn Brent, George Bancroft and Larry Semon.

Myrna in "Simple Sis"

Myrna Loy has been given a camp role in "Simple Sis" in which Louise Fazenda and Clyde Cook are to be co-featured by Warner Brothers.

Fox's Plans For Movie-tone May Have To Wait

With Director Victor Schertzinger definitely detained in Hollywood for the next few months by some carefully guarded reason for remaking "The Secret Studio," it becomes obvious here that William Fox's movie-tone plans may consequently be delayed. As was reported in this Department late in February, Victor Schertzinger was officially announced as the director selected by Fox to go to New York to make the first movie-tone picture.

Schertzinger was scheduled to leave for the east in the middle of March. Upon his failure to entrain we were then told at the studio that he had been delayed for a short time. It was repeated at that time that Schertzinger would make the first movie-tone picture in New York.

On the subject of talking pictures, Warner Brothers plan to open a $250,000 studio on the grounds of the main plant on Sunset Boulevard early in May. This studio will be devoted exclusively to Vitaphone pictures, the first of which will be started at that time. This picture is "The Jazz Singer," which will star George Jessel and will be released in eight reels.

We learn that, contrary to a report, only the singing parts will be recorded and that the voice of the actors will be in accord with the silent drama. During the filming of Jessel actually singing, cameras will be lodged in sound proof compartments.

Brockwell in DeMille Opus

Gladys Brockwell has an important role in DeMille's "The Country Doctor," being directed by Rupert Julian. Rudolph Schildkraut portrays the picturesque New England practitioner.

Players Groomed For Stardom

Paramount's Junior Stars for 1927, in accordance with a plan inaugurated by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the organization, were named late this week.

James Hall, Louise Brooks, Sally Blane, Nancy Phillips and Josephine Dunn represent the fortunate quintet selected by Lasky, B. P. Schulberg, Walter Wanger and Sidney R. Kent as the first of the batch of junior stars.

Each year five new players will be named and groomed for ultimate stardom.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS
—Now getting ready to start on his next big production for United Artists.

Doug As Gaucho Slings a Bola

When we ran into Douglas Fairbanks on the United Artist's lot and suggested that he pose for the Moving Picture World, we found him practicing with one of the bolas used by the South American cowboys that will play an important part in Fairbanks' next picture, "The Gaucho."

The gauchos used these bolas in place of the lasso or lariat of their contemporaries of the American ranges. A pen picture of the bolas is easily drawn as it is nothing more than a piece of rope a few feet long with two ends that look like prongs of the letter "Y" when it gains momentum as it is swung through the air. On two ends are knobs resembling billiard balls. As it is hurled through the air it encircles the legs of the steer and throws him much in the same manner as the American lariat.

"The Gaucho" will be a spectacular production much on the line of other Fairbanks' stories with the exception that it will boast more dramatic action than "Don Q," "The Mark of Zorro" and other pictures that Fairbanks has previously done.

According to Doug, it will be filmed on a more elaborate scale than anything he has ever attempted heretofore, which means it will be plenty lavish. An interesting feature is that no long location trips are planned, most of the action being filmed right in the studio.

"The Gaucho" will be Fairbanks' first camera work in more than a year, or since he finished "The Black Pirate."

NEWCOMER — Frank Marion, new leading man in De Mille fold, gets off to good start in first production.

Gets a Screen Diploma Pronto

A few weeks ago a young man practically unknown to the screen walked into the DeMille studio in Culver City, took one of the stereotyped screen tests and a few days later signed a contract as a leading man. The principal in the case was Frank Marion, now playing the juvenile lead in "The Country Doctor" at DeMille's.

Marion was born in Omaha, Neb., and graduated from Loyola College in Los Angeles. Several years ago when a mere youngster he was starred in a story at Universal written by George Bronson Howard. This concluded his picture work for the time as a steady diet.

However, during school vacations he often found himself cast in atmosphere and small bits in various productions.

Following his graduation from Loyola he puttered around for a time doing nothing in particular until he accepted a secretarial position at the college from which he had matriculated.

He continued in this capacity for a time well content with his work. Then this muchly-advertised Fate they write about sat in for a hand and overnight transformed Marion from a secretary to a movie actor.

A friend called him on the 'phone one day and told him to hop a bus to Culver City, where they were going to give him a screen test at the DeMille studio. Hardly expecting any attractive developments from the test, he meandered out to the studio.

That he screened satisfactorily and was a suitable type is amply evidenced by the five-year contract that he now has with the DeMille studio.

JUNIOR COGHLAN—Has an important role in "The Country Doctor" being directed by Rupert Julian.

Junior "Found" By DeMille

Cecil B. DeMille has the reputation of being gifted in the matter of discerning talent in an unknown and untried screen prospect.

This is amply borne out in the case of Junior Coghlan, ten year old youngster, now under contract to DeMille. The remarkable performance of Junior in "The Yankee Clipper," "Slide, Kelly Slide" (for which picture he was loaned to M-G-M); "The Last Frontier" and other big DeMille productions stamps him as one of the foremost child actors of the screen. He has everything that tends to make an artist.

Junior really had his first chance to do anything noteworthy when Farshall Neilan signed him for a nice little part in "Mike," which incidentally was the picture that did much to exploit Sally O'Neill.

Impressed by the possibilities of the youngster DeMille put him under long-term contract and has gradually built him up with bigger and better parts until he now ranks near the top of his profession. In "The Yankee Clipper" many of the critics were of the opinion that he stole the picture. Be that as it may, by his excellent portrayal of the tough little orphan, he did share honors with William Boyd, the star.

Junior is now playing a supporting role to Rudolph Schildkraut in "The Country Doctor," directed by Rupert Julian. His next picture, we have it on good authority, will bring him a co-featured part with Schildkraut in "A Harp in Hock."

Colleen's Brother With F-N

Cleve Moore, brother of Colleen, has one of the important roles in "The Stolen Bride," First National production.

WILLIAM BOYD—Star of "The Volga Boatman" now playing an important role in "Two Arabian Knights."

Boyd Becomes An Arabian Knight

Those who saw William Boyd in his great screen characterization of "The Volga Boatman" will be pleased to know that the popular star is now completing a role worthy of his talent in "Two Arabian Knights," to be released through United Artists.

Success on the screen came gradually to Boyd and was not the overnight hop that effervescent press agents are wont to write about. For eight years now he has been doing his daily dozen in front of a camera and is just coming into his own as one of the screen's most popular favorites.

He was discovered in the "extra" ranks by Cecil B. DeMille and put under contract. Step by step, DeMille brought him along with gradually better parts until he had reached the plane of a leading man last year in "Steel Preferred." However, it was in "The Volga Boatman" that he finally attained stardom.

In "Two Arabian Knights," in which he is now working he has a strong role and one that should further solidify his position as a star. During the coming year he will be starred only in specials, according to information that reaches the Moving Picture World.

His current picture offers him many opportunities to display his virile screen personality. It has to do with the war, which seems to be part of every big production these days.

With Louis Wolheim, who played one of the principal roles in the stage version of "What Price Glory" in New York, he shares the honors in "Two Arabian Knights." They are cast as a couple of buddies inseparable.

IN SERIAL—Francis X. Bushman, Jr., is to be starred in a serial by Universal.

Brown's Next A War Story

When we ran into Director Melville Brown on the Universal lot the other afternoon we found the megaphone wielder on Reginald Denn's latest story, "Fast and Furious," in the throes of cutting and editing the Denny Picture and at the same time trying to give some of his time to adding touches to his next story. The latter will go into production in a week or two, either under its present title, "Let's go Home" or a new one to be selected.

His next production will be a war story and Brown looks forward to its being one of his best pictures.

Although he has been working around studios for the past eleven years, Brown is really one of the youngest directors in the business. After an apprenticeship on the stage in stock and vaudeville he took a flyer at screen acting with the now defunct Triangle Company. He did not remain long in makeup but turned his hand to directing.

He co-directed with Charlie Chaplin on "Shoulder Arms" and "A Dog's Life" and also served for a time on the Fox and Warner lots in a directorial capacity.

Next Brown turned to scenario writing, which occupied his attention for a time. He has been with Universal three years and is looked upon as one of the best bets on the Laemmle staff of directors.

He was responsible for "Her Big Night," starring Laura La Plante; "Taxi, Taxi," with Edward Everett Horton, and has just finished "Fast and Furious," with Denny.

Curtiz Gets Meg For "Noah's Ark"

When Warner Brothers decided to film "Noah's Ark," billed as one of their biggest pictures of the year, the question of just who would direct it came in for considerable conjecture. In the final analysis it was decided that Michael Curtiz, imported from Germany, was suitably equipped to handle the megaphone on the production. So Curtiz gets the toga.

He is now busy on the story and taking care of preliminary work attendant upon the production. The cameras will start grinding on the biblical story some time in July and possibly sooner.

Curtiz has directed in several European countries and before coming to this country was with the UFA-Phobus.

While in London he met Harry Warner, who induced him to sign a five-year contract to direct Warner Brothers' pictures.

Since joining this organization he has directed "The Third Degree" and "A Million Bid," in both of which Dolores Costello played the stellar roles.

Curtiz is sold on America as the land of opportunity, but also points out that it is also a land of many tumbles. "One may be on top today and in the depths tomorrow," declared Curtiz to the Moving Picture World. "Probably in no other country is the rise and fall quite so rapid as here. This may be traced to the fact that in no other country has the unknown the same chance to attain fame and prominence."

A Free Lancer Joins Warners

After free-lancing for six years Warner Oland was finally induced by the numerous Warner Brothers to affix his signature to a long time contract as a featured player.

His first story under the new contract will feature him in "What Happened to Father," a screen play adapted from the story by Mary Roberts Rhinehart. In this picture he portrays a character something on the line of Thomas Edison or the late Luther Burbank.

Oland first faced a movie camera years ago in a pictorial story of John Bunyan's life, the author of "Pilgrim's Progress." This was an independent production, which later led to his spending a year later led to his spending a year with Fox.

Joining Cosmopolitan, he then did four pictures for this organization, three of which were with Theda Bara, original screen "vamp." His next effort was a serial with Milton Sills and Irene Castle for the same company that was released under the title of "Patria."

Oland is rated as one of the leading character men of the screen and his finished work in recent Warner Brothers' productions resulted in the tendering of the long term contract he now has with the studio.

In his current picture he has a sympathetic role, a direct contrast to many of the villainous characters he has formerly portrayed on the screen.

Cast Expanded

John Peters and Frank Hagney have been added to the cast of "The Frontiersman," M-G-M production starring Tim McCoy.

Bushman, Jr., To Play in Serial

Serials succeeded in bringing into prominence many of the better known stars of the present day. The chapter plays have built up reputations and made it possible for the principals in these hair-raising and humorous tales to step out and shine in more important features.

Francis X. Bushman, Jr., juvenile player, has signed a contract to do a serial of ten episodes in twenty reels for Universal under the intriguing title of "The Scarlet Arrow." At the conclusion of his contract on this series he should be fairly well established as a screen player and boast a substantial fan following.

Young Bushman was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1903, and was educated at the Stanton Military Academy and Johns Hopkins University. His first theatrical experience came with his dad, Francis X. Bushman, Sr., in stock.

Vaudeville engagements then followed with 57 weeks in one jaunt and a six months' session immediately following. His first picture work was in stock with the old Essanay Company.

Seven years ago he came to the coast and did some work in Christie Comedies. Later came a picture with Samuel Goldwyn. Buster Keaton then used him for a nice part in "Our Hospitality."

Bushman was under contract for a time with M-G-M, appearing in "Brown of Harvard" and in "The Understanding Heart." The contract with M-G-M was abrogated by mutual agreement and now he is on the Laemmle pay-roll for the duration of current serial at least.

★ Studio Row ★

PATSY RUTH MILLER, who first came into screen prominence on the Universal "lot" in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is back on the same "lot" again as a free lance player in "Hot Heels," in which Glen Tryon has the male lead.

"LOVE" is the new title for "Anna Kerinina," Greta Garbo's next M-G-M production. Lionel Barrymore, Helene Chadwick, Zazu Pitts, Dorothy Sebastian and other well-known players are in the supporting cast. It was adapted by Lorna Moon and is being directed by Dimitri Buchowetzki.

FREDERICK and Fanny Hatton, playwrights, have been engaged by M-G-M to title "The Bugle Call," Jackie Coogan's latest starring picture. Edward Sedgwick directed the production. The cast includes, Clair Windsor, Herbert Rawlinson and Johnnie Mack Brown, former football star.

LAURENCE GRAY has been signed for the lead in "Liberty Bonds" starring Norma Shearer at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Gray was recently borrowed from Famous Players to play the lead opposite Sally O'Neill in "The Callahans and the Kellys." Miss Shearer has just finished in "Od Heidelberg."

HUGH ALLEN, a newcomer to the screen, will play the juvenile lead in Warner Brothers' "What Happened to Father," starring Warner Oland. Fiobelle Fairbanks will play the ingenue.

THE title of Hoot Gibson's current Universal production has been changed from "Prairie King" to "A Hero on Horseback." Ethlyne Clair has the leading feminine role and Del Andrews directed the picture.

GEORGE B. SEITZ, who first sprang into prominence by his direction of "The Vanishing American" is now directing "The Great Mail Robbery" for F. B. O.

WITH the signing of Arthur Rankin and David Mir, the cast is now complete in "Dearie," which Archie Mayo is directing for Warner Bros. Irene Rich is starred in the production with Buster Collier in the juvenile lead.

JOSSIE SEDGWICK has been added to the cast of "The Trail of '98," at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio.

JOSEPH FRANKLIN POLAND has re-signed his contract as supervising editor of comedies at Universal.

SARAH PADDEN has an important role in "Colleen" in which Madge Bellamy is being starred by Fox.

BEBE DANIELS will spend a short vacation between pictures in Mexico City visiting relatives.

MARION NIXON has been selected as Reggy Denny's leading lady for his next starring vehicle for Universal, "I'll Be There."

LOUISE LORRAINE is one of the latest additions to the cast of "The Frontiersman" at M-G-M.

"SHANHAIED" will serve as Ralph Ince's next directorial effort at F. B. O.

EDWARD CONNELLY, veteran character player, is enjoying his first vacation from the studio in three years.

DREW DEMAREST is in the cast of M-G-M's, "The Callahans and the Kellys."

MAX DAVIDSON is now working in his fourth of his series of comedies at the Hal Roach studio.

CHESTER CONKLIN and George Bancroft are to be featured as a comedy team in a series of Paramount comedies.

ANDRE BERANGER has been added to the cast of "Love," in which Greta Garbo is starred by M-G-M.

EDNA MURPHY has been added to the cast of Irene Rich's starring production for Warner Brothers, "Dearie."

PRODUCTION has started on Richard Dix's latest starring picture for Paramount. Mary Brian has the leading feminine role.

COLLEEN MOORE spent a short vacation at Lake Arrowhead following the completion of "Naughty But Nice," for First National.

SCREEN RIGHTS to "Baby Mine" by Margaret May, have been purchased by M-G-M.

INA CLAIRE, noted stage actress, now appearing here in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," may accept one of several picture offers at the close of her stage play.

JOHAN J. GAIN, formerly associated with the Paramount Long Island studio has been appointed studio manager on the west coast, according to an announcement by B. P. Schulberg, associate-producer.

DOLORES and HELENE COSTELLO will appear together in "The Heart of Maryland," Warner Brothers production, Dolores in the starring role and Helene in support of her more firmly established sister.

GWEN LEE has been given one of the important roles in Norma Shearer's next starring vehicle for M-G-M, "Liberty Bonds." Monta Bell will direct the picture.

LOUIS GASNIER's first story as a director for Hal Roach will be a western with Martha Sleeper, James Finlayson, Theodore Von Eltz, Gene Palette and Stuart Holmes in the cast.

GEORGE FITZMAURICE has returned from a trip to New York and is getting ready to start his next production for First National, "The Barker."

PATSY RUTH MILLER has been signed for the feminine lead in "Shanghai," for F. B. O.

PRODUCTION is well along at First National in Billie Dove's first starring picture, "The Stolen Bride."

GARRET FORD will do the screen adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's "The Crystal Cup" for First National.

"THE ROAD TO ROMANCE" co-featuring Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackail goes into production at First National this week.

MILTON SILLS is now in New York on a visit to his wife, Doris Kenyon, who is recuperating from a recent illness.

HOWARD ESTABROOK, who adapted "Cafeteria" for First National, is now collaborating on a new comedy titled, "Own Your Own Home."

HALLY CARR, Los Angeles newspaperman, has been signed by Cecil B. DeMille as an editorial advisor. Carr was one of the collaborators on "Old Ironsides," directed by Jimmy Cruze.

ROY DEL RUTH, Warner Brothers director, has signed a new long term contract with the company.

Ancient Art and Modern Pictures

EACH new departure in production technique is immediately followed by an overuse of the new idea or device. It has been that way since the time David W. Griffith developed the close-up and near front line as production improvements. It probably always will be the same. Someone gets a really new stunt and uses it intelligently. Others make such excessive use of the idea that it becomes absurd. Then it shakes down into its proper place in the production scheme and production has been advanced another material point.

Early in the season the realization of famous paintings became the newest fad. Certain scenes in "The Fire Brigade" were more or less in copy of Rosa Bonheur's "The Horse Fair." A set of old sporting prints were supposed to be an inspiration in the making of "Knockout Reilly."

Now comes "The King of Kings" in which many of the scenes are supposed to be patterned after some of the world's most famous paintings. In lightings, backgrounds and composition of the figures Mr. De Mille has approached if not directly copied some of the world's most famous paintings.

With such a wealth of material from which to make selection and with an intelligent appreciation to guide the choice, the master artists of all ages have aided in making this production one of the most sumptuously pictorial realizations ever screened.

But now will come a flood of imitators who will copy the idea without having the intelligence to adapt expertly. Next season, if not this, we may expect a considerable number of productions in which the chief appeal will be more or less correct adaptation of some great art work, often at the expense of good story.

We may even arrive at a point where sub-titles will be inserted to call attention to these sources. It is possible that Burne-Jones, Whistler, Sargent, Raphael, Dore, Holbein and others will share screen credit with the technical director, the title writer and all the rest of interruptors who follow the main title.

It will be a nuisance for a time, but let's be patient, for art appreciation, even though it be merely the ape-like mimicry of the small fry, must inevitably lead to the betterment of the picture, and pictorial composition in any form has not long had appreciation in the studios.

It is only about fifteen years ago since a director refused the proffer of a book on composition on the plea that he did not know anything about music. Copying the masters will at least improve the technique of the lesser producers. It gives the really intelligent a higher mark at which to aim.

HUNDREDS of exhibitors will read with regret at the tragic passing of Harry Marion, who has literally covered the United States in the circulation interests of Moving Picture World. He was a wonderfully likable personality, for he had a good humor that came from the heart and was not assumed for sales purposes. We have known Marion for a quarter century and we cannot recall ever having seen him without a smile. Everyone liked him because he liked everyone. He will live for long in the memories of his friends.

ENTER the talking news reel. It's a fine idea if they work it right, but we hope the operator chokes off the mike when some irate copper invites him to "Get to hell over there" or he records his own thoughts as some interested spectator comes between the camera and its victim. The talkie-newsie has infinite possibilities; fascinating possibilities.

SOME literalist objects to our suggestion that Clara Bow be the next Camille. He thinks her too young for the part. Never knew before that a movie version had to follow the original so you could notice it. Scenarists are no lavish copyists even when they are making adaptations.

NOTHING to prevent Clara from being a flapper Camille; which, by the way, would provide an excellent title. Old man Duval feels that she is wasting Armand's money and hot-foots it into town to pull the sob stuff. Clara has half a bun on and promises to do a David Garrick, so that night, at a supper club, with the usual gold painted dancers, Clara shoots craps with Armand and lets him discover that the dice are loaded. He puts the boots to her.

CLARA gets T.B. from smoking too many cigarettes and goes to the cure run by Papa Duval. He cures the bugs, gets a crush on his patient and suggests matrimony, but Clara tells him that she won't be a sister to him but is perfectly willing to be a daughter-in-law, so Pop shoots a wire to Armand and there is an ice carnival wedding at Lake Placid or St. Moritz. There you are, happy ending and everything.

MAKING an appeal to the foreign element is a favorite prescription for putting over a story with a foreign locale, but you have to hand it to the Playhouse, Seattle, for getting out a Chinese poster for the Pathe News when they showed the first scenes from China. It got the business of the Celestials, but the Playhouse was taking awful chances. Suppose that the rival faction had started to argue it out there in the theatre, using the traditional hatchets in their well-known sign language.

THE generally amusing American Mercury has a long-winded story in the May issue on "The Amusement Octopus," meaning the motion picture combinations. It blames the pictures for the destruction of the spoken drama and wails that the insidious influence of the screen will eventually abolish the drama, or words more or less to that effect. The article is plausible, if you read it rapidly, but it fails to use the big stick in the right direction.

THE motion picture is popular because it is cheap, entertaining and varied. It gives the smallest towns the same grade of acting that is to be found on Broadway. It has educated "the sticks" out of an appreciation of the tank players who used to represent the highest development of the art of acting in towns of less than 5,000 population. Even the remote places, with one or two screen shows a week, no longer have much use for the fly-by-night troupes in which the entire cost of the company is less than the normal salary of a good leading man or woman.

AND in the larger cities the three and four and five dollar "top" is another stumbling block. Cities of the second class are unwilling to pay such prices for "number two" companies, worn out scenery and overused costuming. When they can get the original work of the best players on the screen for what is little more than the war tax on a dramatic offering, they naturally turn from the inferior and higher priced article in such numbers that theatrical tours are no longer profitable. If there were a real demand for the spoken drama, no "octopus" could choke it off.

GETTING back of the returns, the story really is nothing more than an appeal to let the tent shows run wild, and emanated from a publication catering to that clientele. That's the darkey in the kindling wood.

AND now the critics are asked to vote on the ten best directors. That's all well and good, but here's a new one. Send in your votes for the ten worst wise-cracking title leaders. If you respond properly to this contest, we'll let you vote on the rest of the business directory that follows each main title. Vote early, often and intelligently.

FRED SCHAEFER, of United Artists' exploitation, has published a book. Most publicity men seem to be writing stage plays these days, but Schaefer preferred to tackle something different and he has achieved a delightful revival of the old-fashioned school reader, with its varnished board covers and imitation woodcuts that takes the old-timers back to the good old days. The ponderous moral style of the early educators is cleverly parodied and altogether the little volume is good for a half hour of chuckles; which would be a good average for a much thicker book.

TWO Broadwayites were talking it over at the Crossroads. "I understand that 'Children of Divorce' is a sad play," offered one. "You bet it is," was the emphatic reply. "Esther Ralston wears long skirts almost all the way." What Pete Harrison genteelly calls Miss Ralston's "physique" is both an asset and a handicap.

Epes W. Sargent.

A GAIN the motion picture industry has been put upon its mettle to show what it can do in helping the nation in a sudden great emergency, such as now menaces thousands of sufferers in the flooded areas of the Mississippi basin.

HAT the industry will measure up to its splendid record of the past and demonstrate, as it has so often done before, that the power of the screen and its influence in reaching and appealing to the hearts and purses of millions, outrivals even that of its older brother, the newspaper press, none will gainsay.

NEW from the flooded areas in the great Mississippi Valley hourly becomes more ominous, more indicative of the tremendous need for help of every kind, already acute in all parts of the stricken districts, and which inevitably must increase in intensity from now on until the rush of the waters begins to subside.

HUNGER and disease will follow fast upon the devastation of the waters and every agency and resource for relief throughout the untouched sections of the country, must be called into action swiftly or the catastrophe will be overwhelmingly appalling.

AT the offices of the Hays organization a meeting of executives from the leading film companies was held on Wednesday, presided over by Will H. Hays, where definite plans were formulated to use every means within the industry to co-operate with the American Red Cross in bringing aid to the sufferers, while President R. F. Woodhull of the M. P. T. O. A. also broadcast an appeal to all state organizations to form committees at once to act in the emergency.

ACTING on the suggestion of the American Red Cross, all news reel organizations have already agreed to insert appeals for funds in their current releases, while in many localities special benefit performances are being planned and other means taken to raise funds at once for the thousands made homeless.

THANKS to Will H. Hays, for the producer-distributors, and President Woodhull, representing the exhibitors, within forty-eight hours all the vast machinery of the industry may be expected to be fully functioning in its relief measures and every agency will be brought to bear to give the government and the Red Cross officials immediate results.

LIKE the other big jobs which the film industry has been called upon aforetime to perform in the name of charity and patriotism, we do not believe it will be found wanting in this new emergency, in some respects the most urgent in its instant demands, which the motion picture and its people have ever been called upon to meet.

SAMUEL ZIERLER, President of Excellent Pictures, Inc., and one of the really progressive leaders in the narrowing independent field, has performed a definite service to the industry in devising the Excellent Pictures, Inc., franchise plan for exhibitors, under the conditions of which he proposes to dispose of the product of his company for the next three years.

by the way

All Film Industry Being Mobilized To Aid Mississippi Flood Sufferers

Will H. Hays and President Woodhull Call Upon Everyone to Cooperate In Helping Nation in Emergency

Samuel Zierler's Three Year Franchises For Excellent Pictures, Inc., an Innovation

Earle Williams, Screen Veteran, Passes

Motion Pictures Now Fourth Industry

MR. ZIERLER announces that Excellent Pictures, Inc., will produce and release eighteen feature pictures for 1926-27, twenty-four for 1928-29, and thirty for 1929-30, and it is his plan to market all this product now and have done with it, thereafter concentrating his efforts entirely on the making of good pictures.

SUCH A PLAN will surely do much to stabilize and coordinate the selling and exhibition factors in this end of the industry, for as Mr. Zierler points out, "it will enable the exhibitor to perpetuate his business by identifying himself permanently with the source of his supply" and will do away effectually with the uneconomic necessity of re-selling his product each year, a condition which will operate for the benefit of the producer, distributor and exhibitor, alike in lowering costs and in improving box office quality.

AS an innovation the Zierler franchise plan opens many possibilities and it is not too much to predict, if it is as successful as he hopes and as it seems to promise, he will have many imitators.

ANOTHER screen veteran passes from us in the death of Earle Williams, whose sudden demise was reported from Hollywood this week.

ALWAYS a favorite with screen audiences, Earle Williams may be said to have been really a credit to the business in which he has held a prominent place since the old Vitagraph days and in which he always enjoyed a good name, comparable to his screen popularity.

HIS death is a reminder that the industry is growing older fast and creates another gap in the thinning ranks of the oldtimers which cannot be filled.

ACCORDING to a statement by Edward B. Smith & Co., the bankers who recently engineered the $100,000,000 combine of the Stanley Company of America, First National Pictures and West Coast Theatres, the motion picture industry now ranks as the fourth largest in the United States and represents an investment of about $1,500,000,000, of which $1,250,000,000 is in theatres and the balance in studios and distributing offices.

THE statement goes on to say that fifteen years ago there was hardly a respectable bank in the country which would consider lending the industry money, and contrasts this condition with the fact that in 1925 ten companies earned more than $24,000,000, while in 1926 the earnings of only five companies totaled even more than this amount.

INTERESTING figures surely, and indicative of how the film business has developed, but we have spoken of it as the "fifth" industry for so long it is hard to realize that it is now the "fourth" in importance in the country.

NORMA TALMADGE'S "Camille," now entering upon its second week at the Globe Theatre, is brilliant, sympathetic and box office—three things that are hard to combine in one picture. It is art and entertainment both.

If it is more the "Camille" of Director Fred Niblo than of the younger Dumas, few will find fault with the cinematic interpretation of the immortal love story. At least it will offend none, which a more literal rendering of the original might have done.

Norma Talmadge makes a superb Marguerite and Armand Duval introduces to most of us a new screen player of marked talents who should have a bright future—Gilbert Roland.

"Camille" will be one of the outstanding attractions of the year. Don't overlook it.

The trout in Jake Hopler's Pond, down Naughtway (This is the name of a place) all are waiting for P. A. ("Pathe") Parsons to come down and snaggle out the biggest members of the family some Sunday afternoon soon. Epes Sargent, of this paper, has promised to carry the bait and between the two it is expected that a supply of fish stories will be brought back to Broadway that will keep the trade interested all summer.

Epes, who won the Hopler Gold Medal last season for landing the biggest bullhead, will now try his hand at trout, using the same old hat. P. A., of course, will fly-cast in the conventional way. The winner will receive the freedom of the city for the cigars.

Leon J. Bamberger has got out a most striking and colorful broadside on "Chang," Paramount's newest screen sensation, which opened at the Rivoli on Friday. It is of the "teaser" variety, very cleverly done, and arouses the curiosity without in any way disclosing the smashing big effects shown in this amazing picture. It has been used in a big mail campaign around New York and should be productive of much business.

Ham Thompson, whose genial spirit has made "Service For Authors, Inc.," a high word among writing folk, moved his collection of manuscripts and office furniture from the Aeolian Building to the new French Building, 551 Fifth avenue, this week. His removal might be termed a transition from music to languages, as it were, with business as usual.

The latest thing on Broadway is a taxicab labeled: "The New Roxy—Pride of New York." It is painted a silver gray color and is very much in demand, being occupied each time we have seen it. Maybe there is a fleet of them, and if so, it bespeaks an up-to-dateness and an appreciation of the advertising value of the name which does credit to the business sense of the backers of the cab company, if not to their ethical standards.

A cheering crowd standing in the pouring rain, following the opening of "Camille" at the Globe, last week, may have puzzled some folks. It was not the picture they were cheering, however, but Vic "Lochinvar" Shapiro, carrying his lady to a hardily captured taxicab across the torrent on 46th street, so her feet wouldn't get wet.

Who says the age of chivalry is past?

Herbert Brenon, who is to make "Sorrel and Son" for United Artists, is back in New York after a few weeks spent in England, where he conferred with Warren Deeping, the author, on the treatment of the picture version of his novel. When leaving New York, Brenon said he might visit George Bernard Shaw, but if he did so he has not revealed the result of his interview. Shaw still seems to be coy and cold toward the movies.

Mary W. Rusk, elected assistant treasurer for United Artists, a fortnight ago, is the first woman to be so honored. Originally associated with the late Hiram Abrams at Famous Players in 1916, she served with George Creel during the war in an important executive capacity, returning in 1919 as secretary to Mr. Abrams, upon the formation of United Artists, where she has remained ever since.

According to J. L. Baird, the reputed inventor, it is now possible to transmit the sound of an image by television. In despatches from London, Mr. Baird states that "the sound of his face" when flashed to New York, "sounded like a scratch."

What some faces, we can think of, would "sound" like, need not be speculated on at this time. Buster Keaton's, for instance, probably would be a dead silence, while Lon Chaney's might be almost anything, with the chances favoring the latter. Feminine stars who have had their faces "lifted," might register "static."

Movie tests, a few years hence, may have to be taken in sound-proof vaults, for this reason.

All salesmen are more or less poets—or they wouldn't be salesmen. Unfortunately, poetry is barred in this department or it would be a delight to quote from the current issue of "The Film Salesman," an ode to a "Contract," entitled "Just a Bundle of Rags," where "indignation" and "Arbitration" and "Committee" and "no pity" are rhymed most ingeniously, if not altogether musically.

Also certain lines about "knowing when Spring is here," "when they start repairing chairs, in deserted open airs," which has a magnificent and metrical sweep to it, any way you take it. Jack Ellis, of F. B. O., vice-president of Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., who is the author of these delectable verses should not remain unknown to fame. Here's a sweet singer, who ought to be crowned (with the laurel) and whom we bet can melt the heart and loosen the fountain pen of the hardest boiled exhibitor once he turns loose his lyric sales appeal. Get a copy of "The Film Salesman" from Editor Jack Goldstein, if you doubt it.

SOON we will have "sound pictures" in the newsreel field. Fox News, using the Movietone, the Fox-Case photographic device, which records sound and action simultaneously on the film, has already demonstrated that it can be successfully used out-of-doors as well as in the studio.

The West Point cadets on parade with their full band accompaniment, and the commands of the officers, has been filmed and other events of public interest have been recorded to the satisfaction of the Fox officials in sound and pictures.

It becomes now merely a matter of theatre equipment to reproduce what will surely be one of the most amazing developments of the dramatic and news reel and one which will give to the theatres first installing it a tremendous advantage over their competition.

Right here is the place to record that the first contract for the Movietone service, which will include the Fox News and other sound pictures from the Fox-Case studios, has been signed by Karl Hoblitzelle of the Interstate Amusement Co., with headquarters in Dallas, Texas. The arrangement calls for the installation of the Movietone in the Majestic Theatres in Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Houston and Little Rock, Ark., and the Ritz in Birmingham, Ala.

Once more William Fox is showing the way to the industry.

United Artists have given to the world twelve points for movie press agents to ponder, centering on the idea that all stories should be written briefly, stand on their own feet as "news" and be treated accordingly by editors.

A splendid suggestion, doubtless taking a lot of brain strain off the publicity department of United Artists, to say nothing of its possibly helpful effect on the editors, if they do not hope for too much.

How far it may be adaptable to the publicity departments of other film companies is yet to be shown, however, for most of these, whose stars have no personal representatives to broadcast their praises for them, as is the case with United Artists, will have to continue to gargle adjectives as of yore and maintain their high-powered tripe factories at the same old speed.

At any rate it is a noble gesture—a beau geste in a wilderness of worn out words, a magnificent mirage in a desert of drivel.

HENDERSON HICKS, Sheriff of Midvale, chewed nervously at the very good cigar that Tom Belding, manager of the City Theatre, had presented him. It hurt worse to put the bee on Tom through the haze of his own good tobacco.

"I can't do nothing," he explained. "I can't see that 'Torrid Love' is any worse than the show they gave at the Reform Club last winter, but old 'Mom' Bassett has made a kick, and it's too darned close to election to try and stall. Ain't you got something you can run tonight instead of that picture?"

"Sure," responded Belding briskly. "I got the news reel and a two reel comedy and an Aesop's Fable. All I need is a feature to get a turnaway."

"Don't mind me, Hen. I'll have to stand a loss, but no gang of hen truly-goods is going to get me licked. I'll fix 'em somehow, if it takes a year. Come down tonight. It's going to be good."

Hicks lumbered out, glad that Belding had taken it so nicely, and Tom came close upon his heels, headed in the direction of his printers. Two hours later the small town was flooded with throwaways announcing that owing to the protests of the Women's Reform Club there would be no presentation of "Torrid Love" that evening. It added that there would be presented an all-star comedy bill with many added attractions.

What the added attractions would be was explained by the bottom of the circular, which offered $10 and $5 for the best contributions from local talent.

At a twenty-cent admission Belding played to a turnaway, and the patrons voted it one of the best shows of the season, for the local boys and girls were eager to show their abilities and there were many clever amateurs in Midvale. The scheme worked so well that Belding decided to make it a permanent stunt, working it about once every six weeks, or more often if a picture looked a bit shaky.

He had been driven into a money making scheme, but that did not alter his feelings toward the Reform Club. In spite of his profit he still yearned for revenge.

He had not long to wait. The announcement that Fox would release "Ankles Preferred" gave him his tip, and simultaneous with the announcement of that picture he inaugurated a "Pretty Ankles" contest, giving more space to the contest than to the feature.

It was all very simple. "Legs you've all seen and should remember" according to the wording of the announcement, were to be displayed to slightly below the knees, and the prettiest ankles would be given a silver loving cup, which was to be displayed in the window of the local jeweler.

It was about three hours and ten minutes after the first announcement that Tom received his expected visit from "Mom" Bassett, the official intermeddler for the Reform Club. "Mom" probably was the most disliked person in seven states. She was the perpetual objector. Nothing seemed to escape her attention, but when she tried to have the Reverend Peter Halsey dismissed because he had preached a sermon on the repentant Magdalene, even the ministers felt that she had gone a bit too far. Officially they had to seem to approve of her perpetual warfare for cleanliness, but personally they felt that "Mom" was a first class pest.

Belding was suave almost to the point of irritation. "Mom" wanted a fight and it aggrieved her that Belding should so cheerfully greet her and admit that perhaps, from her point of view, an exhibition of ankles might be—er—perhaps, just a little extreme.

"On the other hand," he pointed out, "there is not a girl in town who would be showing more than she does on the street. Many of them would be showing less. Art, Mrs. Bassett, is an elevating and uplifting influence, and I believe that a pair of trim ankles are artistic in the extreme."

"Art is just an excuse for nudity," thundered the irate reformer. "Anyhow, Mr. Belding, I did not come here to discuss art, but to give you an opportunity to withdraw your obscene suggestion before I swear out a warrant for your arrest."

"Thanks for the buggy ride," responded Belding flippantly, "but I can assure you that the show will go on, and I shall be perfectly willing to answer to the law."

Mrs. Bassett flounced out, and a few minutes later was closeted with Henderson Hicks, demanding that Belding be arrested forthwith.

"I can't arrest him unless the show is indecent," protested Hicks, "and we can't say it's indecent until we see it. I'm afraid you'll have to let him go ahead, Mrs. Bassett, and make the charge after you see what it is."

"I shall certainly do that," she assured, and she slammed the door as she went out, with a force that nearly shattered the glass panel.

Nothing daunted, she transferred her campaign to the newspapers, calling upon the inhabitants of Midvale in the name of decency to rebuke Belding by remaining away from the City theatre that evening.

Belding came back with the reply courteous, and by the time the showing date was reached the Pretty Ankles contest had been so well advertised that they had arranged excursions from nearby towns. Belding ran the price up to his roadshow rates, with all seats reserved, and even at that he felt keen regret that there were only 1200 tickets with standing room for perhaps another 200.

There were 1497 persons in the house when the second night show went on, and Mrs. Bassett was prominent in the very front row, moving uneasily in her seat and keeping an eagle eye on Henderson Hicks, who also had been favored with a front seat.

She did not exactly enjoy the picture, but her mind was too much occupied with the contest to give her thought about the now and then generous display of hosiery, and she was quiet until the lights went on and Belding came out on the apron to announce the contest. A dozen of the smartest girls in town made their way back stage, smiling broadly. Belding had fixed it with them.

"One moment, Mr. Belding," she called, as Tom was about to leave the stage. "For the last time I urge you to abandon this foul, this hellish display of depravity. Mr. Hicks, I call upon you to do your duty—"

What else she said was lost in a storm of catcalls and jeers. In all her career "Mom" never had been so cordially disliked. Vainly Belding tried to quiet the crowd, but finally he gave up with a gesture of resignation and disappeared into the entrance.

A moment later the curtain in one rose about twelve inches, and a shout greeted the display of some two dozen legs that did not need the sign "Courtesy of the Blue Front Dry Goods Store," that was placed on either side of the stage. They were, as Belding had said, the best known legs in town, for they had been in the show windows for years.

Mrs. Bassett is moving her husband and the rest of her household goods to Centreville next month.

A Handful of Queens, Kings and Jacks

CLARA BOW, Paramount player, looks as if she were going to burst into a tango.

NORMA TALMADGE and Gilbert Roland in First National's "Camille" which had its premiere at the Globe Theatre, New York, on the twenty-first.

SALLY O'NEIL, M-G-M player, has just presented the head of the Pacific Coast League with a loving cup.

INFINITESIMAL. Mary Ann Jackson, Sennett-Pathe player, isn't big enough to get all that candy into her.

SONYA LAMBERT, one of the ravishing newcomers to Hollywood quickly snatched up by M-G-M.

DOLORES COSTELLO is working on her next Warner starring picture, "A Million Bid."

"BIG BOY" trying to get away with a steak in "Atta Baby," an Educational-Juvenile comedy.

MARJORIE BEEBE is playing in Fox's "Rich But Honest."

RAMON NOVARRO and John Miljan trying to settle a dispute in M-G-M's "Lovers." A razor would come in handy.

NANCY NASH is also playing in Fox's "Rich But Honest."

In A Little Spanish Town

MAY McAVOY, Warner Bros.'s star, reads over a scene to a member of her supporting cast in "Irish Hearts."

WHY shouldn't Madge Bellamy be happy? She's just learned that Fox's "Ankles Preferred," has been held over for a second week at the Roxy, N. Y.

BEBE DANIELS and James Hall in Paramount's "Senorita." In this picture Bebe becomes alarmingly adept with the South American bull whip.

ALLENE RAY, serial star, far from the maddening rush of serial props.

MARY PICKFORD'S next will be a five-and-ten-cent-poor-working-girl romance based on a novel by Kathleen Norris for United Artists release.

M-G-M have all the luck. As soon as Avonnie Taylor came to Hollywood they immediately put her under contract.

'T'WAS on the Orinoco that I socked him on the coco. Charlotte Stevens playfully throwing coconuts at somebody in Tiffany's "The Enchanted Island."

EDDIE CANTOR is fascinated as Babe London grabs him coyly around the neck and gurgles a sweet invitation to dance in Eddie's second for Paramount "Special Delivery."

COLLEEN MOORE'S next for First National will be "Naughty But Nice," directed by Millard Webb.

Hors d'oeuvres from United Artists

RONALD COLMAN and Vilma Banky in a scene from "The Magic Flame," Henry King's latest production for Samuel Goldwyn.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN in a contemplative mood in his latest opus "The Circus." Note that his morning coat is slightly creased.

NORMA TALMADGE gives Noah Beery the razz in a scene from "The Dove," Miss Talmadge's first United Artists release.

DOLORES DEL RIO as she will appear in "Ramona," her first starring vehicle for Inspiration-Carewe and United Artists release.

GLORIA SWANSON'S second United Artists picture will be "The Battalion of Death."

GILDA GRAY will appear in "Passionate Island," her first for Samuel Goldwyn.

"THE GARDEN OF EDEN" will be Corinne Griffith's first independent production for United Artists.

UNIVERSAL'S GREATEST YEAR

With a Greatly Increased Production Schedule of Super Pictures, Universal Jewels and High Class Short Product, Carl Laemmle's Organization Faces Its Greatest Season—A Well Oiled Sales Organization and A Rapidly Expanding Theatre Chain and Export System Place Universal in an Enviably Position

ALL signs point to an exceptionally big year for the Universal Pictures Corporation and its chief, Carl Laemmle. The principal reason for the rosy outlook on the part of Universal officials, executives and the rank and file of that world-wide organization, lies in the record-breaking line-up of pictures scheduled for release next season by that company.

With an ambitious program calling for half again as many super productions as ever before, an unprecedented line-up of Universal Jewel pictures with the picked stars of the screen, new series of aviation and other thriller features, more of those perennial box-office hits, the Universal Western features, plus an array of Short Subjects that will take second place to none in the industry, the Universal people have reason to look forward to the new year with confidence and enthusiasm. Universal salesmen proudly boast that Universal has the BIG pictures for next year. They also seem to have the Jewels, the Westerns and the Short Subjects, too.

It is not alone in the increased quantity and higher quality of its announced product, much of which already is ready for screening, that Universal stands out as prime contender for future honors. The Laemmle organization has undergone vast changes during the past year or so, changes that have combined to place Universal in an enviable position in the motion picture industry.

Forced into the theatre field in order to find outlets for its product in certain sections, the Universal Chain Theatrical Enterprises now owns, controls or has an important interest in almost 300 theatres in the United States and Canada and a number of others elsewhere in the world. The U. S. houses include such important chains as the Shine Circuit in New York State, the original Sparkes Circuit in Florida, the Hostetler Circuit in Nebraska and elsewhere, the Capitol City Enterprises in Kansas and Missouri, and a number of other outstanding chains. There also are many isolated houses of supreme importance, the principal one being the Colony Theatre, Broadway, which becomes Universal leading presentation house September 1st, under the direction of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld.

In the foreign field, Universal has seen a remarkable expansion during recent months. Now represented in almost every civilized country on the globe by its own Exchanges, the Laemmle organization is truly world-wide and animated with a singleness of purpose—to boost Universal to the pinnacle of motion picture prestige. The last important territory to be placed under a Universal Exchange system was Central Europe. N. L. Manheim, Universal export manager, has just returned from Germany, where he created a new exchange system for Universal based on Berlin.

From every quarter and in every phase of its activities, Universal reports betterment—in the increased acquisition of better story material from more popular writers, in the higher class and reputation of its scenario staff and script men, in the increased importance of its directorial corps, its unit supervisors, its new season's line-up of big stars and new screen "finds," both young men and pretty and promising girls, in the expertness of its technical staff and the production heads, and in the ability of its film editors and title men. All of these factors go to back up Universal's contention that its 1927-1928 product will be an eye-opener to the industry and a joy to the public.

Carl Laemmle's Twenty-First Year

Universal World-wide in its Activities

CARL LAEMMLE celebrated his 21st year in the motion picture industry several months ago. It also corresponded to his 60th birthday. In a testimonial celebration held in a big Los Angeles hotel, most of the prominent persons of the industry joined to pay tribute to his great success and to the high peak to which his energy and efforts have raised the Universal Pictures Corporation.

Snatched only a few brief months before from the shadow of the grave, following an emergency appendicitis operation in London, Laemmle, at the threshold of his 21st motion picture year, has many reasons to be proud of Universal and its worldwide ramifications. Several outstanding factors which recently have come to a head, made this anniversary—this coming of age of the Laemmle organization, particularly fitting.

From modest beginnings, Universal has arisen to a highly important position in the screen world, both here and abroad. It is thoroughly modern and its ever-increasing activities stamp it as having the most promising future of any similar organization. In the last year, the Laemmle forces have taken on new dignity by reason of a widely increased scope and a rapidly enlarging zone of influence.

The past year has marked, for one thing, the most impressive strides ever taken in the production field by any one company in any one year. Never has a company spread out and increased its picture making potentialities as Universal has in the past months. Principal in this has been the means taken to increase Universal's output of super productions. Where previous years have seen two or three, five or six super pictures, and where last year saw the making of eight super pictures by Universal, the present season sees twelve big outstanding photodramas in production or near it.

The same ratio holds good in the other lines of product. More Jewels are scheduled, new thrill features, and an exceptional increase in the Short product field. This Short Subject increase not only includes an increase in the quantity of one and two-reelers being turned out, but includes a distinct betterment in type and quality of product. New high-class series, new style chapter pictures, screen novelties and other additions to the Universal schedule of former years, now are in the making. This big forward step in its picture making program is perhaps the most notable thing about Universal's present prospects. It means better pictures for next season—and better pictures carry their message right down to the box office till.

Universal also is stepping right out in other lines. For the first time, Universal will have a regular and permanent Broadway first-run house—the Colony Theatre, which will be directed by the famous Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld. This house will be a fitting cap-piece to the powerful chain of theatres built up by the Universal organization in those territories which Universal formerly was frozen out of. This Universal chain, including such enterprising theatre troupes as the Schine circuit, the Hostettler circuit, the Sparkes circuit and the Capitol enterprises of Kansas City, Mo.

Keeping step with the expansion of Universal's production facilities and its growing list of bigger pictures, Universal's prestige as mirrored by the sales reports and the box office reports has likewise climbed spiritedly. Laemmle's 21st year is a year in which he may well look upon the organization of his creation with satisfaction and pride.

UNIVERSAL is perhaps the striking example of the rapid spread over the entire globe of the activities of the modern motion picture organization. There is no civilized country in the globe not reached by Universal pictures, and it is a matter of pride with Laemmle than in most of these places, Universal pictures are distributed by Universal exchanges, organized from New York, and administered from the Universal Home Office.

Laemmle was the first American film producer to foresee the coming importance of the foreign field. As far back as 1915, he sent Tom Cochrane, one of the famous Cochrane brothers, to the Orient to lay the groundwork for the vast Universal exchange system which has since grown up in Japan, China, the Straits Settlements and India. At the same time he sent another emissary to South America, where the first American branch office on that continent was opened up in Rio. At that time, sales agencies were established in Chile, Argentine and Peru.

Laemmle's next field was the continent of Europe, where he first worked through agents. The next big move was in 1920, when he sent James V. Bryson to Australia, where that film executive established a strong exchange system covering Australia and New Zealand, and remained several years perfecting the vogue of Universal pictures in the Antipodes.

Bryson returned to America by way of the West Coast of South America, where steps were taken for the eventual formation of distinctly American exchanges in almost all of South America. From the United States, Bryson next was sent to England, there to take over the European Motion Picture Company, the British distributing organization for Universal product.

Laemmle's next and latest big move in the foreign field was taken early this Spring, when N. L. Mannheim, export manager, went to Berlin and inaugurated a new Universal exchange system for middle Europe.

Together with its exchanges and branch agents in all corners of the world, Universal also is gradually building up a far-flung chain of theatres, which are modeled on the high-class picture palaces of America, and which give Universal pictures a proper setting in the Old World and other foreign fields.

Twelve Super Productions Listed by Laemmle Organization for Next Season

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Show Boat," "Les Miserables" and "The Cat and the Canary" Head the Schedule

CARL LAEMMLE'S hat is in the ring for next season when it comes to big, outstanding pictures. Astutely gauging the direction of the public's taste, he has completed plans for an unusual array of super-productions for next year. In fact, the Universal output of big specials will be increased 50 per cent for the coming season. Where eight big pictures were released this year, twelve will be offered to the public during the 1927-1928 season.

These twelve super-productions are in addition to the long list of high class Universal Jewels scheduled, excellent first-run pictures made with such stars as Laura La Plante, Mary Philbin, Marian Nixon, Renee Adoree, Betty Compson, Jean Hersholt, Norman Kerry, Hoot Gibson, Francis X. Bushman and similar box-office favorites. Also are in addition to the ten Thrill features, five made with Al Wilson, the air-devil, and five with Dynamite, a noted dog star, as well as twelve Western features made with Fred Humes and Ted Wells.

They are the "creme de la creme" of the Universal production activities and they stack up with such outstanding Universal supers of the past as "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "The Phantom of the Opera," "The Storm" and similar big successes. In projecting twelve such pictures for the coming year, Carl Laemmle is believed to have set a dazzling record for the industry. With one big Super picture a month all during the approaching season, the Universal people may well boast that "Universal has the Big pictures for next year."

The twelve Supers will be "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Man Who Laughs," "Show Boat," "The Cat and the Canary," "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris," "Les Miserables," "Love Me and the World is Mine," "The Big Gun," and four Reginald Denny Supers, "Good Morning, Judge," "Out All Night," under the skilled hands of Harry Pollard, Universal's ace of aces in the directorial field, this Super-cinema is near the $2,000,000 mark in production cost. A determination to assure verisimilitude in this picture brought Harry Pollard and his company all the way from California to the East Coast more than

In addition to the costly location trips, unlimited measures have been taken at Universal City during the last seven months in the construction of Southern mansions and similar sets needed to portray faithfully the locales and sequences of the story. Harvey Thew, who adapted the story and prepared the script, preserved in full measure the stirring drama of the book and the colorful atmosphere and characterizations. Pollard, the director, has taken infinite pains in making the picture as epochal to the screen as the book was in its day.

Perhaps the most striking feature of this production is the extraordinary cast assembled at Universal City to enact the roles that once rocked a continent—Uncle Tom, Little Eva, Simon Legree, Topsy, Eliza and others. The pick of screenedom is there, and the picture actually boasts a cast of forty-five principals. Many of these screen favorites are stars in their own right.

An idea of the sumptuousness in characterizations to be found in the picture may be had from the knowledge of the following assignments: Simon Legree is played by George Siegmann; Eliza by Marguerita Fischer; Uncle Tom by James B. Lowe, the famous colored actor; Cassie by Eulalie Jensen; George Harris, the slave, by Arthur Edmund Carewe; Shelby by Jack Mower; Lawyer Marks by Lucien Littlefield; Adolph by Rolfe Sedan; Mrs. Shelby by Vivian Oakland; Tom Loker by J. Gordon Russell; Mrs. St. Claire by Gertrude Astor; Little Eva by Virginia Grey, and Topsy by Mona Ray. Others among the principals are Adolph Milar, Skipper Zeff, Lassie Lou Ahern, Eileen Manning, John Roche, Gertrude Howard, Geoffrey

"Ask Me Another," and "The Canvass Kisser."

Foremost of all, and destined, it is said, to be foremost in the entire industry for next year, if not for the entire span of the industry's history, will be "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Laemmle's super-proportioned photodrama of the world-famous Harriet Beecher Stowe novel and play. Now assuming its final form a year ago, when ice-jams featured many Eastern streams. After a stay in Pennsylvania, the company spent several weeks at Plattsburgh, N. Last summer, many more weeks were spent up and down the Mississippi River, filming plantation scenes, river boat scenes and other Southern atmosphere.

Universal Has Big Pictures

Grace and many well-known players. In addition, literally thousands have been used as extras in the various scenes.

It is the biggest story in American history, made in the biggest way ever conceived for the screen. Edward J. Montagne, Universal Scenario chief, supervised it in person, and Charles Stumar, an ace among cameramen, headed the battery of photographic experts on the job. This production will be road-showed by Universal beginning next Fall as no picture has ever been road-showed by that company before. At the Universal home office it is promised that even the road-showing of the original play will be out-stepped by the handling of the new big picture version.

"The Man Who Laughs" will be an unusual photodrama, first because it is being adapted from "L'homme Qui Rit," one of the strangest and most gripping stories ever written, and also because it will be made by Paul Leni, who in a few brief months at Universal City has proven himself the top-most maker of thrilling and artistic screen situations in the directorial field today. Victor Hugo, the unequalled peer of all literary history, wrote "L'homme Qui Rit." Carl Laemmle obtained the screen rights of this world famous story from the Societe General de Films de Paris.

A story so exotic and so unusual, dealing with one of the weirdest characters in fiction, long has challenged the courage and ability of the motion picture industry. Universal first conceived the film as a monster production to be made in France. For the famous central character, Gwynplaine, the noble youth stolen by gypsies and mutilated so that his face bore a perpetual grin, such an actor as Lon Chaney was envisioned. Later, however, Laemmle found he could get the services of the famous continental screen character-creator, Conrad Veidt. This noted star of such outstanding German pictures as "The Cabinet of Caligari," the "Living Mask," "The Student of Prague," and "The Three Wax Works," and who won great attention in America by his role as ure in the motion picture world, will supervise the production, which Universal promises as a picture which will cause a sensation. It will be Paul Leni's fourth American picture, and if he progresses as rapidly during his third and fourth as he has from his first to his second, it will be outstanding in every way.

grand proportions as "Uncle Tom." Charles Kenyon, rated as one of the best script men on the West Coast, is now adapting the novel to the screen.

According to present indications, "Show Boat," a gripping tale of theatrical life on a Mississippi river show-boat, will have Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry in the principal roles of Magnolia Hawks and Gaylord Ravenal, the strangely mated lovers of the stirring story.

Pollard again will bring a company East and keep his cameramen grinding during eventful sequences stages in the exact locale of the story—the broad bosom of the Mississippi, and the curious wharves and levees that fringe its banks. The "river-town" will come into its own and the colorful life of the show-boat people will be paraded across the screen in the same kaleidoscopic pageant that Edna Ferber has traced across the pages of her epic novel. The Father of Waters in rage, a mood which the daily papers now are chronicling in column after column of dire disaster and denudation, will be an integral part of the drama and action of this super-production. Universal now has a battery of cameramen taking shots of the destruction and havoc hourly being done by what is termed as the worst Mississippi flood in years.

"Show Boat" ran serially in the Woman's Home Companion, with a circulation of one and one-half millions, and has gone into its third printing as a novel, totalling more than 200,000 copies. It has been estimated that more than six million people have read the story—an amazing total which promises an exceptional ready-made audience for the picture in every locality.

Louis XI in "The Beloved Rogue," the recent John Barrymore opus, now is at Universal City preparing for the beginning of the big Victor Hugo production.

Mary Philbin, the popular Universal emotional actress, will play the role of Dea, the blind heroine in "The Man Who Laughs." Others in the cast are under consideration and will be announced shortly. J. Grubb Alexander, veteran scenario writer and screen author, is in charge of the adaptation and script. Bela Sekely, author, critic, newspaperman and war correspondent, now an important fig-

"Show Boat" will be an elaborate screen adaptation of the sensational Edna Ferber novel, rated as the best seller in years, and the most widely discussed novel in America. Universal acquired the rights to this book only after spirited bidding and at a staggering price which approximated six figures.

To the super-veteran, Harry Pollard, goes the toga of responsibility for the making of this picture. He will begin it as soon as he has completed the editing of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is expected he will make it on the same

Scenes from "The Cat and the Canary," Universal's great mystery melodrama directed by Paul Leni with Laura La Plante as the star.

Universal's Epic "Les Miserables"

"The Cat and the Canary," another of the big Universal Supers, is the screen adaptation of the famous Broadway mystery play by John Millard. This was one of the first and most successful mystery plays. It has been road-showed as a play in every section of the country and is one of the most popular stock offerings. Paul Leni, noted European director, has made a picture from it that experts say has more punch and thrill than the play.

With Laura La Plante as the star, and with a high-powered cast, including Creighton Hale, Flora Finch, Tully Marshall, Gertrude Astor, Arthur Edmund Carewe, George Siegmann, Lucien Littlefield, Martha Mattox, Forrest Stanley, Joe Murphy and Billy Engle, Leni had exceptional material with which to work. He rose to the occasion. It was his first American picture. Abroad, he had done such outstanding photodramas as "The Three Wax Works," and other UFA successes. But, in coming to America, he asked for a typically American story. He got it in the John Willard play.

Leni, in this first picture made by him in the New World, proved himself a master-craftsman. It is an American picture, through and through, with only artistic settings and photographic effect impinged upon it from Leni's continental past. It is hailed as the greatest mystery picture ever made and by far the best screen adaptation of a mystery play.

As food after foot of this exotic story unrolls, the spectator is caught in a grip of suspense and mystery practically unknown in the cinema world. Leni has done marvels with his eerie settings, with his crafty lighting effects and with his consummate mastership of the power of suggestion. This picture will mark a new development in the art of screen technique, say those who have seen it. Reports already are coming in of various adaptations of Leni's methods and artistry on the part of astute picture makers.

So impressive is this first Leni picture that Universal has chosen it to open the Colony Theatre, Broadway, New York City, when Universal begins its long term lease on the big New York first run house September 1st next. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, to be managing director of the Colony, is elated over the prospect of presenting "The Cat and the Canary" and promises a musical setting and presentation surroundings of a nature well in keeping with the super quality of the production.

"Les Miserables," another of the outstanding Universal offerings, is already well known to America, by reason of a number of try-out presentations and the great volume of advance discussion it has enjoyed. Made by the big French producing organization, the Societe des Cineromans, as an exceptionally faithful adaptation of Victor Hugo's greatest story, Carl Laemmle acquired the world rights for it and will present it as a Universal Film de France.

The making of "Les Miserables," called the greatest piece of literature of all time, and revered by every Frenchman as the pinnacle of French belles lettres, was a national event in France. The eye of every Frenchman followed the course of this transfer of "Les Miserables" to the screen. So did lovers of literature in every other country.

The most capable and expensive cast ever assembled in France was engaged and Louis Nalpas, the peer of continental screen art directors, applied his entire time to the production. Henri Fescourt, leading French producer, supervised, with Jean Sapin, editor of Le Matin, and a high power in the Cineroman Society, actively interest from start to finish.

Reggie's First Super-Production

A marvelous picture was fore-ordained. Even down to the least important of the 6000 extras, the players put their souls into their work—for the glory of France. It was made with the same fervor as a Passion Play. The results reveal themselves in the most realistic settings, character portrayals and photodramatic sequences ever achieved on celluloid.

In France, in England, in America and elsewhere, this picture has been hailed as "Les Miserables" in every sense of the word, with the immortal Hugo's theme, his brain people, his deftness and subtlety, and even his very soul, translated into motion. Gabriel Babrio, noted French actor, is hailed as the fateful Jean Val Jean to the life. The other players are equally praised by press and public. The humaneness and strong drama of the Hugo story has not lost one thrill, one pang, one colorful suggestion, in its transfer to the screen, say those who have seen it.

"The Big Gun," also scheduled for the coming season as a Super Universal, will be an epic picture of the U. S. Navy. It is being adapted from a gripping magazine story by Richard Barry. The Navy Department is co-operating with Universal in plans for making this production the most comprehensive film account of the Navy in the World War ever attempted. It will be "The Big Parade" of the Navy.

As the lead in this production, rapidly nearing the "shooting" stage at Universal City, Laemmle has selected George Lewis as the hero, a bright young American boy who wins honors in the American Navy. Lewis is the young star who made such a far-reaching impression and jumped to popularity over-night by his work in "His People." He since has risen to great heights of public favor by his work as the hero of "The Collegians" series.

Irvin Willat, the directorial genius who has made such pictures as "North of 36" and "Wanderings

Also, Harry Pollard directed it, and it is very probable that he will be assigned to make the new one.

"The Cohens and the Kellys" was a sensation last season when it pyramided into a popularity that astounded Universal executives and rapidly rolled up a box-office record that gave it second place to none in the season's history of profit-makers for the exhibitor.

of the Wasteland," will direct "The Big Gun."

As a sequel to the great box-office picture "The Cohens and Kellys," Universal is planning a new picture along the same popular lines. It will be "The Cohens and Kellys in Paris," and it is promised as everything the name implies. Universal will make every attempt to get the same stars and players in the original "Cohens and Kellys." The outstanding ones are Charlie Murray, George Sidney, Vera Gordon, Kate Price, Jason Robards and Olive Hasbrouck.

Universal will go to extremes to turn out "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris" along similar lines, with the added advantage which the situation of this laughable group of characters in Paris promises to provide. There is no place where Cohen and Kelly could get into more funny situations than the French capital with its incomprehensible porters and hotel crews, its night life, its shrewd shop keepers and its sights of interest and appeal. Universal production chiefs promise they will not overlook a single bet in making this the equal if not the superior of the first Cohen and Kelly picture.

"Love Me and the World Is Mine," another of the Universal Supers for next season, is an elaborate and dramatic romance directed by Ewald Andre Dupont, the noted German director of "Variety" and other successes. Mary Philbin and Norman Kerry are featured with Betty Compson, George Siegmann and Henry B. Walthall, and supported by a cast of sterling ability and popularity. Among them are Martha Mattox, Robert Anderson, Emily Fitzroy, Charles Puffy, Albert Conti, Mathilde Brundage and Charles Selton.

The production, adapted from a colorful Viennese story by Rudolph Hans Bartsch, is a worthy successor to "Merry Go Round," Universal's super-success of several seasons ago in which Miss Philbin and Mr. Kerry were co-starred, and in which they first attained screen fame, and of "The Phantom of the Opera" in which this same pair was featured.

Universal is building a nationwide exploitation campaign around the title of this super, taken from the famous ballad of two decades ago. The song will be revived. The Bartsch story, known as the "Affairs of Hannerl," was adapted to the screen by Dupont and Paul Kohner. It concerns an unsophisticated village orphan girl who becomes enamored of a young army officer who stops in the village during a manœuvre campaign, and who later follows him to Vienna, to be plunged into a whirl of sophisticated and spectacular night life.

Universal Tries "Uncle Tom" Again

Universal Has Splendid Gauge of Progress in "Uncle Tom's Cabin"—1914 Production Cost $15,000 While Present One Costs Close to $2,000,000

IN 1914 Universal made a screen version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" at a cost of $15,000.

Now, thirteen years later, Universal is making another screen version of the famous classic that will, when completed, cost more than 100 times that amount, or close to $2,000,000.

"Sounds impossible," you say, "regardless of economic conditions, the late unpleasantness, changes in administration and Prohibition, nothing should cost 100 times as much now as it did in the good, old days, when Mary Pickford made a picture a week and the foreign invasion was not dreamed of!"

Impossible or not, it's true and it's happening, so for first hand information we will turn to Harry Pollard, the directorial genius to whom President Carl Laemmle entrusted the gigantic task of making this picture of pictures.

If anyone should know, Pollard should. In the early version he played the title role and in the intervening years, both as actor and director, he has helped the motion picture drop its swaddling clothes and advance by leaps and bounds from a hit or miss, haphazard jumble to one of the three greatest industries in the world; the most colorful, the most incomprehensible, the most interesting industry ever conceived of.

Pollard at first meeting, impresses one as being a rather gruff, outspoken individual with utter contempt for diplomacy and all that it entails. This is bound to strike rather forcibly, as since the time of the first studio, it has been the belief of the layman (and a number in the industry) that to remain in pictures one must be a diplomat of the highest order.

In all fairness it must be stated says so, whether to the second cameraman or to the general manager it makes no difference to him. The second cameraman or the general manager listens for the simple reason that when Pollard speaks, he knows whereof he speaks.

Pollard's gruffness and apparent lack of convention is because he is wrapped up body and soul in the job at hand. He is ruthless and uncompromising in getting his object accomplished, but he accomplishes it, and that is what counts in the movies or any other walk of life. In his score of years as an actor and director he has been associated with innumerable outstanding successes. In the years to come he will no doubt be associated with picture for you of the realness of the characters in Harriet Beecher Stowe's novel that gives an entirely different conception from the one you might have had, a conception gained possibly from recollections of a "Tom" show, playing for one performance only in the opera house back home.

"But why should it cost 100 times or more as much to make the picture now than it did thirteen years ago?", you question.

Immediately the dreamer vanishes. In his place is a practical, far-thinking business man.

"It's the demand of the public," he replies. "The motion picture has advanced from nothing to almost a household necessity because the public demanded it. This bunk about the masses not knowing what they want is just that—bunk."

"When I played 'Tom' in the first picture, we made what was considered a good picture, and it was, for 1913. I had a print of it made when I started the present version last year with an idea of looking for material that might help. I laughed outright at the crude sets, we thought were so perfect—the jumping from scene to scene with no attempt made to cover up glaring mistakes. The picture, except for a few minor details, was useless to me. That brought to me the difference between a picture of that time and one to be made today and should point out to you the difference in the cost of the two productions.

"At that the money part is, or should be, negligible. In 1913 there were perhaps 350 movie theatres in the country and the average admission charge was ten cents. Today there are more than 20,000 houses in the United States alone and I don't know how many scattered over the rest of the world, while the scale of admission ranges from twenty-

Universal City Studio Facilities Unequalled

Big Universal Plant Permits Production of Super Pictures Of All Styles, As Well As Wide Range of Features and Short Product

FOR more than twelve years Universal City has maintained its position as the largest and best equipped motion picture plant in the world. Many new production facilities have been recently added to the immense organization which place the make-believe city far and away beyond anything of the kind in existence.

The estimated value of the plant, which covers six hundred acres, is ing growth from the tiny studio at Sunset and Gower streets in which the company started a little more than a dozen years ago. Two thousand employees are kept in the permanent staff on the grounds. These do not include actors, technicians and others who come and go.

There are at Universal City the largest stages in the world, ten of them, with an aggregate square footage of 110,500. For use in inclement weather there are four immense covered stages, which are illuminated with electrical equipment of all kinds.

The electrical plant is one of the wonders of the big plant. Upon it rests the responsibility of getting light wherever a Universal director may need it, whether it be at the bottom of the Pacific or in a mountain cavern 500 miles from the studio. To carry light into the wilderness, Universal has in operation six huge generators which are mounted on trucks. Recently four motor generators of 24,000 amperes have been installed in a sub-station power house of reinforced concrete.

Universal has its own canvas room, its own lumber and planing mill and its own machine shop and foundry. All these are continuously at work meeting the demands of the production and technical departments. The latter department maintains the largest staff of any motion picture organization. In addition, Universal has its own police and fire departments and is the only studio having its own fresh water supply.

The fire department not only extinguishes blazes, but frequently fits into the production scheme of things with its high-powered hydraulic machinery. When the branch of the Los Angeles river, which runs through the property, has been transformed by a dry spell into a mere trickle at the bottom of a ravine, the fire department is often called upon to turn it back into a raging flood to give picture fans another sensation.

The largest privately owned zoo in the world is located on the Universal lot. Its inmates include practically every known type of animal. Universal's horse ranch has a complete stable of animals from aristocrats of the blood to the hardy wire ponies of the plains.

Within the 600 acres may be found every conceivable kind of setting. Here is Vienna with London close by. Peeping over the hill are China, India, Algeria and a South Sea jungle. The brownstone mansions of Old New York and its Bowery are nearby, while a short walk will carry one to New England or into a town of the early West. The stately cathedral of Notre Dame is not far from Monte Carlo and grim Moscow. The Shelby mansion and the slave quarters of "Uncle Tom Cabin" and other permanent sets fancy to the old plantations. There are among the outstanding sets, solidly built, that have been used and are being used in the making of outdoor scenes for Universal pictures.

This gigantic six-million-dollar machine will be the means of turning out Universal's five and one-half million dollars' worth of productions during the present season, in addition to the many productions that are made on the Universal lot by other companies leasing its facilities.

Directors and Players

The present list of directors includes:

William A. Seiter, Emory Johnson, Richard Smith, Melville Brown, Harry Pollard, Willy Wyler, Robert Hill, Edward Sloan, Paul Leni, Ernst Laemmle, Edward Laemmle, Sidney Olcott and Reeves Eason.

Stars and featured players under contract to Universal:

The Executive Staff

Among the principal executives at Universal City are Henry Henigson, general manager; Victor Nordlinger, casting director; M. J. Murphy, general production head; Lloyd Nosler, film editor; Edward Montagne, scenario editor; Walter Anthony, title editor; Sam Jacobson, publicity director; Charles D. Hall, technical director; A. E. Shadur, electrical department, and R. Gausman, master of properties.

Heading the list of production supervisors is Carl Laemmle, Jr. Among the other supervisors are Bela Sekely, Paul Kohner and William Lord Wright.

The Scenario Staff

E. J. Montagne is editor-in-chief of the scenario department, having charge of an extensive staff whose work is to sift the current literary product of the world to the bone, to buy outstanding stories and plays and to adapt these stories to the screen. Charles A. Logue is in charge of dramatic continuities. Joseph Uoland manages comedy continuities and Frank Beresford heads the staff of the reading department consisting of fourteen readers.

The Eastern scenario department, of which Phelps Decker is editor, reviews all plays opening in the East and keeps in close touch with the book publishers, reading and reporting on important forthcoming works of fiction while still in manuscript form. Leonard H. Field is in charge of adaptations in the Eastern office. Grace Platt is chief reader.

"The Chinese Parrot," by Earl Derr Biggers, one of the most popular Saturday Evening Post serials in years, and now in the best seller class as a $2 novel, heads the Big Gun Group of Universal-Jewels. Paul Leni, director of the super special, "The Cat and the Canary," is making "The Chinese Parrot."

Marian Nixon, co-star of "Span-gles," and Hobart Bosworth head the cast which includes K. Sojin, Florence Turner, Edmund Burns, Fred Esmelton, Albert Conti, Ed Kennedy and George Kuva.

Earl Derr Biggers is the author of many outstanding stage and screen hits, including "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and "It Pays to Advertise."

Paul Leni, although a newcomer to Universal City, is already established as a distinguished director. His "Three Wax Works," which he made for the German UFA Company, made a name for him overnight, creating as much published discussion in this country as is usually occasioned by an American super picture. His first productions for Universal will therefore be awaited with uncommon interest.

Leni's unusual handling of "The Cat and the Canary" was largely responsible for his assignment to "The Chinese Parrot," which is a peculiarly colorful and wierd melodrama that lends itself to the remarkable feats of design and the strange camera effects of which Leni has proven himself a master.

War Eagles

The masterly hand of Emory Johnson, director of "The Fourth Commandment," holds the megaphone in the making of "War Eagles," Universal's thrilling drama of the flying front during the world conflict. Raymond Keane and Barbara Kent are co-starred.

Almost as dramatic as the picture itself is the story of its authorship. Lieutenant Ralph Blanchard, a fighting air man during the European war, wrote the story after eight years of reminiscence. The pathos, the tragedy, the futility of war had burned indelibly into his soul since he returned with the victorious troops.

Into his tale he poured the anguish of nations and the super folly of men who became drunk with the lust of destruction, and against this dim background of carnage he painted a picture of young love to contradict the grinning god of war.

Raymond Keane, who enacts the role of a youthful American flyer, burst into the featured firmament of the films when Buchowetski selected him to play opposite Laura La Plante in "The Midnight Sun."

Barbara Kent, whose recent featured performance in "Flesh and the Devil," awakened enviable praise, is the charming and vivacious French girl who captures the heart of the American bird man and finally spurs him to a deed of reckless courage.

The sensational drama of "War Eagles" and its tender love interest are rendered more striking because of the intimate human characters in the trenches conjured from the memory of the author. These characters produce laughs between thrills in this epic of the air.

In addition to Raymond Keane and Barbara Kent the cast includes Nigel Barrie, Jack Pennick, Donald Stuart, Cuyler Supplee, Frank Campbell, Marcella Daly, Eugene Pouyet, Wilson Bengie, Brent Overstreet and Lieut. Egbert Cook.

7 Hoot Gibson Jewels

Peter B. Kyne, one of the foremost writers of adventure stories for the Saturday Evening Post and Cosmopolitan and author of many best sellers, is the author of the first two pictures of the Big Gun Group in which Hoot Gibson will be starred. They are "Galloping Fury" and "The Rawhide Kid."

Marion Nixon as she appears in "The Chinese Parrot."

Kyne is the author of several of Gibson's former successes. His humorous action stories of the rawboned West have proven perfect vehicles for the particular talents of Hoot and have done much toward placing this star in the unique position he holds on the screen.

"Galloping Fury" and "The Rawhide Kid" are both exciting stories woven about the character type in which Hoot Gibson has made himself famous the world over. It is doubtful whether the star is more renowned for his superb riding than he is for his infectious good humor. Both of these success elements form the substance of the stories by Kyne, who has written with his usual consummate skill and ingenuity.

Equally distinguished authors have been engaged to write the other five of the seven Gibson features. The titles of these are "A Trick of Hearts," "The Wild Horse Show," "Painted Ponies," "The Society Cowboy" and "Riding for Fame."

Unexampled production strength and unlimited facilities have been placed behind the Gibson features. Every one will be an expensive production with a supporting cast chosen from the best in the land.

The spirited Gibson personality will be featured along with plenty of fast riding and, as ever, the famous Universal Ranch Riders.

Wild Beauty

Rex, billed as the king of wild horses, will be the star of "Wild Beauty," stirring tale of lawless herds. The author is Sylvia Seid and the director Henry MacRae, maker of a number of big outdoor pictures for Universal.

The unusual backing and production strength which Universal has put behind this picture is reflected in the superb cast which includes June Marlowe, Hugh Allen, Scott Seaton, Hayes Robinson, William Bailey and J. G. Russell.

The story is uncommonly virile and gripping. Beautiful scenic shots will frame the drama of the equine hero.

Jewels Among the Big Guns

Silk Stockings

Laura LaPlante is the star of Universal's adaptation of the stage success, "Silk Stockings," by Cyril Harcourt, which ran for an entire season in New York.

Wesley Ruggles, famous director of light comedy dealing with blooded youth, will make "Silk Stockings." His success with Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s, series, "The Collegians," and his former productions which include "The Plastic Age," with Clara Bow, has stamped him as an uncommon director of this type of light comedy.

Laura LaPlante's recent succession of feature comedy hits which began with "The Teaser" and "Her Big Night" and built up to "The Love Thrill" and "Beware of Widows," has placed her somewhere near the top of her class, or, in the opinion of her more enthusiastic admirers, in a class by herself.

"Silk Stockings" is the type of comedy in which she has made her best hits. It is a smartly dressed and clever production, as the title implies, and is full of the care-free, bubbling humor that fits the dimpled blonde like feathers fit a canary.

The Small Bachelor

The author and director of "The Small Bachelor" form a combination that speak well for this forthcoming Universal-Jewel farce, for it is the product of the pen of P. G. Wodehouse and will be directed by William A. Seiter, who made "The Cheerful Fraud," "What Happened to Jones," "Skinner's Dress Suit" and other laughing successes. Marcel Perez, famous gag man, will have charge of comedy construction.

Wodehouse is an outstanding humorous author of the Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan and Liberty. His story, "The Small Bachelor," is said to have added hundreds of thousands to the circulation of the latter publication. The highly laughable stories of Wodehouse are especially adaptable to the screen, for he is also a dramatist of consequence, having adapted the present Broadway hit, "The Play's the Thing."

The cast of "The Small Bachelor" includes a number of seasoned has attained modest renown as a safe cracker, a pretty pickpocket and a palmist inject some amusing surprise elements into the movements of the piece that helps everybody make merry all the day. Scenes quickly shift from sordid surroundings to bespangled ball rooms while ridiculous situations are built up into topheavy towers that fall with a comical crash.

An all star cast will be seen in this big story from the pen of Stuart N. Lake, whose superb sense of the ridiculous is heightened by his feeling for the sympathetic and sublime. Laughs without number occur in the close-ups of our doughboys in their efforts at being friendly with the enemy. And only the hard-hearted will refrain from shedding a tear or two during the deeply affecting scenes that occur between the little German girl whose heart has been won by an American sergeant.

To save the sergeant from falling into the trap prepared for him by her stern parent, the girl, in a spirit of self sacrifice, steals to his billet and tells him never to see her again, making him believe that she has only been romancing. He goes away with the troops, crestfallen. Vigilance committee spies report the girl for talking to the soldier at his billet. In punishment her head is shorn and her father orders her out of the house. The daughter of kultur has suddenly become a social outcast. The man she loves is miles away and his heart is embittered toward the girl who confessed that she was a common flirt. Things can't go on like this in the movies unless something happens. In this case it is a devastating flood that carries away bridges, houses and human hearts. And, incidentally, the terrifying calamity opens the way to a happy ending.

He Knew Women

Ivan Moskine and Lya de Putti are the stars of "He Knew Women," adapted from the musical comedy success, "The Peasant Girl," produced by Morris Gest. Paul Leni, producer of the Universal super special, "The Cat and the Canary," will direct this elaborate production, which is from the pen of Fritz Stein and Oscar Nedbal.

"He Knew Women" is a whimsical and beautiful story of a man who thought he knew them. The glitter and color of continental nobility rich embellishes the drama which is full of arresting and exciting incident and sparkles with comedy.

A romantic youth trained in the tricks of courtly love, who has a world of cultured womanhood at his feet, is conquered by the simplicity of a peasant girl in a most surprising way.

It becomes less surprising when one considers that the girl part in "He Knew Women" is played by Lya di Putti, who was featured in the UFA production, "Variety." Ivan Moskine, her co-star, became a billboard name of striking importance at a single bound as the star of "Michael Strogoff."

Cheating Cheaters

"Cheating Cheaters" is another monumental Broadway stage success transformed into an unusual motion picture by Edward Laemmle. Betty Compson and Kenneth Harlan head a strong cast in this captivating crook play which combines the airiness of farce with the thrill of mystery and daring. Added to this is the inevitable love affair that refuses to run smooth, even though it is engineered by the smoothest of crooks.

Max Marcin is the author of the play of the same name which kept Broadway and the "road" in the throes of gooseflesh and laughter for a long run.

"Cheating Cheaters" is the screen story of an entrancing shop-lifter who is released from jail through the good offices of a shyster lawyer. Through the same slippery legal parasite she is introduced to a group of safe crackers whose admiration and respect she wins by the deftness of her pocket picking fingers.

A wealthy family on the seashore who boast a rare collection of jewels is selected for fleecing. The beautiful pickpocket is assigned to the work of gaining the freedom of the seaside mansion by making the son of the family fall in love with her. She succeeds beyond the hopes of her companions in crime, for she falls in love with him.

This is followed by a series of melodramatic happenings that develop with the swiftness of farce, and so on to the happy end.

In addition to Betty Compson and Kenneth Harlan the cast includes Sylvia Ashton, Irwin Connelly, Maude Turner Gordon, E. J. Ratcliffe, Lucien Littlefield, Eddie Gribbon and Cesare Gravina.

Back to God's Country

Renee Adoree, who bounded into the affections of a million fans in "The Big Parade," is the star of "Back to God's Country," adapted from the famous story by James Oliver Curwood, author of many popular novels that have been turned into notable screen successes. These include "North of 36," "Wanderers of the Wasteland" and "The Quest of Joan."

Irvin Willat, director of Uni-versal's super special, "Big Guns," is the maker of "Back to God's Country," a powerful tale of the northland full of love and tragedy, rich in melodrama and strong in that compelling audience value that is properly known as "dog interest."

The principal players supporting Renee Adoree in the Curwood picture are Walter Long, Robert Frazer, Mitchell Lewis and Stanton Beck.

Hot blood rises high in the land of ice and silence when a beautiful woman, hitting the northern trail with her husband who is disabled by an accident, becomes the object of desire to a man of iron and brawn who has never known defeat. In the trackless waste of the lawless land a tense mortal drama is staged that ends in tragedy and in triumph.

The rare combination of star, director and author, together with the unusual strength of the story, presages for "Back to God's Country" a high place on the Big Gun Group of Universal Jewels.

The Four Flusher

That sensational Broadway stage hit, "The Four Flusher," by Caesar Dunn, will be the first feature starring vehicle for George Lewis, whose appearances as the star of Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s, series, "The Collegians," have made his rise to greater heights inevitable. Mel Brown will direct.

Lewis' first screen role of importance, which was the juvenile part in "His People," was the signal for most of the reviewers to make elaborate predictions for the appealing young fellow with the golden smile. Some of these prophecies have already transpired, and it is expected that this new star will gather fresh laurels in "The Four Flusher" that will give him a flying start on a major starring career, for the story is one of those surefire dramas of flaming youth, sparkling with comedy and lush with love.

"Finders Keepers" Is Laura's Next

Mel Brown, the director, was the maker of "Her Big Night," "Taxi! Taxi!" and the forthcoming "Fast and Furious" starring Reginald Denny.

"The Four Flusher" is the story of an ambitious youth who is a shoe clerk in a small town. His boundless confidence and optimism lead him to live and love beyond his means until the pink cloud of leaping hope turns black. But have no fear. Fortune smiles late as usual and in the end the right girl comes to his arms.

Finders Keepers

Laura La Plante will be the star of "Finders Keepers," adapted from one of the fascinating "sub-deb" stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart, whose name is familiar to the millions of readers of "The Saturday Evening Post" and "Liberty" as well as to the buyers of best sellers, whose bookshelves are lined with the past successes of this popular writer.

Wesley Ruggles, noted director of comedy-drama and farce, who has made an enviable name for himself in handling stories of the flapper stage of feminine growth, will direct "Finders Keepers." His direction of Clara Bow in "The Plastic Age" and his more recent success with Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s "Collegians" made him the logical man for this new story of the delightful and lovable "Bab," who was first characterized on the screen by Marguerite Clark.

It is to be expected that Universal's dimpled blonde will make a new and delightful interpretation of the amusing leading character of "Finders Keepers," for she seems well fitted, by nature and by experience, to play the part of "Bab." Her recent success in "The Love Thrill" and in "Be-ware of Widows" gave Laura LaPlante the best opportunities she has had hitherto to display her rare skill in portraying humorously the young American femininity.

In "Finders Keepers" little "Bab" is her old delicious self. It is another volume of the diary of this astonishing sub-deb and in "Variety" threw her immediately into the limelight of screen fame, will be the star of "Midnight Rose," a strong dramatic vehicle by J. Grubb Alexander, especially adapted to the talents of Miss di Putti. James Young, who experience of true love, rose from the ashes of her past.

The gawdy background of life in the glitter of lamps and the sordid grayness of poverty and despair are the settings in which this unusual actress, portraying a remarkable character, runs the gamut of human emotions in "Midnight Rose."

Wendell Phillips Franklin, the engaging boy of "The Fourth Commandment," has been signed for this production.

Alias the Deacon

If ten people were asked what stage character has endeared himself to "the home folks" more than any other in recent years, it is probable that nine would answer "Alias the Deacon."

The crafty old rogue with the heart of gold has made a place for himself in the heart of every town that boasts a stock company and all the cities in which the road company has appeared.

Jean Hersholt plays the stellar role in Universal's adaptation of this stage hit. Edward Sloman, whose production of "His People" stamped him as one of the foremost directors of the type of vivid melodrama in which homely humor blends with pathos, is the maker of "Alias the Deacon."

It is said that Hersholt, admittedly among the foremost character actors of the screen, being one of the few character men in motion picture history to attain stellar prominence, plays the most appealing role of his career.

The story is naturally crowded with suspense, thrill, love interest and unusual circumstances, and it should be enough to say that Edward Sloman has made a Sloman job of it. The terrific ten-round fight in which the hero gets licked is highly exciting and dramatic.

her screaming affairs of the heart. With her entrancing simplicity, crossed with half ripened world wisdom, she manages to keep her family and others in all varieties of hot water.

Miss LaPlante will be supported by a feature cast.

Midnight Rose

Lya di Putti, whose appearance made "Ponjola," and also "The Devil" with George Arliss, will direct "Midnight Rose." Otis Harlan will be a featured player.

It is the human story of a woman whose sunshine was darkness—who blossomed at night and left broken hearts in the wake of her smile—who reaped as she sowed and paid the price—and then, regenerated by the new ex-sholt with the sympathy that is characteristic of him. June Marlowe as the runaway girl and Ralph Graves in the juvenile lead supply the young love interest while Myrtle Steadman plays the role of the hotel mistress whose kindness and credulity make her an easy prey for the ruthless persecutions of the cruel Cunningham, played by Lincoln Plummer. Tom Kennedy and Ned Sparks as the near-grotesque prize fighter and manager, Maurice Murphy and George West complete the cast.

The Shield of Honor

"The Shield of Honor," an Emory Johnson Production from the original story by Emily Johnson, will be a big police melodrama by the director of "The Fourth Commandment," "The Third Alarm," "Westbound Limited" and other spectacular successes.

Police tie-ups are being arranged in all cities to make "The Shield of Honor" a gala civic event, the center of pageantry and parade.

A human story of love and duty will thread through an exciting succession of big scenes in which the fidelity and bravery of the bluecoat will be shown as the never failing arm of protection.

"The Shield of Honor" is expected to be one of the outstanding hits of the Big Gun Group of Universal-Jewels for it will present big drama on a background of enormous proportions. An all-star cast and hundreds of extras will appear.

My Wonderful One

Mary Philbin will be the star of "My Wonderful One," a screen adventure of high romance. The story is strong in dramatic values and has in it the elements of this star's former successes which include "Merry Go Round," "The Phantom of the Opera," "Love Me and the World is Mine," and "The Crimson Hour."

The Girl Show

Stars and featured players are yet to be announced for "The Girl Show," by Charles Logue. It is stated, however, that Universal regards this melodrama as one of the outstanding stories secured for the Big Gun Group and will back it with the best of players and production strength.

"The Girl Show" is an interesting and suspenseful drama with the glittering stage of a cheap traveling musical show as a background for the main action.

Human interest centers about the character of a raw-boned mountain youth of great strength who is lured by a painted prima donna into "taking falls" at the hands of a wrestler who travels with the show and offers a thousand dollars to anyone who can throw him. When the "fall guy" learns that the manager makes a practice of placing bets on his framed battles—when on top of this the girl who loves him gambles their future on the big match, it is more than mountain blood can stand. The boy determines to give the wrestling champ a real battle.

The story is strong in love interest and the big scenes are sure-fire melodrama.

Thanks for the Buggy Ride

One of Laura LaPlante's leading laugh trips will be made in Byron Morgan's exciting comedy drama, "Thanks for the Buggy Ride," directed by Wesley Ruggles.

Byron Morgan is a foremost writer of motion picture stories that twinkle and thrill. He wrote "Sporting Youth," "California Straight Ahead," "Fascinating Youth," and Red Grange's "One Minute to Go."

Wesley Ruggles has taken a definite place among leading directors of light love and laughter pictures, having made "Flaming Youth," "The Plastic Age" and several of Carl Laemmle, Jr.'s "The Collegians" series.

How to Make Love

"How to Make Love" is heralded as the surprise picture of the Big Gun Group. An author and director of note and a star of high luminosity will combine to make this unusual picture a sensation. The star has yet to be chosen from three who have each been called "the greatest lover of the screen."

The story is of the bright and amusing type and it contains, among other things—you guessed it—a love motive.

Rex—Universal's Wonder Horse

Laura LaPlante has appeared in a wide variety of roles but has established herself mainly as the dimpled darling of scintillating farce comedy. Her recent successes in "The Love Thrill" and "Beware of Widows" will prepare audiences for the delights of "Thanks for the Buggy Ride."

The story deals, as usual but in an unusual way, with the difficulties and calamities attendant upon falling in love with Laura.

We Americans

An all-star cast will appear in Universal's adaptation of the Broadway success, "We Americans," which was written by Milton H. Gropper and Max Siegel and which enjoyed an enviable run last season as a stage play. Edward Sloman, maker of "His People," will direct the picture.

The picture version of this drama of New York's "melting pot of the races" will be a "Cohens and Kellys" and "His People" rolled into one, for it is full of the comedy that made the former picture a landslide and has at the same time the blood and bone of serious drama.

The Eternal Silence

Francis X. Bushman and June Marlowe will be seen in "The Eternal Silence," adapted from William McLeod Raine's novel, "The Yukon Trail." Ernst Laemmle will direct this melodrama of the frozen roads of Alaska where he-men strive for gold and battle to the death for the love of a girl. Neil Hamilton and Otis Harlan have featured roles.

"The Eternal Silence" is the screen story of a youth who is sent to investigate some of the questionable activities of the hard hitter of the Yukon, a man whose philosophy and practice is embodied in the familiar words, "What I want I take."

Among the things the boss of the north country wants and determines to take is the pretty Irish lass who arrives on the same steamer with the youth. The rest is the story of young blood pitted against power, for the boy too is in love with the girl.

The many highly melodramatic scenes that take place in surroundings of natural beauty give advance assurance that "The Eternal Silence" will have the elements that draw and hold audiences.

William McLeod Raine, the author, is well known as a writer of gripping adventure tales, many of which have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, Popular Magazine and other publications. Among his best known works are "Ridgway of Montana" and "The Fighting Ranger."

13 Washington Square

Successful as a stage play and popular as a magazine serial and novel, "13 Washington Square" will have a big ready made audience when it comes to the screen with an all-star cast as a Universal-Jewel farce comedy.

Melville Brown, who made "Her Big Night" and "Taxi! Taxi!" will direct "13 Washington Square," which was written by

A Man's Past

"A Man's Past," adapted by Charles Logue from the novel, "Das Diploma," by Emil Foeldes, will be another powerful starring vehicle for Conrad Veidt, star of "The Man Who Laughs." George Melford who made "Whispering Smith," "Rocking Moon," and "Flame of the Yukon," will direct the picture under the supervision of Paul Kohner.

High pitched drama and sensational developments follow that will tax even the emotional talent of Conrad Veidt and his exceptional supporting cast.

Surrender

Mary Philbin and Ivan Moskine will be the stars of "Surrender," adapted from the famous European play, "Lea Lyon" and directed by Edward Sloman.

This play is said to be to the European stage what "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is to the American stage. Like the great slave drama it is the story of human hearts overpowered by the cold, resistless current of racial prejudice.

A Russian prince who has renounced the tawdry glamor of the court and turned to the simple life falls in love with a Jewess. Her father, a rabbi, drives away the despised Gentile, whose heart becomes embittered toward women when he sees his own sister in a disgraceful love affair. The World War breaks and he takes his command. Quartered in the town of the Jewess, the man of cynical heart finds her and threatens a massacre of the Jews unless she will come to him of her own free will. The reaction of this cruel edict on the sensitive girl and its effect on the swarming thousands of Jews who urge that she be sacrificed that their lives may be saved—this is the highly dramatic and suspensive situation which is suddenly split by an unexpected event that leads to a succession of astonishing scenes.

"Surrender" is adapted from the play by I. Brody. Mary Philbin who sprang into featured prominence in "Merry Go Round" and whose recent pictures include "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Love Me and the World is Mine," will be seen in the most sympathetic and emotional role of her career. Ivan Moskine, star of "Michael Strogoff," will again step into the type of role in which he has made himself famous.

The Irresistible Lover

Norman Kerry will be the star of "The Irresistible Lover," a story and title that fit him like a glove. William Beaudine, director of "That's My Baby," "The Social Highwayman," "Sparrows," "Hold That Lion" and "The Canadian" will direct the picture, which is adapted from the story "Das Opera Glass," by Gabriel Rueter.

"The Irresistible Lover" is the kind of story that will enable the idol of feminine fans to work against a background of brilliant society, pretty women and sparkling water. It is virile and colorful, a story of gallantry and audacious courage.

Rex, the wild horse, being starred by Universal in "Wild Beauty," a Universal Jewel Picture

Leroy Scott, famous contributor to Red Book and Cosmopolitan and author of "Partners of the Night," "A Daughter of Two Worlds," etc.

The story is a laughing drama of conquest in blue-blooded New York society. Mrs. DePeyster, an aloof and dignified society leader, whose heart is set on maintaining her position at the head of the social procession, finds herself slipping and adopts some grotesque strategies to cover the bitter truth of her dwindling fortune and get her son married to a wealthy girl before she loses her grip on the top rung of the old family ladder.

Fickle fate frustrates clever designs which twist themselves into a tangled pattern that looks like excellent farce.

The story is one that is certain to enlist universal sympathy and interest, for it not only depicts a touching and gripping drama of human lives but presents in a startling way the sorry spectacle of a civilization that crucifies itself with its own social machinery.

A medical genius educated in his science, is denied a diploma on technical grounds. An overpowering compassion causes him to perform an operation that he has no legal right to perform. He breaks law to save life. The news of his "miracle" spreads and he becomes a surgeon of world renown. A meddler discovers that he is lacking a diploma and causes his arrest at the critical moment of an operation that he is performing to save the life of his enemy's mother.

"Thrill Feature" Introduces Novelty To Universal's Line-Up for Next Year

Series Includes Five With Dynamite, Trained Police Dog, and Five With Al Wilson, Stunt Aviator

UNIVERSAL has introduced a distinct novelty into its line-up for next year in the form of a Thrill Feature series, which will include ten features, five made with Dynamite, a trained police dog, and five with Al Wilson, noted stunt aviator. The Al Wilson pictures will be "Sky High Saunders," "Three Miles Up," "The Phantom Flyer," "The Air Patrol" and "The Fight in the Clouds." The Dynamite pictures will be "The Wolf's Trail," "The Four-footed Ranger," "The Call of the Heart," "Fangs of Destiny" and "The Hound of Silver Creek."

These pictures are being made with all the thrills and fast action that can be crowded into five reels. The Al-Wilson pictures include new aeroplane stunts that are hair-raising and made at extreme risk by Wilson and his corps of air-devils. The dog pictures mark a new era in features of this type, the dog Dynamite being the last word in canine actors, with realism obtained to the Nth degree by reason of the fact the dog really is savage and is handled in front of the camera at great risk to his trainers and those in the cast.

The first Al Wilson feature to reach the screen will be "Sky High Saunders." It was made from a story by Bruce Mitchell, who also directed it. It deals with air smugglers and a group of young aviators just returned from the Great War. Elsie Tarron is the feminine lead, and the cast includes Bid Osborne, Frank Rice, Frank Tomick, Billy Jones, and Art Goebel, as well as a squadron of trick aviators whom Wilson has gathered around him. Those who have seen this picture say it is breath-taking by reason of the rapid succession of its thrills.

William Lord Wright is supervising these thrill pictures, which in itself is said to be sufficient guarantee of their entertainment value.

"Three Miles Up," Wilson's second picture on the Universal Fall release schedule, is another Bruce Mitchell story, directed by that expert in the making of thrill pictures. As leading lady, Wilson has Ethlyne Clair, noted Southern beauty and one of Hollywood's new luminaries. Others in the cast are William Malan, William Clifford, Frank Rice, Billy Jones,

Strong Array of Two-Reel Western Dramas Planned by Universal for Next Year

WHEN laying their plans for the two-reel Westerns on next year's program, Universal executives put feature picture brains on the job. As before, there will be 52 short dramas released, but there will be this difference: each of the two-reelers will belong to one of four series. This arrangement was decided upon after Stern Brothers had demonstrated the success of the series pictures in their releases this year.

Thirteen Northwest Mounted Police pictures, each two-reeler crammed with as much action as often goes into a five-reeler, will feature Jack Perrin. The stories are all by well-known authors who take full advantage of the great Northwest locale.

Freddie Gilman will play in a series of 13 dealing with the Texas

Rangers. Every Western fan and lover of thrills will get out of a sick bed to watch a Texas ranger film for they know there will be action every minute.

Something different from anything ever done before will be the Stunt Westerns, known as the Stunt Cowboy Series, with Bob Curwood leading a daredevil crowd. There will be thirteen of these, each one providing a man-sized thrill.

But the surprise of the year, Universal predicts, will be the Champion Kid Rider Series. Carl Laemmle has secured Newton House, a fourteen-year-old lad who is known as the Boy Wonder of the Western Range. He may be young but he rides and shoots like an old-timer.

Assisting the featured players will be the famous Universal Ranch Riders, who are cheered for their reckless daring in picture houses from Coast to Coast. The feminine leads have been placed in such popular hands as Elsie Taron, famous for her work in the Bluebird Comedies, Myrtis Crinley, the daughter of the late director, Violet Bird and Consuela Dawn.

What Publicity, Advertising and Exploitation Really Are

And Why They Play so Great a Part in the Success of the Moving Picture Industry

By R. H. COCHRANE
Vice-President of Universal

IT is a rash motion picture man, indeed, who doesn't admit that in the matter of advertising he is learning the new lessons, discarding old rules, every single day of his motion picture life.

This is only natural, and for reasons aside from the youth of the industry. We deal with an intangible product—entertainment. We appeal to the broadest phases of that intangible thing, human nature—to its imagination, to its hidden longings, to its obvious current fancies, and to the unknown quirk of mass psychology that tomorrow may bring.

We live doing a continual mental hop, skip, and a jump—while at the same time our feet are anchored to the ground by the demands of good business sense, by the necessities of world-wide marketing machines and a complicated method of getting to market, and by the fundamental tenets of sound advertising practice that apply to all fields.

I can give you no rules. The man who feels that he has the business of motion picture advertising, publicity, and exploitation reduced to rules is due for rude, jarring awakenings with every new moon. I can only attempt a sketchy survey of our problems as we see them, of the different means we have employed to meet those problems, and the varying degrees of success we have met.

Defining the fundamental terms used in the business is a good start. As frequently as you hear a motion picture man use the word "advertising" you will hear him use the phrase, "advertising, publicity and exploitation." The three words, "advertising, publicity and exploitation," roll off the tongue as though they were describing a single unit, or task. Essentially they are, for while describing separate functions, they are functions aimed at a single result—the result more commonly designated by men in other business walks by the all-inclusive word "advertising."

In the motion picture field we confine our definition of the word advertising to the more positive and specific job of selling through the printed word—by paid advertising space, direct by mail printed matter, lithographic posters, and so on. This line of our work is a direct inheritance from the older lines of manufacturing, and in itself would constitute the entire advertising work done by a manufacturer of such staples as shoes, clothing, &c. In this branch we have traveled in a period of less than twenty years both in physical growth, in lessons learned, and in methods evolved, past the milestones that would probably tell the history of commercial advertising for the past half-century. From a point less than twenty years ago when a manufacturer's ad need consist of little more than the statement that he was in business and the all-important fact that he had product available for the market we have reached a high degree of organization. I feel safe in saying that in numbers and quality of personnel the advertising departments of any one of a dozen or so companies will compare favorably with general advertising agencies handling the accounts of a score of manufacturers in different lines.

It is under the heading of "publicity" that the motion picture has probably reached its most individual development. While publicity work can be readily defined as "the dissemination of news," and the greater part of motion picture publicity is that and nothing more, it is probably nearer to the broader truth to define publicity work as the "dissemination of interesting reading matter."

In a dim and distant sense our publicity departments are an inheritance from the theatrical side of our parentage. But it is a far cry from the press representative of the theatrical days, with his one theatre and one play to publicize, to the present-day motion picture organization with a score of plays and players to keep before the public eye and with its daily task of reaching every corner of the country and every size of community. Some figures may give an idea of the present magnitude. The Universal Pictures Corporation's payroll charges alone for publicity work in the New York Office and Los Angeles studio averages $3,500 a week. The cost of operation may be gauged from one item, the cost of photographs reproduced for newspapers and magazines throughout the country. The cost of these photographs alone averages $600 a week. This is the straight manufacturing cost—including no charge for photographer's time, nor the time of players and others while taking the pictures.

Efficient publicity work is, of course, an aid to advertising and selling of a product, and as such is conducted with a selfish, commercial end in view. No one will deny that. But in the early years of picture publicity there was an opinion in many circles of newspaper life, and still current in some, that the publicity man's sole justification for existence was in securing free space in newspaper columns and the consequent avoidance of the use of paid advertising copy. This is not true.

In addition to the commercial objectives of the people who are paying him, the motion picture publicity man serves a necessary and useful function. Almost overnight we have seen an industry take a place in the hearts of a people yielding in importance only to their family interests. That industry's appeal is entertainment—and the entertainment provided by individuals, personalities. The demand for news and information concerning that industry, its products and its personalities, was bound to follow. In meeting the demand newspapers need the contact services of the motion picture publicity man. Do away with the publicity man and you will find the enterprising publisher with circulation and reader interest in mind sending correspondents to permanent duty at the studios just as they now send men thousands of miles to watch the training camp activities of a baseball team. Both sports and motion pictures become commercial activities when you reach the box-office—but both have in addition that unanswerable weapon, reader interest.

In fact, the motion picture publicity man is a reporter working for the newspapers and magazines of the country. In operation, the publicity chief of a large company is a managing editor, with a staff of news gatherers, special writers, and photographers sufficiently large to get out a good-sized paper.

We come to the third phase of our work of creating interest in our product—that of exploitation. The position of exploitation in the industry is in a transitory stage, and a bit difficult of definition. You might get an idea of the background when I say that the first exploitation man was probably the man who devised the idea of having the circus parade before the performance. That was neither advertising as the copy-writing advertising man would define it, nor was it publicity in the sense that the publicity man is supposed to be confined to the printed word. So it is called exploitation. It brings cash customers to the box-office, probably just as many as respond to the advertisement or the publicity story.

A few years ago the work of motion picture exploitation could well be understood after that reference to the circus parade. The exploitation man was a hale-fellow who had the knack of burning up rivers and painting towns red, until everybody knew about his particular picture and the theatre at which it was playing.

Out of the job of that individual there grew up a definite service, an important branch of our work. Using the phrase of other manufacturing lines—exploitation is the job of helping the dealer move the goods off his shelves and into the hands of customers. Its operation is two-fold. In the field the task is that of helping the dealer—in our case the theatre owner—after the goods have been sold. For this purpose the leading companies maintain staffs of twenty or more men stationed throughout the country. In its broader aspects, as directed from New York, the work of exploitation is to create in advance the things that will eventually sell tickets for the theatre owner. If we were about to make a picture on gambling, for instance, with thrift as the moral, it would be the work of exploitation to arrange even in advance of the picture's making, for the co-operation of savings bank associations, possibly the clergy. When the picture eventually reached a small town in the mid-West the theatre owner would be apt to find that he already had the interest of his leading citizens aroused and their co-operation in his showing assured.

Meets Challenge of Increased Short Subject Popularity

Universal Schedules Unprecedented Array of Super-Shorts for 1927-1928

THAT all things move in cycles is a fact with which every man who has studied the film industry is familiar. Various types of film product have their ebb and flow over a period of years. Pictures popular yesterday are out today because of a sudden change in the public's demand. This is natural and only to be expected. On the other hand, exhibitors themselves will frequently forsake that which is tested and proven in the hope of discovering a type of entertainment of greater appeal to the film fans.

For several years many of the big first-run theatres shut their doors to the short subject because of the sudden craze to put over prologues. Prologues passed out in favor of presentations and now there is every indication that presentations are losing in favor and that the short subject is once more coming into its own.

Men familiar with the short subject field have known for some time that the one and two reel comedy and the short, snappy cartoons were coming back into popularity with the first-run theatres. Recent events transpiring on Broadway show that these subjects are not only coming back, but that they have actually arrived.

Broadway represents merely one section of the country. It is the invariable comment of exhibitors located in other sections of the country that what happens along this, the most important amusement section in the world, has no bearing upon their own towns. All of which is true to a certain extent.

It is also true, however, that what is shown on Broadway is presently talked about all over the world because that thoroughfare is daily visited by more out-of-towners than is any other city on the globe. And it is also true that such theatres as the Roxy, Capitol, Paramount, Rivoli, Rialto, Colony, etc., attract almost as many of these out-of-towners as they do New Yorkers. It is for this reason word regarding the attractions shown at these amusement palaces is passed along by the visitors.

Within a month or two, these visitors will be telling the folks back home, and this includes their local exhibitors, of the Universal Comedies being shown on Broadway. A study of recent programs reveals the interesting fact that with but two exceptions all of the comedies shown at these great theatres are part of Universal's Short Product.

Patrons who enter the Capitol Theatre the week this issue of the Moving Picture World reaches the exhibitor, will see "Snookum Cleans Up," the newest of the Newlyweds and Their Baby series. Heretofore, the Capitol has rarely gone in for two-reel comedies because of the length of the regular program. "Snookum Cleans Up" rings the bell so hard, however, that it was bound to force its way in regardless of playing time.

It is because theatres of this type are at last aware of the de-

Collegians." The manner in which the "Newlyweds" have gone over during the last year is sufficient proof that exhibitors now regard them as one of the best comedy bets on the market.

The Stern Brothers, producers of the series, have been so greatly encouraged by the reception accorded the "Newlyweds" that they have spared no expense in making the 1927-8 series better than ever.

The Stern Brothers comedy line-up includes such series as:

Rube Goldberg's "Mike and Ike, they look alike."

Pop Momand's "Keeping Up with the Jones'."

George McManus' "Let George Do It."

And the ever popular Buster Brown Comedies.

The Gump Comedies will continue in our line-up and the initial 1927-8 subjects, already screened, show this series to be growing funnier with each succeeding release. We are particularly proud of our "Blake of Scotland Yard" it has serials. "Blake of Scotland Yard" has everything. Surely, nothing like it has ever been done in serials before. Bob Hill, who directed it, assisted Paul Leni in the production of the "Cat and the Canary," with the result that "Blake of Scotland Yard" contains much of the same masterful elements which go to make the "Cat and the Canary" the outstanding super-special of the year. A great gripping, logical story runs throughout its twelve episodes and contains entertainment that even the most sophisticated will enjoy.

"The Trail of the Tiger," "The Scarlet Arrow," "The Haunted Island," and "The Vanishing Rider" are all in the super-special serial class, so that Universal can justly claim the strongest serial line-up it as ever known.

Our two-reel featurettes have been given special attention and the stars in the various series will be household names within the next year or two. Jack Perrin is featured in the Northwest Mounted Police series; Fred Gilman, one of the most promising bets in the Western field, is featured in the Texas Rangers series.

Universal has invested a tremendous amount of money in its 1927-8 short product line-up. How wisely the money is spent is already observable in the number of houses, nation-wide in fame, which are contracting to show this product.

The International News has always played in one hundred per cent. of the Broadway theatres. It is regarded by the various managing directors as being an integral part of their programs. Yet, an outstanding event occurred recently when Roxy signed a two-year contract for the International News—the only two-year contract he has signed on any News Weekly.

It was also Roxy who booked "Buster's Frame-Up" for the world's largest and most beautiful theatre and this Stern Brother's comedy is the first comedy to play the Roxy Theatre. More interesting is the fact that it went over so well that this master-showman held it over for a second week.

mand which exists for genuine laugh - provokers that Carl Laemmle has determined to make the Universal's short product for 1927-8 the finest that brains, money and time can produce. His experiment in producing so outstanding a series of two-reelers as "The Collegians" during this last season proved conclusively that the theatre-going public is hungry for clean-cut, snappy comedies. Because of the tremendous success achieved by this series, a second series of these Junior Jewels is contained in Universal's 1927-8 line-up.

"The Newlyweds and Their Baby" have been designated as companion Junior Jewels to "The Universal Junior Jewels the High Water Mark of Short Product

Only the Highest Class in One and Two Reel Product Distributed Under This Brand by Carl Laemmle—Three Notable Junior Jewel Offerings For Next Season

IN order to mark the distinction of unusually high class Short Product, Carl Laemmle has designated the brand name "Universal Junior Jewels" to be assigned to especially deserving product. Very few comedies, or series have ever attained this distinction. Among them have been "The Leather Pushers," "The Collegians," "Buster Brown Comedies" and other outstanding product.

For next year, there will be only three series distributed by the Laemmle organization under the Universal Junior Jewel brand. They are the new series of ten "Collegians," the new series of twelve "Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedies, and the lead-off Universal chapter-play for next year, "Blake of Scotland Yard." "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" series and "Blake of Scotland Yard" are newcomers to the high Junior Jewel rating. In fact, "Blake" is the first serial ever to attain such a peerless designation.

"The Collegians"—Class of '27, which is the new series of ten of these two-reelers, will be made with the same stars who have carried the first series to fame during the past eight months. George Lewis, the likeable young fellow of "His People," is again playing the role of Benson, the young Calford College student. Pretty Dorothy Gulliver will again be seen as the dean's daughter and sweetheart of Lewis and his rival, played by Eddie Phillips. Hayden Stevenson, the popular fight manager of "The Leather Pushers," who helped to put the first "Collegians" over in his role of the Coach, is again officiating in that capacity. As a coach, he is turning out record-breaking first-runners.

Carl Laemmle, Jr., who wrote the stories and supervised the first series, is doing the same for the second series, which assures for it the same snap and pep of the original two-reelers. Wesley Ruggles, who directed the earlier ones, has been assigned to Universal Jewel productions, and his place at the helm of "The Collegians," has been taken by Nat Ross, one of the up-and-comers of the younger school of megaphone wielders. The first few two-reelers of the new series prove beyond doubt that he is making them as good if not better than the first string.

Also, Churchill Ross, the high-brow student known as "Doc" Webster in the first series, retains his important position in the second series, despite the fact he has been advanced to individual starring roles in a new series of one-reel comedies by Universal. These comedies, the Harold Highbrow Comedies, will not prevent his work in "The Collegians," however. He is not the only player whose work in "The Collegians" has meant advancement. Lewis himself has been assigned to play the hero in "The Big Gun," one of Universal's Super-Productions for next year. Hayden Stevenson has been advanced to a starring role—that of Blake in "Blake of Scotland Yard."

The next Junior Jewel series for 1927-1928 will be "The Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedies, the hilarious two-reelers being made by the Stern Brothers from the George McManus cartoon comic. The success of the first series of "Newlyweds" now being released, has been so phenomenal that the Sterns projected an even better series for the coming months. Production costs have been doubled and better quality is being put into these two-reelers all along the line.

The adorable baby, Sunny McKeen, who swept the country last fall in his impersonation of Snookums, the Newlywed baby, and who since his first releases has definitely established himself as the cleverest and most popular baby on the screen, is to be seen as Snookums in the new Junior Jewel series, of course. In his support, the Sterns have assembled a strong cast. Joe Young, popular screen comedian, is Mr. Newlywed. Addie McPhail, a striking brunette and one of the most favored of Hollywood's younger set, is Mrs. Newlywed.

The third Junior Jewel product scheduled for next year by Universal is serial "Blake of Scotland Yard." This is unusual and it is stated that only the exceptional quality and the first-run value of the serial prompted such a radical departure from past custom. In fact, this is the first serial Carl Laemmle has allowed to go out under his name in several years.

"Blake" is an epoch making serial, it is asserted. It has been dressed up like a feature production, and is marked by exceptional settings and photography. Made in twelve chapters of two reels each from a script by Arthur Henry Gooden and George Morgan, the picture deals with Blake, Scotland Yard's supreme master detective and the machinations of London's arch-crook. Robert F. Hill, who worked with Paul Leni on "The Cat and the Canary," Universal super production, directed "Blake of Scotland Yard" and he has taken full advantage of his experience with the famous foreign director.

"Blake" contains the most unusual and artistic sets ever seen in a serial, and is outstanding by its unique photography and clever camera angles. Hill's work with this serial is ample proof that veteran American directors can take the best ideas from German directors and use them to even greater advantage in conjunction with American directorial methods.

Hayden Stevenson is starred as Blake. The leading woman is Gloria Gray, while in the cast are such popular players as Grace Cunard, Albert Hart, Monte Montague, Herbert Prior and Wilbur Mack. Universal predicts that this serial will be shown in more first-run houses than any two other serials ever made. Previewers who have seen the opening chapters of the serial give it a royal send-off in print and seems to back up everything that Universal says about it.

New Studio—New Stories—New Stars —New Era

Stern Brothers Comedy Output For the New Season to be The Cream de la Cream of Short Product

By JULIUS STERN

WE don't have to tell you that next year will be the biggest and best season for Stern Brothers Comedies you ever experienced, because as soon as you hear what we expect to have in our line-up for next Fall, you will realize it and say it yourself. You'll not stop there. You'll say that the Stern Brothers product for 1927-28 is the most marketable group of pictures that ever fell to the lot of a screen salesman.

You probably remember that we lost our entire studio plant by fire last Fall. It was a severe blow, because we had to acquire a new studio and buy an entire new outfit of props, scenery, furniture, furnishings, costumes, equipment, and the thousand and one other things necessary for motion pictures, and especially comedy production. But wait! This has proved to be the best thing that ever happened to our product, because we now have the most up-to-date comedy studio in the world, and we are in a position to make the dressiest comedies.

And how we are making them! Old-timers, exhibitors and others who have seen our new product unite in saying that our comedies are better dressed than most features. They are, too. It has meant thousands and thousands of dollars.

Then the stories! We selected our material with great care, making sure to get series that would appeal both to grown-ups and to children, and, above all, that could be made into clean comedies. At the same time we obtained material that already had been sold to the public through countless editions of countless newspapers. In basing our entire product on popular newspaper comic strips we put over the biggest sales aid.

Scene from "Keeping Up With the Joneses," new Stern Brothers comedy series.

We will make five series of comedies for release next season. First and foremost will be "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," a new series of 12 two-reelers adapted from the famous

George McManus comic strip. We don't have to tell you how the first series of Newlyweds had jumped into popularity by leaps and bounds this year. So remarkable has been its success, Universal will release the new series as Universal Junior Jewels, the brand name which stands for the pinnacle of short product excellence. Snookums, the wonderful youngster who popularized the first series and made a star out of himself in a few brief months, will, of course, be the central figure in the new series. Joe Young, a well-known comedian will be seen as Mr. Newlywed and Addie McPhail, a beautiful and clever baby star, will be Mrs. Newlywed. This series will be high in type, high in entertainment value and of record-breaking quality.

Then we will have "Keeping Up With the Joneses," a new Stern Brothers series adapted from the famous newspaper cartoon strip by Pop Momand. This strip has been running for 13 years in more than 100 newspapers. Think of the millions of people who have followed this strip daily and who will want to see the screen adaptation! We are going to make the greatest box-office series from this strip ever offered to the trade. The first four comedies, already completed, back up every word we say. The rights to this strip cost big money—big money is going into the series, and there is not an exhibitor in the country who can't bet big money out of them. After much trouble, we found four people ideally suited for portraying the McGinnis family in this strip; Harry Long as Aloysius P. McGinnis, Stella Adams as his wife Clarice, Addie McPhail as his daughter Julie, and Gene Laymon as Bella Donna, the cook. These four are knockouts. They are veritable McGinnises in the flesh.

Striking One and Five-Reel Novelties in Universal's Shorts

IN ITS two-reel and one-reel comedy program for the coming season Universal will introduce a number of decided novelties. In addition to the 12 well known Andy Gump two reelers a new series of 12 two-reel laugh makers will be produced with Charles Puffy, the fat comedian, in the star role.

It is believed that these Puffy comedies will create a sensation in the short products field, for the author of the stories is no less a personage than Octavus Roy Cohen, famous humorist of the Saturday Evening Post, whose negro stories are world renowned and whose advent to screen writing under the Universal banner may be taken as a bid for new fame as a writer of fat man farces.

In addition to the Gump and Puffy two reelers there will be three series of one reel pictures under the new brand name of "Snappy Comedies." Twenty-six of the Snappy Comedies will feature "Oswald," the cartoon rabbit, conceived by Walt Disney, the famous cartoonist and animated cartoon maker. Also 13 "Harold Highbrow" comedies, starring Churchill Ross, principal comedian of Carl Laemmle's Jr.'s "The Collegians." Also 13 "Drug Store Cowboy" comedies, starring Arthur Lake, the "Sweet Sixteen" star of many fun films.

Perhaps no comedy character on the screen today is better known than Andy Gump, photodramatized from the celebrated cartoon strip by Sidney Smith which is generally conceded to be the most widely published daily cartoon in the world. Joe Murphy, the noted comedian whose face and figure have been molded by nature with doubtful kindness to resemble Andy Gump, will continue to portray the title role. Fay Tincher, who has become identified on the screen as "Min," will be seen in the new series in the character that she has made famously funny. The role of "Chester" will be portrayed

"OSWALD"

Oswald, the Lucky Rabbit, the new one-reel cartoon comic character being introduced by Universal for next year.

by Billy Butts, a new member of the Gump family who is said to possess exceptional talent as a comedian, together with a surprising resemblance to the newspaper "Chester."

According to Samuel Von Runkel, producer of Gump Comedies, the new series has been given many production advantages with a view to making the Andy Gump films bigger, better and more hilarious. Among these advantages are twelve exceptional stories and a corps of proven gag men. Comedy directors of the first rank will direct the new Gumps, Von Runkel states, and no production expense will be spared in improving the strong hold this popular series has taken.

Octavus Roy Cohen, whose negro stories have made the author and his leading character, "Florian Slappey" almost equally famous, has been induced for the first time in his career to write for the screen. Mr. Cohen saw in Universal's fat comedian, Charles Puffy remarkable opportunity to tickle the ribs of the public through a new medium. Puffy has been the star of many of Universal's one reelers and has played comedy roles in such features as "The Mystery Club" and "Love Me and the World is Mine."

The "Oswald" cartoon comedies will be known as the Winkler Productions by Walt Disney. Walt Disney is a noted cartoonist and has been making animated cartoons for a number of years. The funny rabbit pictures will be the first cartoon films produced by Universal for several years although Universal was one of the first to introduce the animated cartoon.

Churchill Ross, star of the "Harold Highbrow" Snappy Comedies, is the "Doc Webster" of "The Collegians" who made the whole country laugh in the sophisticated boob role. The whole country also demanded the appearance of this young genius of fun in his own comedies. Upon completion of his contract to appear in the second "Collegians" series, Ross will get to work on "Harold Highbrow."

Arthur Lake, who is already popular with the fans for his appearances as the star of Blue Bird Comedies, will be seen in a brand new set of 13 Snappy Comedies that will be known as the "Drug Store Cowboy" group. These one reelers will display Arthur in the type of role in which he has established himself.

Both of these series of snappies will make a strong play for fame on the strength of their showing of pretty and talented young women, including many who are well known to followers of the screen. The supporting actresses for the Snappy Comedies include: Barbara Worth, Derelys Perdue, Margaret Gray, Elsie Tarron and Violet Bird.

"International Newsreel Again Displays Its Dominance in the Field," Says Hall

Washington, D. C., Motion Picture and Dramatic Critic Praises Thrilling "News" Shots From Chinese Battlefield

A WHOLE VOLUME filled with words of commendation of one's own efforts, is not half as convincing as a couple of brief paragraphs uttered by some wholly disinterested person. In three short sentences Leonard Hall, who writes of motion pictures and the drama, in the Washington Daily News, said a whole volume-full, writing in the Monday, April 4, issue of that publication, which, incidentally, is one of the Scripps-Howard chain of newspapers. He was reviewing a program at one of Washington's leading motion picture theatres and declared:

"Again International Newsreel displays its dominance in its field. International Newsreel is miles ahead in the news game at present. This week it clambers over the opposition with stunning shots of the latest Japanese quake."

Leonard Hall is known as the most "hard boiled" critic in Washington and his fame has extended to every part of the country. It is therefore particularly gratifying to International Newsreel to have him declare, over his signature and in his widely-read column, the fact that International Newsreel is miles ahead in the news game and that it again displays its dominance in its field.

When Mr. Hall declared that International Newsreel AGAIN displays its dominance he was harking back to a few weeks previously, when he paid an almost equally remarkable tribute to International Newsreel. At that time he was reviewing a program at one of the Washington theatres which was presenting, at the time, a widely publicized and highly-praised feature picture, as well as the first showing of the much discussed talking motion pictures. And here is how Mr. Hall closed his review:

"I have reserved for the last, mention of what seems to me the finest thing on the bill, and that is the sequence of International Newsreel shots of the rioting in Hankow, China, and the attack of the yellow boys on the evacuated British concession in that great city. This will stand, I am sure, as one of the outstanding camera achievements of 1926-27. It is one of the most exciting news shots ever photographed."

It is an impossible, as well as a most unwise thing for a news reel to attempt to outline what it intends to do in the future. Once upon a time, within the past year in fact, one news weekly laid much stress on the great news it proposed to offer its public during the following few months. A check-up at the end of that time was a sad and ghastly thing. The average of actual achievement was somewhere in the neighborhood of one-half of one per cent. Not least of the unfulfilled promises was of exclusive pictures of the Byrd and Amundson North Pole flight. How International Newsreel gave to the world the first pictures of the departure from Spitzbergen of Commander Byrd, and his return to that point after circling the North Pole; of the departure from Spitzbergen of Captain Amundson in the Norge, his flight over the North Pole and his arrival at Teller, Alaska, constitutes one of the most outstanding news reel achievements of all time. It is comparable only to International's amazing presentation of the first and only pictures of the rescue at sea by the steamship Roosevelt of the crew of the sinking freighter Antinoe, and of securing the pictures in mid-Atlantic of the sinking, with its crew, of the Japanese freighter Raifuku Maru, and their presentation in Broadway theatres seventy-two hours after the ship made its fatal plunge to the bottom of the sea.

International Newsreel gave to the world the first and only pictures of the signing of the Locarno Treaty, and kicked up so much excitement by doing so that complaints were lodged with the British Foreign Office, with Dr. Stresemann, with Premier Mussolini, with M. Briand, and probably with "Doc" Cook, all to the end that International Newsreel's enterprise and its great achievement was publicized in a score of different languages from Timbuctoo to Land's End.

No matter where it happens or when, it is the business of International Newsreel to get it, if and while it is news. It was not by mere chance that International Newsreel was able to secure the heroic rescue by the Roosevelt crew in mid-Atlantic, any more than it was chance that International Newsreel was able, for two months, to present practically the only motion pictures of the rebellion in China, one of which Mr. Hall insists will stand "as an outstanding camera achievement of 1926-27." Almost two years ago Edgar B. Hatrick, in charge of all of William Randolph Hearst's motion picture interests, sent his world-famous cameraman, Ariel L. Varges to China to await the day when the lid would blow off. It was a long time in coming but when it did come some of the greatest pictures ever shown were given to the public exclusively by International Newsreel. It was of one of these pictures that Quinn Martin, in a column review in the New York World devoted wholly to International Newsreel, referred to as "the most absorbing of the new output of motion picture subjects."

It required courage, too, for John A. Bockhorst to fly over the remains of the Navy Arsenal at Lake Denmark, New Jersey, while the explosions were still going on as actively as on the Western front during the World War, but Bockhorst not only made the first pictures that the public viewed of this memorable disaster, but also performed a great service to the Government, whose officials were able to direct the rescue work after having viewed Bockhorst's hastily-developed films.

These are only a few of the day-by-day demonstrations of enterprise, daring and remarkable courage, that have placed International Newsreel "miles ahead in the news game," as Leonard Hall so aptly observes.

"Up-to-the-Minute" Methods Used by "U" Experts in All Lines of Accessories

Dave Bader, Accessory Sales Manager for Universal, Points Out Growing Desire of Showmen to Utilize Valuable Box-Office Aids

FROM EVERY PART OF THE COUNTRY is coming the evidence that more exhibitors, big and little, are using a larger amount of advertising accessories than ever before in their individual histories. This means much, because they are all gradually realizing the true meaning of the definition the dictionary gives us of the word Accessory. It says: "aiding; an aid." Yet it is more than "an aid"—it is the oxygen that is keeping many theatres going.

Universal, for instance, has been making a careful check on the present conditions in this field of advertising and has found that a large army of Exhibitors from the smaller cities are becoming extensive users of advertising. Many of them have increased their box-office receipts to such a degree that they have actually been able to materially improve the quality of their programs to such an extent that even admission prices could be slightly increased. One good thing, it appears, leads to another!

Dave Bader, Accessory Sales Manager for Universal, who is in a position to know the accessory situation thoroughly in all its phases said, after returning from one of his recent trips, that exhibitors are learning more and more every day that accessories are actually necessities, that the judicious use of the live, throbbing, compelling advertising matter is bringing in patrons that never before attended motion picture theatres. Bader also pointed out that the careful study of the press books is resulting in more store tie-ups than ever before, because he says that neat, dignified cutouts made from the film companies' posters and lobby photos are being found most helpful as attention-getters.

This sensible use of a large choice of accessories, as supplied by our leading producers is doing a tremendous good—because every available point of vantage that was in the past overlooked in the smaller cities is today being taken advantage of by the use of placards of all kinds, such as window cards, posters, the larger photographs, etc.

Advertising accessories are today, as prepared by the producers, the most helpful of all means of letting your public know what you are playing. Today, the successful exhibitors are giving a great deal more thought to what the true value of accessories is, than ever before. They are beginning to realize that nowhere would they be able to get up as fine and varied array of material as is gotten out by the producers, and as cheaply in price.

To begin with, the greatest minds in the field of advertising are used to produce "standing-room-only" posters, lobby display photos that are compelling and attractive, heralds that appeal to every person who can read and who is attracted by color, action, copy; window cards that are vividly layed out and which cost little more than the cardboard they are printed on. And so on—into the realm of the most effective kinds of advertising material at prices that are making it a reasonable part of a theatre's overhead to go out after more and more business every week.

Imagine an exhibitor in this day and age, saying to himself: "Advertising is an expenditure that doesn't bring me back one red penny!" There isn't one showman out of ten thousand who would say this, and yet not enough as yet realize the sensible and reasonable importance of spending a small portion of what they pay for their film fare—to let the community know what they are playing!

Motion picture producers aren't selling accessories for the profit that is in it, but as a Service they know is playing a vital part for more patronage for the Exhibitor making business-like use of this Service!

It goes without saying that "It pays to advertise"—and there can be no more economic method than through the use of the various multi-colored, carefully written and prepared advertising accessories as carried by the Exchange you deal with.

Universal is so keenly aware of the importance of its advertising accessories and what its use means, when properly used, that only trained men in the value of advertising and exploitation are placed in the position of selling accessories. Every Accessory Manager has been thoroughly schooled in advertising.

How Universal is putting punch and pulling power into posters for next year.

KARL DANE shows his chevrons to Marceline Day and lifts a beckoning eyelid while George K. Arthur longs to kick him in the pants, in M-G-M's "Rookies."

Scenes from M-G-M's "Rookies"

LITTLE George knows what he has in store for him. When this brief ecstatic moment is over he will leave the house only to find Karl waiting to knock his block off.

KARL DANE tells George K. Arthur what he thinks of his perfectly cut uniform.

KARL DANE as the hard-boiled sergeant in M-G-M's "Rookies." Tough guy, what?

GEORGE K. ARTHUR and Marceline Day exchanging sweet nothings unaware that our friend tough mug Dane is giving them the double o.

SERGEANT HATCH (KARL DANE) is a little suspicious of Greg Lee's (George K. Arthur) byplay with the gas mask.

Lubitsch To Go To Europe For Camera Shots

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has decided to film some of the final sequences of its production of "Old Heidelberg" on the original Teutonic locations.

Ernst Lubitsch, internationally famous director, who is making this important picture for M-G-M, will sail for Germany with several members of his staff about the middle of May, and will go direct to Heidelberg University for his "local atmosphere" shots, according to an announcement made from the studio last week.

Lubitsch is scheduled to arrive in New York City from Los Angeles in the near future, and will spend possibly a fortnight in the East before embarking for Europe.

Custer's Next

"Bull Dog Luck" will be the title of Bob Custer's next starring production for F. B. O. The picture is scheduled to begin filming shortly. The story is by Bert Foster.

New Endicott

The Endicott Theatre, now nearing completion in Brooklyn for F. G. Wilson, will open with the Tiffany Production "The Broken Gate" and with the Tiffany Color Classic "Clothes Make The Woman."

John McCormick in Charge at First National's Studio

General Manager Rowland Announces Full Authority at Burbank Rests on One of Youngest Film Executives

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES' Burbank studios are entering upon one of their periods of greatest activity during May, when many new productions are scheduled to go into work under the general direction of John McCormick, who is in charge of all production on the West Coast.

Following the annual meeting of First National Franchise holders at Atlantic City, last week, when officers were elected for the ensuing year, it was announced by Richard A. Rowland, General and Production Manager, that the studio organization will continue to function with Mr. McCormick in full charge of production.

Whatever changes become necessary will be due to the resignation of M. C. Levee, executive business manager, which was deeply regretted. These changes will be announced by Mr. McCormick later.

Nine productions have recently been completed or are now in process of being edited. Seven are now in work with photography scheduled to begin on six more during May.

The latest to go into the cutting room is Colleen Moore's new stellar vehicle, "Naughty But Nice," produced by John McCormick and directed by Willard Webb.

Milton Sills' new picture, "Diamonds in the Rough," produced by Ray Rockett, directed by Charles Brabin, preceded the Colleen Moore vehicle into the cutting room by two days.

Sam Rork's production, "The Prince of Head Waiters," directed by John Francis Dillon, is nearly through the editing and titling process.

The Jess Smith production of "The Poor Nut," from J. C. and Elliott Nugent's stage play, is now being edited. Richard Wallace directed.

Frank Griffin's production, "Lost at the Front," directed by Del Lord, starring George Sidney and Charlie Murray, is about ready to emerge from the cutting room.

Charles R. Rogers' new Ken Maynard picture, "The Land Beyond Law," directed by Harry J. Brown from the story by Marian Jackson, has been completed and a print is on the way to First National's home office.

Two productions just received from the studio and previewed at the home office last week are Wid Gunning's production, "Babe Comes Home," and George Fitzmaurice's production of "The Tender Hour."

Six pictures are in various stages of production: the Richard Barthelmess special, "The Patent Leather Kid;" Billie Dove's first starring vehicle, "The Stolen Bride;" Harry Langdon's next picture, an original screen story as yet untitled; C. C. Burr's new Johnny Hines vehicle, "White Pants Willie;" Charles R. Rogers' next Ken Maynard picture for First National, "The Devil's Saddle;" the Ray Rockett production, "Lonesome Ladies;" directed by Joseph Henabery; and Robert Kane's new production, being made in the East, "Dance Magic."

First National's present production schedule calls for six new pictures to go into work during May: Colleen Moore's "Oh, What a Life!"; Constance Talmadge's "Breakfast Before Sunrise;" the Richard Barthelmess picture, "The Drop Kick;" Milton Sills in "Hard Boiled Hogan;" a new George Fitzmaurice production, "The Rose of Monterey;" and Robert Kane's "Hell's Kitchen."

Reviewers Praise Norma's "Camille"

First National's modernized version of the younger Dumas' famous play, "Camille," a Fred Niblo production presented by Joseph M. Schenck, which opened an extended run at the Globe Theatre, New York, Thursday night, April 21, was received by the first night audience with tremendous enthusiasm.

The reviewers on the New York dailies echoed the popular verdict that this is Miss Talmadge's greatest picture.

McCoy's Leading Lady

Louise Lorraine, famous as a Western star and for her many other screen characterizations, has been given the feminine lead in Tim McCoy's new starring vehicle, "The Frontiersman," now in production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio. Reginald Barker is making this picture, which deals vividly with the early campaign of General Andrew Jackson against the Creek Indians.

We couldn't expect you to know that the girl is Lois Wilson. A scene from First National's "Broadway Nights" with Sam Hardy.

Activity At Warner Studios; End of Season Now In Sight

WARNER BROS. STUDIO is a whirl of activity at the present time with work on the current year's product swiftly winding up. Two new pictures were put into production this week when came began turning on "Simple Sis" and "Dearie."

"Simple Sis" will star Louise Fazenda in the title role. Herman Raymaker is directing. Clyde Cook is playing opposite Miss Fazenda, this being the first part assigned him since signing a long term contract with the Warners.

"Dearie" is by Carolyn Wells and supplies Irene Rich with her next starring story. Its director is Archie Mayo. Miss Rich's "The Climbers," is now in the cutting room.

Monte Blue returned to Hollywood from Mexico this week with his production unit, headed by Director Howard Bretherton, making "The Black Diamond Express." Working in this picture as support to Monte Blue are Edna Murphy, Carroll Nye, Myrtle Stedman and J. W. Johnson.

Another company, making Dolores Costello's next picture, "A Million Bid," also returned to the studio a few days ago from a location trip.

The cast of Syd Chaplin's next laugh special, now well under way, has been rounded out with Clara Horton, Duke Martin, Thomas Jefferson, Erville Alderson, Helene Costello, Lal Kruger, Nora Cecil, Louise Carver and Bob Perry. Charles Reisner is at the megaphone and the picture is proceeding under the temporary title of "The Race Track Tout."

Gentle reader, this is Barbara Kent in a scene from Pathe's "No Man's Law." We would like to give the photographer who focused this a swift kick.

Tiffany Films On "Leviathan"

The Tiffany production "The Broken Gate" was selected as one of the feature productions to be shown on the United States Liner "Leviathan" on her current trip to Europe.

In addition to this feature attraction two of the Tiffany Color Classics, "The Isle of June" and "Clothes Make The Woman" were also booked, for presentation to the passengers both on the Eastern and Western voyage.

The contract was made by Dave Brill, manager of the New York Tiffany exchange.

Menjou's Next

Adolphe Menjou's next Paramount picture to follow "The Headwaiter" will be I. A. R. Wylie's Saturday Evening Post story, "With Their Eyes Open."

Buffalo Bill, Jr., In "The Ridin' Rowdy"

Buffalo Bill, Jr., is the star of "The Ridin' Rowdy," a Western announced for release by Pathe on April 24.

"The Ridin' Rowdy" is one of the most ambitious productions Buffalo Bill, Jr., has starred in. The sequences in the picturesque mountainous grazing areas are fine, and the rough riding and furious fighting furnish plenty of thrills.

A fine cast gives a balanced performance, for the star does not take all of the glory. Olive Hasbrouck, who learned to ride in Idaho, scores a hit, and Al Hart, Lafe McKee and Harry Todd win commendation.

New Washington Theatre To Be Named the Fox-Roxy

THE new Fox theatre now being built in the National Press Club, Washington, D. C., by William Fox, will be under the supervision of Roxy. It will be named the Fox-Roxy Theatre, and is the first of the new theatres being built by Fox, which has been placed under the management of Roxy as a result of their recent affiliation of interests.

Hattons Engaged to Title

Frederic and Fanny Hatton have been placed under contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to title "The Bugle Call," Jackie Coogan's latest starring vehicle.

M.-G.-M. Keeps Polly Moran

Polly Moran, whose screen popularity dates from early Keystone Comedy days, has signed a long-term contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

This little jungle gamin is not afraid of water buffaloes. The scene is from "Chang," the Cooper-Schoedsack film released by Paramount.

Alan Crosland Directs Jessel In "Jazz" Film

Alan Crosland who directed "Don Juan" and "When a Man Loves," two current Warner specials starring John Barrymore, has been selected to make "The Jazz Singer," starring George Jessel.

May McAvoy has been selected to play opposite Jessel, who will appear in the role that has made him famous on the American stage. The young actor is at present in New York, terminating the final two weeks of his appearance in the original version that has had two highly successful seasons behind the footlights.

In a fortnight's time Jessel will entrain for Los Angeles, and by May 16th will be working before the camera.

Three Warner Films Ready

The filming of three new Warner pictures was finished this week on the coast.

May McAvoy completed work on "Irish Hearts."

"A Million Bid," starring Dolores Costello, is the second of the completed trio.

The last scenes were also concluded for Monte Blue's new stellar story, a railroad melodrama entitled "The Black Diamond Express." Edna Murphy is his leading lady.

Camera Work Ends

Camera work on Emil Jannings' first American starring production, the Paramount picture, "The Way of All Flesh," has been completed. The picture is now in the hands of the cutters.

Kirkwood Star Of Krellberg's "King of Clowns"

Sherman S. Krellberg, president of Krellberg Pictures Corporation, has engaged James Kirkwood for the title role in "The King of Clowns," which will go into production shortly under the personal supervision of Bud Barsky, general production manager of the company.

Kirkwood has been appearing on the stage for the last two years, and "The King of Clowns" will be his first screen production since his recent successes behind the footlights in New York and on the road.

"The King of Clowns" is a romance of sawdust rings and the boulevards of Paris, from the pen of Charles Devry.

Fox Production Activities At High Tide As Season Closes

PRODUCTION ACTIVITIES at the Fox West Coast Studios to complete the attractions for this season's release have reached high tide.

The announcement fraught with the chief news at this moment is the choice of Madge Bellamy for "Colleen," an early summer attraction. Frank J. Farrell will direct this offering, with a cast including Charles Morton, J. Farrell MacDonald, Sammy Cohen, Ted McNamara, Marjorie Beebe and Tom MacGuire.

"7th Heaven," the John Golden stage play, written by Austin Strong and produced for the screen by Frank Borzage, is nearing completion and will be released in the late summer. Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor are the featured players and the cast includes David Butler, Emile Chautard, Ben Bard, George Stone and Gladys Brockwell.

"Is Zat So?" created for the stage by James Gleason and Richard Taber, will soon be finished under the guidance of Alfred Green. George O'Brien and Edmund Lowe portray the fighter and his manager. Others prominent in the cast are Kathryn Perry, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Dione Ellis, Cyril Chadwick, Phillippe Delacy and Doris Lloyd. It is scheduled for release on April 24th.

"Cradle Snatchers," an early summer release, is from the successful stage comedy by Russell Medcraft and Norma Mitchell.

Howard Hawks has already finished this production, which features Louise Fazenda, J. Farrell MacDonald, Dorothy Phillips, Dione Ellis, Ethel Wales, Sammy Cohen, Nick Stuart, William Davidson, Franklyn Pangborn, Arthur Lake and Joseph Striker are in the cast.

Tom Mix, having completed his work in "Outlaws of Red River," scheduled for May, has started "The Circus Ace," an early summer release. Ben Stoloff is directing, with a cast including Natalie Joyce, Jack Baston, Duke Lee, James Bradbury and Stanley Blystone.

"Rich But Honest," under Al-ber Ray's direction, is in its fifth week of production. This is a May release, which features Nancy Nash and Clifford Holland. It is adapted from a Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Arthur Somers Roche.

Another May release, "Slaves of Beauty," directed by J. G. Blystone, is taken from Nina Wilcox Putnam's story in the Saturday Evening Post, "The Grand Flapper." The cast includes Olive Tell, Holmes Herbert, Margaret Livingston, Richard Walling, Earle Foxe and Evelyn Keefer.

"The Holy Terror," another John Golden play, was completed by Lambert Hillyer, with Buck Jones in the title role. This will be released May 1st. Buck Jones is now engaged in the filming of "Good as Gold."

Sally Phipps giving someone the high hat in Fox's "Cradle Snatchers."

Milne-Hurn Story

Universal announces that the original story written for Reginald Denny by Peter Milne and Philip Hurn will be put into production for next season under the title "Good Morning, Judge."

Miss Dunn Has Lead

Josephine Dunn, a graduate of the Paramount Pictures School, has been assigned to the leading feminine role in "Fireman, Save My Child," which brings Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton together again.

Henry King In Players' Role

Henry King, who is making "The Magic Flame," co-featuring Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky for Samuel Goldwyn, has again slipped off the directorial robes and will be seen on the screen in the latest Samuel Goldwyn release through United Artists Corporation.

Sometime during the making of every production Mr. King feels the "call" of his earlier training. True, his part in his recent picture, "The Winning of Barbara Worth" was merely fleeing from the flood with a child under each arm.

In "The Magic Flame," King is seen as a member of the royal staff headed by Ronald Colman as the Prince.

Larry Kent and Mary Astor as simple fisher folk in First National's "The Sea Tiger."

SHORT TALKS ON SHORT FEATURES

Spring Fever

The spring fever period is upon us. Stop thinking about what you're going to buy for next season and consider for a moment that you have three or four months of warm weather ahead before you start on a new season.

If you are going to keep your crowds coming while the tennis courts and the golf links and the bathing beaches call, you'll have to avoid monotony; you'll have to give them variety on the program as well as make your house cool and comfortable and inviting.

Cheap vaudeville under the guise of "presentations" won't do it. Certainly "double features" won't do it. Nothing will do it but a liberal use of good short subjects, including plenty of comedy and novelty.

For seven summers Educational Pictures have been adding that spice of the program which builds warm weather business. They are your surest reliance for the dog days that are coming.

W. R. Sheehan Signs Mary Duncan; Talented Stage Star in Fox Films

MARY DUNCAN, now playing in "The Shanghai Gesture" in Chicago, has capitulated to the lure of the motion pictures. She has signed a contract with Fox Films and will report for work at the Hollywood studios on June 1. This news comes from W. R. Sheehan, vice-president in charge of Fox production activities.

When "The Shanghai Gesture" opened for its New York run, Miss Duncan won the plaudits of critics and public for her brilliant characterization. On his visit to New York several months ago, Frank Borzage saw her performance and immediately recommended her to Mr. Sheehan.

A camera test revealed that Miss Duncan's magnetic personality registered on the screen, and Mr. Sheehan persuaded her to take a flier in pictures.

Buster Keaton Doing "College"

Buster Keaton's second United Artists Picture, untitled in its third month of production, was yesterday christened "College."

The story is concerned with a youth who aspires to greatness in every form of undergraduate sport. James W. Horne is directing.

Prominent in the cast are Anne Cornwall and Florence Turner.

Sterns Sign Dolores May

Dolores May has been engaged by the Stern Brothers for important roles in their two-reelers. Her first picture on the Stern lot is the latest "Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedy, one of the Universal Junior Jewel series being adapted from the George McManus newspaper comic strip.

Miss May also is due to play in the next comedy of the "Let George Do It" series, starring Sid Saylor as George, in the adaptation from another George McManus comic.

Dolores Costello's Next

The Belasco stage play, "The Heart of Maryland," will be screened, starring Dolores Costello, Warner player.

Addison Goes To Buffalo's Big New House

H. M. Addison has been appointed by M. E. Commerford as manager of the new Great Lakes Theatre, Buffalo, and has already entered upon his new position, though the house will not open until the end of the month.

Mr. Addison has been in charge of the theatres in Binghamton, N. Y., for about nine years, first under O. S. Hathaway and later under Mr. Commerford. He has created an enviable reputation for himself in the Lower Tier city, and his loss will be keenly felt, for he has handled the amusement end of practically all of the civic and semi-civic enterprises for many years, and has done much for the city.

With a wonderful capacity for making and keeping friends, he will soon loom large on the amusement horizon of Buffalo, and with a larger field he should do even more brilliant work, for he is not limited to small town management. He can adapt himself to any environment.

Mr. Addison is well known to readers of Moving Picture World through his frequent reports on his many advertising activities. He is one of the most valued contributors to the Selling the Picture to the Public department.

Two Tiffany Films Ready

Tiffany Productions, Inc., announces that they will release two productions this month, "The Enchanted Island" and "The Beauty Shoppers," which have been completed and are now in the final stages of editing and titling.

The cast in "The Enchanted Island" includes Henry B. Walthall, Charlotte Stevens, Pierre Gendron, Pat Hartigan and Floyd Shackleford.

In "The Beauty Shoppers" the principal roles are portrayed by Mae Busch, Ward Crane, Dale Fuller, Thomas Haines, Doris Hill, James Marcus and Cissy Fitzgerald.

Delaney Gets Long Contract

Charles Delaney, who plays the male lead in "Frisco Sally Levy," which has just completed a successful engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, has been given a long-term contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Remains as Art Head

Cedric Gibbons of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has been given a new contract as art director-in-chief.

Trio of New Pictures in Work At the Warner Bros. Studios

SPRING means no slackening of activity at Warner Bros. Studio but, instead, a concentrated effort on the completion of the current program, the last portion of which is now in production.

May 2nd is announced as the starting date for "The Heart of Maryland," a screen transcription of the David Belasco stage hit which will have Dolores Costello as its star. Lloyd Bacon will wield the megaphone. Warner Richmond, Helene Costello and Carrol Nye will figure prominently in the cast. Charles Edward Bull will fill the role of Abraham Lincoln with Walter Rodgers appearing as General Grant, Erville Alderson and Paul Kruger will also be in the line-up.

Camera work on "What Happened To Father" got under way April 28th with John Adolfi directing. Warner Oland, playing the title role, will have for his support Flobelle Fairbanks, William Demarest, Vera Lewis, John Miljan, Cathleen Calhoun and Hugh Allen.

Several more players have been selected for Irene Rich's next picture, "Dearie." William Collier, Jr. will play the son role with Edna Murphy as the ingenue. Anders Randolph, Douglas Gerard, Richard Tucker and Arthur Rankin will also be featured. "Dearie" is being directed by Archie Mayo from the story by Carolyn Wells.

George O'Brien To New York; For "East Side"

With George O'Brien assigned to the leading role, Director Allan Dwan will start filming Felix Riesenbergs novel, "East Side, West Side," about the middle of May, at the Fox New York studio, according to an announcement from Fox Films.

Dwan, planning the screen treatment of "East Side, West Side," has not yet decided on a leading woman, but George O'Brien appealed to him as the logical actor to portray the hero of the story.

Since O'Brien has just completed his part as the prize fighter in "Is Zat So?" General Manager W. R. Sheehan wired Dwan that he would be available for "East Side, West Side."

Jackie Logan in "For Ladies Only"

Harry Cohen, vice-president in charge of production for the company, announces that Jacqueline Logan has been chosen for the leading feminine role in "For Ladies Only," scheduled for early production.

This will mark Miss Logan's first appearance since the completion of her role in "The King of Kings," in which she scored such a personal triumph.

"For Ladies Only" is a colorful tale of American office life and presents Miss Logan in the role of a secretary to a young and handsome woman hater, who, as soon as he is put in charge of the office, replaces all girl employees by men. How Jacqueline revenges her sex forms the climax and the humor of this comedy.

"For Ladies Only" was adapted by Ernest S. Pagan from "Down With Women" a short story by George F. Worth, which appeared in Argosy-All Story Magazine.

Shooting Starts On Columbia's "Romantic Age"

Shooting started this week on the spectacular fire scenes which end the production of "The Romantic Age," Columbia's drama of a flapper's loves and tribulations.

According to reports from the Coast, this is shaping up into one of the most dramatic sequences of the year. Both Eugene O'Brien and Alberta Vaughn, featured players in this picture, appear in these scenes, which bring about the climax of the story, and the cooperation of the fire department was secured by Harry Cohn in order to add realism to the production.

M-G-M Picture Breaks Record

"Tell It to the Marines" broke records in Danville, Lexington and Staunton, in the State of Virginia, William Haine's home State.

"Tell It to the Marines" completed a successful run at the Embassy Theatre, New York City and is now a country-wide hit.

The production continues to uphold the name it established for itself, as one of the greatest box-office pictures in the history of the film industry.

An English Lord

Humberstone Wright, famous English actor, has been selected to play the part of Lord Rens in Rex Ingram's production of "The Garden of Allah," which is being made for Metro-Goldwyn release in Nice and Africa with Alice Terry and Ivan Petrovich in the leading roles.

Evidently Henry B. Walthall doesn't fancy bobbed hair. The curls belong to Charlotte Stevens, and the scene is from Tiffany's "The Enchanted Island."

E. H. Griffith With Columbia

Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production for Columbia Pictures, announces that he has placed Edward H. Griffith under a long term contract, to direct several of the company's forthcoming "Perfect Thirty."

Griffith, who directed one of Columbia's most successful releases, "The Price of Honor," a circumstantial evidence drama, has long been identified with the motion picture industry, first as an actor and then as one of its leading directors.

He has to his credit many box office successes, directed for Famous, Cosmopolitan and P. D. C.

Wally Wales' Next

Wally Wales' Pathe Western feature, "Skedaddle Gold," has been completed. "Circle D" will be next in order.

Rinty's Next Is In Home Office

The first print of Rin-Tin-Tin's latest Warner Bros. starring picture, "Tracked by the Police," came in to the New York office this week from the coast studio and was screened before a group of Eastern executives prior to its general release to exhibitors on May 7. Ray Enright was the director. The cast includes Jason Robards, Virginia Browne Faire, Tom Santschi, Dave Morris, Wilfred North, Theodore Lorch, Ben Walker and Rin-Tin-Tin's handsome mate, Nanette, who scored with him in his recent picture, "Hills of Kentucky."

Sidney Featured

George Sidney is featured by F. B. O. in "Clancy's Kosher Wedding," which A. E. Gilstrom is directing.

Cruze to Direct

James Cruze will direct Thomas Meighan's next Paramount feature, "We're All Gamblers."

PLAYERS PRODUCTION POLICY

Exchanges Everywhere

Fox Films Will Release Five Feature Pictures This Month

FOX FILMS will release five feature length productions during the month of May, according to James R. Grainger, general sales manager. "Is Zat So?" the film version of the James Gleason Richard Taber international stage success, is the outstanding picture in the May group which includes two western outdoor action pictures, one starring Tom Mix and the other Buck Jones; a society drama and a racy comedy.

"Is Zat So?" which is about a prize fighter and his manager in high society, was directed by Alfred E. Green, with George O'Brien and Edmund Lowe featured in the roles of the prize fighter and his manager. The release date is May 15.

"Outlaws of Red River" is the title of the Tom Mix starring release, distributed on May 8.

Sharing the release date of May 8 with the Mix vehicle is "The Heart of Salome," a Victor Schertzinger production featuring Alma Rubens. Walter Pigeon is featured opposite Miss Rubens.

Buck Jones' starring production, released May 1, is titled "Hills of Peril," and Fox officials claim it to be the best production the big Western star has ever made. Lambert Hillyer directed. Georgia Hale has the leading feminine role.

The final May release is "Rich But Honest," a comedy based on the story by Arthur Somers Roche. Albert Ray directed. Nancy Nash and Clifford Holland, two newcomers of great promise, have the leading romantic roles, with J. Farrell Macdonald and Ted McNamara furnishing the comedy.

"Alice" Comedy At Paramount

"Alice's Three Bad Eggs," an F. B. O. "Alice" comedy, played the Paramount Theatre last week. The "Alice" comedies are one reelers, featuring Margie Gay.

F. B. O. Comedy At the Rivoli

"Shoosh," an F. B. O. Bowers novelty comedy, has been booked by the Rivoli Theatre, New York, for a four weeks' engagement, commencing April 29th. "Shoosh" is the third of F. B. O. short subjects to play Broadway in one month. "Don Go On," a Crazy Kat cartoon played the Rivoli Theatre the week of April 16th, while "Alice's Three Bad Eggs" was at the Paramount Theatre the week of April 23d.

Del Ruth Given New Contract; With Warners

Roy Del Ruth has been given a new contract by Warner Bros. under the terms of which he will direct for their organization for a long period.

The freshly dated contract is in the nature of a reward for his excellent work in the past, which has included such box-office productions as "Wolf's Clothing," "Across the Pacific" and "Foot-loose Widows."

Viola Dana's Next

Viola Dana's next F. B. O. starring feature will be "The Lure of the Night Club," which Tom Buckingham is directing.

Production Unit to Alaska For Sequences in "Trail of '98"

THE VANGUARD of the big company filming "The Trail of '98" will start for Alaska and the Yukon in the near future, it is announced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Director Clarence Brown has decided to send a group of technicians and photographers to the North. They plan to start within a few days under the leadership of Harry Schenck.

The men will go to Skagway, Alaska, by boat. They plan to reach a point a few miles above Dawson City, on the Yukon River, by May 10, when the winter freeze of this big stream is likely to break up, and go crashing towards the Arctic.

Harry Todd Signed

Harry Todd has been signed for a role in "Circle D," Wally Wales' next Pathe Western feature.

Miss Valli's Role

Virginia Valli is starred in "Judgment of the Hills," the F. B. O. feature which J. L. Meehan is directing.

New Title For Greta Garbo's Tolstoi's Opus

"Love" will be the film name of Count Leo Tolstoi's Russian romance, "Anna Karenina," which will be Greta Garbo's first starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Dimitri Buchowetzki, who was born in Russia, is the director. The film has been in production about two weeks.

Prince Youcca Troubetzkoy, son of the famous Princess Troubetzkoy, musician, authoress and social leader, has been engaged for an important role, as have Anton Vaverka and Andre De Beranger.

Young Troubetzkoy, who entered pictures a short time ago, will play a Russian cavalry officer.

Glynn Opens New Theatre

For the opening of Mike Glynn's new Floral Park (L. I.) Theatre, the Tiffany Production, "The Princess From Hoboken," was booked as the inaugural picture in this beautiful theatre before a capacity audience. In addition the program included the Tiffany Color Classic, "The Isle of June."

Mr. Glynn has also booked the other Tiffany features as well as the six Color Classics.

Blystone Ends 41st Production

J. G. Blystone, director, completed his forty-first consecutive production for Fox Films when he filmed the final scene of "Slaves of Beauty," comedy-drama of women in search of pulchritude.

Holmes Herbert and Olive Tell have the leading role in this production, based on Nina Wilcox Putnam's magazine story, "The Grandflapper."

Lois Buys a Home

Lois Wilson, star of F. B. O.'s "The Gingham Girl," has bought a home in Beverly Hills, but she plans to do further independent pictures in the East.

Felix Adler Is "Home Again" On Sennett Lot

Felix Adler has returned to work for Mack Sennett after an absence of a year and a half. Prior to 1925 Adler had been associated with Sennett for five years in the capacity of title writer and gag man.

In the Fall of 1925, Adler joined the two-reel department of the Fox Studios, writing stories, gags, titles, and doing some directing.

He has been engaged by Sennett to write and direct for the Pathe series of domestic comedies called "The Jimmy Smiths," which feature Mary Ann Jackson, Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt.

Cloud Drama Slated By "U" For A "Thrill"

For the fifth of the Aviation Series which Al Wilson is making at Universal City, Carl Laemmle himself has decided to have him make an airplane version of "Won in the Clouds." This picture was made by Universal in 1913, with balloons instead of airplanes.

Roy Knabenshue, the balloonist, was the star and Frank Lloyd played the heavy. Otis Turner directed it; and in its day it was a sensation and a big money maker.

Bruce Mitchell will direct the modern version.

Novarro-Terry Together Again

"Lovers?" Ramon Novarro's new starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, coming into New York with few advance announcements concerning its worth, not only hung up a big record of business at the Capitol Theatre, but was generally lauded by critics as great entertainment and the best of the seven new pictures which opened in New York City for first runs during the week.

Directed by John M. Stahl, "Lovers?" which has a colorful Spanish background, reunites Novarro and Alice Terry, a combination strikingly successful in many of Rex Ingram's pictures.

At F. B. O. Studios

The Spring production drive at the F. B. O. Hollywood studios is at its height, Edwin King, vice-president in charge of production announces.

Kirkland Directs

David Kirkland is directing "The Gingham Girl," the F. B. O. feature starring Lois Wilson. George K. Arthur plays opposite Miss Wilson.

Educational Comedies Lists Host of Pretty Girl Leads

Mad Davidson plays art critic in Columbia's "Pleasure Before Business."

Pathe Feature Stars Playing In Snow Film

Wanda Hawley and Tom Santschi head the cast of "Eyes of the Totem," a new Pathe feature staged against backgrounds of natural beauty in Alaska and on the slopes of Mt. Tacoma.

"Eyes of the Totem" is a drama of the North and West. The demands of the story call for an exceptional cast and Director W. S. Van Dyke assembled an all-star aggregation to enact this H. C. Weaver production.

Wanda Hawley and Tom Santschi have the leading roles while the juvenile leads are capably handled by Anne Cornwall and Gareth Hughes.

Thomson Returns

Fred Thomson, the F. B. O. Western star, has returned from location with his company. He is making "Arizona Nights," with Lloyd Ingraham directing.

Booking Gold Bonds

"Mother" and "The Magic Garden," F. B. O. Gold Bond productions, have been booked by the Garden Theatre, Milwaukee, each for a week's engagement.

Tyler at Work

Tom Tyler has taken a company of eighty to Lone Pine, in the high Sierras of California, for exteriors for "Splitting the Breeze," his forthcoming F. B. O. Western, directed by Robert DeLacy.

Estelle Bradley and Lucille Hutton With "Toy" Gallagher, Kathryn McGuire and Muriel Evans, Featured

BEAUTIFUL GIRLS will be more prominent than ever before in comedies produced next season at Educational Studios. In addition to the comedy girls who are cast in the leading feminine roles of the big comedy series, Educational will boast of a beauty squad which for a combination of ability, charm and pretty faces will not be exceeded by any comedy-producing company.

Estelle Bradley, who will play leading lady roles opposite one or more of the starred comedians, won first prize in the southern division of the Atlantic City Beauty Pageant a few years ago for perfect face and form. Few leading ladies in the pictures equal Miss Bradley for all-round comeliness.

Lucille Hutton, with her winsome attractiveness, is also to play principal feminine roles. She has brown hair and brown eyes and is an ideal type, being only 5 feet 3 inches tall and weighing a little over 100 pounds.

Kathryn McGuire, described as one of the most exquisite blondes in pictures, probably will appear again as Lupino Lane's leading lady after completing a part in a feature length production. Miss McGuire is a former Wampas baby star.

"Toy" Gallagher, who played leading roles in Cameo Comedies and opposite Lloyd Hamilton this season, again will essay principal feminine leads next season. An Irish beauty of the most fascinating type, she has black hair and gray eyes. She is a little more than five feet tall and weighs slightly more than 100 pounds.

Muriel Evans, who until recently was only being used in extra bits, has made such progress that she will be seen more often and in more important roles in the coming season. She is another charming blonde type. Amma Styers, a brunette, is also showing much promise and makes a suitable running mate for Miss Evans.

In addition to these outstanding feminine players, many of the comedies call for the use of eight or ten other members of Educational's beauty squad.

Diminutive Mary Ann Jackson scrambling the eggs in "Smith's Kindergarten," a Sennett-Pathe Comedy.

Syd. Chaplin's New Comedy At the Colony

Syd. Chaplin comes again to Broadway on Friday, May 6th, when his newest Warner Bros. comedy special, "The Missing Link," opens at the Colony, which held his last picture, "The Better 'Ole," for twenty-five weeks.

While "The Missing Link" unravels upon the Colony screen, a complete Vitaphone score will accompany it. Preceding the picture a selected program of new Vitaphone numbers will also be heard.

The story of "The Missing Link," written by Darryl Francis Zanuck, concerns itself with a series of uproarious situations that develop when a timid Englishman (played by Chaplin) accidentally finds himself at the head of an expedition moving into the treacherously dangerous interior of Africa in search for the connecting species between man and ape. Charles ("Chuck") Reisner directed the picture with Ruth Hyatt as Syd's leading lady and Tom McGuire, Crauford Kent, William Steele, George Nardelli, Nick Cogley and Sam Baker also in the cast.

Winner Month Great Success

Warner Pictures received the greatest Canadian distribution in the history of their organization during March as the result of a high-powered sales campaign for Warner Winner Month.

B. F. Lyon, Canadian Division Manager, states that the drive far exceeded the company's anticipation and helped entrench the Warner product more strongly than ever with Canadian exhibitors.

The campaign started on January 1 and lasted for thirteen weeks. Eight of the 1926-27 Warner Pictures were launched at big first run engagements during the month.

Langdon and Maloney Features Released by Pathe on May 8

PATHE will release two feature productions, Harry Langdon in "His First Flame" and Leo Maloney in "Don Desperado," on May 8.

Mack Sennett produced the Langdon comedy, which was directed by Harry Edwards, from an original story by Frank Capra and Arthur Ripley. Producer Sennett has provided the clever comedian with a vehicle ideally suited to his unusual talents. Langdon has two leading ladies. Ruth Hiatt portrays the heroine and Natalie Kingston is the "other woman." Miss Hiatt is famed for her clever characterization as Mrs. Smith in the Pathe-Sennett series of two-reelers entitled "The Jimmy Smiths." Natalie Kingston has the honor of being one of the 1927 Wampas Baby Stars.

Maloney, firmly entrenched among the ranks of top-notch Western stars, has proven that the one formula that makes for consistent success in features could be adopted for the Western—and that essential force is drama. In "Don Desperado" there is the drama that is typical of all the Maloney features. You feel the presence of a real type of Westerner; the atmosphere is charged with impending action, with drama. A kindly act to a dog and Leo immediately wins the sympathy of the audience. Then in the highlands of Summit County, in a setting true to the West, Maloney plays the law's hand where the mining community has seen its gold shipments fall regularly into the hands of a notorious bandit. "Don Desperado" adds to the fast-increasing popularity of Maloney, the ace of dramatic action, who is supported in this production by a talented cast including Eugenia Gilbert, Frederick Dana, Charles Bartlett, Whitehorse, Bud Osborne, Morgan Davis, Allen Watt and Harry W. Ramsey.

"College Widow" Is Dolores' Next

Warner Bros. have engaged Paul Schofield to prepare the scenario for "The College Widow," starring Dolores Costello.

This production, which will start on the coast in the not far distant future, will round out Miss Costello's contribution to the current Warner season, following which she will begin her program of stellar roles for the coming year.

Schofield has already started work on the adaptation. His recent script achievements include several productions that have played long Broadway runs at advanced prices.

Kinograms Cameramen "Snap" Accident to Byrd's Airplane

WHAT is claimed to be the outstanding news reel scoop of the year is appearing in Educational's news reel Kinograms, No 5284, in which is pictured the crash of Commander Byrd's airplane in which he expected to hop off to Paris. Two Akeley cameras were focussed on the 'plane when the accident occurred, producing in every vivid detail the turning over and collapse of the giant Fokker machine.

Supplementary pictures show the removal of the wounded men, Byrd, Bennett, his pilot, and Noville, assistant, the police driving away the crowds that swarmed to the spot.

The pictures are exclusive with Kinograms by reason of the fact that twenty-four hours earlier this news reel had been granted the exclusive right to photograph Byrd's flight and preparations. In the face of feverish competition Kinograms was awarded the contract and immediately went to work to gather pictures preliminary to the flight. In the news reel the pictures show the finishing touches to the 'plane, and then a trial flight which was successful.

Then comes a second test, and after the descent of the 'plane it is shown taxiing along the field. While still traveling at terrific speed the landing wheels are seen to sink into a gully, tilting the 'plane forward until the whirling propellers strike the soft earth. Then the whole machine goes over on its back with a terrific smash.

About 400 feet of the pictures are used in Kinograms, or about half the entire length of the issue.

Has Tiffany Films In S. A.

John N. Weber, Assistant General Manager in charge of foreign sales for Tiffany Productions Inc., announces that Henry Arias, President of Magnus Films Sales Co., has contracted with Tiffany for the Twenty Gems for the season of 1927-1928 for the territory embracing Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador.

LaCava Goes West

Gregory LaCava, having completed direction of "Running Wild," the Paramount feature, starring W. C. Fields, is leaving this week for Hollywood.

"Big" Booking

The Hippodrome in New York has booked the Tiffany Color Classic "Fisherman's Luck" starting Monday April 25th after which it has been booked to play the entire Loew Circuit of theatres.

Educational Announces Program Of Short Features For 1927-28

Yola d'Avril, First National actress, spars for an opening.

Jack Gilbert In Stage Success, "12 Miles Out"

John Gilbert's new starring vehicle, "Twelve Miles Out," a story of bootlegging and hijacking on Long Island Sound, went into production last week at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, with one of the strongest casts of the year assembled in support of the star, and Jack Conway, at the directorial helm.

The cast of "Twelve Miles Out" includes Joan Crawford in the feminine lead; Betty Compson in an important supporting role, Ernest Torrence, Edward Earle and Mike Donlin.

Bert Roach was a last-minute addition to the cast.

A. P. Younger made the screen adaptation from the play by William Anthony McGuire.

Base Campaigns On Press Books

Two strong campaigns on United Artists Pictures attracted attention in Arizona recently.

In Phoenix, the Columbia Theatre augmented advertising on John Barrymore in "The Beloved Rogue," and on Gloria Swanson in "The Love of Sunya," while in Tucson the Rialto underscored its advertising on "Stella Dallas," "The Son of the Sheik," Douglas Fairbanks in "The Black Pirate," Mary Pickford in "Sparrows," and Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky in "The Night of Love."

In each instance the bulk of the campaign was devoted to newspaper space, with "copy" from the United Artists campaign books.

THE PROGRAM OF SHORT FEATURES to be released by Educational in 1927-28 was announced this week by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. It includes seven series of two-reel comedies, with a total of sixty releases, and five series of one-reel subjects totalling 89 releases, in addition to 104 issues of the news reel Kinograms.

There will be eight Lupino Lane Comedies, eight Hamilton Comedies, eight "Big Boy" Juvenile Comedies, eight Larry Semon Comedies, six Dorothy Devore Comedies, six Tuxedo Comedies and sixteen Mermaid Comedies, all two-reel pictures. There will be twenty-six Cameo Comedies, twenty-six Felix the Cat animated cartoon comedies, thirteen Outdoor Sketches by Robert C. Bruce, twelve Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge and twelve Curiosities, each in one reel.

Meeting the increased demand for more Lupino Lane comedies, the former Ziegfeld Follies' comedian will make eight two-reel pictures in his star series, two more than he made this season.

Lloyd Hamilton will be seen again next season in a series of eight of the same type.

"Big Boy" will be starred in a series of eight subjects to be known as "Big Boy" Juvenile Comedies.

Dorothy Devore, after several seasons in featured pictures, is returning to her old love, the two-reel comedies, to be starred in a series of six "Dorothy Devore Comedies."

Larry Semon is returning to Educational. He will have his own staff and company of supporting players.

The Mermaid Comedies (Jack White Productions) will be continued with sixteen two-reel subjects, featuring Clem Beauchamp, Al Thompson, Phil Dunham, George Davis and others, with the usual array of beauties supporting these funsters.

In the six Tuxedo Comedies to be released during the new season Johnny Arthur again will be seen in the situation farces, for which he is celebrated.

Twenty-six one-reel Cameo Comedies, two more than were produced last season, will lead the parade of laugh-producing pictures of this length. Phil Dunham, Wallace Lupino, George Davis, Amma Styers, "Toy" Gallagher and Muriel Evans will play the principal roles in this series.

With four veteran directors as the nucleus of its directorial staff, Educational Studios will have a great combination of comedy directors during the coming season. Jack White, who has been with the company since it released the first two-reel comedy, continues as director-in-chief, while Norman Taurog maintains his position of senior director. The three other "ace" directors are Charles Lamont, Stephen Roberts and Mark Sandrich.

In addition to his duties as director-in-chief, Jack White also supervises all Mermaid productions and the Juvenile and Cameo Comedies. E. H. Allen continues as general manager of the studios.

Felix the Cat animated cartoon comedies again will be on the Educational program. There will be one Felix the Cat Comedy released every two weeks.

Robert C. Bruce will again be with Educational with a new series of thirteen unique scenic pictures to be known as Outdoor Sketches.

Curiosities, the Movie Side-show, produced by Walter Futter, which will be released again by Educational, has in one season become one of the screen's most popular novelties.

To round out its program of novelty and scenic subjects, Educational will have twelve Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge releases, which, for diversity and entertainment, are unexcelled.

Mary Astor and William Collier, Jr., in First National's "The Sunset Derby."

Sisters Cast In Same Picture; Belasco Opus

For the first time in their careers as screen actresses, the Costello sisters, Dolores and Helene, will appear together in a picture. This will be in Warner Bros.' production of the David Belasco stage hit, "The Heart of Maryland," which is to be started on the coast shortly.

Dolores Costello will play the star role in "The Heart of Maryland," bringing to the films the same characterization made famous behind the footlights by Mrs. Leslie Carter. Helene Costello will have a featured part in her sister's supporting cast.

Although the Costello girls were discovered and signed to contracts simultaneously by Warner Bros. they have never before been selected for the same picture. They have, however, appeared together on the stage.

Colleen's Next

John McCormick, West Coast production chief for First National Pictures, has signed Winifred Dunn to adapt "Baby Face" as a vehicle for Colleen Moore.

Timely Reviews of Short Subjects

Edited By C. S. Sewell

"Smith's Kindergarten"

Pathe—Two Reels

Here is one of the most hilarious comedies that we have seen in many a day and it should prove a riot with the majority of patrons.

Shown cold in a projection room, it even had the hard-boiled reviewers in an uproar. Baby Mary Ann Jackson, pictured here, is the cause of all the fun, although a slightly older boy who is not identified, offers material aid. The fun all centers around these two kiddies and the attempts of their parents to take them to kindergarten. The little "bad boy" is continually starting something, but Mary Ann is no idler in this respect. Anyone who knows anything about kiddies or has ever had an experience with them will especially enjoy this comedy.

"The Midnight Bum"

Universal—One Reel

A farce comedy with plenty of slapstick and more "plot" than is frequently found in a feature is one of the distinguishing points of this single reeler starring Arthur Lake. In keeping with this, the comedy is exceptionally well-mounted, massive sets being utilized in the Russian scenes, and more than the usual number of players are used. According to the story, when Arthur is kicked out by the girl's father, he joins the navy and he and the girl eventually land in the same foreign city where Arthur and his sailor pals save her from a gang of ruffians and father, of course, withdraws his objection. It is better than the average comedy of its type and one of the best of the Arthur Lake series.

"Pathe Review 16"

Pathe—One Reel

BEAUTIFUL photographic shots of the Dells of Wisconsin open this issue of the Review with interesting scenes in Pathecolor depicting mountain climbing in Korea following. The final section is another installment of the camera record of the Smithsonian-Chrysler Expedition to Africa, in which the party is shown trailing and capturing wildebeestes, with sidelights on the habits of the natives.

"Old Heidelberg"

Fox—One Reel

GERMANY'S FAMOUS university city furnishes the subject of this interesting and picturesque Fox Variety and, of course, much of the footage is devoted to this institution of learning which is, perhaps, best known for its duelling. One of the student duels is pictured and it is surprising to see that pads and so forth protect the duelists in every vital part so that the chance of real injury is slight.

"Love My Dog"

Pathe—Two Reels

Kiddies' well known affection for their mutts furnishes the idea for this Our Gang comedy which is one of the best of the recent offerings in this highly amusing and popular series. With childish innocence the gang decides to exhibit a mutt in a dog show as a bird dog by disguising the animal with feathers. The manner in which they get a needed five-spot by allowing a rich tough kid to sock them for two-bits a sock, offers well-balanced human interest and comedy. Pathos and excellent suspense figure in a smashing surprise climax in which the dog becomes a victim of cruel dog catchers and is put in a chamber to be etherized. Apparently the gang arrive too late, but the dog is still alive and the way this is accomplished is a wow.

"Broke in China"

Pathe—Two Reels

As a practically penniless American sailor who with his companion wanders into a Chinese cabaret, Ben Turpin has the leading role in an amusing burlesque produced by Mack Sennett. Ben unconsciously wins a fortune at roulette when some money wished on him lands on a lucky number and keeps repeating and piling up. Cornered by two flappers of the vintage of 1880 he is up against it. It finally develops that he is the long lost child of one of them and that his sailor pal is really his father. The past is burlesqued by means of flashbacks which are cleverly handled and should appeal to all who like this form of comedy.

"The Honor Man"

Pathe—One Reel

HOW THOMAS CAT escapes from his pals in prison, is trailed by detectives and in seeking to elude them hides in a coal truck and lands back in the prison yard, furnishes the idea on which this Aesop's fable cartoon is based. It is a moderately amusing number with clever work in the manner in which the various nationalities of Tom's animal pals are depicted.

"Not the Type"

Fox—Two Reels

While luck breaks do help Van, he does not as usual prove a winner through a succession of fortunate circumstances in this issue of the Van Bibber series, nor is his role as prominent as usual. There are also other changes which make this offering quite a variation in type from its predecessors, and with the exception of Earle Foxe in the title role, the cast is new. It proves to be a moderately amusing comedy with several amusing gags that should be good for smiles. This time, Van is the publisher, editor, etc., of a newspaper that incurs the ire of the mayor. The janitor and handy man makes matters worse when he "pies" the lead page, but everything is finally righted and Van gets the girl. Two rough-necks who try to wreck the plant and are led a merry chase by the janitor, furnish much of the fun.

"The Lone Star"

Universal—Two Reels

Fred Gilman is again the star of this little "Mustang" Western, directed by William Wyler in the latter's brisk style. Fred plays "Bob Merrill" of the Texas Rangers and in successfully rounding up "The Lone Star," a notorious bandit, Fred romps through two cans of celluloid with a verve that will keep his admirers boosting for him and bring new boosters into his camp. "Bob Merrill" poses as "The Lone Star" and rides into the enemy's country, where, after bringing the bandits together, he is joined by the sheriff who discloses "Bob's" identity to the sweetheart.

"Kid George"

Universal—Two Reels

George, portrayed by Sid Saylor, goes to a kid party dressed as a youngster, which accounts for the title of this issue of the "Let George Do It" series of Stern Brothers' comedies. While not up to the best of the series, it will probably prove to be a fairly amusing offering for the fans. Most of the humor is centered around George's efforts to perform a stunt with his prospective father-in-law's hat, which, of course, ends in disaster, and in the situations where George marries Ethlyne by taking the place of his rival during the ceremony when the police chase said rival after recognizing him as a crook. This is an amusing scene handled in typical farce comedy fashion.

"The Hon. Mr. Buggs"

Pathe—Two Reels

In addition to starring Matt Moore, the well-known feature player, this Hal Roach comedy also has the distinction of presenting two of the best known Chinese players, Anna May Wong and So-Jin in prominent roles. Comedy and melodrama are smoothly combined in this two-reeler which should prove a popular attraction. As the title implies, Matt is a collector of insect specimens. The sudden appearance of the Oriental crook just as Matt's girl visits him causes complications which are heightened by the fact that So-Jin as another Oriental crook is hot on the trail of Anna. Poor bewildered Matt is the center of the farce-melodrama mix-ups.

"Ginger and Genius"

Pathe—One Reel

IN THIS ISSUE OF THE Sportlight, Grantland Rice shows how various well-known people turn to sports to provide them with pep and as relaxation from the arduous duties of their professions. Among these is the celebrated opera star, Galli Curci, who is shown as not only being an enthusiastic golfer, but a good one. It is an interesting number for sport lovers and the general public.

NOTES ABOUT WIDE-AWAKE EXHIBITORS AND EXCHANGE MEN FROM ALL POINTS

New York

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Albany, N. Y., April 28.*

THERE were any number of out-of-town visitors along Film Row during the week, both exhibitors and those connected with exchanges or distribution. Sidney Sampson, of Buffalo, and Morris Fitzer, of Syracuse, heading the Bond Company, were in town; Phil Myers, of the New York Pathe office; John Augello, an exhibitor from Utica; Harry Dixon of the F. B. O. office, in Buffalo; Tom Spry, of Boston, and Andy Smith, of New York, both with First National; Arthur Abeles, of Warner Brothers; Henry Grossman, an exhibitor of Hudson, while a flock of special representatives for Metro-Goldwyn were out over the field with H. O. Worden, the local manager.

Fred Perry, promotion man for the Schine houses in Watertown, packed his bags last week, and left for Binghamton, where he becomes exploitation man for the Binghamton Theatre Company, handling seven theatres. He succeeds H. M. Addison, who has gone to Buffalo. In Ogdensburg, Charles S. Hubbard has been named as house manager of the Hippodrome, which was leased last week by James S. Burnham for a period of ten years.

Joe Wallace, manager of Proctor's Grand in Albany for many years, will soon leave the ranks of bachelorhood, the bride being Edith Barnum, an employee in the secretary of state's office. Miss Barnum is now wearing a $1,500 diamond ring and picking out furniture. The wedding will occur the forepart of June.

No more Atlantic City for Chris Buckley, owner of the Leland and the Clinton Square Theatres in Albany, that is, unless it's in June or July. Mr. Buckley found the seaside resort so chilly that he was obliged to go horseback riding each day to keep warm, or at least that was his excuse.

The Albany Film Board of Trade is now occupying quarters on the third floor of the Mark Strand building and its former quarters will house a local business office.

Isaiah Perkins of Speculator, who is a great friend of Gene Tunney, was along Albany's Film Row during the week. Mr. Perkins runs the theatre in Speculator and plans to open on May 3. This may seem a bit late, but Mr. Perkins explained that the ice was just leaving the lake. He expects Tunney to visit him in the near future.

Business at practically all of the first run houses in Albany and Schenectady was ahead of a year ago Holy Week, managers in a half dozen of the theatres reporting business as standing up in fine shape throughout the week, with the possible exception of Friday. Much of this was due to the fact that exhibitors were wise enough to run good pictures rather than, as in the past, using the week to clean up "junk" pictures that had been booked from time to time.

Troy

Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose Theatre in Troy, N. Y., furnished not less than twenty-two acts of vaudeville last week, costing him exactly $50, or a little over two dollars per act. Here's the story. Mr. Rosenthal was observing jubilee week at his theatre and ran these amateur acts, so many per night, all different, along with double features and with a $50 prize in gold for the winners at the end of the week, as judged by the applause. When Saturday night rolled

Sixty Chills Kill Frost But Make Bankroll Sweat

Albany, N. Y., April 28.—It was a red-hot idea that struck Morris Silverman, who owns several prosperous theatres in Schenectady, when, on a recent visit to Exchange Row in Albany, he decided to give the girls in the Pathe exchange a treat—viz., namely, and to wit, an ice cream cone apiece. So far the sun shone warm. But the news of the lavish benefactor didn't stay on ice—instead, it flew on wings of haste, and every girl along the busy exchange section got the "ice cream gimmes" so that Morris had to decide whether to put in a hurry order for a couple of extra overcoats with fur collars or to put the money into more cones. He averted the frost by making the latter decision and the sun shone again—but the sixty cones it cost made the shadow of Morris' bankroll about six dollars thinner.

around, there were three who received an equal amount of applause, and so the fifty was split three ways.

Vincent Fisher, who has been a booker at several of the local exchanges, is passing out the cigars these days. Yep, it's a boy, and ten pounds at that.

Bill Smalley, of Cooperstown, plans to open his new house in Stamford about June 1, and to begin operation of his dance halls on Decoration Day. Mr. Smalley was in town during the week and is feeling much better, having recovered from his recent illness. He reports business last week as having been exceptionally good. The week just preceding Easter he used feature comedies over his circuit of thirteen houses with marked success.

There is nothing like having a fisherman in one's family. At least such is the opinion of Uly S. Hill, manager of the Stanley group of houses in Albany and Schenectady, who is now dining on trout twice a week. Mr. Hill's son, Norman, probably ranks as one of the best disciples of Isaak Walton in this section of the state.

Howard Morgan, local manager for Educational, and president of the Albany Film Board of Trade, left on Thursday for the West Coast to attend the annual convention. Pete Dana, formerly of Gloversville, has just been named manager of the Granada Theatre in Buffalo.

Illinois

*Moving Picture World Bureau
Chicago, Ill., April 28.*

FASHION shows are all the rage here now, the Cooney circuit put over shows at the Jeffrey Theatre and other houses belonging to their south side circuit. B. A. Campbell put over a successful show at the Star Theatre in Griggsville and other managers in nearby cities are tying up with their local merchants for fashion shows.

More than $25,000 will be spent for improvements in the Armory Theatre at Morrison, Ill., and the house will be operated under an exclusive movie policy in the future.

Lubliner and Trinz are making some changes in their houses for the spring season; at the Belmont, eliminating the stage band and using vaudeville with pictures for a tryout. The Orchestra Theatre will be opened soon under their picture policy for the spring and summer months.

Frank Cook was a visitor along Film Row and reported he has added the Gem Theatre at Sheboygan to his circuit.

Paul V. Miller has added the Eagle and Roosevelt Theatres to his circuit, these houses were formerly under the Kikas management.

Elmhurst

M. Kissock, formerly with the Downer Theatre, has been made manager of the New York Theatre at Elmhurst, Ill.

James Casey has been named as house manager of the Karzas North Centre Theatre and will work with Managing Director Harry Corbett. The house policy has been changed to semi-weekly change of pictures and vaudeville.

Harry Spanuth has turned over his lease on the Peerless Theatre, at 3955 Grand boulevard, to John Santos, who will make some improvements in the house.

The boys in the trade are extending congratulations to U. J. Hermann, manager of the Cort Theatre for many years, on his appointment by Mayor Bill Thompson as a member of the Public Library Board of the City of Chicago.

Decatur

J. M. Duncan and J. A. Steinson, both formerly with the Chicago exchanges, have organized a company at Decatur, Ill., under the name of the Alhambra Theatre Company and for the present, they are operating the Alhambra and Crescent Theatres in that city.

THE Film Board of Trade is taking up the matter of five cent matinees being given by a number of exhibitors and the order has been issued that hereafter should any more cut rate matinees come to the organization's notice, all contracts will be cancelled. The contracts specify that no pictures shall be shown for less than 10 cents, and the F. B. O. T. means to live up to it.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, has written Arthur Baehr, manager of the Senate Theatre, promising his assistance in a contest which Baehr is staging to find the most beautiful girl on the west side of Detroit. Mr. Laemmle says the screen test taken of the girl will be forwarded to the Universal studio where it will be given every consideration and if the results warrant the girl will be invited to try for a screen career.

W. S. Butterfield had so much fun and interest in his harmonica contests last year that he has decided to stage them again. This means that the public in 35 Michigan cities will participate in the mouth organ contests, as Butterfield is the head of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises, controlling about 40 theaters in the Michigan territory.

H. M. Richey has issued a bulletin to members of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Michigan begging them to desist from turning their theatres into "grocery stores." Richey, as manager of the association, deplors the growing tendency on the part of theatre owners to stage raffles and contests of various descriptions with flour, sugar, coffee, tea, canned goods and other grocery by-products as prizes. "Added attractions are legitimate," writes Richey, "But where is it all going to end?"

Two thugs held up the cashier of the Redford Theatre, Grand River avenue, near Lasher Road, last Wednesday night and escaped with $100, the evening's receipts. The men pointed revolvers at the lady cashier and offered her a neatly written note, which read: "Don't scream, but hand out the cash."

C. R. Cohen has arrived in Detroit to be manager of the Fox-Washington Theatre. He succeeds E. L. Pincus, who has been transferred to a Fox house in New York City. Several new policies have already been introduced by Mr. Cohen.

So many motion picture theatres have arisen in Detroit during the past two years or are now under the course of construction that many confusions in theatre names have come up. The most serious of these complications came to view last week when the Charles H. Miles Co. started suit against the Lew-win Development Company, demanding that the name of the Orient Theatre be changed. Miles is erecting in the downtown section a large theatre to be known as the Oriental. He claims priority rights on the name and says the Orient was first known as the Oriental, but on written demand of Miles shortened it to Orient. Miles now claims the similarity of names will cause confusion and loss of business.

The capital stock of the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises, with principal offices in Detroit, has been increased to $1,000,000. All stock has been taken by the present holders, of which W. S. Butterfield is the chief owner. There will be none placed on the market for sale, and the increased capitalization is simply a move to facilitate the expansion of the Butterfield Circuit.

The John H. Kunsky Enterprises will have three new theatres by fall. One will be in Redford, another in Royal Oak and a third in Birmingham. They will average around 2,000 seats each.

May will find most of the Detroit branch managers out of the city attending sales conventions. Quite a few will go to Chicago, some to California, others to New York and Atlantic City.

New Headquarters For Cleveland Association

Special to Moving Picture World

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association opened their new headquarters, 713 Film Exchange Building this week with a buffet luncheon to two hundred and fifty members, Film Building inmates, and friends. In appreciation of the membership patronage, the furnishings and decorating were furnished at cost by Sterling and Welch, Windowcraft Valance and Drape Company, Italian Fresco and Decorating Company and National Theatre Supply Company, resulting in business offices and a Members Club room of a standard that won universal approval for their beauty and efficiency from all. Among the telegrams received was one from President W. M. James of the State Organization to President Harwood. Manager P. J. Wood sent a basket of flowers as he could not be present in person. The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association has been in existence about fifteen years. Sam Bullock was one of the originators. All Sams' old friends expressed regret that he did not live to see the Organization as it is today.

THE Texas M. P. T. O. will holds its spring meet at Galveston, Texas, May 30-31, the date having been changed on account of the Association refusing to hold a joint meet with the Bathing Girls' Review, set for the same dates.

The Wichita Seeburg Piano Co., at Wichita Falls, Texas, has been added to the consolidation of Herber Bros. & Wolf, of Dallas, Texas, and the Houston Seeburg Piano Co. consolidation which was effected last week.

Oklahoma

The Empress Theatre at El Reno, Okla., was damaged by fire last week, the audience leaving without any mishap.

A new theatre will be erected by Joe Hagan at New Lima, Okla., soon.

THE Scenic Auditorium, Boston, may revert to pictures in the near future. A report is current that an effort will be made to re-establish this house in pictures, after a lapse of several years.

C. H. Williams is now manager of the National Theatre, Boston. Pictures are changed daily at this house, which was built about 15 years ago by the Keith-Albee interests for vaudeville. Which policy was sidetracked in favor of pictures.

The reopening of the Bijou, Boston, gives that city its only downtown-upstairs picture theatre. The Bijou was one of the original picture theatres of Boston. It was closed during a program of renovating and repairing. Flowing down the flight of glass stairs leading from the theatre to the street is filtered water.

San Francisco

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Berkeley, Cal., April 28.*

A COLOSSAL disaster may seem an odd thing to celebrate, yet San Francisco regularly celebrates the anniversary of the great fire of April 18, 1906, when more than twenty-eight thousand buildings were swept away and damage estimated at $400,000,000 done. This year's celebration culminated in the annual Press Club Rukus, held at the Warfield Theatre, in which talent from almost every large theatre in the city took part. Moving pictures of the old San Francisco formed an interesting feature of the program.

Mrs. Alice Bates, who will shortly open a moving picture theatre in Portola, Cal., was a recent visitor at San Francisco to make purchases of equipment. The announcement that she planned to open a theatre brought five film salesmen to Portola, a mountain railroad town, in one day and three salesmen were entertained so royally that when Mrs. Bates visited San Francisco the salesmen joined in arranging a dinner in her honor.

William Meade, formerly of this city, but more recently of Los Angeles, has joined the sales staff of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and is selling short subjects.

H. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany Productions, was a recent visitor at San Francisco, making a short stay at the local branch managed by Louis R. Reichert.

Miss Dorothy Taylor, secretary to George C. Parsons, manager of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer branch, has announced her engagement to John Lufts, of the Varsity Theatre, Davis, Cal.

M. J. Weisfeldt, district manager for F. B. O., paid the San Francisco exchange a visit recently.

The Twentieth & Mission Theatre Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000 by Martin J. Cagney, John W. Slater and V. G. Simpson.

S. M. Hatch, of the sales department of First National, was a recent visitor from New York, and is making the rounds of the Pacific Coast territory with District Manager L. O. Luken.

San Jose

With an imposing array of screen stars, city and county officials and moving picture men from all parts of California in attendance, the New California Theatre was formally opened on April 16. A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, came up from Los Angeles in connection with the opening and arranged for the presence of Charlie Murray, who acted as master of ceremonies. The theatre was designed by Weeks & Day, of San Francisco, and built by Barrett & Hilp. The seating capacity is 2,000, with 350 loges in the balcony. Harry E. Browne, for seven years manager of the old California Theatre, now the Mission, is in charge of the New California.

The American Theatre, conducted by the National Theatres Syndicate, reopened April 16, following remodeling and redecorating work which cost $50,000. Frank Vesley is in charge.

Oakland

Two reels of film recently blazed in the projection room of the Regent Theatre, 1116 Broadway, forcing the operator to flee and driving patrons to the street. Firemen extinguished the blaze, which did little damage, other than to destroy the film.

Fresno

Emil Kehrlein, Jr., for many years actively identified with theatre enterprises at Fresno and Oakland, has traded his property at Fresno for hotel holdings at Los Angeles and will move to the southern city.

W E. TRUOG, assistant sales director of Universal, returned to Kansas City after a trip to Minneapolis, Des Moines, St. Louis and Omaha this week. Harry Taylor, Universal branch manager, again is out in the territory looking for contracts. C. C. Knipe has succeeded Art Gebaur as assistant Universal branch manager, the latter having been made representative in Central Missouri. Ed Alpers, district manager for Warner Bros., was a Kansas City visitor this week. Russell Borg, assistant Educational branch manager, made a sales trip into Northern Missouri, as did E. C. Rhoden, manager of Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., and Harry Strickland, Warner Bros., branch manager. T. Y. Henry, former United Artists branch manager in Kansas City, has accepted a position as special representative for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in Minneapolis.

Hannibal

Thieves Saturday night broke into the Orpheum theatre at Hannibal, Mo., and stole a 300-pound safe from the box-office containing $300, according to H. A. Scheidker, manager.

The purchase of the Uptown theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, by Universal was completed this week, the latter taking title in a holding company, the K. C. U. Theatre Company, incorporated under the laws of New York. Universal will complete the development of the theatre. The seller was the Valentine Realty Company, of which E. J. Willet is president. Universal also has under consideration the purchase of the Warwick theatre, another suburban house, it is understood, but a report that a purchase had been concluded was denied Tuesday.

About 100 entrants are expected to compete in the annual Kansas City Film Board of Trade golf tournament, to be played over the Excelsior Springs course April 25. The entrance for the tournament, which will be an 18-hole medal play affair, will be $5, that amount including dinner. There will be prizes aplenty. C. E. Gregory, Metro-Goldwyn branch manager; C. A. Schultz, P.D.C. branch manager, and Tom Byerle, First National branch manager, compose the committee in charge of the tournament.

Webb City

The Blake theatre, Webb City, Mo., has just completed a remodeling job which cost $20,000. The improvements included new upholstered seats, painting of the ceiling and replacing of the floors.

Kansas City Kids Spank; Show Profits Thru Prank

Kansas City, Mo., April 28.—Bruce Fowler, manager of the Newman theatre, first run Paramount house of Kansas City, fell heir to some unexpected and impromptu exploitation Monday night. A young man started prancing about in front of the theatre, his trousers rolled high above his knees, while wooden paddles in the hands of several other youths hit the mark regularly. It was an initiation stunt of a high school fraternity, but how was the traffic patrolman on the corner to know that? Excitement aplenty followed, hundreds of persons gathering in front of the theatre, most of them having nothing else to do except enter the theatre after the commotion had subsided.

It was a cruel joke, but Art Levy, feature representative for Pathe at Kansas City, recovered the next day. Levy was called to the telephone and informed there was a crate of eggs for him at the express office. "Where are they from?" inquired the puzzled Levy. "The hen!" snorted a voice on the other end of the line.

Newton, Kas.

Mrs. C. Wagner has sold the Star theatre, Newton, Kas., to O. K. Mason. The Ellsworth theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, has been reopened by H. E. Hightower.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Samuel Blair, Belleview, Kas.; Fred Newton, Missouri City, Mo.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.

ACCORDING to advance announcement the Strand Theatre at Omaha, one of the A. H. Blank string of theatres is to be closed April 19. Employees of the theatre were given that notice some time ago. The Strand belongs to the same concern that recently opened the new Riviera, the $2,500,000 moving picture house in Omaha, and it is thought that the announcement of the closing of the Strand only three blocks away bears some relation to the opening of this fine new super-theatre in Omaha.

J A. BRADT'S Roycroft Theatre, Seattle, was entered during the night last week and $5,000 damage done to the interior drapes and projection machines, by vandals who were well versed in their work and knew precisely what injuries to inflict on the mechanism to do the most harm. They strewed odor bombs throughout the house before leaving. Mr. Bradt declared it as his opinion that the job was done by union sympathizers due to an impression that he was non-union, whereas he employs union help throughout. He purchased the house from a non-union man.

Tacoma

The Perunko Amusement Company has been incorporated in Tacoma, Wash., by Louis H. Perunko and Paul W. Bourgaize, for $75,000.

John Danz has renewed his lease on the Colonial, Seattle, for twenty years, and plans extensive remodeling inside and out, installation of a new front, marquee, etc.

Bellingham

Bellingham, Washington's beautiful new Mount Baker Theatre, will open April 29, according to George Douglas, manager. The house is the latest in the North American chain and will seat 2,000.

Raymond

George Reisner, pioneer theatre owner of Raymond and South Bend, Washington, died this week at the Riverview Hospital, following a long illness with heart trouble. Mr. Reisner opened the first show house in Raymond in 1907, exhibiting the first films shown there. He gradually built other and better houses, and gave to the towns of Raymond and South Bend, sister cities, two $150,000 theatres, both known as the Tokay, named after his vineyards in Southern California. He was greatly beloved by all his fellow-townsmen and was a prime favorite on Film Row during his infrequent visits to Seattle. He has no known relatives except a cousin, Chuck Reisner, of film fame.

Kelso

The Vogue, Kelso, Wash., was robbed last week, thieves tearing down foyer drapes to muffle the explosion of the safe. They got away with $500 in cash.

Lon Brown, who operates the Brown Theatre, Snohomish, sold several other houses in his circuit last week to Brockway and Gaynor. They include houses in Duvall, Carnation and Redmond.

*Moving Picture World Bureau
Cincinnati, O., April 28.*

THE Gifts Theatre, Cincinnati, under the management of Jules Frankel, is exceeding the speed limit in point of attendance with "The Naked Truth," now in its fifth week. The first three weeks were for women only, while the other two weeks were for the male of the specie only. The result has been crowded houses at practically every showing.

The Keith-Albee house, Ned Hastings, manager, is playing a week's engagement of the picture, "The Big Divide," given under the auspices of a local society of World War veterans.

Andrew Hettesheimer, genial and general manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Cincinnati suburban house, has been appointed chairman of the publicity committee of the Stage and Screen Scribes of America.

Columbus

Loew's Capitol Theatre, now under construction at Columbus, Ohio, will, according to reports, be completed for opening early in the fall. This is located at the corner of Pearl and State streets. The Loew interests in connection with United Artists have also acquired the James Theatre block on West Broad street, which deal includes the Broadway Theatre, a former vaudeville house, as also the James office building. Consideration involved in the deal is said to be around $2,500,000. The name of the James Theatre, at least, will be changed. The new owners will take possession in June. This gives Loew his first entrance into Columbus.

Mansfield

The Richland Amusement Corporation has been organized at Mansfield, Ohio, by Jack M. Greenbaum, Mark Greenbaum, George Q. Keeley, M. A. Friedman and Maurice Bernon, all of Cleveland, which company will have charge of the erection of the new Pythian Theatre at Mansfield. Jack Greenbaum has been operating the Royal Theatre, Mansfield, for several months in order to be close to the seat of activities in connection with the Pythian Theatre, negotiations for which have several times been delayed.

Youngstown

Youngstown, as it now appears, will actually have the new movie house which was originally contemplated many months ago, but delayed. Architects have been appointed and all indications point to the work really proceeding. The new house, which will have a seating capacity of 2,000, will be located immediately in the rear of the Orpheum, on West Federal street.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made last week by Messrs. Speer Marousis and Charles Freeman, of the Peoples Amusement Corporation, New Castle, of the purchase of the land and building, known as the Knobloch property, on South Mercer street, immediately south and continuous to the Henry Hotel. This site will in some future time be used for a magnificent theatre building to accommodate the theatre-going people of New Castle and vicinity. Preliminary plans for the new house have been drawn by Westover and Westover, Philadelphia architects, and call for a theatre with seating capacity of 2,800 persons. No date has been set for the beginning of construction operations.

I. Golden, former owner of the Rivoli Theatre, East Pittsburgh, and the Colonial, Turtle Creek, has taken over Samuel Gould's Strand and Liberty Theatres, Ellwood City, having taken charge of the houses on April 7. Always a popular exhibitor, local exchangemen extend their best wishes that he may have much success with his newest houses. Bud Silverman, who had been in charge of the Ellwood City theatres for Mr. Gould, will hereafter spend his time overseeing the destinies of the latter's three local houses in Pittsburgh, namely: Arcadia and Gould, Northside, and the Ideal in the West End.

E. W. Elder, well-known local film salesman, is recuperating from an operation in the West Penn Hospital here.

Among the out-of-town exhibitor visitors to Film Row the past few days, were: Nick Lambros, Leechburg; Mike Manos, Greensburg; Mr. Tran, Smock; Harry Petz, Youngwood; Oliver Kitchell, Jeannette; C. E. Gable, Sharpsville; Mr. Zwick, Finleyville; "Andy" Battiston, Irwin; Maurice Baum, State College; Charles Moyer, Greenville, and Charles Richelieu, Bellefonte.

T. M. Elliott, formerly manager of the Ferguson Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., visited in Pittsburgh the past week.

C. C. Kellenberg, Fox salesman, and I. T. Sweeney, Atlantic salesman, have each purchased cars.

Charles Loewenberg, University publicity representative in the eastern division, is working in the Pittsburgh territory for a brief spell.

Emil Drozd has just taken over the Jewel Theatre on the Northside, formerly conducted by Harry Pomerance and David Glickman.

Samuel Fineberg last week resigned his position on the sales force of the Columbia Film Service, and this week joined the staff of the local Universal branch in a similar capacity.

Canada

Manager J. M. Franklin of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, cashed in nicely on the stunt of Tom McMahon, a Rochester, N. Y., golfer, who played a golf ball all the way from Rochester to Ottawa, by having him finish his unique journey on the stage of the theatre after he had "holed out" in front of the Parliament Buildings. Motion pictures of the arrival of McMahon were screened at every performance.

The English societies of Ottawa, Ontario, held their annual church parade to the Regent Theatre on Sunday, April 24, in commemoration of St. George's Day, the theatre being filled to capacity for the semi-religious program of music and other presentations.

Minnesota

*Moving Picture World Bureau,
Minneapolis, Minn., April 28.*

GOOD FRIDAY services were held at a number of loop picture houses in Minneapolis, which were offered for the occasion by Finkelstein & Ruben. Large crowds attended noon services at the State, Garrick, Lyric and Grand. Organizations sponsoring the services included the Minneapolis Council of Churches, the Lutheran Bible Institute and the Federation of Lutheran Brotherhoods.

Finkelstein & Ruben added two more theatres to its chain this week by purchasing the Orpheum Theatre at Sioux Falls, S. D., and leasing the Egyptian Theatre in the same city for 20 years.

Theodore Hays, general manager for F. & R., is a member of the committee which will arrange for the annual theatrical frolic to be given by the Twin City Theatre Managers' Association at the Hotel Radisson in Minneapolis, April 22.

The bill, which would prohibit daylight saving time in Minnesota became law this week, after being passed by house and senate and signed by Governor Christianson. Under the provisions of the bill, only central standard time may be used in the state. The Northwest M. P. T. O. and theatre owners in the state were backing the bill, as daylight saving time is considered detrimental to theatre business. A municipal ordinance to establish daylight saving time in Duluth was recently defeated.

Dr. Charles Mayo, the famous surgeon, turned the first shovelful of earth when ground was broken recently for the new F. & R. theatre at Rochester, Minn. The theater will cost $350,000 and will be designed after a fourteenth century French chateau.

Scores of exhibitors in the state have already signified their intentions of attending the annual convention of the Northwest M. P. T. O. which will be held in St. Paul May 3, 4 and 5, and from the present outlook the meeting will be the most successful ever held. A cabaret buffet lunch and dance in the St. Paul hotel is being planned for May 4, and this will replace the usual banquet.

H. L. Nicholas has announced that a new $10,000 pipe organ will be installed in the New Nicholas theater at Fairmont, Minn. The theatre is operated by Mr. Nicholas in conjunction with F. & R.

Max Roth, special Fox representative, will be in charge of the Minneapolis branch until a new manager is named to succeed William Clark, who resigned last week. Clark came to this city last fall when Sidney Abel resigned to manage the United Artists office at Detroit.

South Dakota

St. Louis

In its day the Hippodrome Theatre, 17 South Sixth street, was perhaps the most popular amusement place in St. Louis. But it has been closed to the public for many years and the police in a report submitted to the Building and Health Commissioners for the city have suggested that the building be condemned unless present conditions are remedied. Hoboes use it as their hangout. In recent weeks three men have been found dead in the place, being victims of prohibition booze, two fires broke out in the building and the basement is filled with stagnant water, the report says.

Mrs. Alex Sommers, manager of the Lowell Theatre, 5037 North Broadway, St. Louis, Mo., on the night of April 14 left her office to go into the auditorium for a few minutes and a sneak thief stole her purse containing $40.

M. W. Larmour Gets a Writeup in the Paper For Merely Painting His Lobby in a New Finish

GETTING publicity for a picture is a good stunt, but getting publicity for a theatre has a more lasting effect, and often is much easier. M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, recently achieved this effect very simply with a brush, some paint and a bit of elbow grease, and he got more attention for the house than he could have worked for a double bill. It was just a matter of making a stunt out of a regular job.

Perhaps you remember that some time ago Mr. Larmour started to use his lobby as a workshop for the erection of his lobby displays. He found that people stopped to watch and took more interest in the resultant display when they had seen it in the making. He also got over the fact that he made his own displays and did not get them in the can along with the film.

Doing some spring cleaning, Mr. Larmour decided to paint the lobby, and to use one of the new trick finishes. If we connect the name with the right can of paint, it is the finish that has sand mixed with the pigment to give a roughcast effect.

This had not been used in Graham, and Mr. Larmour felt that it would be a novelty. We don't know whether he got the paint at a reduced price because he was introducing it, but we presume he did not overlook this detail.

In any event he grabbed the brush and went to work, and the editor of the Leader came over to watch and went back to write a story about the new idea and every housewife read the article and came down to see how it was done, which was Mr. Larmour's cue not to work too rapidly.

The result was that he had a gallery audience all morning for several mornings, and after that Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Jones found a subject of common interest when they met.

Probably a number of homes will get a new coat of inside paint this spring, and in any event the whole town is talking about the new finish and coming to see it.

Naturally after the alleged head of the house has been dragged down to the National to see the paint, he figures that he might as well take the real boss of the family in to see the show.

This is just one instance of how the idea is worked. The possibilities are limited only by the scope of your imagination. If you can afford to spend ten or fifteen dollars to put over a picture for a day or a week, surely you can afford to spend some thought on a scheme to put the house in mind for a week or a month, and generally it will cost less. Mr. Larmour's lobby needed a coat of paint. The trick lay in getting a paint novelty instead of merely repeating the last coat.

You can dress your still frames, rig up an animated display, replace loose tiles, or do almost anything, and if you stand in well with your editor, you will find that he'll be glad to give you a mention.

It all makes for interest in you and the house, and in a small town you can cash in the interest in your doings at the box office if you do not get egotistical about it.

There is a difference between being egotistical and not being too modest.

Taxi On The Sidewalk Was Ad For Taxi Kiss

Montagu Salmon borrowed a yellow taxi for his display on "A Kiss in a Taxi" at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., and put it partly on the sidewalk and partly in the gutter, timbering up the wheels on the gutter side. Getting a new taxi, the stunt was very effective.

A silhouette of a couple kissing was placed in the rear window and backed by white cloth. At night a baby spot in car threw the shadow into bold relief. For night work it would be better to put the cloth next the window and use a flasher to get an intermittent effect.

The last day of the run he Yellow Taxicab Co. took a two-column full to announce that all persons riding in a yellow cab between certain hours would be given a pass to see the picture. The company paid for the advertisement and for fifty tickets. Mr. Salmon issued passes to cover the rest of the demand.

A Firemen's Benefit

Just to be different the Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., put over "The Fire Brigade" in cooperation with the Firemen's Sick Benefit Fund, giving 25 per cent of the ticket sales to the firemen, who did most of the selling. A wonderfully effective campaign was planned and the firemen drew down something more than $5,000 as their share, which was only for tickets sold by them.

Got the Prettiest

One way of getting over "Orchids and Ermine" was to hold a contest for the prettiest telephone operator in Portland, Oregon, while the picture played the Broadway. Just for that the telephone company put on four extra girls to call all its subscribers about the picture and also carded many of its pay stations. The winner was given a loving cup from Colleen Moore.

WHEN IT WANTS TO MAKE A CLEANUP, MOSS' BROADWAY THEATRE USES PATHE SHORTS

Two of the phases of the latest Keith Comedy Carnival at the Crossroads. The vaudeville is booked for comedy and filled in with Pathe shorts. This time Langdon, Rogers and Chaplin gave real names for the marquis, and a Chaplin impersonator provided the ballyhoo. The Broadway uses a Carnival every six or eight weeks, finding that they pay.

Any Old Mutt Was A Devil Dog In Greeley, Col.

Sells Collegian Series With Contests and a Race

With Carl Laemmle Jr.'s "The Collegians" booked at the four houses of the New Jersey Theatrical Enterprises, it was a simple matter to put over this set of productions in a big way, and Charles P. Carroll, advertising manager for the Majestic, Cameo, Monticello and Apollo, went after the space with a comprehensive campaign.

He first got the editorial staff of the Jersey Journal to come to the projection room to see the first of the series run off. With a little talk about clean sportsmanship, as exploited in this series, he sold the Journal on a contest for a cup presented by Carl Jr. to the leading athlete in the high schools, the competition being confined to the boys who had won their letters in school athletics.

This brought not only the support of the newspaper, but of the three high school principals and the local commissioner of the A. A. U.

This contest will serve to put over the early titles, and on Memorial Day the Downtown Business Mens' Association will sponsor a marathon which will start in front of the Cameo Theatre, lead past the Fulton, Monticello and Apollo Theatres and wind up at the Majestic, which is directly across from City Hall.

In connection with this latter event the Jersey City Shopping News, which is sponsored by the association, will bring out a special collegian edition.

The campaign involves more hustle than cash, but it will bring far greater results than cash alone could buy.

Reversed It

Although "Evening Clothes" refers to Adolphe Menjou's soup and fish, Montagu Salmon made the title the excuse for a fashion show for women at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga. A local store not only supplied the models and their costumes, but gave the picture a huge display window at the store for displays of both men's and women's wear and advertising for the picture. In addition, it wrapped a thousand heralds and gave space in its own newspaper work.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Six musical incidents and three film subjects made up the program for Easter Week, with Harry Langdon in his new picture, "Long Pants," as the feature photoplay. As this picture was only 58 minutes long, Will Rogers "In Holland," the second of the Unofficial Ambassador Abroad series, was chosen to go on the same bill. The Rogers film was 10 minutes long and in addition to these two features there was the usual Mark Strand Topical Review, running 9 minutes. This brought the film portion of the show to 1 hour and 17 minutes, and 46 minutes were given to the musical presentations, making a complete program of 2 hours and 3 minutes.

Incident No. 1 was the overture "Il Guarany" by Gomez. It required 7 minutes and was lighted as follows: Bridge 1 deep blue flood, full; dome, 2 amber floods on orchestra; white on cue; ceiling spots, 2 light blues and 2 light ambers, and blue borders.

In salutation of the season, an Easter Greeting was staged with the Mark Strand Corps de Ballet, the set representing a group of vari-colored eggs, from which the dancers emerged. They did a chicken dance, led by Michio Ito, rural melodies being used for the music. This greeting required 3 minutes.

Harry Breuer, xylophon soloist of the orchestra, played from his place in the orchestra, the selection being "Marionettes" by Arndt. Lights: Light blue ceiling spots; blue borders, amber spot from dome; bridge 1, violet flood, full.

The Vitaphone presentation was Vincent Lopez and his orchestra, selections including "Hello, Bluebird," "California Sunshine," "Bing Bing," a piano solo by Lopez; and "Trail of Dreams." Ten minutes were used up for this.

After the Topical Review Allan Prior, the Australian tenor, appeared on the apron of the big stage in "Mother Machree," "La Donna e Mobile" from "Rigoletto," and "I'm Falling in Love with Someone," by Herbert, using up 6 minutes, and lighted as follows: Light blue ceiling spots; blue borders, red foots on production stage; bridge 1 violet floods, bridge 2 deep blue flood on orchestra and side; dome, amber spot on singer.

"A Spanish Fiesta," running 17 minutes, was the big stage number, in full stage setting. The set represented a Spanish Garden just outside an old castle. Props used included Spanish chairs and potted plants. The routine of this was as follows: "A Lane in Spain," sung by a soprano; a tango by De Villa and Ruarke, a Tambourine Dance by the Serova Dancers; La Meri, Queen of the Spanish Shawl, did a Castanet Dance; Chaminade's "Spanish Serenade" by Sascha Kindler, concert master; and the "Toreador Song" from "Carmen" was sung by Carlo Ferretti, baritone. Lights: Magenta floods, foots and borders; side spots, 4 orange, 4 magenta and 4 violet floods; bridges lemon floods, and lemon spot from dome on soprano. For the tango—bridges and dome amber; Tambourine Dance—4 steel-blue floods from bridge and dome going to white at finish; La Meri—bridges amber floods; dome steel-blue spots, stage lights to one half; for the baritone number—stage as in opening number.

Blackboards Handy

School blackboards are becoming a part of the advertising layout on many pictures with a more or less educational value. All that is necessary is to convince the school authorities that the picture has an educational value and then slip a few passes to some boys to write the announcement on the blackboard each morning.

C. Clare Woods had no trouble in landing the idea for the Colorado Theatre, Pueblo, Col., for "The Winning of Barbara Worth," and he was just as fortunate in getting permission to stretch a 30 by 3 foot banner across the street.

Delivered the Cans

Here's another new one on "The Fire Brigade." In Tulsa, Okla., the cans were taken from the express office to the theatre by seven pieces of fire apparatus, the run being timed for ten minutes past noon. In accordance with local custom all traffic was stopped when the siren sounded and the apparatus had the centre of the stage.

Sidney Dannenberg offered 53 prizes for the best Scotch or Irish joke when he played McFadden's Flats at the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. The jokes did not have to be original. With $15, $7.50 and $2.50 for the top prizes, Dannenberg stands to get a full file of all the Scotch-Irish jokes ever written. This seems to be a press book stunt, but Dannenberg gave it a large kick with the number of prizes, though fifty of them are pairs of seats.

ALL PUPS WERE DEVIL DOGS IN GREELEY, COLORADO

Any youngster with a dog could get into the Sterling Theatre to see Tell It to the Marines at a special matinee, after they had paraded the town and let the pups tell the populace all about it in their vociferous canine way.

A PROLOGUE SUGGESTION ON SLIDE, KELLY, SLIDE

This was used at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, for one of the early showings of the feature, the players being a quartet. Dressing the singers in the uniforms of a local club will help get the idea over.

Madison, Wis., Slid For Kelly Aerial Balls

Naturally baseballs have a close connection with "Slide, Kelly, Slide," and A. P. Des-normeau, of the Strand Theatre, Madison, Wis., tossed two dozen off the roof of a building, easing their fall by tying them to air balloons. Some of them were marked as good for admissions.

Naturally all of the younger generation were out to capture a ball and most of their elders came along to watch the fun, so everyone got the message.

Special window displays were obtained, and a clever use of the special pennants was made, by handing them out to automobilists for their cars. These pennants are good quality felt, well printed, and no auto driver had cause to be other than proud of the decoration.

Three hundred copies of the pictorial news were placed in store windows and the special crossword puzzle helped along.

Locating Chaney

Eight photographs of Lon Chaney in as many different plays were mounted and placed in the windows of eight stores in Pittsburg, Kans., to advertise "Tell It to the Marines." Prizes were offered for the best identifications of these eight plays, the contestants being required to name the window in which each picture was displayed.

Although a week was given in which to figure out the answers, only 20 correct replies were received, and neatness and completeness had to be made the deciding factor.

For "Orchids and Ermine," Montagu Salmon, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., played in luck. A local greenhouse loaned him a number of their choicest orchids for lobby display in return for the usual credit card. It was not necessary to add the ermine. Orchids are more rare and generally more costly.

Likes K. Ks.

Every little while the Broadway Theatre, New York, works a Komedie Carnival, and each one seems to get over a little better than the last. Only a couple of blocks below the Crossroads, the house can pull from the transient sector and pack them in with a comedy bill where they would not cross the street for the average feature.

The last use was for a Lenten revival, with a Chaplin impersonator on the sidewalk and a perambulator. It pucked the business back up in a dull season. The Broadway seems to use them every five or six weeks.

Storin Is Honored By A Local Veteran Post

Although not a service man, Harry F. Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., has been elected to honorary membership in the local post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, in recognition of his many services to that body, both in helping them to raise funds and in the decoration of the Post rooms.

He is believed to be the youngest honorary member in the national organization, for he is not a veteran chiefly because he was too young to be enlisted in the World War. He applied for enlistment the day he became 18, but failed to pass the eye test and was rejected. He persisted in his efforts and was assigned to reserve duty just before the armistice and before he could qualify.

He has been of material assistance in handling a number of drives, and in appreciation of his many courtesies the national body was petitioned for permission to make him an honorary member.

Had a Town Crier

A town crier who did not cry was the special stunt for "The Scarlet Letter" at the Grand Theatre, Atlanta, Ga. The man, dressed in Puritan costume, would perambulate the streets ringing his bell. Every few minutes he would unroll a scroll announcing the showing and stand while it was read.

A special preview was given the 600 teachers comprising the faculties of the Junior and Senior High Schools, and as a result the student patronage was unusually large.

Printed Its Own

Having no daily paper, the Grand Theatre, Estherville, Ia., got out its own four-page Movie Fan for "The Black Pirate" for a two-day engagement. Two days is a long time in Estherville, but they put the picture over with the Fan and a prologue in which the local boys' glee club, were in pirate dress.

HELPING THE EXHIBITORS TO ADVERTISE WILL ROGERS

The Chicago branch of the Pathe Exchange has a good sign man and the windows are always well set with displays which might be moved into the lobby. These three signs are for the Mayor of Beverly Hills on the grand tour.

A Reversed Ford Can Be Made An Attention Getter

Used Reversed Ford For Marine Feature

Finding a reversed Ford at a drive-it-yourself garage, George E. Carpenter put it to work for "Tell It to the Marines" at the Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City. It got a lot of attention and helped to put the picture over.

The body was reversed on the chassis, the motor being hidden by the wagon box, and it looked like the ordinary Henry backing up. Possibly you can get an old car and get your garage man to reverse it for you. You can do almost anything with a Ford, and this will be a passing novelty. The sign started off with "I'm all turned around for joy after seeing William Haines drive the Mississippi Mouse."

The band from a marine detachment gave serenades in the good old-fashioned minstrel way in front of the theatre, and a recruiting booth was set up with the offer of a pair of seats to any recruit for active service or the reserve.

Talking about Fords, don't forget the cross-eyed car. This is simple and yet good. Just paint crossed eyes and the headlights. It will get attention for any car.

REVERSED FORD WAS A GOOD ATTRACTOR IN SALT LAKE
George E. Carpenter used it for Tell It to the Marines. He found it in a drive-it-yourself garage and borrowed it in return for half the banner. The body is reversed on the chassis with the motor covered.

Shook Up Gilda

Charles H. Amos made a mechanical cut-out of Gilda Grey for her showing in "Cabaret" at the Florida Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla. A slow-gear motor kept the figure in motion.

If you want a real shimmy dancer, cut out the figure and mount it behind a white screen, instead of in front of it, tacking the figure so that there is a slight bulge backward to the stomach.

Attach a single lamp close to the centre of a slow-moving wheel just back of the stomach outline or use two rapid flasher lamps set side-by-side. You'll get all the action you can ask for, and it will keep the crowd watching.

Broke His Records With Fourth Commandment

Bob Browning broke the records at the Rialto Theatre, Enid, Okla., with Universal's production of "The Fourth Commandment." He did it mostly with advertising hustle, plus a lavish lobby dress, the latter a lattice.

The lumber for the lattice he borrowed from a lumber company in return for a credit card, so that the only cost was for some bunches of flowers from the ten cent store. Nothing about lattices in the "Fourth Commandment," but it made the house look dressy, and they figured the show must be good to command this extra effort.

And don't forget that a lattice lobby the first few warm days is worth a lot of extra patronage to any house.

Browning started in with teasers in the newspaper such as "What is the Fourth Commandment?" and "Do you believe in The Fourth Commandment?" When he broke out with the full displays he heavily stressed Belle Bennett.

A few days before the opening he pasted one sheet cutouts on all available trash cans and used several three-sheet cutouts for the lobby. He writes that the paper is particularly good on this title, so he used more than his usual quantity.

The last punch was given with the rotos, which were timed to get to every house in town and on the rural routes the day of the opening. He won a four-day business that shot the record up so high that it is going to take a lot of shooting to better it.

Got the Governor

In addition to the Marines, Governor Adams, of Colorado, and members of the State Senate helped put over "Tell It to the Marines" at the Victory Theatre, Denver. The Governor, his staff, and the Senators attended a special showing and were received by a squad of marines.

Another stunt was a "Jiggs Memorial" fund supposedly suggested by Lon Chaney in honor of the late Marine mascot, who appears in the picture. A limit of one dollar was placed on subscriptions and all donors were presented with an autographed portrait of Chaney.

Ran a Questionnaire

Following the latest irritation, the Allen Theatre, Akron, Ohio, used a set of four baseball questionnaires in conjunction with the sports editor of one of the local papers, taken from the press book on "Slide, Kelly, Slide." This and a schedule of the local team got all of the fans interested, and that means a large percentage of any population.

A DISPLAY OF FIRE ALARM TELEGRAPHS HELPED BRIGADE
This was arranged by the Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, for The Fire Brigade. It showed what happens when the box is pulled, and interested a lot of people while the pictures sold the film. This is better than a book display.

Eastman Has Held To Only One Style Display

Walter McDowell Copies Cliff Lewis's Ad Layouts

Since Cliff Lewis came to New York to join Paramount, we have had no samples from the Strand theatre, Syracuse, but Walter McDowell comes in at last with a bunch of samples and the explanation that since Cliff left he has been doing the advertising as well as the managing. He has been doing it effectively as a couple of the samples will prove.

One of these is for "The Beloved Rogue" and shows a trick style of layout in which he uses a circle and squares.

A TRICK LAYOUT

This is about a two fours with the star and title in the centre and four sales boxes at the compass points. There does not seem to be much layout to this, yet Mr. McDowell probably found that it helped to send the box office barometer up, since the oddity of the design will cause persons to stop and look. There may be no great sales value in any single panel, but the general effect is much like the dressed lobby. It gives the idea that a play on which so much pains has been taken must be worth while.

The second example is for Corinne Griffith in "Into Her Kingdom," and while the coat armor gives a suggestion of royalty that does not lie with the story, the effect is striking.

AN UNUSUAL DESIGN

Mr. McDowell sends in a press proof on this instead of a newspaper clip, which leads us to suspect that the black bar did not come out as well in the newspaper as it did in the proof. In proof the design is very striking, but it takes a good black to make it so.

There is no real sales argument in the "Costs a King's ransom" lines, but they sound opulent and ride with the general suggestion of the space.

Other designs show that Mr. McDowell appreciates the value of white space and open layouts, and Cliff does not have to be ashamed of his pupil. If he keeps on improving, maybe he'll get down to New York, too. He seems to be headed that way.

Eastman Sticks To Single Style of Ad

Probably no other theatre in the country has stuck so closely to one style of announcement as the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, which has used only one style since its opening. It may alter the position and style of the cut and change the length to match the importance of the message, but since the opening announcements the signature has remained unchanged, and any Rochester reader can spot the Eastman at a glance.

THE EASTMAN STANDARD STYLE

Sometimes a larger cut is used, but almost always it is a line and not a half-tone, and the same general style of layout is used, with a comparative absence of display for other stars and features, and with plenty of upper and lower case matter to carry the sales arguments.

Perhaps in some places this adherence to a single style would not be advisable, but in a town without too great a competition the standard style is in itself an advertisement.

In any event it is profitable to have a distinctive signature that never changes, that the eye may be lead directly to the space. Even in the directory style, where a very small space is taken, it is possible to get something of an effect with a distinctive style of setting, and this always should be done.

Plenty of Kisses Sell Flesh and the Devil

Most of the theatres have gone in strong for half-tones on "The Flesh and the Devil," and the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, used all three kisses in putting the story over. The cuts are a bit cloudy, for a fine screen is used, but you certainly get the idea of flesh from the illustrations.

THREE SETS OF KISSES

The Stillman gives it a strong endorsement but the job lot of kisses probably does more of the selling than the type talk. The picture and title both sell the sex idea and yet the real picture appeal is not the sex but the brotherhood motive. Probably the average manager does not care which it is so long as he gets them all in and sends them all out satisfied, but this is a peculiar example of selling one thing and delivering something else and getting away with it. The Stillman has made a good intensive use of the cuts and wisely gives the cuts the run of the space.

Listless Selling Is Detriment to Appeal

"Camille"

Norma Talmadge in Fine Version of Classic Drama Should Prove Big Box-Office Feature

ly with the gentler sex, because of its intense emotional appeal.

While some may consider that the Camille of Norma Talmadge does not follow to the letter the character as Dumas drew it, after all each of the great actresses who have essayed this role have offered their individual interpretation and it is the possibilities along this line offered by this baffling contradictory character as much as the touching heart interest story that have made it a favorite role for the display of dramatic and emotional ability.

Whoever is responsible deserves praise for the clever and skillful manner in which without changing the idea of the story the screen hoodoo of a morbid or unhappy ending due to the death of Camille and the unfillment of the romance with Armand has been disposed of. This is accomplished by letting the spectator know right at the beginning that Camille is dead and then going ahead with the story and presenting the story by means of a flashback. Thus, the audience knows at the outset that it is a story of unfulfilled love and the interest and drama is centered on the explanation.

The photography is exceptionally beautiful, the performances of the players is of the best, the direction of Mr. Niblo is excellent.

"Chang"

Tremendously Thrilling Wild Animal Film With Herd of Charging Elephants and Good Comedy

Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky present
"Chang"

A wild animal classic.

Filmed in jungles of Northern Siam
Produced by Ernest Schoedsack and Merian Cooper

CAST:

Natives who have never previously faced a camera, and a variety of wild animals including a herd of a hundred elephants.

Length 6,536 Feet.

Thrilling story of the fight of the courageous natives to establish homesteads in the Siamese jungle against the depredations of leopards, tigers and finally an enormous herd of elephants, punctuated with amusing comedy relief supplied by monkeys.

STAGING A MOB scene with elephants instead of humans is one of the highlights of "Chang," the newest ethnological study brought to the screen by Paramount. This was made by Ernest Schoedsack and Merian Cooper, who made "Grass" a classic of the screen, but profiting by the study of that picture, they have brought into "Chang" a wealth of comedy that materially lightens the tension and gets laughs such as the Sennett animal comedies in their palmiest days never thought of. This makes it a far better audience picture than "Grass" in which there was little to lighten the almost oppressive epic of the trek.

This story deals with the fight of the residents of northern Siam against the ever encroaching jungle. A native family penetrates the forest and there the man wrests from the heavy tropical growths a space sufficient for a paddy field. A leopard destroys one of his goats, leaping the high bamboo barricade, and returning later, is trapped in the enclosure now raised to great height and provided with a trap door. He kills the leopard, but that does not bring back the precious goat.

A little later a tiger kills his water buffalo, and he goes to the chief of his tribe, who sends a party of thirty men on a hunting excursion on which they kill tigers and other predatory beasts and leave the country clear.

But worse is yet to come. Elephants trample down the rice and the little family face starvation. An elephant drive is arranged and the close of the picture shows the little family once more making its fight against the jungle, but now with an elephant to lighten the labor and permit better cultivation.

This is the barest outline of what easily is the most magnificent wild animal picture ever brought to the screen. Some of the scenes are so tremendous that they leave even the hardened picture viewers gasping for breath, and the shots of a herd of nearly a hundred wild elephants stands a triumph of cinematography.

"Tremendous" is the only adjective that will apply to many of these scenes. No man-made thrill ever approached these shots.

There are some other shots of leopards and tigers in the wild that must have taken weeks of patient shooting to get just the right effect. These evidently are not trained animals. They are the real thing and even the big game hunter will thrill to some of the shots. Several of the beasts are shot, but skillful cutting keeps the picture clear of the suggestion of carnage. "Chang" is not a picture adequately to be described. It must be seen.

The comedy is chiefly contributed by a single monkey which is owned by the little family, but there are shots of other species of simians, and a number of shots in which they are seen disporting in the treetops.

The native actors are wholly natural. They face the camera with the aplomb of Hollywood and yet with a sincerity all their own and the interest they gain for themselves works to the benefit of the slight thread of story.

Properly sold, "Chang" should be a sensation.

THE HAVOC WROUGHT BY unfounded gossip furnishes the keynote of the story of "Lovers?" a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture starring Ramon Novarro and featuring Alice Terry adapted from Charles Frederic Nirdlinger's play "The World and His Wife."

An unusual note is the fact that it is the gossip of idle sensation seeking men and not women that causes all of the trouble in this instance. The locale of the story is Madrid and when a nobleman is offered an appointment as ambassador and takes his young wife's childhood friend into his home and prepares to make him his first assistant, the members of a swell club begin to whisper about the young wife and the handsome lad. Eventually there is a duel, the husband is killed and the young couple who have been forced into this situation, get married.

John M. Stahl has effectively directed the earlier scenes so that they are bright and interesting and dramatically forceful, there is also quite a lot of clever and rather sophisticated comedy. As the story approaches the duel stage the development seems more forced and falls into familiar lines with the hiding of the wife in the lad's rooms and her discovery by the husband and the marriage of the couple under the circumstances, even though they profess love, seems rather anticlimactic as this outcome is obvious.

Ramon Novarro gives an interesting performance but the role does not suit him as well as more romantic ones. Alice Terry is attractive and effective as the wife

Length—6,910 Feet.

To make the weight to ride in the handicap, Devlin forces Marty, a jockey to starve himself until he nearly wrecks his health. But aided by his sweetheart he wins the big race despite the temptation of the villain to bribe. Corking human interest racing story.

IN HIS STORY "The Money Rider" on which the Universal-Jewel production "Down the Stretch" is based, Gerald Beaumont hit upon a novel human interest angle in the treatment of a race track story, which has been effectively transferred to the screen with the result that this picture should rank well up in the list of productions of this type.

It is in the fact that the interest in the jockey's winning the race is centered in the struggle of the jockey to get down to a specified weight that the difference lies and the manner in which the lad is forced to starve himself to the point of exhaustion and almost wrecks his health not only makes for effective melodrama but offers an exceedingly strong human interest note.

There is an exceptional air of authenticity in the handling of the race track scenes which makes you feel that you are being shown considerable inside stuff and while there is some mild villainy it is not of the doping of horses or other familiar varieties. Of course the lad wins not only the race but the girl.

Marian Nixon who is featured gives a capable and sympathetic performance as the sweetheart who stands by the jockey and spurs him on in the fight but it is Robert Agnew as the jockey who really has the leading role and he gives an excellent portrayal, it is one of the best things he has done. The other roles are in capable hands.

DEPARTING FROM HIS usual type of roles, Monte Blue appears as a man of the great open spaces in "The Brute" a Warner picture dealing with the western ranches and the oil country.

There is a nice little romance woven into this story which gets away from the beaten path of its type and combined with excellent scenes around a "gusher" oil well with the hero capping it in an exciting sequence, it falls into the class of virile melodrama with considerable heavy villainy and should rate as a good program attraction.

Only in a few sequences does the hero do anything to mildly justify the title and these occur when he is disgusted and disheartened by his discovery that the woman he idolizes is a performer in a questionable dance hall. Of course her innocence and the fact that she is aiding her weak brother are finally established and all ends happily.

The early romantic scenes are attractive and well handled and there is considerable effective melodrama later that is well handled and the atmosphere of the suddenly rich oil town with the Indians and natives finding strange ways to spend their money is capably suggested.

Monte is effective in this role both as the easy-going rancher and as the more vigorous chap bent on revenge. Paul Nicholson makes an entirely effective villainous dance hall proprietor and Leila Hyams gives a fine performance as the girl, always holding the sympathy even when appearances are against her.

Length—6,871 Feet

Their childhoods darkened by divorces of their parents, Kitty and Jean are drawn together by this bond of friendship. When Kitty married Ted after a night of cabarets Jean will not let him get a divorce and things are muddled until Kitty commits suicide. A problem drama.

FOLLOWING CLOSELY the story of Owen Johnson's novel, Frank Lloyd has made a powerful, but sombre drama of "Children of Divorce" working to an effective but unhappy climax in which the impetuous Kitty Flanders unravels her own and Jean Waddington's love affairs by taking poison. There is strong dramatic value to the story, but drama is gained at the cost of entertainment and the result is apt to disappoint the admirers of both these charming stars. Both are given far greater opportunities to show their acting abilities than has been granted them in recent pictures, and in opposite types, their work does not interfere, but rather each gains through contrast with the other. It is to be questioned, however, whether the average patron will regard this fine dramatic work as extenuation of an unhappy ending story, though the plot is such that a happy ending may be achieved only through the extinction of Kitty, and the suicide provides Miss Bow with an opportunity for a death scene that is easily the finest thing she has yet done. It is pure tragedy gaining its strength through its very simplicity. In this sequence the director has done splendid work. Most of the situations supplied by the author are artificial, but this rings soundly true.

Miss Ralston, as the quiet, contained Jean, is as beautiful as ever, and proves herself to be something more than a clothes model. The other parts are well planned, but even the hero is unimportant in the unraveling of the story.

AS THE NEWEST starring vehicle for Rex, the magnificent black stallion, Pathe is offering "No Man's Law" which like the previous features starring this remarkable horse was directed by Fred Jackman.

The story is one of primitive passion in which two bad men, balked in their plot to jump a gold claim, deliberately injure the owner while attempting to cause his death and then cast lustful eyes on this man's daughter while he lies helpless. One of them is so touched by her innocence that he experiences a change of heart and eventually wins her love after saving her from his former pal.

"No Man's Law" is heavy melodrama playing up man's baser passions and there are a number of tense dramatic scenes which by their very force accentuate the morbidity of the theme. So far as the story goes there is little to lighten in except the vivacity and innocence of the girl. Moderately amusing comedy relief is furnished by Jimmie Finlayson in the role of the father and by a pair of donkeys and there are some attractive and rather risqué shots of the girl bathing in a pool.

Theodore Von Eltz gives a capable performance as the good-bad-man and Oliver Hardy hitherto known as a comedian is excellent as a heavy villain. Barbara Kent is excellent as the girl and is a valuable addition to the picture in every way. Rex, the star of the picture has less to do than in his former vehicles, his work consisting mostly in harrassing the comedian and coming to the rescue of the girl and eventually in a rather gruesome scene, even though it has been softened, kills the villain.

This picture does not measure up to the star's previous films and because of its heaviness and morbid story and rather unconvincing romance its appeal is limited.

Although not especially forceful in the role of Armand, Gilbert Roland, a newcomer, give a creditable performance and proves to be an unusually handsome fellow. With Miss Talmadge, who never looked more beautiful, he makes a striking picture. Helen Jerome Eddy gives added prominence to the minor role of Camille's maid and Mauriee Costello scores in a few brief scenes as Armand's father. The other members of the large cast give notable performances and add their bits to making this an exceptionally well-rounded picture.

Although in the sequences after she became famous, Miss Talmadge displays little of the traditional wit and brilliance of the character, she does show marked vivacity in the earlier scenes which serve to offset the rather morose opening, and some of the scenes of Camille as the pet of the aristocrats are quite peppy and alluring for the men folks.

While we have referred to the character as Camille, it is a noteworthy fact that she got this name from her passion from camellias and all through the story she is referred to by her real name, Marguerite Gautier. Incidentally it is said that this story is actually based on life.

The majority of patrons will, we believe, find "Camille" excellent entertainment. This beautiful love story claimed by many to be the greatest ever filmed is rich in dramatic values and unusually high in its emotional appeal because of the sacrifice of the heroine and the indignity she uncomplainingly suffered at the hands of the man she loved. Added to this is the superb acting of the star and the excellent direction of Fred Niblo who has made strikingly effective use of frequent closeups especially in building up the ardent romance. Pictorially, too, this picture ranks high and some of the individual scenes are exquisite examples of the cameraman's art.

lent. The continuity is smooth and without a jarring note and as the story unfolds it grips the interest, plays strongly on the emotions and offers genuinely satisfactory entertainment despite what would ordinarily be a rather depressing theme.

Much of this is doubtless due to Mr. Niblo's direction but in a greater measure Miss Talmadge is responsible. Never has she had a more exacting role or given as fine a performance. Although she is shown as being driven into her mode of living by cruelty at home, no attempt is made to alter the fact of her being a famous courtesan, but notwithstanding this, so genuine is her portrayal of her love for Armand and so ennobling her sacrifice for him and so pathetic her death and her acceptance of insults at his hands, that she gains the entire sympathy of the audience.

A Major Differs From a Sergeant

A MAJOR in the army is a lot bigger than a sergeant—in power. So, in this Picture Chart, a major error is one that has power to hinder exhibitors in getting accurate information when they want it.

As a part of Moving Picture World's service to readers—the service that wins leadership and holds it—we send out a dollar to each reader who writes a letter to us pointing out major errors—footage changes we were not told about, incorrect review date, etc.

But not the little "sergeant" stuff, please. One chap wrote that there was a line shifted out of alignment a quarter inch at the bottom of a page. Think he was kidding, but you get what the difference is. We're glad to pay the dollars when you show us major errors—incorrect titles, wrong footages, calling a comedy a drama—those are major errors.

F. B. O.

KOSHER KITTY KELLY. Star, Viola Dana. A Gold Bond that proved to be only a fair program attraction. Played on Sunday night to small attendance; played on Monday night to very few. There is a fair plot and a sprinkling of Jewish-Irish humor in the picture that was somewhat amusing. May be a good big-town feature, but was not much in the country. Appeal and tone fair. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MAGIC GARDEN. Star, Margaret Morris. Really a splendid picture that was marred a good deal by the "soft focus" photography. The acting of the little girl was indeed wonderful and her work was loudly praised by the audience. There is no villain in this play and it is as clean as an ocean breeze, but it holds the interest from start to finish. Tone excellent, appeal strong. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all classes, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

REGULAR SCOUT. This was a good picture and the biggest flop at the box office I had had for months. I lost double the film rental on this. I stepped on it hard as I wanted to sell Fred to my crowd—and guess they just don't want him. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

ROSE OF THE TENEMENTS. Star, Shirley Mason. A Gold Bond Special that went over fine with the few who saw it. Didn't draw for some reason and didn't make expenses. Play it, as it will please if you can get them in. Fine tone, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special almost. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

SMILING AT TROUBLE. Star, Lefty Flynn. If you want action, here it is: good story and Lefty sure did his stuff in this one. Good supporting cast. Tone good. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

First National

CHICKIE. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Fair picture: all right for a regular program, but don't expect too much and you won't be disappointed. Eight reels, print good. Tone hot, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw rural class, town 200. Admission 20-40. L. L. Like, Dreamland Theatre (150 seats), Drummond, Montana.

DUCHESS OF BUFFALO. Star, Constance Talmadge. One of the poorest stories, I think, that we ever had; no story; in fact, nothing to it in any shape or form. Small town exhibitor, if you have bought it, pay for it and don't run it. Tone none, appeal 40 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

FOREVER AFTER. This was well liked: just a little better than program. Tone good, not much appeal. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

HER SECOND CHANCE. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. This was a real good offering, and lots of comedy was furnished by Charles Murray, as the detective. However, it went the way of the rest as to box office receipts, just film rental, that's all. Tone fair, appeal 70 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw

"It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man." That is our slogan, we exhibitors who send unbiased reports on pictures we have played.

Our Gang is held together by the bonds of common interest and mutual good will. We welcome you into our circle, you will automatically become one of us by the free-will act of sending picture tips to this dependable tip department.

OUR GANG

all classes, town 2,900. Admission 10-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

INTO HER KINGDOM. Star, Corinne Griffith. Can't give this picture much: not as good as her past picture. Hardly a program picture and not worth what we paid for it. Our advice is pay, don't play. Tone not so good, very poor appeal. Sunday maybe, special no. Saw town, rural class, town 896. Admission 10-25. Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre (200 seats), Neola, Iowa.

IRENE. Star, Colleen Moore. This was a dandy picture and pleased almost everybody. Bought it right and made some money. Appeal 90 per cent. Special no. Draw country and town class, town 860. Admission 10-25. Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (235 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

RANSON'S FOLLY. Star, Richard Barthelmess. This star has flopped for me and flopped hard. Doesn't mean a thing any more. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

SAVAGE. In my opinion it was a shame to put such stars as Ben Lyon and May McAvoy in such a weak picture as this. My patrons were very much disappointed in the production. It wasn't even a good comedy. Julius Freedman, Manager, Freedman Theatre, Forest City, Pennsylvania.

STEPPING ALONG. Star, Johnny Hines. The second Hines we have played and went over big. Everyone liked it, only a couple of suggestive scenes should have been kept out. Tone good, appeal 95 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farming class, town 400. Admission 10-15. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

STRONG MAN. A somewhat draggy picture which failed to draw. Moral good, Sunday yes, special no. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SUBWAY SADIE. Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Oh, boy! They ate this up. Just what they want: nonsense, and lots of it. Tone good, appeal 60 per cent. Sunday no, special almost. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (460 seats), David City, Nebraska.

SYNCOATING SUE. Star, Corinne Griffith. Nothing to this number. Can't see how producer expects to get entertainment out of such a time worn plot as this. Star very much in evidence throughout the picture. Let's have more story and less star. First night weak; second night fell flat. Had several walkouts. Tone fair, appeal weak. Sunday, special no. Draw all classes, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP. Star, Harry Langdon. Good comedy drama with good tone and appeal. Sunday yes, and is just above program schedule. Draw town, merchant class, town 1,650 widely scattered. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TWINKLETOES. Star, Colleen Moore. A dandy, well liked by everybody. Tone good, appeal 60 per cent. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-30. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

TWINKLETOES. Star, Colleen Moore. Played to good business. Don't think it was as good as It Must Be Love by a long way. Tone not so good, fair appeal. Sunday maybe, special no. Draw town, rural class, town 896. Admission 10-25. Mrs. S. J. Brown & Son, Phoenix Theatre (200 seats), Neola, Iowa.

TWINKLETOES. Star, Colleen Moore. A very good picture of its type, but hardly the type for Colleen. I do not think it will stand up for two days in a small town. It is rather dragged out and dreary. Work of Colleen very good but the picture may not please her fans. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 15-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (525 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

WISE GUY. Star, James Kirkwood. A good program picture; not wise to say too much, however, as it is too churchy-religious. It is good entertainment, however. Draw neighborhood class, city 90,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, New Allen Theatre (600 seats), Allentown, Pennsylvania.

Fox

FIG LEAVES. Star, Olive Borden. Very nice entertainment; best style show we ever had in pictures. But a very poor print, which is unusual for Fox. Tone good, appeal 50 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

LAZYBONES. This picture pleased my patrons 100 per cent. As good as lots of big specials I have shown. Fine photography, pleasing stars, good story and interesting the whole way through. Would like to get wise to more like it. Received a dandy print too. Small town draw; also farming community. Admission 15-30. F. W. Miller Dayton, Pennsylvania.

SANDY. Star cast. This picture was a surprise. We ran this on a Wednesday and they packed the house and we had to turn some away. Very good picture and it seemed to please most of them. Tone fair, appeal 80 per cent. Sunday, special no. Draw town, farm class, town 860. Admission 10-25. Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (235 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

THIRTY BELOW ZERO. Star, Buck Jones. This should make a dandy summer attraction; good title and star for the hot months. Action and comedy a-plenty. Eva Novak attractive as the heroine. Good one sheets, slide not so good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

THREE BAD MEN. Star, George O'Brien. Many said that this was the greatest outdoor feature ever shown. The actors actually lived their parts in a clean, thrilling, beautifully photographed story that had one of the greatest climaxes ever shown on the screen. The audience sat spellbound from beginning to end and applause was heard several times during the performance. Even the projectors seemed to realize that here was real entertainment—and they have been running better ever since Three Bad Men was shown. Advertised three weeks ahead with teaser slides followed by snipes and throwaways, then ones, threes, sixes, twenty-four and heralds, but the attendance was less than fair. Not a fault of the picture but blamable to financial conditions and the fact that so many were observing Lent. Those who came have been praising the picture to the skies. Tone good, Sunday yes. Absolutely a special if there ever was one! Appeal 100 per cent. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

WINGS OF THE STORM. Star, Thunder, dog. The dog tells the story, which isn't much. Patrons did not fail to tell, as they did before when we showed the Kentucky Derby, that they do not like to have their screen meals served by animals. Good photography. Few came first night, fewer the second. Tone, Sunday O. K. Appeal weak. Not a special. Draw all sorts, town about 1,000. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Metro-Goldwyn

A LITTLE JOURNEY. Star cast. Clean show, but was too slow to satisfy my taste. Appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw from town 570. Admission 10-25. J. W. Ryder, Jewel Theatre (250 seats), Verndale, Minnesota.

MAGICIAN. Stars, Paul Wagener, Alice Terry. Good acting but proved a rotten picture here. Why waste Miss Terry on such a brainstorm as this? Had plenty walk out. People sent their kids home. The worst yet. Lost money. If you've bought it lay off showing, boys. Tone no, appeal nothing. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

MARE NOSTRUM. Star cast. This is a great picture in most ways, but too long; many scenes were dragged out till it was tiresome. But, take it all in all, it is worth showing, even for the small town show. Tone good, appeal fair. Sunday, special yes. Draw farm, town class, town 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

THERE YOU ARE. Another one of Metro's good ones. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

TIN HATS. Star, Conrad Nagel, also star cast. Very good. Had many favorable comments on this one. Tone, appeal good. Sunday yes, special no. Draw town, farm class, town 600. Admission 10-30, 15-35. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

TIN HATS. Star, Conrad Nagel. Not as good as expected. Draw general class, town 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (469 seats), David City, Nebraska.

VALENCIA. Star, Mae Murray. A weak sister. I doubled it up and got away with it. That is the best way to do with it because alone it will probably not stand up. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Sunday hardly, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 15-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (525 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

WANING SEX. Star, Norma Shearer. Will say for this one that it was the best picture we ever played. All said "great" and Norma was fine. Good story, well acted. Tone good, appeal 100 per cent. Sunday yes, special almost. Draw oil field class, town 300. Admission 10-25. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

Paramount

BLIND ALLEYS. (6 reels). Star, Thomas Meighan. Seemed to please my Sunday and Monday crowds but I sure expected a real picture: Acting O. K. and a good title, but slender story and its not big enough for Tom. Print good. Sunday yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

A tip in the mail is worth two in the drawer. Send in your blanks every week, whether you report one picture or six. There are exhibitors who find your reports in agreement with their experience in pictures you've both played. They are following you. Keep the tips coming!

DIPLOMACY. Star, Blanche Sweet. Too long; would have been better in six reels instead of in eight. Not the type of show for a small town Saturday night. Tone good, appeal fair. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ENCHANTED HILL. Star, Jack Holt. A Peter B. Kyne story and take it from me this sure is a great picture. It not only has oodles of action, thrills and beautiful scenery, but it has a wonderful love theme running through it. Better than usual Tuesday business. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

EVENING CLOTHES. Star, Adolphe Menjou. This is pickings for the censors. This should be titled Night Clothes. Hero is portrayed as a perfect gentleman, but everyone else in the story is a stew, bum or pictured as similar to a prostitute. All right for those who like 'em that way. My crowd isn't indecent or immoral so it didn't go here. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

EVENING CLOTHES. (6 reels). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Here's a real picture—but such a title!—it scared my trade away. Miss Valli and Menjou wonderful. Business awful. But here's hoping that there are no more Evening Clothes or Slave of Fashion titles, as they are a business killer for quite a few theatres. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

FASHIONS FOR WOMEN. Star, Esther Ralston. A picture with a weak story, but entertaining. Some women will like it because of the gorgeous gowns and fancy lingerie. This picture should particularly appeal to the women. Draw general big city classes. Admission 20-25-40. James D. Kennedy, Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana.

FOR HEAVEN'S SAKE. Star, Harold Lloyd. This picture goes only fair. Not up to the Lloyd standard. It was not the comedy it was advertised to be. Tone fair, appeal 80 per cent. Sunday, special no. Floyd G. Ward, Ward Theatre, Stark, Kansas.

GOLDEN PRINCESS. Star, Betty Bronson. Very nice program picture. Pleased and drew good at box office in spite of a week's rain and plenty of mud. Be sure and play it. Tone good, appeal 90 per cent. Sunday yes, special no. Draw farm class, town 150. Admission 10-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (100 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

KID BOOTS. Star, Eddie Cantor. A real good comedy. Eddie will do but he is not a box office star. But Clara is a pippin. The entire picture was very pleasing. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Sunday O. K. Special no. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

KID BOOTS. Star, Eddie Cantor, Clara Bow in cast. A peach of a comedy. Believe me, I'm for Clara Bow every time, I'm telling you. Had plenty of laughs at the funny-bone ticklers in this. Tone, appeal good. Not special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LET IT RAIN. Star, Douglas MacLean. We usually expect April showers in April and—boy!—what a shower we had on Let It Rain. Played this April 10-11 and got one of the biggest crowds out for some time in bad weather. Everyone in cast was great. This MacLean is getting better right along. Boost it! It's box office stuff. Miss Mason was great. Tone good, appeal great. Sunday yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LET IT RAIN. Star, Douglas MacLean. As good a little comedy as I have seen in a long time. It will please everyone. A good two-day picture for a small town, but I made the mistake of playing it only once as I had not seen the picture before I played it. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 15-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (525 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

NELL GWYN. Star, Dorothy Gish. Here just a piece of cheese. Foreign costume stuff and it was cordially disliked here by the very few who happened to see it. Dorothy showed too much of herself. Tone bad, appeal none. Sunday, special no. Draw general class, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SEA HORSES. Star, Jack Holt. I am a little late in playing this one but still it is a very good picture. Holt very good in his part. Will give satisfaction. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Sunday yes, special no. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 15-25. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (525 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

STRANDED IN PARIS. Star, Bebe Daniels. This is a very good picture for this star; however, not up to the standard set by The Campus Flirt. It will please her following and is above the average from Paramount. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. Tone O. K. Sunday yes. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

WOMANHANDLED. Star, Richard Dix. A burlesque on the Covered Wagon: Oh boy! what a picture. A comedy with a streak of western life running through it. Dix is one of our best bets. A. E. Sharer, Globe Theatre, Savannah, Missouri.

YOU'D BE SURPRISED. Star, Raymond Griffith. An excellent comedy with Ray doing excellent work. We had poor attendance but not the fault of the picture. Tone, appeal good. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

YOU NEVER KNOW WOMEN. Star, Florence Vidor. This is an excellent picture that did a fair business. Will please most any audience. I had many compliments on it. Good appeal, special no. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

Pathe

WHITE SHEEP. Star, Glenn Tryon. Flashing, stirring drama of thrills, laughter and action. Shows what power people can have over others. Tone all right, appeal great. Sunday, special no. Draw from town of 570. Admission 10-25. J. W. Ryder, Jewel Theatre (250 seats), Verndale, Minnesota.

Producers Dist. Corp.

STEEL PREFERRED. Wonderful picture: should please any audience. General patronage. F. Morse, Woodside Theatre, Bay City, Michigan.

UP IN MABEL'S ROOM. Star, Marie Prevost. Just about the best little comedy we have had in a long time. Miss Prevost made a big hit here in it. She is beautiful, clever and a wonderful comedienne. The picture, too, is very entertaining, beautiful and clever. The title and paper are box office assets. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Sunday, special O. K. Draw all classes town 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

VOLGA BOATMAN. Star cast. What a picture! Impressive, entertaining, gripping. All who saw it complimented it highly. The scenes where the boatman and girl are locked up in a room while the mob waits outside for him to kill her was one of the most impressive and best handled things seen here. Tone, Sunday O. K. Appeal good.

Large Indiana Chain Continues Expansion

With the acquisition of the Howard and Arcade Theatres, the Goulden-Feldman Theatres, Inc., now control eight theatres in Indianapolis territory.

The Goulden-Feldman Theatres, Inc., one of the fastest growing circuits in Indiana, was organized March 1, 1926, when the Capitol Theatre was acquired.

The Capitol is a down town house which formerly was operated by the Columbia Burlesque, Wheel, and also by the Schuberts, after some remodeling and decorating the theatre was opened at an admission price of 15c with pictures continuous from 9 A.M. to 11 P.M.

The Emerald, Laurel, Jewel, Illinois of Indianapolis, and Alhambra, Terre Haute, Ind., soon followed and now the Howard and Arcade of Indianapolis.

Louis B. Goulden, president and general manager of the Goulden-Feldman Theatres, Inc., is an old-timer, in 1908 he opened his first theatre at Jefferson, Wis., and later branched out to Milwaukee, where he operated the Cozy, Hippodrome, and Owl Theatres, later becoming president and general manager of the Northern Feature Film Co., and the Federal Feature Supply Corp. of Chicago, for the past eleven years he was manager of the Indianapolis office of Celebrated Players Film Corp., which position he held until he resigned to devote his entire time to the theatre circuit.

CHICAGO, ILL.—Samuel Donion, 6431 Newgard avenue, contemplates erecting theatre and store building at southeast corner Devon and Kedzie streets.

PASS CHRISTIAN, MISS.—S. L. Taylor, owner of Kozy Theatre, has plans by M. H. Goldstein, Hibernia Building, New Orleans, La., for cement theatre on present site, with seating capacity of 800. Install heating and cooling systems.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.—Company forming, care A. E. Elliott, 618 South Crystler street, has plans by Robert T. McBride, 901 West White Oak avenue, for six-story theatre, store and office building (including hotel), 108 by 165 and 25 by 40 feet, to be located at 218 North Liberty street. Estimated cost, $250,000.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Adam C. Jaeger, William Penn Title & Trust Company, 2111 North Broad street, has plans by T. F. Bennett, Richboro, Pa., for three-story theatre and bank building, 154 by 235 feet, to be located at Ogontz avenue and Haines street. Estimated cost, $600,000.

MORRISON, ILL.—Syndicate has plans by E. F. Behrns, 605 North Michigan avenue, Chicago, for remodeling theatre and store building. Estimated cost, $75,000.

DECATUR, GA.—Community Theatres Corporation, Alpha Fowler, managing director, has awarded contract for new theatre. Estimated cost, $75,000.

Typhoon System Going Into Stiefel Bros.' New Poplar

Another theatre in the Progressive Exhibitors' Chain, The Poplar, 6th & Poplar Sts., Philadelphia, operated by the Stiefel Brothers, is installing a complete cooling and ventilating system. The contract for the equipment was given the Typhoon Fan Company of New York.

The Stiefel Brothers chain has used many different cooling and ventilating systems in their theatres in their search to give their patrons the most satisfactory cooling system the market offers. The Typhoon System was used before by them.

The Typhoon Fan Company asserts that because of its large engineering corps and many years of experience in this field, a theatre can have a complete Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System installed within a few days. The company declares that this efficiency is of particular benefit to theatre owners who have been delayed in considering the cooling of their theatre and now find themselves with the hot summer season only a little ahead.

Cooling and Ventilating theatres as a means to boom summer business is reported from various quarters to be making increasingly longer and quicker strides thus far this year.

Can you use more business in hot weather?

Of course you can.

And you can have it, too.

More than 2,100 other theatres show you the one sure way to get it—with Typhoon Cooling System.

Because it so quickly pays for itself, it actually costs you nothing.

1,621,953. MOVING-PICTURE MACHINE. Edmond John Roy, New York, N. Y. Filed June 10, 1926. Serial No. 115,027. 1 Claim. (Cl. 88—18.)

In combination, a shutterless moving picture projection apparatus, a source of illumination associated therewith, means for intermittently turning on and off said source of illumination, said means comprising a rotatable insulator disc mounted on the projection apparatus, spaced contacts arranged in the outer face of the insulator disc, brushes engaging the outer face of the disc and said contacts, supporting means for said brushes, said supporting means comprising an insulated block on which the inner ends of the brushes are secured, an arm carrying said block, and additional means for adjustably mounting the arm on the projection apparatus, the last mentioned means comprising a pair of members having their adjacent ends pivotally secured, one of said members being secured on the projection apparatus, a bolt extending transversely from the other member, the outer end of said bolt extending through said arm.

1,624,669. PROJECTING MACHINE. Edouard Ernest Lehwess, St. Cloud, near Paris, France. Filed Jan. 6, 1923. Serial No. 610,995. 6 Claims. (Cl. 88—28.)

A feed mechanism for projecting apparatus wherein the feed of the film or other pictures are suitably arranged for intermittent projection, comprising an automatic electric driving mechanism, means between the driving mechanism and the film strip or like picture mounting to effect alternately a quick feed of the film or like a predetermined and always uniform extent, said means including a spring co-operating with the electric drive, means to switch on a momentary current actuating the mechanism a substantial part of a revolution against the resistance of the spring, means for breaking the current and allowing return-motion by the spring energy to the initial or normal position.

1,624,580. CONTINUOUS MOVING-PICTURE MACHINE. John P. Burnett, Chicago, Ill., assignor to Automatic Motion Picture Display Co., Chicago, Ill., a corporation of Illinois. Filed March 5, 1921. Serial No. 450,016. 22 Claims. (Cl. 88—18.7.)

The combination with a motion picture apparatus and a film magazine, of a continuous film passing into and out of said magazine; and a pair of co-operating interchangeable oppositely disposed film receiving means, said means being interchangeable by the direct interengagement of the film with, and the application of its tension to one of the film receiving means.

1,613,562. MOTION-PICTURE MACHINE. C. Wallace Frost, Great Falls, Mont. Filed May 14, 1923. Serial No. 638,989. (Cl. 88—24.)

A device of the character described including a casing having a longitudinal slot in the top and bottom wall thereof, a sectional shaft extending through the slots, a shutter carried by the shaft within the casing, metal strips movable over the slots and attached to the shaft and an operating lever for said shaft as and for the purpose specified.

1-612,359. PRODUCTION AND REPRODUCTION OF TALKING MOTION PICTURES. Harry E. Chipman, New Haven, Conn., assignor, by direct and mesne assignments, to William A. Chipman and Andrew Le Roy Chipman, both of New York, N. Y. Filed Jan. 26, 1921. Serial No. 439,912. 6 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.2.)

In recording and reproducing devices, the combination of upper and lower electromagnets having primary and secondary windings thereon, connections for causing a constant current to flow through said primary windings, means for causing a current to flow through said secondary windings with a varying intensity corresponding to sound vibrations, core pieces within said coils, and means for progressing between said core pieces a continuous member of magnetizable material.

Screen Installed Giving Roxy Theatre Third Dimension Effect

For the first time in any theatre in the world, third dimension projection was used with great success at the Roxy Theatre Thursday, April 21st. This is one of the many innovations promised by S. L. Rothafel when his theatre was originally planned, but the manufacturer only perfected the new invention a few days ago, and after exhaustive experiments and trials by Roxy and his chief projectionist, Art Smith, it has finally been installed as regular apparatus in the world's largest motion picture house.

The principal feature of the new projection is a screen made of trillions of particles of glass forming a smooth surface which may be washed. It makes possible a stereoscopic effect. The glass was imported from Germany. There is a saving of about one-third in electrical current. The screen is very evenly illuminated by this method, and eye strain is greatly relieved both in the center and side seats.

The inventor of the third dimension projection screen is Ludwig A. Wilczek, who worked nearly three years before he finally perfected the screen. The third dimension projection will be used in the Roxy for scenic and news reels as well as for the feature picture.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—Parker Picture Corporation has plans by Cantell & Spencer, 6404½ Sunset Boulevard, for moving picture studio, including eight stages, dressing room structure, gymnasium, etc., to be located on Ventura Boulevard, near Fulton street. Cost to exceed $450,000.

WARREN, O.—Upton & Lang, Commerce Building, Erie, Pa., has general contract to remodel Strand Theatre for Columbia Amusement Company, C. A. Poltar, president, 17 West Eighth street, Erie, Pa. Estimated cost, $25,000.

Papers Read Before S. M. P. E. Mark Steady Engineering Advance

EXTRACTS from a few of many interesting and informative papers read before the Spring Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Norfolk, Virginia (news story of which meeting appears elsewhere in this issue), mark a decided advance in the engineering thought and research so ably carried forward by the members of the Society.

With the regret that space does not allow fuller publication at this time, brief excerpts are herewith given of a few subjects of especial interest to exhibitors on subjects pertinent to the management of their theatres and the latest strides in equipment advance. More information concerning these papers may be had by writing to MOVING PICTURE WORLD, which will take pleasure in securing the information.

Herewith are some interesting highlights from papers read:

Physiological Effects of Light, by M. J. Dorcas

Two physiological effects of the radiation from artificial and natural light sources are discussed, one arising from the ultra violet, the other from the infra red regions of the spectra. Klieg eye, once a serious problem for the actors, has been satisfactorily solved in most studios by the use of glass screens. This protects the actors from the chemically active shorter wave lengths, which never reach the photographic film in any case because excluded by the camera lenses. The method involves only a slight loss in desirable radiation through reflection losses from the screens employed.

A less well known hazard is the possibility of heat stroke effects in the presence of sufficiently high concentrations of the extremely penetrating infra red rays. With the tendency toward concentrations of artificial light in studio work approaching sunlight in intensity recent measurements have shown that certain incandescent sources will contain infra red radiation in amounts that are far from negligible, the possible hazards of which require careful investigation.

In this respect it appears, (a) that incandescent sources such as the solid carbon or neutral cored arcs, and the filament lamps constitute a class of artificial illuminants which have the smallest factor of safety; (b) that the low intensity flame carbons occupy an intermediate and fairly favorable position; and, (c) that the high intensity arcs closely approaching sunlight in radiation quality constitute from the physiological standpoint the most desirable form of artificial illumination, where concentrations of light of the order of noon day sunlight are required.

Vitolyzed-Air Corp. Has Made Many Theatre Installations

The Vitolyzed-Air Corporation, 1926 Broadway, New York, distributing the latest types of air conditioning, ventilating and refrigerating apparatus, under patents owned by Bernard Macfadden, have made, besides a large number of installations in clubs, restaurants, hotels, office buildings, laboratories and apartments, a great many theatre installations to the list of which new names are constantly being added.

Among the many theatres equipped with air cooling, purifying and humidifying devices, are: Capitol Theatre, New York; Warner Bros. Theatre, Keith's Fordham, of the same city; various Keith theatres, the Embassy, Easton, Pa.; Norva, Norfolk, Va.; National and Colonial, Richmond, Va., and Allentown, of that Pennsylvania city.

Among Loew theatres now equipped by this corporation may be named the Canal Street, New York; New Rochelle of that town, State of Memphis, Tenn.; State of New Orleans, La.; State of Los Angeles, and many others. The Marbro, the Ritz, the Tivoli, the Broadway Strand, all of Chicago; the Metropolitan of Boston; the Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa.; the Majestic, Dallas, Tex., are only a few from a long list of theatres equipped by the Vitolyzed-Air Corporation.

The Magic Bandbox

A Moving Picture World Presentation Devised by O. T. Taylor

THERE is an idea that is equally suitable for fashion show or presentation, or a combination of the two. A number of varied novelties may be introduced in action. The setting is charming and artistic as well as a big flash, and is ideal for a childrens presentation.

THE ROUTINE

The drapes part on a typical street scene, (House street in one), on a blue stage. White spot from projection room picks up modiste's delivery girl, carrying a large decorated bandbox, coming in from right. Introduce appropriate song, either popular or from one of the known musical comedies or light operas. The girl stops at extreme left stage, she peers up and down the street, opens the bandbox and lifts out a picture hat which she holds up admiringly. She is about to place it on her head when she looks up to see, standing beside her, a gentleman immaculately attired, silk hat, cane, etc., a la Menjou. The girl hurriedly replaces the hat in the box, and picks up the box to be on her way. The man stops her with a gesture. Song may be introduced here. Finishing the song he then addresses the girl: "Would you like to see the Magic Bandbox, where beauty reigns and romance lives; the Bandbox of Dreams, of yesterday, today and tomorrow?" The girl nods. Soft, dreamy incidental music during action and recitation. Green spot on man's face as he makes a sign in the air with his cane. Black out, except green spot on man and a pale blue glint on the girl cringing at his feet.

Street drop flies. A flash of light, on and off. Tympani roll is heard, then the soft strains of "Alice blue gown" coming from the stage. Blue light up gradually behind large window in background. Amber up slowly behind drapes. Red border and side up front. Straw spot from projection room to bandbox, right. The girl clasps her hands in rapture. The man has disappeared.

The bandbox cover opens to admit a girl, followed by a boy, both in old fashioned clothes. They step out of the box and walk out upon the platform. The box has closed and again opens to admit another couple and yet another. Music segue to "Menuet in G" No. 2, Beethoven, stage to white flood, as the three (or more) couples dance the minuet. Dancers exit. Stage to red and blue. Music to "Alice Blue Gown" as Modiste girl takes up the song. Pink spot on girl from side. White spot to bandbox for fashion parade introduced here. The modelers enter through bandbox and exit alternately right and left front. Modiste's Girl exit. Stage to white. Band segue "Where did you get that hat?" doing comedy effects as the man re-enters. This time he is in bell pants, freak coat and hat. Introduce popular comedy song and comedy action such as modeling the various lamp shades with the band interpolating "Where did you get that hat?" Exit man. Band to potpourri of national melodies of other countries. Stage to amber.

Dancers or singers, introducing dances and.

songs of other lands, enter through bandbox. Lights full up, band to hot popular number as chorus enter for fast step (Charleston, Black Bottom, etc.) Curtain.

Note. The action may be changed to meet the individual producer's requirements. The fashion parade may be eliminated in its entirety and the bandbox used as entrance for the various turns. Eccentric dance numbers, instrumental solos, etc., may be interpolated, or substituted for the fashion parade, to lengthen the action. The possibilities are so many and varied that even producers, new in the stage presentation field should not find it difficult to stage a very creditable offering.

The Setting

A city sky-line, either bizarre or natural, shows through the window against a dark blue sky drop; as if the studio is high in a building overlooking neighborhood structures. The skyline effect may be enhanced by making the windows in buildings transparent and illuminating from behind. A moon could also be used effectively. The skyline, A, is of frame and paper or muslin construction with profiles cut from wall board. Paint in gray, black and blues. The big window, B, cut from wall board and nailed to a batten frame, is done in bright colors, keeping in mind the general color scheme dominated by the tone of the cyc and the drapes, E.

A platform, with steps leading to the floor, holds the orchestra and bandboxes. The up-right bandbox can be a half section. The other box is tipped and the cover hinged to open for entrance of the performers. The bandboxes are wall board over frame work as shown in detail in A, B and C figure 3. Build the circular end sections as follows: Strike a circle, with a chalk compass, on the work room floor, the exact diameter of end sections of the bandbox. Cut the segments, g, from light lumber, place in correct positions on the chalk circle and nail the segments together. The dotted line, b, shows segments cut to circular shape on inside. This entails more work but presents a neater appearance than the octagon.

The two end sections are spaced the desired distance apart by battens, d. The battens may be set closer together thus making it possible to cover the framework with blue plaster board instead of the more expensive wall board. The cover, J, has a rim of wall board reinforced with light wood batten and covered with paper or muslin. The cover is hinged to the end segment, a, as indicated in Bf. The detail C shows the hinging and operating contrivance. The end section is indicated by, a, to which the cover, e, is hinged. To open the cover, attach a line, h, to the cover at point, i. Pulling on the line will open the cover. The cover will automatically fall shut if set at a slight angle, or a light spring may be used to close the cover. Do the boxes in bright, cheerful colors with vivid decorations, painted or covered with wallpaper in patterns of cretonnes and chintz. Line the inside of the box, part showing to audience, with sateen or cheese cloth in pale blue, pink or grey. Use floor lamps and plants to trim the setting. If the comedy action stunt is to be used the floorlamp shades should be selected with this in mind.

five cents to three or four dollars. Do you get what I mean? We may pay a hundred times as much as we did to make a picture, but the public does not pay a hundred times as much to see it.

"When the first picture was made, an adaptation was written, each player was given a copy to read and the shooting started two days later. Before a single foot of film was used in the present one we spent eight months' time and close to twenty thousand dollars in research work alone. A dozen men, experienced in their line, travelled throughout the South seeking sometimes for weeks for a small "prop" that would be used maybe half a minute in the picture. By prop I mean some small object such as a candle holder that was in vogue in the South 100 years ago.

"In furnishing Uncle Tom's living room in his cabin more than 400 of these props are used. Strung on cords from the ceiling are bunches of dried vegetables, leeks, cinnamon, tobacco, corn, peppers and what not, hung exactly as they were in the slave quarters on a southern plantation. For his washstand we found an exact replica in a negro's cabin a few miles from New Orleans. Finding the two hollowed gourds, that hang above the stand necessitated a trip of 200 miles and a half day of bargaining.

"The arranging of the open fireplace in Tom's cabin—Did you know that the head slave was the only one allowed to have a fire in his cabin?—also forced us to go to untold lengths in order that it would be exactly as it should be. The old-fashioned cooking utensils, the wax tapers on the mantel; it was a special job to procure each of the 400 props.

"Tom's cabin is only one scene in the picture. Multiply what was necessary for us to do in it a thousand times and you have a faint idea of the detail involved. In all we gathered together some 18,000 props in our six months of research work and everyone of them is in the picture.

"The largest single outlay of money, except for the location trips, of course, to Plattsburgh, N. Y., and to Memphis, Tenn., and other Mississippi river points was in the construction of the Shelby and St. Claire plantation homes. These mansions, erected at Universal City, are the most expensive and complete residences ever built for the sole purpose of a moving picture. In the Shelby mansion there are nine rooms and each one of them is furnished exactly as it should be. It is the same in the St. Claire home. The huge chandelier in the living room had to be moved from New Orleans to Universal City in one piece.

"The two mansions were built from regular architects' plans designed by a nationally known architect after he had visited nearly fifty plantation homes in the South.

"Furnishing the kitchen in the Shelby home was one of the hardest jobs we encountered. The countless pieces of crockery that were considered the last word in furnishing a kitchen 100 years ago, have now almost entirely disappeared. The huge stove used in the picture is one of the only two remaining of its kind. The owner refused to sell, so we were forced to rent it and it must be returned intact to a plantation on the banks of the Mississippi.

"But why continue? It will be necessary to see the entire picture to realize the work involved and then perhaps it will not all be taken in. It is hard for a person to watch in two hours and a half a job that has taken two years to complete and get it all. The public wants exactness and that's what we are going to give them in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

That is Pollard's explanation of the magnitude of the picture and the reason it will cost more than 100 times as much as the first version.

The public may pay ten times what they did to see "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in 1913 and Universal may pay 100 times as much to show it to them, but if a prediction is to be ventured it is this: They will see a picture that is 1,000 times greater than any they have ever seen before.

Stern Brothers

From this starting point we are bending every effort to make "Keeping Up With the Joneses" the equal of anything on the screen. And we are proud of them. They are to the two-reel field what "McFadden's Flats" are to feature comedies. Ask anyone who has seen "Society Breaks" or "Keeping in Trim," the first two of the series, already in New York. You'll get the most enthusiastic comeback ever accorded a comedy series.

Our product for next season is well in hand. More than 25 per cent. of it already is completed. This enables us to show to the exhibitor months in advance of the new season. Seeing is believing. We don't expect the exhibitor to buy a cat in the bag. The only way to sell merchandise is to take it under your arm and show it to the purchaser. This applies to pictures, too.

Finally, the new Stern Brothers product is especially rich in exploitation value. Not only are the comedies backed by the greatest newspaper exploitation ever conceived, representing practically a national advertising campaign in hundreds of newspapers extending over a period of years, but they also have wonderful merchant and other tie-ups.

Better Projection Pays

Asterbrooke of London Has Several Questions

FROM William T. Asterbrooke, London, England, comes an interesting letter from which this excerpt is quoted: "I have been operating, as we still call it over here, for a long while. It really is too bad we have not a Richardson over here. The men engaged in projection work in the United States and Canada should feel grateful for the opportunity they have of consulting your books and department.

I have a copy of the "Bluebook," and although that portion of it devoted to equipment has not its full value because comparatively little American projection equipment is used over here, and of course, the detailed instruction on projectors etcetra which should be so useful over there has relatively slight value here, still I would not part with the book for many times its price.

I also manage to get hold of the Moving Picture World pretty regularly, and thoroughly enjoy the Better Projection columns. I find the Bluebook school of great value and most interesting.

And now may I ask you a question. Would there, in your opinion, be a market in America for a spool hub which would facilitate attaching the film to it, grip it firmly and release it readily at the end of the run? I have perfected such a hub, but do not feel well enough informed as to what has already been done in this direction to justify me in going ahead until I have your advice.

And another thing, while I am at it: I, and I am sure sure others, would like to have you publish the details of the optical action of the reflector arc lamp. Will you be good enough to do so?

Brother Asterbrook, you will find a very complete treatise on optical action of the reflector arc lamp in the Fifth Edition of the Bluebook, which is now published. Not only is that true, but you will also find a complete description of the best of our United States reflector arc lamp equipments, with detailed instructions for their efficient handling. So that's that. It would require several entire editions of this department to deal with that matter fully. I feel that that matter alone will be well worth the price of the new two-volume Bluebook.

As to the reel hub, inasmuch as you have not given me details of your plan I can only say that many, many schemes of this sort have been invented, tried out and, for the most part, have dropped back into oblivion. None have, so far as I am aware, made any real money for their inventors.

It is, of course, gratifying to know that men over in old England have benefited by my efforts. It is a bit more gratifying when I receive an occasional, though rather rare letter of this sort from England, because we over here have, and not without reason, regarded the men of England as a rather self-satisfied bunch who regard anything and everything which does not have its inception in England as what we call "not so good."

We all respect and admire England, but do

Thide Works His Own Change-Over at Kameo

RECENTLY J. M. Fedhun, Manager of the beautiful Loew Kameo Theatre, over in Rubber Plant Town (Brooklyn) phoned, asking that I call at the Kameo and once-over some device one of his projectionists had invented.

I did so, had a most pleasant chat with Manager Feldhun, looked at a well projected, brilliantly illuminated (high intensity light source) picture, talked with projectionists Charles Thide and Hans Hasse, and watched the working of the change-over device Projectionist Thide had invented.

The change-over may be worked either by hand or magnetically. It may be used for any desired number of projectors. It may be set to give a fade-out, fade-in effect, an instantaneous change, or for anything between the two.

I congratulate Projectionist Thide—a man of brains and ideas, by the way—upon his accomplishment.

I also compliment Manager Feldhun upon the fact—made evident by my talk with him—that he has keen appreciation of high grade work in the projection room, and believes in encouraging the men to produce it.

Manager Feldhun was Assistant to Manager Seward at the Loew Rio, over in Manhattan, for a considerable period, where he had ample opportunity to get into touch and sympathy with the idea that one of the chief things a motion picture sells is projection. That is a religion with Manager Seward, and he has had ample evidence that that brand of "religion" pays good dividends.

Manager Feldhun, like Manager Seward, fully realizes the importance of the projectionist in the scheme of motion picture theatre affairs, and therefore believes in recognizing the projectionist, and in encouraging him in every right way to not only produce the best possible results on the screen, but to produce them as efficiently as may be.

I have dwelt somewhat upon this, because of the fact that immense harm is done by a still numerous class of theatre managers who seem thoroughly imbued with the idea that faults in projection which do not actually cause the screen to go dark don't matter much, and that the projectionist is really nothing more than a very ordinary, not to say common "hired man."

Such managers have an idea that the only attention due the projectionist, who to them is merely, only and nothing more than the operator of a machine, is to raise * * * when something goes wrong, possibly through no fault of the projectionist himself, and very possibly either directly or indirectly through the fault of the aforesaid manager himself, and to "keep him in his place," by this line of procedure.

This sort of policy is doing more real damage than any other one thing I can think of in connection with motion picture theatres. It is foolish almost to the point of insanity, because it very quickly saps away any and all interest and pride the projectionist may have in his work, and make of him one of the "aw what's the use" men.

I am sure manager Feldhun will pardon my having made his progressiveness the basis for this "sermon." What motion picture theatres need above all things else is more managers of the Seward-Feldhun sort. Projection is not the only thing in a motion picture theatre, of course, but IT IS THE ONE MOST IMPORTANT THING, aside from the photoplay itself, and it must be remembered that WHILE HIGH CLASS PROJECTION MAY MAKE EVEN THE "NOT SO GOOD" PHOTOPLAY AT LEAST FAIRLY ACCEPTABLE TO AN AUDIENCE, with poor projection added to an intrinsically poor production, that production is sure to fall flatter than the proverbial pancake; also none but the most conformed dumbell will even question the statement that POOR PROJECTION WILL LESSEN THE AMUSEMENT VALUE OF THE BEST PHOTOPLAY EVER PRODUCED.

Keuster Becomes Editor

Richard Keuster, whom you all know as an occasional contributor of most excellent articles to this department, has been appointed Managing Editor of the American Projectionist. I wish "Dick" every success in his new position, trusting he will not entirely forget old friends, or feel any urge to throw mud in our general direction, as has been the habit of that publication for some while past.

Recommend That You Read

Those who want to know the history of the early days should read "Cinematic Beginnings," page 289 of our recent twentieth anniversary edition. It is by far the most comprehensive thing of its sort I know of. Might have been added to with benefit in one or two places, but on the whole it is excellent. I advise you all to keep that article in your files.

Bluebook School Answer 562

Note:—This "School" is designed to arouse interest in the study of those many problems which constantly arise in motion picture projection, AND to cause men to really study the Bluebook and assimilate the vast amount of knowledge contained within its covers.

Question No. 562—Practical question proposed by C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, who remarks: "In asking this question I have no intention of stirring up argument, or being nasty, Brother Richardson, but merely to get an expression of the men as to what, if any difference they believe there actually is or may be." The question reads: "What is the difference between the 'Motion Picture Projectionist,' or the man who styles himself as such, and the 'Motion Picture Machine Operator,' or the man who styles himself as such."

There was only one question asked that week, on the theory that this one would bring sufficient ideas to fill all the available space. In this I was correct, the answers being mostly good and quite numerous. The following sent answers which seem worthy of note. S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H.; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Ia.; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Ill.; John Doe, Chicago, Ill.; "Bill" Doe, Chicago, Ill.; Jack Doe, South Chicago, Ill.; George Lawrence, Jr., Sackville, New Brunswick; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, N. Y.; Allan Gengenbeck, New Orleans, La.; D. G. Henderson, Quincy, Ill.; Richard Keuster, Brooklyn, N. Y.; T. R. Bankerton, Wentzville, Mo.; G. R. Hahn, Memphis, Tenn.; Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, N. M.; F. D. Thompson, Minneapolis, Minn.; Albert D. Hancock, Dallas, Texas; A. D. Henley, Seattle, Wash.; T. R. Roand, St. Louis, Mo.; T. Y. Fullerton, Des Moines, Ia.; F. D. Orenbacher, Truesdale, Mo.; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Ala.; and Oliver Gainsboro, Denver, Colorado. I think G. L. Doe has given us what is perhaps the best of several very good answers.

He says: "To my mind the chief difference as between the title 'Motion Picture Projectionist' or 'Projectionist,' and the 'Motion Picture Machine Operator,' or 'Operator' is that the first named offers something in which one may take some real pride, because it infers an expert knowledge of all those many things which go to make up motion picture projection, whereas 'Motion Picture Machine Operator,' explicitly in itself sets forth the specific information that the man using it is only the operator of a mechanism or, as our editor has very aptly put it, an attendant upon a machine. We may not exactly like that way of putting it, but if we are fair we must admit that it expresses the matter very well.

"And who can possibly have any great amount of pride in operating a mechanism? Certainly I could not, nor do I believe any one else could. It is a hard-boiled fact that pride in anything is a direct incentive to excel therein, and certainly if the term 'Projectionist' gives us something to 'live up to' and be proud of, and 'Operator,' or 'Machine Operator' does not, then the term 'Projectionist' has value on that score alone, if on no other.

"However, I believe that when Mr. Richardson sets up the term projectionist, and drew a line of contrast between it and the 'Operator,' he set up a really healthy rivalry. It seems a fact that under conditions no man could possibly adopt and use the term 'Projectionist' without believing it represented something superior, and making at least some attempt to 'live up to' his new self-adopted title. That seems to me to be common sense, and if it is true then we cannot escape the conclusion that the mere adoption of the title projectionist by the individual, works for his improvement.

"Coming down to the exact text of the question, I would say that generally speaking the chief present difference as between the man who clings to the title Motion Picture Machine Operator, and the man who has adopted the newer title, Motion Picture Projectionist, is that the adoption of the title projectionist marks the man who either is or is inclined to be what we term a progressive.

"However, this latter must be tempered by the fact that many men persist in the use of the title Motion Picture Machine Operator because of imagined loyalty to the union. I say 'imagined' because I do not regard this as evidencing true loyalty in any degree. To my way of thinking the man who is most truly loyal is the one who will adopt the title, and in so doing help induce the organization to discard that part of its name, which, while it was all right in the beginning, when those who projected motion pictures were really nothing but machine operators, now is wrong, misleading and bad from any possible viewpoint.

"In closing I repeat: the Projectionist is, generally speaking, the progressive, and the Operator the non-progressive. That is my answer to the question."

Here is one which is amusing. It comes from an up-to-date, progressive New York City motion picture projectionist—a very able man. I shall not say who he is because some of his operator associates might get "sore" at him.

He says: "I will take a crack at the projectionist-operator question. The difference to me is the same as the difference between a live Indian and one of those wooden relics they used to have standing in front of cigar stores—you know the kind. The generous-souled dummy with a bunch of cigars in one hand and a tommyhawk in the other.

"The dummy looked always to be in action, but he never got anywhere, unless some one got in back of him and shoved him into another corner.

"One thing I remember about the dummy, and that is he seldom lasted long. Now they are about all gone. Modern cigar stores don't want them. If you do find one it will be in front of an old cobwebby store which never realized there was such a thing as progress.

"The live Indian, though—well he was different, and ready to go on the warpath any old time for anything he thought was right. And he'd scalp you, too, to get it. Ditto the projectionist.

"This answer may not be what you want, but you know what _____ said, viz: It is hard to argue facts."

Here is one more, by S. F. Cooley, who says:

"What a chance this is to heave a bunch of mud, only I don't get any kick out of that, either in throwing it or watching some one else doing the heaving. To me there is a very real difference in the two terms, or titles, and in the men who style themselves projectionist or operator, though I am not sure I will be able to express my views clearly in the matter, because as things now lie it is difficult to draw a clean-cut line between the two, if any line can be drawn at all.

"In the effort to reach a fair conclusion let us bear two things in mind. First we must consider the enormous advancement the industry, as a whole, has made within the past few years, which includes ALL its various branches.

"Second, we must consider that many are engaged in motion picture projection who are themselves efficient, or fairly so in their work, and who have advanced with the industry at least to a considerable extent, but who have little or no interest in the advancement of the profession of motion picture projection as a whole, or of the men engaged therein as a body, except in the matter of wages and working conditions.

"With these things in mind the question seems to answer itself in the single word 'Progress.' That is the real difference between the two.

"The theatre has progressed steadily from the kitchen-chaired store-room to the magnificent motion picture palace of today. Productions have progressed from the run of a fire department to the massive productions of today. The projector inclosure has advanced from the 'coop,' 'booth' or 'box' to the projection room. The 'Pitcher machine' has advanced to the projector. Everywhere we look there is change and advancement. All the various branches of the industry are struggling toward perfection as best they may.

"Consider the 'Operator.' Looking back over the past ten years it would be foolish to say we have not advanced, and here is a point which should be brought out. Operators, taken as a whole have made fine progress, which has meant hard work. While we have striven to make ourselves more efficient in our work, we have not worked hard enough, as a whole, to get out from under the title 'Operator,' which does not, never has and never will indicate that we are a body of men with a profession, or much of anything else except ability to operate a machine. The title 'Operator' does not suggest ability, nor does it tend to give us any degree of prestige as being efficient in difficult work, and if it is thus tending to retard our progress it is time to change it. It would seem that the men, as a whole, have not taken the interest they should have in this matter.

"We now come to the actual question—the actual difference between the two terms, and between the men who have adopted the new one and those who have not. To my mind the term operator refers to the man who 'ran pitchers' in the long ago. It was a term, given to or taken by (I don't know which) one who was a Jack of all trades (Electric, optical, mechanical, etc.) and master of none. He deserved very little credit, and got just about none at all.

"Projectionist is the term which refers to the man of today, who regards projection as a profession. It is a term which puts us in line for consideration by the Powers That Be. It indicates progressiveness and advancement.

"As to men who style themselves Projectionists—well that is a more difficult question to answer. We cannot form an intelligent opinion by considering just one or two men. We must take them as a whole, and when so viewed they represent the progressives, though I do not mean to say that all progressives have adopted the progressive title projectionist—yet.

"Summing up it seems that the only real difference between the two, is that one stands for progress and advancement for himself and his fellows, and regards projection as a profession, whereas the other (Operator) is less interested in advancement, either individually or as a whole. He is willing to just ride along the way he is, reap what he can from the efforts of his more progressive fellows and from the union. He regards projection as being merely the operation of a mechanism, disregarding all those large problems such as screen surfaces, auditorium lighting, optics of the projector optical train etcetera.

"One is a progressive while the other is non-progressive, or has lost the desire to progress further."

It all comes back to screen quality

The impression your theatre conveys, the reputation it enjoys, the day-to-day patronage it attracts—whatever phase of the business you consider, it all comes back in large measure to the screening quality of the pictures you show.

Specify prints on Eastman film—the medium that first made movies practical, that has been known from the infancy of the industry for its never-failing screen superiority.

Mack Sennett Comedies

All the funniest first class

The funniest girls, the best comedy stories and never-ending funniest speedy action.

As many laughs as there are minutes in a film reel.

As big fun for the spirit of laughter as for those who make the film.

The funniest girls make these comedies a first-class fun for everyone at home.
